On the eve of the meeting of the Church Congress in London the Christian Conference is holding a series of meetings on Monday in St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross. In the morning there is to be a discussion on a paper by Professor Sabatier, of Paris, on "The Necessary Renewal of Ancient Dogmatic Formulas." In the afternoon there will be a conference on Temperance, opened by Mr. Rowntree, and in the evening a public meeting, at which the Bishop of Hereford will preside, on "The Divisions of English Christianity." Among the speakers announced are Dr. Brooke Herford, Dr. Horton; and Mr. Percy Bunting.

It will be remembered that at the beginning of the present year Mr. Stopford Brooke delivered a course of evening lectures at University College on the poetry of Robert Browning. The great success of those lectures has led to a movement to establish a permanent lectureship of Literature or Poetry at University College, to be called by Mr. Brooke's name, and to be held by him so long as he is willing, and afterwards by men who will carry on similar work. The authorities of University College have consented to administer the fund to be raised for this purpose, and to further the project to the best of their ability. It is hoped by the committee in charge of the movement to raise a sum of at least £10,000, so that the lectureship may be permanently endowed, and a cordial response to their appeal, hitherto made privately, has already been received. Dr. Blake Odgers is chairman of the executive committee, and the hon. secretaries are Mr. C. Herbert Smith, 2, Garden-court, Temple, and Miss Kate M. Warren, 45, Clarendon-road, W. The movement has the cordial support of Mr. W. P. Ker, Professor of English Literature in University College, Mr. James Bryce, Miss Anna Swanwick, Mrs. Arthur Sidgwick, Dr. Furnivall, Mr. Edmund Gosse, Mr. William Clarke and many others.

A REMARKABLE letter, which has been addressed by Professor Max Müller to Mr. Mozoomdar, of the Brahmo Somaj, in Calcutta, has attracted, naturally, a good deal of attention. How it strikes another member of the Brahmo Somaj will be seen from the letter which we publish to-day from Mr. Bipin Chandra Pal, who has been studying at Manchester College, Oxford, and is already known to a large number of our friends. Dr. Max Müller's letter appeared in the Statesman, and is printed in full in the Indian Messenger of Sept. 10. Therein he professes himself a devoted member of the English Church, and urges Mr. Mozoomdar and his fellow-believers to see whether they cannot become lay members of that Church, but warns him against the priests, since lay members of the Church are perfectly free. The Professor's theology certainly is not shackled by any consideration for the creeds of the Church of his choice. But if the English Church does not attract Mr. Mozoomdar he is urged to form his own Christian Church and openly to profess his discipleship to Christ. Mr. Mozoomdar's reply we have not yet seen. Mr. Pal's is worthy of serious consideration.

WE have received from Mr. F. A. Edwards, treasurer of the Essex Hall Temperance Association, an interesting report of the recent autumnal Conference of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union, which he attended at Cardiff. There were from 400 to 500 delegates present, and the meetings were successful and stimulating in a high degree. They extended over a whole week, and there was also held a demonstration and procession of 20,000 Band of Hope children in Cathays Park. The movement represented in the Conference is said to comprise 28,000 Bands of Hope and other juvenile Temperance organisations. The subjects discussed at the Conference meetings were practical and important. Mr. Chandos Wilson, in discussing "Our Senior Members and Evening Continuation Schools," showed how the public funds administered by the Education Department may now be made available to carry on Temperance teaching. Mr. A. Jolliffe explained "how industrial exhibitions may be made to assist Band of Hope work." Miss Salmon told us "how to reach the children of the upper and middle classes," and referred to the successful work of the Saturday afternoon Band of Hope carried on by Mr. Rowland Hill at Bedford. The paper of Mr. C. Wakely (sec. U.K.B.H.U.), on "The Sale of Drink to Children," was, however, the most pregnant in its immediate results, a resolution being adopted calling upon the Committee of the Union to formulate and bring before Parliament a Bill to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors to children under sixteen, as recommended in both reports of the Royal Commission. All these and other papers will appear in the Band of Hope Chronicle, which is edited by Mr. Rowland Hill, and they will be worthy of study by Temperance workers.

At the recent meetings of the British Association at Dover, Dr. Horace T. Brown, President of the Chemical Section, spoke highly of Dr. Priestley's scientific work. He said:—"There is no chapter in the history of scientific discovery of greater abiding interest than that which was opened by Priestley in 1771, when he commenced his work on the influence of plants on the composition of the air around them. It has often been assumed that these experiments of Priestley's, which were unquestionably the starting-point for all succeeding workers, were the result of some haphazard method of working, and one of those happy chances to which he is in the habit of attributing some of his most important discoveries." But this was not so; Priestley does himself injustice. "Of all his contemporaries belonging to the old school of chemistry he had the clearest conception of the processes of animal respiration and of their identity with the process of combustion. . . . We have it on Priestley's own authority that it was these studies which produced in his mind a conviction that there must be some provision in Nature for dephlogisticating the air which was constantly being vitiated by the processes of respiration, combustion, and putrefaction, and for rendering it once more fit for maintaining animal life." He searched for this compensating influence, and he found it.

THE Mathematical and Physical Section of the British Association was presided over by Professor J. H. Poynting, D.Sc., F.R.S., of Mason College, Birmingham, a supporter of the Church of the Messiah, which is Dr. Priestley's New Meeting with a changed name. Dr. Poynting's Presidential Address deals very ably with some of the problems of physics: our conception of physical law, and our conception of physical explanation. The garment of Nature, he said, seems to be woven of separate threads: we recognise some eight or nine different forms of energy, but they may not be really distinct and separate. We stand in front of Nature's loom as we watch the weaving of the garment; but while we follow a particular thread in the pattern it suddenly disappears, and a thread of another colour takes its place. Is this a new thread, or is it merely the old thread turned round and presenting a new face to us? Further on in his address Professor Poynting showed that the physical method, with its descriptive laws and explanations, is limited in its range: it does not enable us to understand and predict voluntary motion in living beings. We can give a fairly good account of the motion of a steamer, describing how the energy stored in the coal passes out through the boiler into the machinery, and how it is ultimately absorbed by the sea. But when a passenger steps aboard, to cross the Channel to his friends, we make no attempt to give a complete physical account of his purpose and action.

THE current number of the Leeds Mill Hill Chapel Record contains the following interesting note concerning a "Helpers' Union":—

"In response to an invitation addressed from the pulpit, between fifty and sixty of our young people, with a few of the elders, met at the Priestley Hall, on Tuesday evening, Sept. 26, to consider the suggestion made in the last number of the Record for the formation of some society which should unite all who are engaged in the work of the chapel in a common fellowship, for mutual encouragement and support. The following proposals, made by Mr. Hargrove, were adopted by general agreement of those present, as a basis of union, subject to alteration as experience or reflection may suggest:—

NAME.—That the Society be called "The Mill Hill Helpers' Union."

CONDITION OF MEMBERSHIP.—That each member shall, in addition to the ordinary duties of his or her position, undertake to do some work for the service of others, more particularly of those connected with our Church.

COUNSELS.—To read daily the Scripture and Prayer to be provided for the use of the members, or such other as may seem to a member more suitable for his own use. To attend the Communion Service, at least once a year, on the Thursday evening before Easter Day, in sign of our goodwill towards our brethren and our loyalty to the Common Master of us all. To attend regularly at one Sunday service at the Chapel, morning or evening.

ADMISSION.—Everyone above the age of sixteen shall be eligible for membership, and shall become a member on signing his name to some such declaration as the following:—"I desire to be considered a member of the congregation, meeting for the worship of God at Mill Hill Chapel, and I undertake to do what I can to assist in the work carried on by that congregation for the good of its own members and for our fellow-citizens of Leeds."

THE Essex Church Calendar for October, with which the Seed Sower is incorporated, contains the first of what promise to be very interesting chapters in the history of the church. This first chapter tells of the early life of Theophilus Lindsey, founder of the old chapel of which Essex Church is the successor. On another page of the Calendar, the Rev. F. K. Freeston writes in the "Minister's Letter":—"At the beginning of another October I ask your earnest support for our worship and our work during the coming winter. The summer slackness must now be cast off and the holiday rest furnish us with fresh strength for God's service. How much needs to be done in London, only the Londoner really knows, and because there is so much, he sometimes despairs. But how much may be done by a little more devotion, a little more system, a little more idealism in the spirit of our doing! And if we realise afresh, as we must, with each year's encroaching claims, the necessity of consecrating and concentrating our energies upon only the highest ends, then we shall fix upon the Church, surely, as having first claim upon our enthusiasm: not, forsooth, for the Church's glorying, but for the coming of the kingdom, and the brotherhood of men. It is within the power of almost all our members, by a more constant attendance at service, both to receive more help from the Church and its ministrations, and to give more help to its religious life and work."

THE quotation from a sermon on Lord Halifax's manifesto to the English Church Union, which we gave among our Notes of last week, was not, as stated, by the Rev. C. J. Street, but by the Rev. George Street, of Buxton.

AUTUMN.

Who comes adown this grove of shaking pines,

Bare-footed, ragged as the falling year;
What maid is this, who in her wild hair twines

The barren leaf, wet with the woodland's tear?

She wanders on; she passes in the gloom.

"Who art thou? Say!" a mocking laugh doth ring.

Within her eyes I read relentless doom—

But, lo! her hands are full of seeds of Spring!

E. TESCHEMACHER.

TAKE the pattern of your life from God: and then go about your work and be yourself.—Phillips Brooks.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, CHESHIRE

STONE-LAYING.

THE foundation-stone of Willaston School, Nantwich, Cheshire, was laid on Thursday, September 28, by Sir John T. Brunner, Bart., M.P. Among those who were also present at the ceremony and at the subsequent luncheon were Sir E. Durning Lawrence, Bart., M.P., the Revs. H. E. Dowson, J. E. Odgers, C. H. Wellbeloved, P. M. Higginson, Dendy Agate, H. Gow, W. H. Drummond, R. T. Herford, T. Lloyd Jones, G. Evans, J. M. Mills, H. D. Roberts, W. C. Hall, and V. D. Davis, Messrs. Guy Lewis (headmaster of the school), R. D. Darbishire, W. Colfox, Russell Scott, J. H. Brooks, S. B. Worthington, J. H. Nicholson, Robert D. Holt, Richard A. Holt, Charles W. Jones, C. S. Jones, Albert Nicholson, F. Nicholson, Frederick Jevons, G. H. Leigh, John Dendy, J. Coventry, I. C. Thompson, T. H. Gordon, F. Cook, J. W. Beaumont (architect), R. W. Neill (contractor), A. H. Worthington (secretary), and E. W. Marshall (clerk).

The school, as we have already stated, is being built on the Grove estate, formerly the residence of the late Philip Barker, the founder, and the old house is retained as part of the buildings, for the use of the Headmaster. We publish, as a supplement in our present issue, the architect's drawing of the school. On the right the Headmaster's house is seen; adjoining is the large dining-hall, with the chief dormitory above; and at the corner the reading-room, with another dormitory above. The aspect of this range of buildings is almost due south. The entrance to the school, at which the foundation-stone was laid, is seen in the middle of the buildings looking west; class-rooms are on either side, and studies on the first floor. A further range of buildings to the north complete the quadrangle, with an open court-yard in the midst. The school stands in extensive grounds, with a fine old garden and pleasant fields, and is approached by a shaded drive from the London road. The sunny day on Thursday week, and the pleasant gathering of loyal friends of unsectarian education, were a happy augury for the future prosperity of the school.

The ceremony of the stone-laying took place at one o'clock, under the presidency of the Rev. H. E. Dowson, in the unavoidable absence of the Rev. S. A. Steinthal, chairman of the Board of Governors.

The Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND having offered prayer, the CHAIRMAN said they were met on soil sacred in their hearts to the memory of a good and faithful Christian man, and at his behest, to ask Sir John Brunner to lay the foundation-stone of a new school established for the instruction of youth, and with a special view to that instruction in the spirit of broad and liberal religion. They would have at luncheon an opportunity to say what they had to say, and he would simply ask Sir John Brunner to lay the stone.

Mr. J. W. BEAUMONT, the architect, then presented to Sir John a silver trowel, and Mr. NEILL, the contractor, presented a mallet.

Sir John BRUNNER said that he had been very much gratified by the invitation to take the part allotted to him in that ceremony. He had known their lost friend, Mr. Philip Barker, for many years, and had often been his guest, and could give him the character which was the highest as coming from a guest: he was a man with whom one felt immediately at home. It was therefore a pleasure to be there, in a way, at his behest, to make a beginning with a piece of work which was so near to his heart. Having acknowledged the gift of the trowel and mallet, Sir John performed the ceremony, and declared the stone to be "well and truly laid."

A vote of thanks to Sir John Brunner, moved by Mr. R. D. DARBISHIRE, seconded by Mr. G. H. LEIGH, and cordially acknowledged, brought the proceedings to a close, and the company adjourned to the Nantwich Brine Baths Hotel for luncheon.

THE LUNCHEON.

At luncheon the Rev. H. E. Dowson again presided, and in felicitous terms proposed the toast of "The Queen," concluding with the prayer that a reign so long and full of blessing might not end in war.

Mr. A. H. WORTHINGTON, secretary of the school, said that letters of regret for inability to be present had been received from Dr. Martineau, Dr. Drummond, Professor Max Müller, Rev. J. E. Carpenter, Rev. S. A. Steinthal, Mr. J. Allanson Picton, Sir James Kitson, Dr. Brooke Herford, Revs. C. Hargrove, Joseph Wood, and A. Gordon, Dr. Blake Odgers, Messrs. D. Martineau, J. S. Ainsworth, W. Kenrick, Walter Holland, C. G. Beale, E. Clephan, W. Long, J. R. Beard, F. Nettlefold, P. H. Holt, H. P. Cobb, H. W. Gair, H. P. Greg, Alfred Holt, J. F. Schwann, Grosvenor Talbot, J. E. Taylor, and many others.

The Rev. S. A. Steinthal, chairman of the Board of Governors, wrote:—

The great principles on which the school is to be established, the need of a religious education as the foundation of a useful life, and its being possible to give that foundation without sectarian restrictions, is to my mind so precious that I regret I shall not be able to be with those who will be permitted to assert its binding obligation on their consciences and their intention to support its manifestation.

Mr. J. Allanson Picton, expressing his regret, wrote:—

I am the more sorry because I sympathise very strongly with the purpose of the school as described in the programme. It represents an important effort to meet a crying need of the times, that of moral and religious culture without superstition or intolerance.

The Rev. J. EDWIN ODGERS then proposed the toast of the day, "The Memory of our Founder." Mr. Barker, he said, as a Nonconformist gentleman of the old school, had a deep and truly religious interest in the traditions which he inherited. It was very hard for another generation that entered in and enjoyed the fruits of all the travail of their fathers to understand with what toil and what travail that inheritance of civil and religious liberty had been won. He could imagine that must be the reason why the one thing absolutely settled, the one thing which was to be definite and final concerning the character of that school, was that it was tied up to the principle of nonsubscription in matters of religion. He could imagine that that appeared to Mr. Barker as truly the one important thing which the line of Nonconformity to which he was attached had run on, of the essence of its life, the kernel of that testimony which it had contributed to the religious and intellectual life of our time. What did that mean? It did not mean that the founders of their old chapels or schools came out at a certain period on the principle of non-subscription absolutely. At the Revolution the men who were the leaders of their line of Nonconformity, like Baxter, Bates, and Howe, believed in the National Church, and considered themselves members of that Church, excluded by vindictive legislation from performing the sacred obligations which they had assumed—believing, however, that the State had a right to make its terms with the Church, and only complaining that the State had heightened those terms and had exacerbated them with those conditions with the express purpose of keeping a great number of conscientious men out of the Church of their birth and inheritance. That was why there was no objection to the terms of the Toleration Act, which required that a dissenting minister should sign the doctrinal articles of the Church of England; but there was the greatest objection when any body of men, whether presbytery or congregation, endeavoured to add terms of union, admission or fellowship; and there was the great difference between their Nonconformity and that of their brethren of the Congregational line. There was no such thing as a church covenant, and there was open communion. Time went on, and the battle of nonsubscription had still to be fought, when in 1771 and 1772 dissenting ministers and schoolmasters tried to get Parliament to rescind those portions of the Toleration Act which made subscription to the doctrinal articles of the Church of England compulsory. And it was remarkable that there came in another dividing line in their Nonconformity. A number of Nonconformists then took upon themselves to say that they were perfectly contented with subscription; they were orthodox dissenters quite prepared to abide by the doctrinal articles of the Church of England, and they branded those who wanted release as heterodox dissenters, wanting release because they had altered their views during the past hundred years; and it was perfectly true that they had. That marked for the next hundred years the division between those who preferred to call themselves orthodox dissenters and those of their more liberal line. The desire to cast in his lot with that broadening tradition of the old liberal Nonconformity was taken by Mr. Barker to be the espousing of that principle of nonsubscription, connected with which certain privileges of his foundation were allowed to the sons of members of congregations in England "statedly assembling for the public worship of God, and imposing no obligation upon any member thereof (whether minister, member, or otherwise) to subscribe or assent to any articles or article of religious belief or to submit to any test of religious doctrine." That was what Mr. Barker meant by nonsubscription. Several of them had felt some little difficulty about even that limitation, lest they should seem to be creating nonsubscription into a new-fashioned form of test. But it must be observed that it was only an inquiry as to a matter of fact, not of opinion, that they had the right to carry out; and because purses had bottoms there must be a limit to the extent to which pecuniary advantage could be offered, especially when the desire was to benefit those who usually found themselves outside the range of particular benefactions, founder's funds and endowments.

Nonsubscription was what they historically stood for; but that did not mean merely the liberty of negation. That was not Mr. Barker's intention. There was in the tradition which he inherited, not only an ardent desire for civil and religious liberty, but a consistent and unostentatious piety which any man from outside who came to them for liberty merely, almost uniformly failed to grasp and failed to understand. The cultivation of personal religion was to be a striking feature in the life and character nurtured in that school. The head or one of the chief assistant masters was to be appointed with especial care to his qualifications for guiding the religious life of the school, "in sobriety, intelligence, earnestness and piety." And, furthermore, there was to be religious education of a scope practically unprecedented in a school. It was intended that the study of religious history and life, of religious impulses in the character and history of peoples, should be a matter to which the young mind should have its attention specially turned; and sympathetic interest in the history and literature of religion was a thing which, as Mr. Barker believed, was best attained and best fostered in connection with absolute religious liberty. Heart and mind must be free to follow the guiding of natural attractions and natural affinities in things of the spirit. "Thus far shalt thou sympathise, thus far shalt thou be interested, and no further," was an absolute outrage to the soul learning to walk in the spiritual steps of great and holy men. It was, he believed, with the appreciation that it was possible to make not only the old biblical histories and the New Testament story of the life of Christ, but the story of the development of Christian doctrine, the stories of Christian heroism and sainthood live again and guard the springs of young life, to help them to live with a new sanctity, to stir the young heart to a high chivalry—it was in that sense that Mr. Barker entrusted to them to carry out that very remarkable and solemn declaration.

Mr. Odgers then referred to the benefit numbers of Unitarian families had derived from Channing House, as an exemplification of the sphere in which they hoped that school would move. The subject was one on which he felt very strongly. He asked them in silence to drink to the memory of their founder and benefactor, considering how best they might give to his solemn intentions and to his prayers, that fulfilment which he would desire.

The toast was drunk in silence.

Sir JOHN BRUNNER then proposed the toast of "The School." That occasion, he said, would have momentous consequences, because of the duties laid upon those who had taken part in the ceremonies of the day. For they all, and not merely the trustees, were taking upon themselves duties towards the school. The school was to be on what were called "public school" lines, but it would differ from every other public school in that it was not to be associated with a Church, or with the teaching of any distinct body of doctrine now associated with a Church. He had been told that they were decidedly out of fashion, that now the fashion was towards greater uniformity and severity in the teaching and enforcement of doctrine, and that they must look forward to failure. It was perfectly true that the mind of their country appeared to have been for a great many years past tending towards mediaevalism; they might almost say they had been striking an Anglo-Saxon attitude in religion. But others, and he confessed to be one of them, had come to the conclusion that the tide had turned. Men's eyes had been opened by recent controversies in the Church of England; by a very remarkable movement in Austria, where the mass of the people had come to the conclusion that the priests were anti-national; by the controversy over the teaching of the priest, Hecker, in the United States, and by what had been passing before their eyes of late in France. These things in the mind of intelligent men and women made inevitably in their direction. And the action of the great Churches in England on the subject of national education forced them to consider the influence of that severity in the inculcation of doctrine upon their national life. The Churches were adverse to their spending money upon schools, and were anxious that they should save their money at the expense of their children for the benefit of what they called religion. But he wanted to spend more money upon the children. He wanted to spend more thought, more love, more care upon them; the last thing in which he would save his pocket would be on his children. And he was sure that the number of fathers who thought with him was growing year by year, and before that school was many years old the number would be very much larger. That school would meet a very clear and definite want in the country. He was of opinion that there would be plenty of fathers—men of courage, men of earnestness and men of piety—who would desire to send their children to that school. In that hope, in that faith, he had laid the stone that day, and he offered to the trustees hearty good wishes for their prosperity.

The CHAIRMAN, in responding, expressed the earnest wish that their honoured friend, Mr. Steinthal, chairman of their Board, could have been present, for no one was in more profound sympathy with that project than he. Having paid a warm tribute to Sir John Brunner as their leader in the cause of liberal education, and to the influence of his father's school in Liverpool, in the training of fine, broad-spirited religious men, of whom the late Mr. Thomas Ashton had been one, he said that the school they were about to establish would meet a great necessity. He recalled the influence of the old private schools, such as Mr. Malleon's, at Brighton, in which boys, mainly from their own broad nonsubscribing churches, met together and education was conducted with a religious atmosphere around it, and it was instinct with the spirit of their fathers. Those schools brought together boys who, in after life, very often met and associated in many causes of civil and religious liberty, and that companionship in early years was a vital influence throughout their lives. What had been done with such great power and influence by those old private schools, they hoped to do again in that school whose foundation-stone they had now laid. They had noticed with very great regret the leakage of those to whom they looked to be leaders in their religious causes and their churches. He had nothing whatever to say against the great public schools of the country. They had had no alternative. His own sons had passed through Rugby School. There was a manly spirit in this school and a great and good influence was exerted. But the boys were mainly under Church of England influences, and their sons were out of touch with their own influences during the period of their School life. Without any attack whatever upon a fine public school like Rugby, he said one result of the attendance of their sons at those schools was the loss of that close association with their deep broad religious life. That he deeply regretted, and, further, he regretted that their most cultured families were drafting fewer and fewer of their sons into the ministry. In that direction they must look if their ministry was to have the old power it had in bygone days; and with that view he had very great hopes that the school they were establishing would have the very best influence upon the future of religious life in their midst. They might hope that many young men, trained in the religious atmosphere which Mr. Barker desired should pervade the school, would go on to Oxford and Manchester College, or to the Home Missionary College, and enter the ministry. At Manchester College they had a magnificent staff of teachers; what they chiefly wanted was the best sort of pupils. So he regarded that movement as touching them very closely indeed. They were exceedingly happy in the gentleman who had accepted the post of headmaster of the school. Mr. Guy Lewis had been at University College School, where he imbibed the broad spirit of that institution, and at King Edward's School, Birmingham, before he went to Oxford, where he took a distinguished place. He had entered with high courage and enthusiastic hope into their purposes in that school, and had shown great powers of initiative and organisation, which augured well for the future. They offered to him on his first public appearance among them a very hearty welcome. With regard to the special clause which was the raison d'être of the school they hoped to associate with Mr. Lewis a teacher who would be specially qualified to give the religious instruction referred to in the foundation. It would be their aim to make the very best appointment possible. With a man like Mr. Lewis, of strong character, and of noble moral and religious spirit at the head, and that second man whom they hoped to secure to conduct the religious instruction, they hoped to inspire more and more with the principles they held dear the boys to be trained within those walls.

They had at present appealed only privately for help, and the appeal had been most generously met. Sir John Brunner, with his warm heart and open hand, gave them £3,000, Sir Edwin Durning Lawrence and Miss J. Durning Smith £1,000, an old friend of Mr. Barker's £1,000, Mr. William Colfox, £500, "Anonymous" per Rev. H. E. Dowson £250, Miss Valentine £250, Mr. W. Long £250, Mr. J. Harwood £250, "A Friend" £100, Mr. W. Haslam £100, Mr. J. P. Thomasson £100. They had, therefore, nearly £7,000 towards about £15,000 needed to complete the buildings and lay out the grounds. They had an endowment from Mr. Barker of £23,000, but that and more than that was wanted to meet the expenditure in the future. Of other requirements not yet secured, which would be a great gain to the school, he mentioned a school chapel, and a swimming bath. And then the most important thing was to have the boys. They had high ambitions for the school and believed that it would deserve the confidence of their parents throughout the land. It would not be the fault of the governors if it did not do so, nor of Mr. Lewis and his associates. If they looked at the list of governors they would not doubt that they were the very men to inspire the principles they desired the school to impart, and to carry out the work with enthusiasm, ability, and zeal.

Mr. GUY LEWIS, in acknowledging the hearty welcome accorded to him and the honour conferred upon him by his appointment as headmaster of Willaston School, said that among schools, old and new, Willaston would be in a unique position. In the nature of its foundation and the aims it would have principally in view, it would be something apart. His chief source of satisfaction was that he was allowed to participate in the work of a school the nature of the foundation of which so fully commended itself to him, as an object which he had thoroughly at heart. He thought the school would meet with early and continued success, and would start with manifest advantages. The original endowment, the site, a piece of ground genuinely English, the buildings admirably adapted to their purpose, and with great ingenuity adapted by the architect for successive steps in the extension of the school, embracing the most recent ideas as to light, ventilation, furniture and hygiene—these were advantages they were using to the full. A board of governors absolutely unanimous as to the essential requirements of the school was also a great pledge of security for the future, and he looked forward with hopeful confidence to many occasions in the future, when they would be gathered together to receive from year to year the report of what had been accomplished in the realisation of that great design. As to the curriculum, he hoped that they would avoid pedantry on the one hand and an excessive technical system on the other; one was the characteristic vice of the older system, the other the prominent danger of the new. With regard to their special objects, the first of primary importance would be to create a healthy moral tone. To that end they would work, with the cumulative influence of lesson hours, school games, and other times of recreation. They wanted as the dominant tradition and characteristic of the school an honest, rational, conscious, moral sense, which when boys had left school would be robur et aes triplex with them in the struggle of life. They started with a full sense of responsibility, in a spirit of earnest, sober, and hopeful zeal. They intended to strain every power they had to its uttermost, to deserve the general sympathy and practical support of which such a meeting as that was the token.

Mr. A. H. WORTHINGTON proposed the toast of "The Guests," and took the opportunity of emphasising the need for such a school, which many in connection with their Free Churches must have long felt. He appealed to their guests, and to those who they wished had been their guests, but for various reasons had been unable to be present, to realise that the future of the school depended not merely upon the headmaster or the governors, but on them; for it was they who must in the first instance provide the money required in addition to Mr. Barker's endowment, and it was they who must send their sons and persuade their friends to send their sons to the school.

Sir E. DURNING LAWRENCE, Bart., M.P., responded, and expressed his great pleasure and satisfaction at being able to be present. He felt with Sir John Brunner that it was a critical time—a time especially suitable for the erection of such a school. The time was coming, and in his opinion had come, when the Church must conform her teaching to the knowledge of her sons. It was a right and fitting time that they should meet around that board, on the occasion of the foundation of a special school, that should be free from any test that might hamper the real truth from reaching the minds of their children. He felt it a great privilege to be present.

Mr. W. COLFOX also responded. He had felt from the first when he heard of that foundation that, if established, the school would be of very great interest and importance to their Free Churches, and he was very glad to be present and to see what had been done. As regards equipment, he felt that it would be of very great importance to have a school chapel, in which the morning prayers and Sunday services could be held, and he was glad to have learnt from the architect that there would be no difficulty in adding such a chapel to the buildings. Having once more emphasised the need that pupils should be provided, he concluded by moving a vote of thanks to the Chairman for presiding.

This vote having been cordially passed and acknowledged, the proceedings terminated.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

[TO PUBLISHERS.—All Books, &c., sent to THE INQUIRER will be acknowledged under this head, with name of publisher and price, if supplied. The necessities of our space, however, compel us to limit the number selected for critical notice and review.]

A Day in My Clerical Life. By the Rev. R. E. Veagh. 3s. 6d. (Fisher Unwin.)

Back to Jesus. By R. A. Armstrong, B.A. 1s. (Philip Green.)

The Spirit and the Incarnation. By the Rev. W. L. Walker. 9s. (T. and T. Clark.)

The Great Law: A Study of Religious Origins. By W. Williamson. 14s. (Longmans.)

The Supreme Argument for Christianity. By W. Garrett Horder. 1s. 6d. (Clarke and Co.)

The Evolution of Man. By W. W. Hardwicke, M.D. 5s. (Watts and Co.)

Jacob at Bethel. By A. Smythe Palmer, D.D. 2s. 6d. (David Nutt.)

Scribner's, Expositor, Bookman, Nineteenth Century, Monist, Sunday Chimes.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c., received from the following:—L. G. A.; A. L. B.; J. B. (thanks); L. B.; C. M. C.; C. A. F. (thanks); E. F.; J. F.; H. P. H.; J. H.; W. H.; H. H. J.; A. A. L.; W. L.; C. R.; L. E. R.; C. S.; G. St. C.; W. S. S.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

THE IMPENDING SIN AND SHAME.

SIR,—I cannot withhold some brief expression of my lively and intense sympathy with your sustained and deeply grounded opposition to the execrable war with which we are threatened. A conflict more needless, more wanton, more basely born, more variously and abidingly harmful cannot be conceived. History teems with wicked wars, but never will its blood-stained pages be more darkly defiled than by the war which seems about to break out. Nothing that the Boers have left undone is of such moment, nothing that they have done is of such flagrancy, as to warrant the invasion of their country, or to excuse the horrors of war.

I look upon the grievances of the Uitlanders as mere pretences. The conflict will be the offspring of sordid speculation eager to get hold of the gold mines, and of shameless imperialism eager to appropriate South Africa.

A heedful and earnest witness of the great events of the last seventy years, I have been variously wrought upon thereby, have been greatly gladdened and deeply saddened. I rejoiced at the battle of Navarino in 1827, at the French revolutions of 1830 and 1848, at the triumph of Reform in 1832, at the abolition of slavery in 1834, at the victory of Free Trade in 1846, at the uprising of the nations in 1848, at the destruction of American slavery in 1865, at the fall of the French Empire and the papal principedom, at the new birth of Italy in 1871, and the restoration of Hungary in 1867. I mourned over the hapless uprising of Poland in 1831, over the triumph of the despots, the fall of Hungary and Italy in 1849, over Louis Bonaparte's crime in 1851, over the shattering of the Liberal party in 1886, over the Armenian massacre in 1896—the supreme atrocity and horror of this century. Next to that colossal wickedness and woe nothing has so awakened in me sorrow and abhorrence as the prospect of a war so needless, wanton, and wicked, of the sin and the shame which Englishmen appear determined to bring upon England. With thanks for your earnest deprecation of that sin and shame I rest,

THOMAS H. GILL.

Grove Park, Lee.

MANCHESTER DOMESTIC MISSION.

SIR,—The work which this Mission is doing is one of which any religious body may be proud. It has planted its buildings amongst the poorest of the population, and by means of innumerable agencies it is exerting an uplifting and restraining influence upon a vast number of people, especially upon the young. Notwithstanding the great value of this institution, it is passing through serious financial difficulties, and unless its funds are materially augmented by donations and subscriptions, its power for good must inevitably be crippled. We are doing what we can to re-awaken enthusiasm in its behalf, and in order to raise funds for immediate use Mr. C. Rawdon Briggs has kindly undertaken to organise a concert in the Memorial Hall, Manchester, for Wednesday evening, Oct. 11, when it is to be hoped that friends in the district will come to the support of the Mission, and by purchasing tickets help to strengthen its slender resources. Details as to time of concert, price of tickets, &c., are to be found in the advertising columns.

CHARLES ROPER,

A Member of the Mission Committee.

THE SUFFERING GOD.

SIR,—In a recent number of THE INQUIRER, the doctrine of "A Suffering God" was pronounced untenable. I confess that I am one of those who cannot conceive of God as having no sympathy with human suffering. And as all true sympathy with suffering involves a certain pang of pain, I venture to attribute that also to the one God who is, therefore, in my conception, not A Suffering God, but The Suffering God. Moreover, it does not seem to me at all necessary that God should become incarnate in order to feel this sympathy. But my object in writing is not to air my own sentiments, still less to enter into controversy. As the article to which I refer quoted "Abbé Gratray—a Roman Catholic writer," and the "Protestant Vinet," I thought it might be of interest to some of your readers to recall the opinion on this subject of the Unitarian—William Henry Channing. Writing to me under date, June 25, 1879, he says:—

... But your note interested me, in a still higher degree, because incidentally you answered the very question latent in my mind, in regard to Evil. And it has rejoiced me, beyond my hasty words to tell, that you, too, have in your hand the one and only Guiding Clue through Life's Mysteries. Yes! it is a sublimely pathetic, humbling, elevating, ennobling, sanctifying Truth. "The All Good is the Co-Sufferer, at once by Sympathy and by Syn-ergy, with all His creatures, His Children." This even is the key to the Gate-Way of the Prayer Road of the Cross—the Central Word of the Christian religion.

It is thirty-five years now since this Glory of God in Divine Disinterestedness first broke on my astonished vision like a New Sun of The Eternal Day. And in "The Present," of which I was then editor, in an article on "Heaven on Earth," it was affirmed, "One such fable as 'Prometheus' proves how divine is love in the human soul. If there were no other God, man, out of love, would become a God. How much more, then, does it prove that the Divine is Love. And so comes to the human mind not the hope merely, but the certain assurance that Evil is relative not absolute; transient, not everlasting; accidental, not essential; always a means, and never an end. And with this assurance opens the glorious prospect of a growing Good casting off Evil, as the opening bud shakes off its husk. Growth, that is the great reconciling thought. If evil can be overcome little by little, then shall it utterly disappear. And though it be a riddle, yet it is only a mask, behind which smiles a countenance of unutterable loveliness. . . .

Does not everyone in just the measure of his love pledge himself heart and hand to the Great Fraternity of Lovers the world round to be faithful unto death, in seeking and saving the lost? Let us follow that thought to the end. If in the degree of goodness is sympathy and longing to redeem, who is the Grand Sufferer? With deepest reverence let us rather feel than think, and rather think than say. The Divine Love, must make His own all the accumulated woes and struggles of all His creatures. Would he inflict on a helpless Being who never had choice whether to exist or not what He who made it would not bear? Would a man of common manliness do so? The Trinitarian, who is bowed down with overwhelming gratitude, that the Infinite Majesty of Heaven and Earth should condescend to endure his griefs does not surpass, but falls illimitably short of the Real Truth, if he conceives that only once in the ages upon Calvary—on this small earth, the Being of beings suffered—He feels each pang, he shares each sorrow. The martyrdom of all Heroes is His. The great conquest of Love over Evil is His ever-influent Energy throughout the Universe—through the Eternities. By the fact of the creation the All-Good has sworn by Himself that all shall be good.

Sept. 27.

CHARLES C. COE.

WOMEN'S ARMENIAN RELIEF FUND.

SIR,—Many weeks have elapsed since we appealed in your columns for assistance for our Armenian pensioners in Van—mostly widows, who are able to earn in summer a bare subsistence from the Industrial Bureau for themselves and their children—but the time has now come when it is necessary to approach those, who are able, and have proved themselves willing, to help us, and to ask them to replenish our almost exhausted exchequer, and give us the means of feeding and caring for those who try so hard to help themselves.

The fall of rain in the summer was not sufficient to ensure a good harvest, so that many fields hardly paid for harvesting, and others would not yield a full supply. Prices accordingly did not fall and much apprehension prevailed, and as Dr. Reynolds pathetically wrote, "We look to the future with heavy hearts, and it does seem as if we could not bear another year of scarcity." The good, devoted doctor and his wife are exhausted with perpetual hard work and anxiety, and write that they are hardly able to endure the continued strain.

Dr. Waldemar Belck—the German scientist who was robbed and left for dead by the Kurds near Van a year ago, and who has lived for many months at Van Mission—writes to us to testify to "the faithfulness, economy and great care with which the relief work has been carried on, and also as to the beneficent work the Orphanage is accomplishing for the rising generation of the Vilayet.

Dr. Lepsius, of Berlin, who has also this summer visited the Mission, was much interested and greatly pleased with all he saw, and hopes to assist in establishing a carpet industry in the town, which may be made to yield a good return, and afford employment to many women and girls. For this new departure it would be necessary to raise and invest about £2,000.

Our Committee is co operating with that of the "Friends of Armenia" to send two ladies and a gentleman to Van to assist Dr. Reynolds in his many arduous duties, as without such assistance he and Mrs. Reynolds cannot any longer maintain their responsibilities. Many sympathisers, who thoroughly understand the present situation, consider this just now to be the best way of using some of the money placed at our disposal.

The winter is just commencing in Van; the cold will soon be intense there for many months to come, and hunger and want will be rife amongst the widows and poor little children, so many hundreds of whom are of necessity excluded from the benefits of the Orphanage. These the Missionaries feed as far as possible, but how far must depend upon the generosity of the outside public, upon whom also they depend for clothes to cover their poor shivering little bodies.

We earnestly commend their cause to the friends who have so generously supported us in the past, and but for whom our Society must long ago have ceased to exist. These helpless people belong to all humanity, and in the name of humanity we ask for aid to succour them.

Subscriptions will be most thankfully received by the honorary treasurer of the Society, Mrs. Madeleine Cole, "Danehurst," Upper Richmond-road, Putney, S.W.; or may be sent to our Banker, Francis Buxton, Esq., Messrs. Prescott, Dimsdale and Co., 50, Cornhill, E.C.

MARY HICKSON (MRS.), Hon. Sec.
Oct. 2.

THE BRAHMO SOMAJ.

SIR,—Within a few hours of my arrival in London, just a year ago, I was asked by the Rev. Dr. Brooke Herford to which section of the Brahmo Somaj I belonged. I replied, "My instructions are, as long as I am in England, I should belong only to the Brahmo Somaj, and not to any particular section of it." So far, I have faithfully carried out these instructions, as the many Unitarian congregations to whom I had the privilege to preach, and the many leading Unitarians whom I had the honour of meeting in private, will testify. In the interest of truth, and for the good name of the cause of the Brahmo Somaj, I feel constrained to go for once beyond my instructions, in speaking a few words upon a curious letter just published, both in England and India, from the Right Honourable Professor Max Müller to the Rev. Pratap Chandra Mozoomdar; from which it might appear that the Brahmo Somaj is a Christian movement in fact, and waits eagerly to be one in name.

I am not as yet fully acquainted with the genesis of this letter. I have seen only Professor Max Müller's letter. I do not know if it is in reply to anything that Mr. Mozoomdar may have written to him. But this I know, that since some years past a decidedly Christian tendency has been manifested by Mr. Mozoomdar. In his annual sermon in January, 1897, Mr. Mozoomdar preached for "a personal and private relation with Christ." Similar utterances of his this year also appeared in public print, and called forth a vigorous protest and disclaimer from the Indian Messenger, the organ of the Sadhatana Brahmo Somaj. In a foot-note attached to Professor Max Müller's letter, Mr. Mozoomdar says that the Brahmo Somaj of India or Church of the New Dispensation will always remain a Theistic Church, though its spirit and its religion will be the spirit and religion of Jesus Christ. This may or may not be true, but the remark, my Unitarian friends will kindly note, refers only to the Brahmo Somaj of India (not in India), which is only a congregation in Calcutta having a few friendly congregations in the country districts, but which does in no way represent the Brahmo Somaj as a whole; which no more regards its spirit and religion to be those of Christ, than of Gautama, the Buddha, or of Mahomet, or of Confucius, or of any other great and godly prophet. Indeed, that which differentiates the Brahmo Somaj from the conservative Unitarian body, is its acceptance, as teachers, of all prophets and saints, and as valuable records of spiritual experience, all scriptures, without giving any absolute preference to any prophet or scripture over the others. This is its universal aspect. But it has always had, and will always have, side by side with this universal aspect a reasonable national aspect also; and in this aspect, by training and tradition, it has almost always been, and now is, and will ever remain an Indian—a Hindu Church. It will always be open to outside influence. What the higher religion of the Hindus lacked it will gladly in the future, as it has in the past, seek to assimilate from other systems, but the growth of the Brahmo Somaj, to be real and organic, must always be, as it really has always been, an expansion, a development of Hindu ideals and Hindu life, on its own national lines. The same is true also of that larger and liberal Unitarianism upon which really depends the future of your own movement. It too, like the Brahmo Somaj, has a universal, and a national aspect. In the former aspect Unitarianism is Brahmoism, and Brahmoism is Unitarianism; in the latter aspect you are rightly and rationally Christians, and we are, and shall always remain, rightly and rationally Hindus. As your Christianity, however, does not include the errors and superstitions of Christendom, so our Hinduism also does not involve the errors and superstitions of popular Hinduism. This has always been, is really now, and will always be the position of the Brahmo Somaj, whatever Mr. Mozoomdar or his few friends might say or do. I have neither time, nor, I am afraid, can you allow me the space, for a detailed examination of Professor Max Müller's curious letter, which, however, I may possibly try to examine some other time.

BIPIN CHANDRA PAL.

AN INDIAN APPEAL.

SIR,—The earnest interest which the readers of THE INQUIRER take in the work and progress of the Brahmo Somaj has encouraged me to ask you to find space for this appeal in your paper. The vast field of work which lies before the Brahmo Somaj in India, the small number of workers, and the difficulties and privations of their situation are not altogether unknown to friends in England. Seven years ago an organisation called the Brahmo Workers Shelter was formed, under the superintendence of Pundit Sevanath Sastri, M.A., to help the spread of Brahmoism in different parts of India. This little institution has ever since gone on increasing its scope and usefulness, and it has sent out missionary workers as far as Beluchistan. At present there are about twenty active workers, some of whom are distinguished graduates of the Calcutta University. Besides sending out itinerant missionaries, it has now established a branch at Bankipore (Patna), the principal town in Behar, a province in which Brahmoism has made little progress. The Bankipore branch is working very enthusiastically; it has succeeded in organising a congregation for weekly divine service; it has established a high English school, where at present more than a hundred boys are receiving education. There is a boarding-house in connection with the school, and both the institutions have been named after Raja Ram Mohun Roy, the founder of the Brahmo Somaj. Besides these, the workers are conducting a Sunday-school, an Evening School for the working classes, a Temperance Association, and many useful agencies. But the financial difficulties of the institution have been, all along very great; all the workers are poor men, and as the Brahmo Somaj could not make any regular substantial grant, the workers have been obliged to labour for their own subsistence, and also for the expenses of the mission. Just at present the institution is hard pressed for want of funds, and as I feel that my temporary absence, owing to my acceptance of the Scholarship at Manchester College, Oxford, has added to the embarrassments of the work, I am particularly anxious to obtain financial help, and enlist the sympathy of friends in England. The Rev. James Harwood, Mr. Ion Pritchard, and Dr. Drummond know about this appeal, and they have allowed me to mention their names in connection with it, as they are in warm sympathy with the work. Any contribution forwarded to me at Essex Hall, or at Manchester College, will be gratefully received and acknowledged in THE INQUIRER and the Indian Messenger. I shall be pleased to forward the money to the Superintendent of the Brahmo Workers Shelter at Bankipore.

HEM CHANDRA SARKAR.

Manchester College, Oxford.

SONNET.

WE say the world is but a world of woes
And life the river in a vale of tears.
Could we but know the happiness that flows
In the full horn of the advancing years;
That ev'ry moment on its airy wings
Laden and heavy with their nectar flies;
That ev'ry footfall in creation flings
Around the melody of melodies;
That joys are scatter'd from the abundant skies

Like rain and sunshine, for the joy of all,
And need but to be gathered as we go—
How might our souls in ecstasy arise,
Seize on the riches that about them fall,
And bring Thy Paradise, O God! below.

ALBERT J. MOTT.

"PRESBYTERIANS, Independents, all, have here in the army the same spirit of faith and prayer, the same presence and answer. They agree here, have no names of difference; pity is it should be otherwise anywhere. For, brethren, in things of the mind we look for no compulsion but that of light and reason."—Cromwell.

EPPS'S	C	COCOA.	The most nutritious.
EPPS'S	C	COCOA.	Grateful and comforting.
EPPS'S	C	COCOA.	For breakfast and supper.
EPPS'S	C	COCOA.	With natural flavour only.
EPPS'S	C	COCOA.	From the finest brands.

OBITUARY.

THE LATE REV. ELI FAY, D.D.

OUR friend "S. F." has already given the readers of THE INQUIRER some account of the ministry and character of the late Dr. Fay, but having met with a much more detailed notice in the Pacific Unitarian for September, and believing that a good many friends, in the Midlands especially, would be as interested as myself in the story as there given, I venture to offer another summary of the facts.

Eli Fay, who died at Pasadena, Aug. 10, was born in Madison County, New York, November, 1823. He was third in a family of thirteen children, and being in humble circumstances, he, at the age of eleven, found a place as useful boy in the home of an old doctor in the same district, his pay being "board and clothes." Happily, he received better wages. The doctor and his cultured daughter undertook the education of the lad, and after mastering the elements of school learning in their home, he was sent to an Academy, then considered the best in the section. He thus obtained an education far superior to any that might have seemed likely to fall to his lot.

The family being Methodist and hospitable towards the circuit ministers and others, Eli Fay naturally met with every inducement to join the body. It was soon decided that he should be a Methodist minister, and his first possession was a fine colt which should serve him on his circuit rides by and by. Of course he tended the colt ardently, but alas! the animal one day kicked him, destroying the sight of his right eye. He was then in his thirteenth year. Two years after he received a worse shock of quite another kind. Hearing an elder confidently maintain at dinner that no unbaptised child could escape the wrath of God, the youth asked indignantly if his little sister would be damned if she should die that night. On receiving an affirmative reply, young Eli cried: "I want nothing to do with such a God or such a religion," and left the table. A year's further study amid the resources of the physician's copious library only served to confirm his revolt against orthodoxy. He sorrowfully gave up the idea of the ministry and went back to his father's farm. But when he was seventeen, a travelling missionary of the "Christian" denomination happened to hold a service in the school-house hard by, where he was now teaching. He thus discovered with surprise and joy that many good and thoughtful people held the very opinions which had been denounced in his case as bad and heretical. The missionary quickly observed his emotion, and pressed him to speak his mind at a service some miles away. Very reluctantly consenting, he soon became an active preacher in the school-houses of the district. At the age of twenty-two he was regularly ordained, and took charge of a prosperous church at Honeyeye Falls, New York. Mr. Fay speedily made his mark. He took a keen interest in education, and when his denomination proposed to build a non-Sectarian College at Yellow Springs, Ohio, he became secretary to the Board of Trustees. A close friendship with Horace Mann strengthened his liberal principles, and fortified him in a struggle which too soon ensued between the advanced and the conservative wings of the denomination. The contest brought severe anxieties; it "killed Mr. Mann, and it nearly killed Mr. Fay." He left Yellow Springs and took charge of the Christian Church in the neighbourhood of Dr. Bellows' Church at New York. "Ever a fighter," Mr. Fay now commenced a series of articles in the Christian Intelligencer, the denominational organ, urging the "Christians" to avow themselves Unitarians, since, as he maintained, they really were such. After much controversy, Mr. Fay ultimately left the denomination and became minister of the Unitarian Church at Leominster, Mass., and in that State he ministered at various churches for about twenty years. He was always a strenuous worker, and twice broke down, and had to travel for his health's sake; but it was to restore his wife's strength that he came to England and settled for seven years in Sheffield.

It was in this period, about twenty-one years ago, that I first met Mr. Fay and for some time, until his return to America, I enjoyed a close, and to me, memorable friendship with him. There were many in Sheffield, and doubtless are to-day, to whom he stood in quite a peculiar position, not only as a strong preacher, but as an inspiring man. Vigour of thought, quick sympathy, indomitable energy of which it was difficult not to partake when in his company, such were the points of character and personality that most seized my mind and remains in my memory. Kindest and tenderest adviser and friend in the hour of trouble, he had a fine scorn for all that was unmanly, slothful, and "pottering." To talk with him for half-an-hour was to a young man (I cannot speak for others) an exhilaration as healthful as enjoyable.

Everyone knows that Mr. Fay invested prudently—there is quite a eulogy of his business methods in the journal that is before me; and most of us know that great schemes filled his mind with respect to the spending of his fortune. Of these things I know nothing specially worth mention. The story of his ministerial work may be rapidly completed. On leaving England, early in the eighties, he settled at Los Angeles, and built a church there, and in 1891 retired from the settled ministry. But his restless energy still impelled him hither and thither, preaching and speaking, and forced article after article from his pen. His eighth decade was one of labour but not of sorrow, despite infirmities. Two years ago he said: "My every day is an Easter Day; I live with the thought, and am continually and inexpressibly inspired by it, that the true soul is continually emerging from the grave—from the grave of inferior purposes, hopes, aspirations, and realisations, into a larger, richer, grander life." One who knew him in his last days, the Rev. W. M. Jones, who pronounced his funeral address, says: "There was no age or decrepitude in his thought nor in his spirit. . . . Wonderful, wonderful, and wonderfully delightful it has been to every one of us that has known him, to have the impression of old age which the sight of whitened hair and tottering limbs occasioned, give way before that deeper consciousness of the spirit that in him we touched one younger in spirit than ourselves—younger than most men are; young and broad in thought; young and quick to find the goodness and the beauty and the joy of life; young in his glad enthusiasm of living; young in all the blessed welcome he gave to those truths that commended themselves to his reason and to his heart; and young in his enthusiasm to go out into the broader fields of thought and pluck ever more of the new harvests."

He had many spiritual children, some going before him to rest; others still are here to thank God for him.

W. G. TARRANT.

COLONEL TRIMBLE.

ALTHOUGH it is nearly twenty-five years since Colonel Trimble left England for New Zealand, and a new generation has sprung up to whom he was unknown, so many remain who remember him with respect and admiration that we cannot record his death, on Sept. 5, at Taranaki, New Zealand, without adding a few memorial words.

Settling in Liverpool early in the fifties, on becoming a member of the Hope-street Church his strong personality soon made itself felt. An earnest worker in the Sunday-school, one of the originators of a useful and free-spirited Mutual Improvement Society, a manager of the British School supported by the church, in these and other ways he exercised a commanding influence. He had the courage of his convictions, and spoke out freely but modestly when he deemed the occasion demanded plain speech.

Beyond his religious associations he was well and widely known for his public spirit and high character. He took a deep interest in politics, being a sound and logical Liberal; espousing the cause of the North in the American civil war, and working earnestly to relieve those whom that war threw destitute on the world. He took an active part in the Volunteer movement as private, as captain, and as colonel, giving time, labour, and means to the cause year after year.

After his removal to Taranaki, New Zealand, he maintained his interest in liberal religion, and endeavoured in many ways to spread its influence. In politics he soon became well known, and was for some years a member of the New Zealand Parliament.

At the age of seventy-five he has passed into the higher life, leaving behind him a noble record, and influences which will never cease to work for the righteousness he so revered.

WILLIAM MAXWELL HOLMES.

YET another of the few remaining links connecting Park-street Church, Hull, with the old Bowlalley-lane Chapel, has passed to the Great Beyond, in the person of Mr. W. M. Holmes—for thirty-three years the faithful and indefatigable secretary of the congregation, thirteen years the Secretary of the Chamberlain Trust, and office bearer in most of the various activities centreing round the church.

Of modest and retiring disposition, yet kindly and affectionate withal, and ever responsive to the call of duty, he won and held the confidence and affection of the entire congregation and the esteem of a large number of business men in the city, who knew him as the head of the firm of T. W. Flint and Co., and who recognised his sterling worth and integrity.

He "crossed the Bar" to rejoin her he loved so well on Sept. 13, and all that was mortal of him was laid by her side on Sept. 16 in the general cemetery. The Funeral Service was conducted by the Rev. E. W. Lummis, M.A. T. H.

THE INWARD LIFE.

From the "Imitation of Christ."

IF we esteem our progress in religion to consist only in these outward observances, our devotion will quickly come to an end. But let us lay the axe to the root, that being cleansed from passions we may find a mind that makes peace. If every year we would root out one vice, we should soon become perfect men. But as it is, on the contrary we often see that we were better and purer at the beginning of our conversion than after many years of profession. Our fervour and progress should grow daily; but now it is accounted a great matter, if a man can retain a part of his first zeal. If we would force ourselves a little at the beginning, then should we be able to perform all things afterwards with ease and delight. It is a hard matter to break off habits, but it is harder to go against our own will. But if thou canst not overcome little and easy things, when wilt thou overcome harder things? Resist thy inclination in the beginning, and unlearn evil custom, lest perhaps by little and little it draw thee into greater difficulty.

O if thou didst but mark how much peace unto thyself and joy unto others thou shouldst procure by demeaning thyself well, I suppose thou wouldst be more careful of thy spiritual progress.

Many seek to shun temptations, and fall more grievously unto them. By flight alone we cannot overcome, but by patience and true humility we become stronger than all our enemies. He that only avoideth them outwardly and doth not pluck up the root shall profit little. Yea, temptations will the sooner return unto him, and he shall feel himself in worse case. By little and little, and by patience with long suffering through God's help thou shalt better overcome, than by hardness and thine own pertinacity. Often take counsel in temptation, and deal not roughly with him that is tempted, but give him comfort, as thou wouldst wish to be done to thyself.

The beginning of all evil temptations is inconstancy of mind and small confidence in God; for as a ship without a rudder is tossed to and fro by the waves, so the man who is slack and quits his purpose is many ways tempted.

Fire tries iron, and temptation a just man. We often know not what we can do, but temptation shows us what we are. Yet we must be watchful, especially in the beginning of temptation, for the enemy is then more easily beaten, if he be not suffered to enter the door of the mind, but be met on the threshold at his first knock. Wherefore one said: Withstand beginnings, a remedy comes too late. For first there comes to the mind a bare thought, then a strong imagination, afterwards delight and an evil motion and consent. And so by little and little our wicked enemy gets wholly in, because he is not resisted in the beginning. And the longer a man is too sluggish to resist, the weaker does he become in himself, and the enemy stronger against him.

We ought not to despair when we are tempted, but the more fervently to beseech God, that He will vouchsafe to help us in all tribulations, who, surely, according to the words of Paul, will make with the temptation a way of escape, that we may be able to bear it. Let us therefore humble our souls under the hand of God in every temptation and tribulation, for the humble in spirit He will save and exalt.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

At the end of your "holiday time at the Lakes," your friend and guide supplied you with two poems, which he said "perhaps some of you will like to learn by heart." I wonder whether you did so; and whether you often learn poetry by heart? I am sorry to say that most of the children whom I know hardly ever learn by heart. I hope that they are exceptions, and that most of you do. If you do not, then I hope you will begin at once before you are a day older. If you do not, you will some-day be very sorry, though I daresay you do not believe that now; for children never do believe these sort of things that older people tell them. But it is only because they do not yet know them for themselves, and so the warnings slip from them, like water from a duck's back.

My children say "we have no time." And that is partly true; that is, they are very busy, and learning by heart is not given them as one of their many lessons. But I think it will be all the nicer for that, if you do it for yourselves, and from the love of it which I am sure will grow if you begin.

The reason that it is so important to begin at once is that you can learn when you are young, and you will not forget what you learn then—at least not entirely, and could easily learn it again; whereas if you wait till you "have time," you will find that you cannot learn, or that you forget it all again directly. And that is the sad state of many of your elders now. But there is one comfort even for them; for what they learnt when young they do not forget, and it comes back as a perpetual pleasure.

When we were children we used each to learn a hymn or poem, or part of one, every Sunday; and when we had learnt it we wrote it out from memory in a copy-book. We were very proud of the collection which we made in this way, and most anxious to keep our books neat, and well written. We usually chose what hymns we liked to learn; but, if we could not choose, mother chose for us. Just now and then we were lazy; and one little girl chose a hymn because it was only two verses, and then declared that it was her favourite hymn. Perhaps it was, just then, because it was short. But we loved our hymns; and when we sang hymns at chapel or at home, we were very happy when one came which we could sing without the book. When we had "no time" (for we too were very busy people) we, some of us, laid the book open on the dressing-table while we did our hair, and learnt a verse or two then—and not only on Sundays. That, of course, was the girls, as the boys' hair wanted little "doing": but somehow they learnt hymns and poetry too. A verse at a time soon comes to a long piece—and how that verse will sing on in your mind till it melts away into sleep!

And when you are ill, and can't well read, and want something to do, how the poetry comes back to you like a companion, and gives you joy and occupation! And how a hymn or poem not fully understood at the time it was learnt rushes back with all its meaning when something calls it to mind. Once in Algiers I remember crossing a wide plain, early one morning, and seeing it all covered with beautiful large cistus flowers—pink ones and white ones, gazing at the sun. I thought that when I came back I would gather a handful to take home; but when we returned there was not one. The verse came to my mind—

Like flowery fields the nations stand,
Pleased with the morning light:
The flowers, beneath the mower's hand,
Lie withering ere 'tis night.

Only this time the hot sun was the "mower."

And who that has learnt it once ever fails in spring to remember "When spring unlocks the flowers"? Or on a beautiful evening, when the birds cross the glowing sky, to think of

Whither, 'midst falling dew,
While glow the heavens with the last steps of day,
Far, through their rosy depths, dost thou pursue
Thy solitary way?"

Or when he meets a flock of sheep with their shepherd to think of "The Lord my Shepherd is," or "As his flock the Shepherd leads?" The world of hymns is full of pictures, and these pictures are full of deeper meanings which grow dearer and dearer as we grow older.

I could fill far more space than I can take in telling you of the hymns which grew wonderfully dear, even though we loved them from the first. And it is the same with other poetry. We used to learn poems of Wordsworth's, Mrs. Howitt's, Mrs. Hemans's, Southey's, Milton's, and many others besides. There was "Peter Bell" and his donkey who, "on the pivot of his skull, turned round his long left ear": that is a long poem, but we learnt it all. There was the "Idiot Boy," who was sent out on the pony to fetch the doctor. There was Lucy Grey; the "Blind Highland Boy," who sailed off in a large shell; there was "Alice Fell," with her torn cloak; and many another. There was a book called "Birds and Flowers," in our day, by Mrs. Howitt, and another called Howitt's Hymns; in these were "The Poor Man's Garden," Marion's "Pilgrimage," the "Boy of the Southern Isle," and a great many more. All these we learnt, and learnt to love. Often we used to repeat them together, taking a verse each, and in long poems this was very interesting. Then there was the "Burial of Sir John Moore"—"Not a drum was heard, nor a funeral note"; and what a picture it gave of a soldier's funeral, and how it came back to me when I was at Corunna and saw his burial-place!

When we were quite little we learnt little poems and "nursery rhymes"; and even these one remembers when one is quite "big," and they are still a pleasure. And when a brother was ill, when quite an elderly man, we were talking about some of these old verses. How he laughed when I repeated some to him, which even he half remembered; one about the little girl who climbed a gate and fell off, and the moral—

But little girls should never climb,
And Sophy won't another time.

And when I told him how we had not approved of that, and had altered it to—

But little girls should always climb,
And Sophy will another time, he laughed still more; and then he asked for one about "Charles," and I repeated:

As Charles his sisters sat between An apple-pie was brought:
Slily to take a piece unseen
The little fellow thought.
A piece from off Sophia's plate
Into his mouth he flung!
But ah! repentance came too late—
He burnt his little tongue.

I read, a short time ago, in the Times, an account of a polar exploring expedition under Mr. Wellman; and he reports that when they had got as far as they could during their first season they established themselves to wait through the long polar winter, and sent on a part of their company with stores of food and various things that they would want to make a "depôt," ready for their journey northwards in the spring. Someone was wanted to take care of this hut and its contents, and to stay there all the winter, till joined by their companions. Two Norwegians volunteered to stop, named Bentzen and Björvig. On Oct. 22, just as the Arctic night was closing in, the rest of the party said good-bye to the two men, and returned to "headquarters," leaving them in the utter solitude in their hut. In the middle of the next February, the party started again for the hut, wondering how their comrades had fared. Mr. Wellman met Björvig outside the hut, and as he shook hands with him Björvig said, "Poor Bentzen is dead," and there were tears in his eyes as he said it. He had been taken ill in December, and carefully nursed by his comrade and friend; and they had talked about the possibility of one or other of them dying, and they made a promise to each other that if this should happen the body of the dead comrade should be kept in the hut till help came, instead of trying to bury it in the rocks, where bears and foxes might get at it.

"Of course you have buried Bentzen?" Mr. Wellman said. "No," he replied, "he lies in there," pointing to the hut. "I kept my promise." "There, in one end of the gloomy little hut, side by side, lay two sleeping-bags. In one were the remains of Bentzen, carefully covered, and in the other Björvig passed his lonely life. He had had no books, no companions but dogs, and little to do; and how do you suppose this sailor managed to keep up his spirits? By reciting aloud, over and over again, the writings of Ibsen and other Norwegian poets, whose works he knew by rote. Next day we gathered stones and built a tomb, in which our dead comrade was carefully buried, a few fitting words being spoken as we all stood round. On that day we had 70 degrees of cold."

Can you not imagine what a relief in that awful loneliness and silence the Norwegian sailor would find in the sound even of his own voice, and in the poems which he knew by heart, and which came back to him when he had no books? None of you may ever be in such outer darkness and solitude as in those polar winters and snows and ice; but there are many solitudes in life for us all, and nothing can better nerve us to bear them than minds stored with beautiful thoughts given us by others, and memories ringing with poetry and music which rhyme themselves and beat time in our heads from our youth up, and make us still feel at one with a great and beautiful world of men and things even in old age.

GERTRUDE MARTINEAU.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any News-agent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are:—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER	1 8
PER HALF-YEAR	3 4
PER YEAR	6 6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE	4	0 0
HALF-PAGE	2	10 0
PER COLUMN	1	10 0
INCH IN COLUMN	0	3 8
BACK PAGE	5	0 0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, OCTOBER 7, 1899.

THE DISGRACE OF WAR.

As we write these lines the dogs of war are raising their detestable cry, and it is reported that an invasion of British territory by the Boers has begun. But even though the correspondent of a prominent paper "has the honour" of being first to publish the news, we are fain to believe it false, and still to hope that moderating counsels will prevail and save this country from a humiliation which in our view will be unparalleled in recent history.

Before these words are printed it will probably be known whether all hope of an honourable solution of our difficulties with the Transvaal Government must be abandoned. But even though conflicts on the frontier should have taken place, it ought to be possible for a strong Government, perfectly sincere in its desire for peace, still to hold in check the forces of destruction and to insist that the voice of reason shall be heard. Only a big bully is obliged to fight to prove his courage; and we have a higher conception of the honour of this country, and of the flag that flies for liberty, than to suppose that for such a reason the British Empire must at once crush the little Republic, which its diplomacy would seem to have driven to desperation.

It is acknowledged on all hands that such a war as is threatened can have only one end, and that there is no reason, unless it be overbearing and vindictive temper, or some unscrupulous and baser motives, for forcing on a conflict. We have been repeatedly grateful for the stand which the Manchester Guardian has taken in this matter, and have followed with growing confidence its judgment on the right and wrong of our dealings in South Africa. Nothing that has been published, so far as we have seen, to make clear the course taken by our Government, can take the sting out of the following judgment, which concluded the Guardian's leading article on Thursday:—

It is not the negotiations upon the franchise, but the way in which those negotiations were conducted—introduced as they were with a flourish of trumpets and accompanied at each step with deeper menaces and increasing preparations for war—it is this unheard-of method of conducting preliminary negotiations which has done the mischief. We hope and trust that there is no truth in the suggestion that the Boers will make the presence of troops on the frontier a casus belli. But should war break out in this lamentable manner before negotiations have come to an end, the responsibility will rest with those who began a course of very delicate negotiations to the sound of the war drum.

Why is it that the Transvaal, and the chivalrous Orange Free State, with whom we have no quarrel, are now prepared to face the resistless forces of the Empire, if not that they have lost confidence in the sincerity of our professed determination to respect their liberty of self-government? The Transvaal Government has been ready to enter upon the path of reform, and has taken steps in that direction; but if confidence has now been lost it will not be restored at the point of the bayonet or by the more deadly persuasion of artillery. Great Britain, as it seems to us, is pledged in honour to a peaceful solution of the present crisis. It would be a miserable failure of our capacity for government and a wise use of the great forces of the Empire if there should be any other issue; and we shall continue to hope to the uttermost that the friends of conciliation and equal justice, in this country and in South Africa, may yet prevail, and find the means to spare us the dire calamity and the disgrace of war.

WILLASTON SCHOOL.

THE laying of the foundation-stone of Willaston School by Sir JOHN BRUNNER on Thursday week marked an important step of progress in the fulfilment of the Trust established by the late PHILIP BARKER of Nantwich. In our present issue will be found a full report of the ceremony of the stone-laying and of the speeches at the luncheon which followed; the prospectus of the school, which is to be opened in September, 1900, is advertised on another page, and we also give as a supplement the architect's drawing of the school buildings in course of erection.

We are glad of the opportunity thus to call the attention of our readers to the school, for it marks a new departure, which may be fraught with consequences of the utmost moment to our religious community, and it is essential to the success of the undertaking that the interest of those who have the welfare of our Free Churches at heart should be at once enlisted on its behalf, that they may realise how much depends on their loyal support and in what ways practical assistance is required from them. We ask for a careful reading of the speeches, especially of the Revs. J. EDWIN ODGERS and H. ENFIELD DOWSON, two of the Governors of the school, and of Mr. GUY LEWIS, the Head Master. From these, and from the speeches of Sir JOHN BRUNNER and others, together with the prospectus, will be gathered the special nature of the Barker Trust, the high ideal set before the school and the earnest enthusiasm and capacity of the highest order, which are being devoted to the work.

Changed conditions of education in this country have practically made an end of the old private schools, such as those referred to by Mr. ODGERS and Mr. DOWSON, schools in which many of the man were trained, who now hold the places of highest honour and beneficent influence in our religious community and in many spheres of social and public usefulness. Those private schools worthily maintained the tradition of liberal religion inherited by our Free Churches; the boys grew up in close touch with the vigorous thought, the love of truth, the earnest piety, the ardent public spirit which has been the strength of our Nonconformity; and with the loss of that special influence there has been felt to be something lacking, which it is now hoped that Willaston School may do no little to supply. A warm tribute was paid at the inaugural meeting to the great English public schools, as producing in their boys a high sense of honour, and manly independence of character, making of them gentlemen in the best sense of the term; yet those schools, with all their breadth of sympathy, are mainly under Church of England influences, and when our boys go there, though they may not be converted to the doctrines of the Church, they yet receive a bias towards conformity, and are cut off during the years when deep impressions are made and character is being formed, from the vital influences which we hold to be essential to the nurture of the best spirit of our religious life. Willaston is founded as a public school in which the ruling influence shall be not that of the Church of England, but of Nonconformity of the broad spiritual type, according to the tradition inherited by those churches which hold to the principle of Non-subscription, "free from the obligations of prescribed creeds and tests of religious belief." We earnestly commend to the attention of our readers what Mr. ODGERS said as to the meaning of that tradition, as implying not merely liberty of thought, but genuine piety and freedom of spiritual life.

What Manchester College does for students of theology and for the training of ministers, that, it is hoped, Willaston may do for the training of boys and the nurture of their religious life. The ideal and the fundamental principle is the same. There will be those who prophesy failure, who will say that the ideal is too vague, that only dogmatism makes its way in the world. Willaston will stand for character and for religion nurtured in the air of freedom. The response already made to the appeal of the Governors shows that there are many of our people still true to the old ideal, and impressed with the need for such a school. As its aims become more widely known we are confident that many others will be found to rally to its support. The work of preparation and equipment is now being vigorously carried out. What the financial requirements are will be seen from our report; but even more essential to a prosperous future is the loyal support of those who can send their boys, who even at some sacrifice will think it worth while to be true to the principles of the school, and will thus ensure from the first a happy issue to the faith and the devoted zeal of those who are engaged in the work.

THE BLIND SPINNER.

LIKE a blind spinner in the sun,
I tread my days;
I know that all the threads will run
Appointed ways;
I know each day will bring its task,
And, being blind, no more I ask.
I do not know the use or name
Of that I spin;
I only know that someone came
And laid within My hand the thread, and said: "Since you
Are blind, but one thing you can do."
Sometimes the threads so thick and fast
And tangled fly,
I know wild storms are sweeping past,
And fear that I Shall fall; yet dare not try to find
A safer place, since I am blind.
I know not why, but I am sure
That, tint and place
In some great fabric to endure—
Past time and space—
My threads will have; so from the first,
Though blind, I never felt accurst.
I think, perhaps, this trust has sprung
From one short word
Said over me when I was young—
So young, I heard
It, knowing not that God's name signed
My brow, and sealed me His, though blind.
But whether this be seal or sign,
Within, without,
It matters not! The bond divine
I never doubt.
I know He set me here, and still,
And glad, and blind, I wait His will;
But listen, listen, day by day
To hear their tread,
Who hear the finished web away
And cut the thread,
And bring God's message in the sun,
"Thou poor blind spinner, work is done!" HELEN HUNT JACKSON.

OPENING OF THE LISCARD MEMORIAL CHURCH.

ON Saturday, Sept. 30, the third anniversary of the death of Mr. William Elam, the new church in Manor-road, which has been built and given to the Liscard congregation by Mrs. Elam, in memory of her husband, was opened. The church is built on the freehold site previously acquired by the congregation, and replaces the little iron church bought from the Wesleyans in October, 1892. The new buildings, of which Messrs. Ware and Rathbone are the architects, consist of a church and schoolroom or lecture hall, side by side, with vestry, library, &c., at the back, an ample vestibule leading into the church, and a small upper room in an octagonal tower, which stands out between the two gables of the main buildings. The entrances, under the tower and at the other end of the vestibule, are approached by steps, over which rounded arches, supported by solid stone pillars, with capitals handsomely carved, seems to be a reminiscence of the Doges' Palace at Venice. The general style of the architecture is domestic, in red brick, with stone facings and solid stone mullions to the series of large square windows. The red-tiled roofs add to the friendly and substantial appearance of the whole.

The interior of the church, which at present has sitting accommodation for a little over 200 worshippers, but on Saturday evening found room for at least 300, is decorated in a style new, so far as we are aware, to this country. The impression is of extreme simplicity, except at the east (south) end, where the communion table stands against the wall panelled in dark oak, and surmounted by further panels of Della Robbia ware, set in oak, executed by Mr. Harold Rathbone. On these decorative panels are represented, in symbolic figures, Righteousness, Mercy, and Humility, with the scroll beneath, "What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God." Above the main panels there is a further symbolic representation of the Spirit brooding over creation. The communion table itself, the pulpit, and the ends of four choir benches facing the congregation have also been decorated in a striking manner. On the dark oak Mr. Bernard Sleight, of the Bromsgrove Guild of Arts and Crafts, has painted symbolic figures, a beautiful frieze round the communion table representing at either end Faith and Love, and in the centre Jesus, holding in his hands the bread and the communion cup, while on his right is a figure of the Sower, scattering seeds of Truth, and on the other side the Good Shepherd. On the three panels of the pulpit are represented symbolic figures of intellectual truth, moral goodness, and spiritual beauty. The oak lectern is decorated with clustering palm leaves in beaten copper, and bears the inscription: "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." The pulpit stands on one side of the central arch, and the organ is to be placed on the other side, in the inner space reserved for it. On either side of the communion table doors, which form part of the decorative paneling, lead to the vestry and library. The cost of such a gift is not really of public concern, but for the sake of other church builders we may say that it has been £5,200 in all.

Before the opening service on Saturday evening, a short meeting was held in the lecture-hall, which was crowded to the doors. The chair was taken by Mr. J. BIRKETT, chairman of the congregation, Mrs. Elam being on his right hand, and supported by the Revs. R. A. Armstrong, Dr. Klein, E. P. Barrow, Joseph Wood, W. Eaton Thomas, of the Seacombe Congregational Church, J. M. Lloyd Thomas, minister of the church, W. J. Jupp, H. W. Hawkes, W. H. Drummond, J. Crossley, T. Lloyd Jones, P. Prime, J. Anderson, and V. D. Davis; Messrs. Charles W. Jones, Richard Robinson (treasurer of the L.D.M.A.), B. P. Burroughs (secretary of the L.D.M.A.), J. E. Rudkin (treasurer of the church), H. P. Houghton (secretary of the church), and many others.

The CHAIRMAN, in opening the proceedings, offered a cordial welcome to the friends who had come to rejoice with them on that occasion, both those who belonged to their own immediate fellowship, and members of other churches in the district. He expressed the deep indebtedness and heartfelt gratitude of the congregation to Mrs. Elam for the gift they were about to receive in that beautiful church, which she was dedicating to the glory of God and to the memory of her late husband. He further announced that Mrs. Elam's generosity towards them was not limited by that gift, but that she had also given that evening the sum of £1,000, to be held in trust for the support of the ministry of the church.

The Rev. V. D. DAVIS said that 'it had been his happiness to be closely associated from the first with the movement, which was crowned that evening by the generous gift they were receiving, and which had so bright an outlook into the future. The gift was given in all simplicity, from a heart filled with earnest religious feeling and grateful memories. It was a worthy memorial of a good man. He could so well imagine how Mr. Elam would rejoice with them that evening, and with all his modesty, yet be glad that he was so affectionately remembered. They must receive that gift not only with gratitude, but as a sacred trust, to be used in the same spirit in which it was given. He expressed the great regret they all must feel that Mr. Gwyther, the minister of the Liscard Congregational Church, was prevented by a family bereavement from being present, and from taking part, as he had intended, in their service. He was one of Mr. Elam's oldest friends, and it would have been their happiness to welcome him. But they were glad to be able to welcome Mr. Eaton Thomas, minister of the Seacombe Congregational Church, who had most kindly consented to take Mr. Gwyther's place. He concluded with the expression of an earnest prayer that they might be worthy of the great opportunity offered to that congregation, and use it to the glory of God, following in the steps of a good man.

The Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG expressed his profound interest in the event of that night. Looking back to the beginning of the Liscard movement, they felt that its growth had been not only steady but rapid, and that it had attained proportions they had little anticipated. It was not only rapid, but sound and wholesome, no mushroom growth but a sterling development of religious life, with rich promise for the future. In that church the great problem was set to be solved, how to combine absolute religious freedom with perfect devotion to the truth as each man might conceive it. It was a problem not easy to solve, but one to which congregation and minister would devote themselves with faith, hope, and zeal. When they were burning with some great truth it was hard to be broad and liberal in sympathies to those to whom their truth seemed pernicious error. When they were burning with the love of freedom it was not always easy to be perfectly loyal to truth. It was a problem worthy of their most earnest efforts, to be wholly loyal to the particular aspect of divine truth which was life and light to them, and absolutely broad and liberal in their welcome to others to whom truth presented itself in other aspects. Then there was another combination, which that church would set itself to effect in a particular and individual way. It was said by philosophers that there were three supremegoods—truth, righteousness, and beauty. In history they saw how combinations of men and churches had laid emphasis on one or other of the three. Men and communities had been devoted to the search for the eternal truth at whatever cost; and they of Puritan ancestry could never forget the men with burning desire to see the righteousness of the Lord realised in His world. There was a church, not very closely akin to them, in which the commanding motive had been the love of beauty as distinguished from theological truth or righteousness for righteousness' sake. As the love of beauty, the love of musical and devotional æstheticism had grown in a church, usually the fire of devotion to truth or righteousness had in a certain degree paled and died down. They in their beautiful church would strive to twist that three-fold cord and realise a life in which truth, righteousness, and beauty should none of them be defrauded of their own. In that great experiment, endeavour, and aspiration he wished them God-speed, that generations yet unborn might rejoice in the work they had done.

The Rev. PRIESTLEY PRIME recalled his year of ministry with them, and added his congratulations. He bore testimony to Mr. Elam's earnest Christian work, and expressed a hope that the church would interpret its freedom, not only as intellectual, but in the widest spiritual sense. The world needed their work, it needed every effort of every earnest man and woman. They would stand for spiritual life, for worship, for love that regenerates. They needed the spirit of Christ in their midst in Liverpool and Manchester, to go to the heart of the problems of the world, which were not solved yet. They must do their work in the spirit of prayer, for in no other way would they have the true strength.

The Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS having expressed on Mrs. Elam's behalf her gratitude to all the friends who in various ways had helped in the carrying out of her generous purpose, the Chairman led Mrs. Elam to the door of the church, which she then formally opened, and the whole company entered to take part in the service of dedication.

THE FIRST SERVICE.

The service, which was conducted by the Rev. V. D. DAVIS, opened with the singing of a Sanctus and sentences of Scripture, followed by the hymn "O Thou to whom, in ancient time." The first lesson was read by the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, the second by the Rev. W. Eaton Thomas, of the Seacombe Congregational Church. The choir was strengthened by members of the choir of the Liscard Congregational Church, and, in the course of the service, the anthem (by Sir John Goss), "O give thanks unto the Lord," was rendered.

The address was given by the Rev. E. P. BARROW, of Cross-street Chapel, Manchester, from the text "None of us liveth to himself" (Romans xiv. 7), and dealt with the subject of personal liberty and congregational unity. That day, he said, they felt their congregational life as never before. They stood forth for the first time in the sight of all, with full equipment and provision for the life and worship of a Christian church. Well might they pause for a moment and think kindly and gratefully of him whose life was no small part of their encouragement in the past, of her whose affection had made that church the best of all memorials, the best of all encouragements for the time to come. But they met that evening for more than kind and grateful remembrance and it was his duty and privilege to offer something more than friendly congratulation. "Except the Lord build the house, their labour is but lost that build it"; except there be spiritual life within, the most beautiful fabric is but an empty shell. He then dealt with the problem of how to combine personal freedom with congregational discipline. No better advice than the Apostle's could be given. On questions of fundamental principle there must be no compromise, but in matters of practice, of secondary importance, diversities were no bar to unity, so long as they rested on conviction, and were honest, though various, interpretations of the mind of Christ, and were accompanied by consciousness of responsibility and consideration of their effect. In church life personal conviction must not be unduly pressed; it must be referred to that leading mind which it was the object of a Christian Church to realise; it must be adjusted to those opposed convictions, as honest and loyal as their own. To be opinionated was to be isolated. Personal liberty must stop short of independence, and constantly remind itself, now of the ties of Christian discipleship, now of the claims of Christian fellowship. He further urged the importance of maintaining such appointed forms of service as Baptism and the Lord's Supper, which should not be regarded as matters purely personal to self, but as of social value, witnessing to a corporate life. They might claim their Christian liberty in regard to these matters, but it must be from clear conviction, consistently with what they believed to be the spirit of Christ, as in the sight of God, as under account to man. Infant baptism might be jealously retained as a visible token of that which is the central truth of Christ's religion, sonship to God; the fitting memorial of the act of him who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me"; a public act bound up with the order and discipline of a public body and rightly claiming its place in public worship. Similarly the service of the Lord's Supper might come to be thought of, historically, as a memorial use unbroken through more than eighteen centuries, a loving act of remembrance of him who asked so to be remembered, and socially, as a token and pledge of spiritual affection, a symbol of the spiritual life by which they were made members of a spiritual body. In accepting that church with its ample provision they accepted, not only a precious gift, but also a solemn responsibility. They must cherish and maintain those means and aids to higher life. They must be true to themselves, but faithful also to that ideal which was larger than self. And the address concluded:—Be consistent and yet loyal, conscientious and yet liberal; be patient, be tolerant; reduce difficulties, do not make them; minimise differences, harmonise them, do anything but embitter them; then the strong sympathies of to-day will remain, and, whatever outward change these walls may witness, you will preserve an inner unity of spirit, and an unbroken bond of peace."

THE SUNDAY SERVICES.

On Sunday the services were conducted by the Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS, the lessons being read by the Rev. V. D. DAVIS, and the sermons preached by the Rev. JOSEPH WOOD, who also offered a prayer of dedication at the morning service. In the morning the communion service was also held. The services were all according to an order specially prepared and printed for the occasion.

At the morning service Mr. Wood's sermon was from the words "A glorious church" (Ephesians v. 27). Whatever consecration, he said, the building received was from the character, aims, and ideals of the living souls to whom it gave shelter. The true church was a spiritual building, a living community. It had a basis as broad as humanity, founded deep in human nature's need of fellowship. So long as men cared for the great deep things of God and righteousness, love and conscience and human welfare, so long would they organise for their promotion and form themselves into churches. Taking Matthew Arnold's definition, "A church is a society for the promotion of goodness," Mr. Wood showed how profound and comprehensive was the truth of those words. The church was a society, a living body, an organism; not a mere audience or concourse of human atoms, but a society bound together, animated by a common life. And it had one great purpose—to build on earth the new City of God. Spiritual life was no individual matter, but a movement of souls, of lives in companionship. It needed the co-operation of many bound together in one body. In religion the first thing was goodness, the second thing was goodness, the third thing was goodness. It must work by the cultivation of reverence, admiration, and love. It gave the first place to worship. Reverence was essential to the highest character. The heart's best reverence was not for power, beauty or wisdom, but for goodness. The church promoted goodness by fostering, enriching, and enlarging the sympathies. It stood for humanity. The church with the great mission of which he spoke consisted of the great body of men and women who loved, trusted, revered, and prayed. They must not speak of a church as the minister's. The people who worshipped there were the church; the responsibility of making that a glorious church rested with them. They must dedicate the church by their faith and hope and love.

In the evening Mr. Wood took for his texts, "All souls are mine" (Ezekiel xviii. 4) and "The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, are these" (Jeremiah vii. 4). Having pointed out the irony of these latter words, he contrasted the material and the spiritual ideas of religion, and said that there was really only one temple in the universe—the heart of the humble and contrite. From the thought of God as dwelling in the human soul had grown the ideal of a redeemed humanity as a temple of which individual lives were the living stones. Every soul had its place in that building. Not one could be lost, since all belonged to God. Both in origin and destiny, all souls were His. Thus the care for souls was the great end of the church. Even beyond the investigation of truth and the vindication of it was the need to move men to goodness, to translate the truth they knew into life and character. Thus they might share the joy of work with God, until all humanity should win the crown of saintliness and all men should feel goodness to be triumphant.

NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM UNITARIAN CHRISTIAN ASSO- CIATION.

ANNUAL MEETINGS.

ON Sunday, October 1, the annual sermons of the Association were preached by the Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A., of Wandsworth, in the Church of the Divine Unity, Newcastle-on-Tyne. The titles of Mr. Tarrant's discourses were "The Great Thoughts of the Nineteenth Century," and "A Healthful Religion." Good congregations were present despite the inclement state of the weather. Collections were taken on behalf of the funds of the Association.

The annual business meeting was held in the church on the Monday afternoon following. Representatives were present from Stockton, Middlesbrough, South Shields, Carlisle, Darlington, Choppington, Byker, Gateshead, Sunderland, and Newcastle-on-Tyne. There were also present the Revs. W. G. Tarrant, James C. Street, W. H. Lambelle, H. Bodell Smith, C. Travers, and Arthur Harvie; Mr. J. G. Stirling, Mr. A. G. Peaston, and Mr. Bipin Chandra Pal. The chair was occupied by the President, Mr. R. AFFLECK, J.P. The proceedings were opened with the singing of a hymn, after which Mr. Fred C. Slater, secretary, read the annual report of the Committee, and the financial statement was presented by the Treasurer, Mr. John Pattinson, J.P., both of which were adopted on the motion of the President, seconded by Mr. JOHN TWEEDY, J.P., who very generously undertook to pay the debit balance of £10 12s. 10d. due to the Treasurer.

The officers and committee for the ensuing year were then elected.

On the motion of the President a vote of condolence was passed with the family of the late Mrs. Colfox, of Rax, Bridport, who for many years acted as secretary of the local Postal Mission.

The routine business having been concluded a discussion took place as to the best means of carrying on the work of the Association. Considerable emphasis was laid upon the need of continuing the work at Gateshead.

The annual tea took place in the school-rooms, followed by a public meeting held in the church in the evening, presided over by the Rev. FRANK WALTERS, who was supported by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, the Rev. James C. Street, Mr. Bipin Chandra Pal, Mr. John Pattinson, the Revs. W. H. Lambelle, C. Travers, Arthur Harvie, H. Bodell Smith, and Mr. Fred C. Slater, secretary.

Mr. WALTERS, in his opening remarks, spoke of his pleasure at seeing such a large number of friends present. Their presence undoubtedly implied their interest in the great work they were endeavouring to carry on. He welcomed the return of their old colleague, Mr. James Street. He was sorry that ill-health was the primary cause of Mr. Street's presence amongst them. He had never considered Newcastle held the proud position of a health sanatorium until these frequent visits of Mr. Street. Apparently there was something invigorating and revivifying in its air, as Mr. Street always came North to recuperate. It was not only the physical environment of the North that had this effect, but the inspiring effect of meeting and coming in contact with the great number of friends here. Speaking of the work of their Association, he hoped it would be a work of continued progress.

The Rev. JAMES C. STREET then moved that the best thanks of the meeting be given to the Rev. W. G. Tarrant for his services in connection with the annual meetings, and that a hearty welcome be accorded to Mr. Bipin Chandra Pal, of the Brahma Somaj. In doing so, Mr. Street said he felt some difficulty in discovering why he had been asked to move the resolution. They must have seen he was present, and knowing his interest in their work had given him that opportunity of saying a few words to them. If any man in this country had the interest of this splendid work at heart, it was himself. Reasons of old associations, of good comradeship, reasons of love all made it a distinct pleasure to meet with so many friends. He always knew Mr. Walters was poetical, and this he (Mr. Walters) had demonstrated when he mentioned his appreciation of the sermon of Mr. Tarrant, which he had never heard. Personally, he could venture to criticise the sermon, seeing that he had had the privilege of hearing it. Mr. Tarrant knew how to preach, knew how to put himself into sympathy with his audience, and he had listened to him yesterday, with the greatest possible pleasure and profit. It was quickening, helpful, and inspiring, and would leave an impression which would not soon be forgotten. To their friend from the Far East (Mr. Bipin Chandra Pal) they would extend their heartiest welcome. They had heard of the noble work he had accomplished for the truth: he had been in the forefront and had taken his place in the ranks of the pioneers of humanity. Unitarianism had large and universal sympathies: as the Church of God it was as wide and all-embracing as humanity. He expressed sympathy with the Rev. A. Harvie, who had been indisposed for some time, and was with difficulty able to be with them that night. Mr. Harvie, he said, was bound to leave his mark—he would be faithful to truth, and conscience, in all that he undertook.

Mr. JOHN PATTINSON, J.P., seconded the resolution in a brief speech.

The Rev. W. G. TARRANT, in responding, expressed his pleasure at the kind words which had been spoken in reference to himself, and said he was much gratified to find such good work being done in the district, and hoped it would be continued with the same enthusiasm and success.

Mr. BIPIN CHANDRA PAL, who received a very hearty welcome, in responding to his part of the resolution, said that he could not take it in any way as a personal compliment to himself, but he accepted it as a sincere token of the sympathy of the meeting for the Brahma Somaj, that wider Church of the Divine Unity to which Mr. Street had made such eloquent reference. He claimed for Raja Ram Mohun Roy, the founder of the Brahma Somaj, an honoured place among the fathers of the Unitarian Church, his three appeals to the Christian public having to a large extent forestalled both the method and the conclusions of the higher criticism. In the Church of the Divine Unity which he established in Calcutta he invited Christians and Hindus and Mahomedans, all who, despite minor differences, believed in the Unity of God, to join in worshipping Him in truth and in spirit, in a common temple, and from a common platform, leaving aside, for the time at least, their racial and sectarian peculiarities. The Brahma Somaj honoured all prophets, and accepted, not as infallible revelations but as inspired teachings, the truths in every Scripture. Referring next to the problems of religion of our own times, especially in England and the West, he claimed that the experiences of India would be of immense help to their solution. A great renaissance was needed in our age, and in this renaissance the higher thoughts and the deeper spiritual experiences of India were destined to play as important a part as Greek philosophy played in the old renaissance. And it was the legitimate function of the Unitarian body, freed as they were from the limitations of the other Christian Churches, to lead this renaissance. With considerable passion he exclaimed, why should it be left to Professor Max Müller and others to do that which was the rightful work of the Unitarians to do, and urged upon the ministers present to take to the study of Sanscrit literature and Indian philosophy. They would find in this higher solutions of the problems of Trinity and Incarnation, and would be able at once to rationalise Christian theology, liberalise Christian thought, and deepen Christian life by the help of Oriental experiences.

The Rev. ARTHUR HARVIE next gave a brief summary of the work of the Association during the past year, laying considerable stress upon the hopeful outlook at Choppington, Byker, and Gateshead, and insisting upon the duty of the Association continuing the good work either through him, for he liked the work himself, or, if they should think it fitter, by other persons worthier than himself, but never to slacken their efforts on behalf of the sacred cause.

The Rev. H. BODELL SMITH also addressed the meeting, after which a vote of thanks to the Rev. Frank Walters having been proposed by Mr. TARRANT, and carried by acclamation, the meeting closed with a hymn and benediction.

UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE.

THE present session of the College was formally opened on Wednesday evening, Oct. 4, by the delivery of a lecture on "Jerome and the Vulgate," by the Rev. J. E. Manning, M.A., in the Memorial Hall, Manchester. Lieut.-Colonel Jesse Pilcher presided over the meeting, which was well attended. The lecturer first sketched the life and work of Jerome, and then critically reviewed his magnum opus—namely, the translation of the Old Testament from Hebrew into Latin, known as the Vulgate. Mr. Manning said that among the books which had influenced the world the Vulgate stands pre-eminent; it was in the thirteenth century that it began to be called by that name. It is to-day the one authentic edition of the Bible for Roman Catholics. It had great weight with Luther whose translation of the Apocrypha is directly from it. Wiclif's Bible was a direct translation of the Vulgate. Words like Salvation, Propitiation, Redemption and Grace came from the Vulgate, so also Communion and Sacred. Jerome translated the Bible for the Western Church; did much to spread monasticism in Europe, and was one of the few men of his time who studied Hebrew for the sake of obtaining a first-hand knowledge of the Bible. His life was much influenced by a dream he had at Antioch in 374, in which Christ appeared to him and rebuked him for not being Christian.

Then he went into the desert, spending some time in copying books, making baskets, and learning Hebrew. In 379 he became a Presbyter at Antioch; thence he went to Constantinople, and thence to Rome. In 383 he was at the latter place requested to revise the Psalter and the New Testament, and then the idea of a new translation came into his mind. Driven away from Rome, he set out for Palestine and settled at Bethlehem, where a monastery and three convents were built and supported by Paula, one of his followers. He worked upon his translation amidst troubles in the monastery, controversies, sickness, and inroads by the Huns; but he finished it in 404. It is by no means wanting in critical insight. He was the man above all others best fitted for the work. He spared no pains. Yet he lacked much knowledge in his day for critical translation, and was not always correct in points of grammar and construction. Still his work is a marvellous production for his age. In his journeyings about Palestine he made everything subserve his great effort. His letters, too, are an epitome of his time; the spirit of the age is in them. They are the transcript of a great life. He gave his opponents nicknames. He was keenly alive and knew much of men. Unfortunately, he could not endure rivals, and made enemies in everything he undertook; yet he was unselfish. His influence over women was remarkable; and he induced some of the noblest ladies in Rome to renounce their luxurious living and tend upon the poor and needy. His influence in his own day was enormous. He was forty-five when he started in earnest to study Hebrew; one of his teachers came to him by night for fear of the Jews. The whole translation took about fourteen years. He himself admitted it had mistakes; but its value is very great. It remained for eight centuries the bulwark of Western Christianity. However, it was at first received with stormy opposition; and he was charged with laying violent hands on the Word of God. The lecturer also showed how marginal notes and glosses crept in and were incorporated in new editions, until it became necessary to carefully revise the text. In 1598 the last official edition was published, and that is the standard in the Roman Catholic Church to-day. It was an able and instructive lecture, and was listened to with marked attention by those present.

After the Chairman had expressed the thanks of the audience, and the Principal, Rev. A. Gordon, had announced the work of the coming session, the meeting ended.

A WORD IN SEASON.

PREACHING at Ipswich on the first Sunday in September, after the summer holiday, the Rev. W. Jellie appealed to his congregation on the subject of "Our Work." Entering upon a statement of the object they had in view, he spoke as follows:—

I have thought that the best word I could say on this occasion would be a statement of the thing we have to do here. Every church ought to mean something; and our success will depend, in great measure, on the clearness with which we see our aim and object. We are here to do something—we shall not be very likely to do it, unless we know what it is. We may, perhaps, hit something by shooting at random, but we can safely say that it will not be worth picking up.

Let us, then, ask of ourselves the question which the unbelieving Jews asked of Jesus—"What doest thou for a sign? What workest thou?" If we could only get that answered clearly, and the answer published abroad, we should stand a much better chance of building up a powerful and numerous church.

But that is the very question which meets us at the outset. Are we working merely for numbers, to fill the empty pews? Surely not; although it is much pleasanter to worship in a full house, and more gratifying to feel oneself backed by a crowd. We have surely a deeper aim than that. We should be pleased to have the numbers, as a sign of the acceptableness of our work, but the work is something other than the mere gathering of numbers.

It cannot be better stated than in the old-fashioned terms of "preaching the Gospel" and "saving souls." We are here—those who join this church band themselves together—in order that we, I say we, may "preach the Gospel" and "save souls."

People will have religion, in some form or other—it is an essential factor in human life—and if you do not give them a rational religion, they will accept an irrational form of it, rather than go without. Our work is to give the world a rational religion, a rational form of worship, in which all the elements which form man's nature shall be so blended that they may love God, not merely with the feeling of sight or smell or hearing, not merely with the reason, but with the heart and soul and mind and strength.

It is our work to hold out to the world a scheme of salvation that shall not clash with the facts and discoveries which modern research is bringing to light year by year. So that religion and science shall be felt to be one—two sides of the same thing—the knowledge of God. And a part of the salvation we offer is just an escape from that soul-destroying state of mind into which educated and intelligent men and women fall when they keep their best reading for home and their religion for the church, when their reading and their worship are not of a piece, but so antagonistic that the mind has to be divided into two compartments, one for each, with a locked door between.

It is our work to hold out to the world a scheme of salvation that shall not clash with the finer feelings of humanity which have been developed of late. When people speak of the justice of God in one breath, and in the next of the propitiatory sacrifice, or atonement of Christ, it simply revolts us. We have to preach that God is at least as just as man is; and if the doctrine of the atonement has to go in face of that—why, let it go. When people speak of the love of God in one breath, and in the next of deciding beforehand that some shall be saved and some not, or of making certain ceremonies like baptism a sine quâ non of salvation, it revolts us. We have to preach that God's love is at least as pure and true and tender as man's love. And if the doctrines of hell, or of the sacraments, or of election have to go—why, let them go, and an eternal farewell to them.

It is an important part of our work to save men and women and children from the fears—the unnecessary fears—that are born of orthodox teaching. I do not know how it affects you to hear of children lying awake at night in terror of an imaginary burning pit, to which they are doomed for, perhaps, some trifling fault they committed during the day. I do not know how it affects you to hear of mothers being told deliberately that their helpless and innocent babe is now tossing in the sea of fire and torment, because, by some accident, or, perhaps, the obstinacy of the father, it died without the rites of baptism. These things, which are of constant occurrence, and which arise with logical necessity from the old doctrines, make my blood boil. I do not know how it affects you to hear of conscientious thinkers, whose only guiding star is the Truth, told that to doubt is the worst of sins; but to me, to create such a fear of thinking for one's self is one of the greatest crimes against humanity.

Yes, our work is still to save the souls of men, to save them from this degrading, miserable fear, by telling them, that in the sight of God, to doubt is as holy as to believe; that no such place as an eternal hell of torment exists; that if it did, God would not send a child there for some omission of a priest or a parent; that His rewards and punishments are in proportion to the merit or the offence; and that, caring most as He does for character, His punishments are meant to restore to life and health and happiness, and not to doom, to death.

It is our work to spread knowledge, to save men and women from ignorance. You and I know that most of the evils, which used to be put down to the fall of man, are due solely to ignorance, and that we are to be saved from them by a knowledge of the laws of God, and a wise observance thereof, not by any biblical or sacramental scheme of salvation.

There are other things also that we should work to save men's souls from. We want to be saved from the wild, unbridled passions that hurry men and women into quarrels and hatreds and feuds, and that hurry nations into acts of intolerable injustice and cruel wars. We want to be trained into habits of temperance, sobriety, and patience, and this, as a church, is also part of our work.

We need to be trained into right methods of living and acting together, socially, peacefully, in helpful relations one with another, knowing how to sink differences for the good of all, knowing how to repress our own particular desires and fads and tempers, so as to bring out the greatest good from the greatest number. This also, as a church, is part of our work. Not, remember, as something incidental to the labour of saving souls, not as a secondary thing done by the way, while our eye is on something else, but as part of the grand work. This itself is saving souls. For with us character is salvation. The man who is in right relations with his fellow-men and with his conscience is saved—now—is right for this world and right for the next.

The explaining and the acting of this work is, I contend, a real preaching of the Gospel. It is the gospel of the love of God, and of the right and true way of life, so that here and now we may begin to make a heaven.

Our work is to preach this gospel. Mine is to expound it and voice it to the best of my ability. Yours is to spread it abroad, to organise a Church that shall stand for it, and practise it, and to be here Sunday after Sunday to see that it is preached.

But our work is not only to preach the gospel of the love of God; it is also to create by our daily actions, by our individual and social efforts, by our weekly times of worship, an atmosphere of the love of God; so that by our kindly deeds, our acts of forgiveness and long-suffering, our habits of brotherly service, those who come into contact with us shall feel the love of God. And this creation of an atmosphere of love, which all who join us shall breathe and disseminate, is of even more importance than the preaching of it.

This, then, is our work. And all our worship, our preaching and teaching, our classes and societies, have this end in view.

Is it not a great work? Is it not a work worth doing? Is it not the work which the world wants to be done? And is it not impossible for one man to it?

To what extent are you willing to co-operate? Remember how the members of other Churches toil and sacrifice in order to do their work. Why should a blanket of indifference fall upon us and smother us? Remember the old story in the Book of Nehemiah, how the Jews, returning from Babylon, desired to fortify their city with a wall. But they were feeble, and their enemies mocked them and despised them. Yet they succeeded in building it; and why? Because, says the chronicler, "the people had a mind to work."

It is not the work we do, it is not the environment in which we are placed which makes for character, nor is it what others do for us. It is the way we take our circumstances. And "no change of circumstances can repair a defect of character."—Horatio Dresser.

PROVINCIAL LETTER.

LONDON.

THE usual work of our congregations and societies has been in most cases resumed after a long summer interval. This year's remarkably fine and warm season lasted so persistently that it almost seemed that a condition of things more appropriate to hard work would never come; but it has come. The holiday-makers, with very few exceptions, are back in their places; the morning congregations are full, or filling up again; and the tide of unattached visitors is more and more finding its way to evening worship. In many of our churches courses of special sermons or lectures have been announced chiefly with a view to meeting the needs of those inquiring their way towards our Zion; though, as far as I have been able to learn, the directly controversial aspect of our work—an aspect by no means to be neglected—is everywhere being subordinated to that of providing, if it be possible, religious nurture and Christian fellowship for the great unchurched.

Among the few important events which have occurred since my last letter, is one which distinctly tends to increase the anxieties of all who have care for our general work in this district. After a trying time of ill-health, extending over many months, the Rev. J. Harwood has resigned his charge at Brixton, and thus our most important congregation on the south side is left without a minister at a time when we can least spare any of our forces. Not only so; Mr. Harwood has, during his ministry in London, brought so much sound wisdom and practical experience to bear on many branches of our associated work that the loss, if he leaves London as well as Brixton, will be keenly felt. It would be impossible to express in brief what all our busy workers feel, and what the busiest of us is best able to judge, as to his high worth as a wise counsellor and loyal comrade; I can but say we shall miss him sorely, and we wish him speedy restoration to full health and vigour. The church at Brixton has many advantages, with some disadvantages. Situated in the midst of a large residential population and easily accessible to families in some of our best southern suburbs, its importance can hardly be over-rated. It would be a strengthening to all our work, not only on the south side but throughout London, if a successor to Mr. Harwood could be soon secured to take up the work he has so ably carried on during the seven years of his ministry at Effra-road.

I am not yet able to chronicle a ministerial settlement at Highgate, much as I should like to do so. Circumstances of peculiar difficulty have prolonged the interregnum, but it is to be hoped that the problem will soon be solved, and that the right man will be found to enter into the rich harvest here while the season is at its ripest. Nothing but encouraging news comes from Hackney friends with respect to their hopes under the leadership of the Rev. R. H. U. Bloor, their new minister; and at Forest Gate, where the Rev. H. W. Parris has just completed his first year of arduous work, the tokens of energetic enterprise and co-operation between minister and people are manifold and gratifying. I wish I could reach through this column some of the many earnest-minded people to whom it would be a real stimulus and benefit if they could be induced to attend and share the ministrations of such thoughtful and cultivated teachers. From time to time the precise whereabouts of our places of worship in these districts and throughout London have been advertised in various ways, with a view to meeting the eye of a stranger. The results are difficult to trace, of course; but occasionally one does hear people who gratefully acknowledge their debt for being led in this way to hear veritable words of life and to find a spiritual home. The policy of advertisement would be properly eschewed if it were self-advertisement, but being used as a means, and apparently the only means of reaching a large number of people and inviting them to share great and priceless blessings, it is not only justifiable—it is a duty.

I may here pass without inappropriateness to the mention of two forthcoming events, each of which may do something and is certainly devised to do something in the way of making our beliefs and principles more widely known. Next Tuesday the eleventh annual meeting of our South-Eastern Provincial Assembly is to be held, the rendezvous being Wandsworth. It is distinctly among the aims of these annual gatherings to arouse public interest in the places respectively visited; and it is hoped that this may be a result of the Wandsworth meeting. A population yearly growing denser surrounds our church at East Hill, and although efforts have not been spared in making the church known there remains a great deal of gross ignorance about our principles—if not of our existence. Probably a good many of the delegates will be visiting Wandsworth for the first time, so it may be serviceable to say that the best station for most travellers to arrive at is Clapham Junction. Thence the trams run westward to the door of the church; the Town Hall, High-street, where all the proceedings subsequent to the service are to take place, is about five minutes' walk from the tram terminus, continuing in the same direction. It would be out of place to anticipate here the reports which will be presented. As far as one can see, there are no "burning questions" likely to rise this year, but there is a good prospect of a useful, strengthening, and inspiring meeting. Some of our friends in London, surrounded by brethren in the faith, only imperfectly understand the value of these annual gatherings. It is, no doubt, the representatives of the scattered and often struggling churches that chiefly enjoy a reunion of the kind. But there is also a sense of responsibility which needs to be quickened; and if anyone thinks the Provincial Assembly does not at present attempt anything of great importance, let him before all things put his own shoulder to the wheel.

The other forthcoming event referred to above is the autumnal conference at Essex Hall of the London District Unitarian Society. This is fixed for Tuesday, Oct. 24, the evening of the day on which the B. and F.U.A. Council meets. The new President, Sir John Brunner, will take the chair, and as there is to be a paper read by one of our wisest councillors, and a few chosen speakers are to deal with the subject—which, I hear, is distinctly of a practical character—the meeting ought to prove one worth holding. Would that all meetings were!

With these two gatherings over, the season of fruitful work will be fully upon us. As to work of some kind, we are all either in it, or going to be in it, in earnest; for the date of that Bazaar—May 1, 1900—is drawing rapidly near, and a vast amount has to be done before then. The subscription list remains wide open, if anyone is unable to "work his passage," and needs must send cash as a deputy. I cannot think all this effort in our churches will be in vain. The money will be raised; a pardonable pride will not suffer London to fail where Manchester showed so excellent an example. But there are higher fruits to be produced, fruits without which the treasurer's cheques are "nothing but leaves." We are trying, I would humbly and sincerely hope, to bring forth those fruits.

W. G. TARRANT.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Aberdare: Highland-plaza.—Harvest services were held here on Sunday and Monday last. The Rev. D. J. Williams, of Merthyr, and the Rev. E. Robinson Hughes, minister-elect, preached on Sunday; while the Rev. W. Tudor Jones, Swansea, preached to a large congregation on Monday night. The weather was extremely wet on Sunday. The meetings, however, were fairly attended, and the collection satisfactory. The church had been beautifully decorated by the ladies of the congregation, and evoked general encomiums. The meetings altogether were very encouraging.

Bath.—On Sunday last harvest services were conducted in Trim-street Chapel by the minister, the Rev. F. W. Stanley. The chapel was beautifully decorated by ladies connected with the congregation, and was greatly admired. The day unfortunately proved very wet, but, notwithstanding, in the evening a good congregation assembled. The gifts were distributed at the conclusion of the service among some of the older members.

Birmingham: Hurst-street Mission.—The Sunday-school anniversary service was held on Sunday last at the Town Hall, the free use of which had been kindly granted by the Lord Mayor (Alderman Beale) for the occasion. Although the weather was most unfavourable, the attendance was a very large one, the great hall being nearly filled. The address, which was delivered by the Rev. L. P. Jacks, M.A., was a most appropriate and deeply impressive one. The special music, under the direction of the organist, Mr. R. A. Clarke, was given by the mission choir, the Sunday-school scholars, and Mr. Westwood's orchestral band. The service was conducted by the missionary, Mr. W. J. Clarke.

Blackpool.—The Rev. H. Bodell Smith, who recently entered upon ministerial duty at Darlington, but had not removed his home and family thither, has been induced to remain in Blackpool to become minister at the South Shore Unitarian Church. This new departure by the South Shore Unitarians has been aided in a gratifying manner by a number of well-known Blackpool residents, who are not Unitarians but whose appreciation of Mr. Smith's public work in Blackpool has led them to co-operate in any steps to secure his continuance amongst them, guaranteeing financial support towards that end. Mr. Smith enters upon his duties at South Shore at the commencement of the new year.

Bradford.—Last Sunday afternoon the Right Hon. Earl of Carlisle addressed a meeting of young people connected with the Chapel-lane Chapel, in the Channing Hall, and in spite of the downpour of rain there was a large audience. In the course of an impressive address, his lordship urged the supreme importance of bringing up the young in the right principles of life, among which he laid special emphasis on sobriety and self-respect. The chair was occupied by the minister, the Rev. E. Ceredig Jones, M.A., who spoke of the excellent work which was being done by the Young People's Guild connected with the chapel and school. On the motion of Miss Collins, seconded by Mr. E. W.

Silson, a hearty vote of thanks was accorded to Lord Carlisle, who, in responding, expressed the pleasure it had given him to show his sympathy with the work that was being done at Chapel-lane. Mr. W. Nuttall, Mr. Byron Boothroyd, and Mr. J. G. Slater also briefly addressed the meeting. At the evening service in the chapel Mr. Bipin Chandra Pal, of Manchester College, Oxford, gave an eloquent discourse on "India's Message to England."

Bristol: Lewin's Mead Domestic Mission.—The Rev. J. Wain's resignation of the duties of missionary minister was formally tendered to the committee of the institution on the 28th ult. His resignation was most regretfully accepted by the members present, who joined in expressing their warm wishes for Mr. Wain's happiness at Trowbridge, where he hopes to commence his ministry on the first Sunday in the New Year.

Chelmsford.—On Sunday, harvest festival services were held in connection with Legz-street Chapel, the preacher being the Rev. E. John Harry. Gifts of fruits and flowers were tastefully arranged by several ladies of the congregation. The attendances were more numerous than usual. The "harvest festival service" was used, both morning and evening.

Chester.—The harvest services were held last Sunday in the lecture room of Matthew Henry's Chapel, the chapel itself not being yet reopened after restoration. Flowers and fruit and creeper made the room bright. The collections for the Infirmary and Chapel expenses were higher than in any recent year, as were the Sunday-school collections in July. We hope to be in the chapel again on 22nd inst. The coving of the ceiling meets with unqualified praise. The determination to put the gallery in repair and thus make the whole chapel sound together, with the compulsory dismantling of the vestry, owing to the discovery of dry rot, will compel us to raise £250 more than the £600 already received. Particulars will shortly be given in the advertisement columns.

Choppington.—The reopening services in connection with this church were held on Sunday last, when the Rev. Frank Walters preached to a crowded congregation. The building has been tastefully renovated internally, and it is hoped to complete the thorough repair of the place in the early spring if sufficient funds are forthcoming.

Chorley (Appointment).—The Rev. Andrew Doel has been appointed minister of Park-street Chapel, in succession to the late Rev. G. Ride.

Guildford.—On Sunday last thanksgiving services were held and the harvest festival was celebrated at the church in Ward-street, when, in spite of weather which was almost prohibitive with its pouring rain, good congregations assembled. Offerings of flowers and corn and fruit and foliage adorned the church, which never looked prettier than on this day devoted to the thankful and abiding joyousness of life.

King's Lynn.—Harvest services were held in the Free Christian Church on Sunday last, the Rev. G. Lansdown being the preacher. The church was very tastefully decorated. On Monday evening a social gathering was held in the schoolroom. The room was well filled, and an excellent programme of vocal and instrumental music was much enjoyed. Light refreshments were provided by the ladies during the evening, and the fruit and vegetables were sold.

Knutsford.—The Sunday-school anniversary and harvest thanksgiving services were held in Brook-street Chapel on Sunday last, morning and afternoon, the Rev. B. C. Constable, of Stockport, being the preacher. Special music was rendered by an augmented choir. The chapel was beautifully decorated. The services were continued on the Tuesday evening, when the Rev. G. A. Payne was the preacher. The collections, with donations, amounted to £18 17s. 5½d. The harvest festival at Allostock Chapel, near Knutsford, took place last Sunday afternoon, Oct. 1. Unfortunately, the weather was very wet and stormy, and the chapel was not crowded as is usually the case. The chapel was beautifully and artistically decorated, and special hymns and an anthem were sung. The preacher was the Rev. G. A. Payne, of Knutsford, and the collection amounted to £1 12s. 6d.

Leeds: Resignation and Appointment.—The Rev. J. McDowell has resigned the pastorate of the Holbeck congregation, Leeds, the resignation to take effect at the end of the year. Mr. McDowell has been called by unanimous vote of the executive of the Benevolent Fraternity of Churches in the city of Boston, U.S.A., to take charge of the work at Parker Memorial. He will enter on his duties on the first Sunday of the new year.

Leigh, Lancs.—The second anniversary services of the Leigh Unitarian Church and school were held on Sunday last, when the Rev. C. J. Street,

M.A., LL.B., of Bank-street Chapel, Bolton, preached both afternoon and evening. Notwithstanding the very wet weather, there was a large congregation in the evening, and Mr. Street's sermons were much appreciated. The collections for the day amounted to £7 2s. 4d. Anthems were sung by the choir. Mr. Dolphiu will commence a series of doctrinal lectures on Sunday evening next.

London: Deptford.—The Illustrated London News of Sept. 30 and Lloyd's Weekly Newspaper of Oct. 1 contain illustrations of the Deptford Chapel, the latter of which also gives a sketch of "Disraeli's pew." In a brief note, the Illustrated London News observed that "the restoration of the Unitarian Baptist Chapel in Church street, Deptford, recalls, curiously enough, the association of Lord Beaconsfield with that place of worship. When young Benjamin Disraeli was at school at Blackheath he attended the chapel, and there—who knows?—laid the foundations of that broad creed which he was afterwards to describe as the "religion of all sensible men." The chapel, which was built about 1600, has other interesting associations. There Oliver Cromwell's private secretary is buried. Funds are still needed to complete the restoration.

London: Forest-gate.—Last Sunday being the eleventh anniversary of the church, and the first of the present ministry, special sermons were preached by the Rev. H. W. Perris. In spite of unfavourable weather there were excellent congregations. On Saturday week the children of the Sunday-school were taken for their annual excursion to the Zoological Gardens.

London: Lewisham.—What was probably the first marriage in a Unitarian church in this neighbourhood, was celebrated on Tuesday morning, Oct. 3, between Mr. Leon Ellis and Miss Kathleen Rowland. The Rev. W. Cynweth Pope officiated. At the weekly meeting of the Literary and Scientific Society, Mr. P. W. Ames, F.S.A., one of the vice-presidents, gave a most interesting lecture on "The Mechanism of Thought and Memory," to an audience of about 110.

London: Peckham.—The harvest celebrations, though held under adverse circumstances as to weather, has passed off successfully. The Avondale-road Church building was tastefully decorated with the ample offerings of its members, the contributions towards the funds were liberal, and the congregations were good considering the weather. The celebrations included sacred solos and Garrett's Harvest Cantata on Friday, and special musical services in church and school on Sunday. An address was given on each occasion by the Rev. G. Carter. A congregational social meeting was held on Tuesday evening to inaugurate the re-opening of affiliated societies, whose meetings have been pending during the summer months.

London: Stepney Green.—Special services were held on Sunday, Oct. 1, at College Chapel. Everybody was pleased to welcome the return of Miss Florence Hill, after her long absence through illness. A very good gathering received her at the Postal Mission Conference in the afternoon. The discussion was opened by a review of Dr. James Freeman Clarke's "Life and Times of Jesus," which M^{rs} Hill read. It was followed by an interesting series of short speeches. The evening service was conducted by the minister, Mr. Tavenor. His sermon was suggested by the story of Norwich Octagon Chapel, and contained an appeal for the more careful study of our ancient places of worship, so that, like the Hebrews of old, we could tell their stories of heroism and sacrifice to "the generation following." The congregation was the largest seen in the chapel for years, except on the occasion of the service which the Rev. Alexander Gordon conducted in memory of Mr. Spears. Two solos were beautifully rendered by Mr. Edwin Webster (pupil of Mr. Santley), "The City of Rest," and "Thou'rt passing hence."

London: The Welsh Movement.—The Welsh services were resumed at Essex Hall last Sunday evening. There was a fair congregation, considering the unfavourable weather, and that the majority have to come from long distances. The leader of the movement officiated, the subject of his discourse being "Trust in the Living God—a Chapter from Channing," the text being Psalm lvi. 3. At the close of the service Messrs. Tom Evans and Dan Jones gave a lively account of their recent visit to the Principality, when they went round nearly all the churches of Cardiganshire in order to elicit their sympathy with the work of the London Welsh Movement in connection with the forthcoming bazaar. They seem to have done well, as the two last numbers of Yr Ymofynydd amply testify, the first list of subscribers—published in that magazine for October—amounting to over £5. The Welsh Bazaar Committee have appointed Mr. D. Martin Jones, New Court, as general secretary for the Cardiganshire churches, the Rev. J. Hailren Davies, Cefncoed, Merthyr, acting in a similar capacity for the churches in Glamorgan. To further facilitate the work, the following places have appointed their own local secretaries:—Brondeifi, Mrs. Dr. Evans, Taliesin House, Llanbedr; Caeronen, Miss Davies, Wern Cottage, Cellan; Graig, Llandysul, Miss Davies, Alma House; Bwlchfadfa, Mr. T. G. Thomas, Lower Factory, Talgareg; Llwynrhydown, Mr. J. Jones, Rhydownen Mills. It is hoped that other Welsh churches will follow their good example.

Newark-on-Trent.—Last Sunday, harvest services were held in the Free Christian Church, the preacher being the Rev. E. R. Hodges. A solo and anthems were sung, and the church was decorated with cereals, evergreens, &c. Collections were made on behalf of the church funds.

Nottage.—The annual thanksgiving service for the safe ingathering of the harvest was held in the old chapel on Thursday evening, Sept. 28. The Rev. W. J. Phillips conducted the devotional part of the service, and also delivered a short address in English, whilst the Rev. D. Evans, Wick, and the Rev. D. A. Evans, Newton, delivered striking addresses in Welsh. An appropriate selection of hymns was sung by a choir augmented by several friends from the English and Welsh Congregational churches in the neighbourhood. There was a large congregation, and the service was thoroughly enjoyed.

Oxford: Church of the Divine Love.—The harvest festival services took place on Sunday, Oct. 1. Plentiful gifts of flowers and fruit were tastefully arranged in the church, a special feature of the decorations being a transparent chancel screen of tinted virginian creeper. There was a specially large congregation in the evening.

Pantdefaid and Graig, Llandysul.—A most successful series of harvest thanksgiving services were held on Sunday week and the following Monday and Tuesday evenings, both chapels being very tastefully decorated. Mr. E. Gwilym Evans, B.A., of Manchester College, Oxford, delivered able discourses, and the minister, the Rev. T. Arthur Thomas, also officiated, in the unavoidable absence of the Rev. Lewis Williams, Rhydygwin. It was computed that from 300 to 350 persons were present at each of the services. On Tuesday afternoon the Pantdefaid Sunday-school held its annual social gathering. After tea in the Unitarian Hall, to which some 200 scholars and friends sat down, prizes were distributed by the Rev. Thomas Thomas, J.P., and immediately preceding the evening service Mrs. Thomas, of Green Park, presented the successful candidates at the recent Sunday-school examination with certificates and prizes.

Rochdale.—On Sunday the autumn festival services were held, the preacher in the morning and afternoon being the Rev. George Evans, M.A., of Gorton, and in the evening, the pastor, Rev. T. P. Spedding, who has just returned from a visit to Canada and the United States. The services were successful, and the proceeds, including the Monday evening social, amounted to £228. A new heating apparatus is being placed in the church.

Sheffield: Upperthorpe.—In spite of somewhat unpropitious weather we had large congregations at our harvest festival held on Sept. 24, the Rev. John Ellis being the preacher. The chapel was beautifully decorated with grain, flowers, fruits, and vegetables. The anthems, "Ye shall dwell in the land" (Stainer), and "I will give thanks" (Barby), were rendered. The fruits and vegetables were distributed among the sick and poor of the neighbourhood the following evening.

Stockport.—Last Sunday evening the Rev. B. C. Constable preached a clear and forcible sermon on the "Transvaal Crisis," which was fully reported in the local Chronicle next day. The question, he said, could not be confined to party politics, but touched the moral and religious character of the nation; and he protested strongly against a resort to the barbarity of war to settle the questions in dispute.

Tylorstown, Rhondda Valley.—For some time, services have been held fortnightly at this place on Sunday afternoons. Last Sunday a little more prominence was given to the movement, and two sermons were delivered in the afternoon, and one in the evening. The Rev. T. J. Jenkins, of Gellionen, preached in Welsh, on "Salvation," and on "The Incarnation," and the Rev. Dr. Griffiths on "Christian Discipleship." The services were advertised by posters, and there was an attendance at each service of about fifty-five.

Walthamstow.—Harvest thanksgiving services were held here on Sunday last. In the morning the service was conducted by Mr. Pratt, a Wesleyan who preached a stirring sermon full of practical religion. The children's service in the afternoon was also conducted by Mr. Pratt. In the evening

Mr. Ginever conducted the service. Many willing hands had been busy during the week, decorating the church, and the result was very pleasing. Among the decorations was a large loaf weighing 24 lbs.; this and the fruit and other things were given to a few sick and needy persons. At the evening service the anthems "Ye shall dwell," and "O Lord how manifold," and the 72nd Psalm were rendered. Notwithstanding the inclement weather, there were good congregations at the services, especially in the evening, when the building was quite full. A good deal of home visiting has been done lately by our Sunday-school teachers. Several of the parents of scholars were present at the evening service.

"SIR," wrote Cromwell once to the commanding officer who had put under arrest a Lieutenant-Colonel who was accused of being an Anabaptist, "the State, in choosing men to serve it, takes no notice of their opinions; if they be willing faithfully to serve it—that satisfies. I advise you to bear with men of different mind from yourself. Take heed of being sharp, or too easily sharpened by others, against those to whom you can object little but that they square not with you in every opinion concerning matters of religion."

ALL sweet and reasonable persons shame or win us to be like them,—as if God were touching and beckoning us. All un-beautiful lives become warnings. Living in a human world, we are really immersed in a spiritual atmosphere. The stimulus and opportunity to practise justice, kindness, and helpful service is the beginning of heaven. Does not a child best find its own faculties and forces in the companionship of other children? So do we grown-ups find in living worthily together our life-long divine education.—C. G. Ames.

NEWBURY PRESBYTERIAN CHAPEL RENOVATION FUND.

The Committee urgently appeal for further subscriptions towards the above fund, and thankfully acknowledge the following:—

	£	s.	d.
Amount already advertised	78	18	7
Mr. J. F. Schwann	3	3	0
Mr. Geoffrey New	1	1	0
Mr. Jos. T. Preston	1	1	0
Miss M. C. Martineau	2	2	0
Rev. E. S. Anthony, M.A.	0	10	0

Subscriptions should be sent to Mr. T. H. STILLMAN, 133, Bartholomew-street, Newbury.

HOME FOR HEALTH CULTURE, THE FIRS, BROMYARD, HEREFORDSHIRE.

This Home provides a course of Systematic Daily Exercise, combined with regular outdoor life and occupation, for Ladies and Children who are not in normal health. The exercises are given in a Gymnasium fitted with Swedish apparatus, and consist of Ling's Swedish Movements. Special treatment is given for Spinal Curvature, Anæmia, Hysteria, Indigestion, Neuralgia, &c.

For further particulars, apply to The Principal, Miss JESSIE BAKER (trained by Mme. Bergmon, Österberg).

MARRIAGES.

HARRIS—REED.—On the 30th Aug., at Whatcom, British Columbia, Thomas Harris, of Abbotsford, B.C., to Minnie, daughter of the Rev. F. T. Reed, of Moretonhampstead, Devonshire.

DEATHS.

HERFORD.—On the 5th Oct., at Withington, Manchester, after a very short illness, Philip Arnold, third son of the late Charles J. Herford, of Manchester.

HOLMES.—On the 13th Sept., at 318, Beverley-road, Hull, William Maxwell Holmes, aged 64.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, October 8.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Bermondsey, Fort-road, Upper Grange-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. HAROLD RYLETT.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. FREDERIC ALLEN.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Mr. HERBERT RIX.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS.
Deptford, Alliance Hall, Albury-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. MARCHANT. No Morning Service.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. K. FREESTON. Harvest Thanksgiving. 3.15 P.M., Children's Service.
Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. WOODS PERRIS.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. BROOKE HERFORD, D.D., and the Rev. E. DARLYN.
Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. FELIX TAYLOR.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. DAWES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D. Harvest Festival.
Kentish Town, Free Christian Church, Clarence-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. A. FARQUHARSON. Morning, "The Real Hero." Evening, "Right Uses of the Bible."
Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. STRONGE.
Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. C. POPE.
Little Portland-street Chapel, near Oxford-circus, 11 A.M., Rev. STOFFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D., and 7 P.M., Rev. F. H. JONES.
Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, Harvest Thanksgiving, 3.15 P.M., Mr. ION PRITCHARD, and 7 P.M., Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.
Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. CARTER.
Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.
Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., and 3 P.M., Service for Children, Rev. S. FARRINGTON.
Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M., Mr. LUCK ING TAVENER, "Jonathan: Love and Sacrifice," and 7 P.M., Mr. T. ELLIOT, "Panting for God."
Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.
Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M., Mr. T. ELLIOT, and 6.30 P.M., Mr. L. TAVENER. Harvest Festival.
Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. F. W. STANLEY.
BEDFORD, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. ROWLAND HILL.
BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. WRIGHT.
BLACKPOOL, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. BINNS.
BLACKPOOL, Unitarian Lay Church, Masonic Hall, Waterloo-road, South Shore, 6.30 P.M.
BOOTLE, Free Church, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. W. HAWKES.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. COE.
BRIGHTON, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road, North-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. A. HOOD.
BOXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. GEORGE STREET.
CANTERBURY, Blackfriars, 11 A.M.
DEAL and WALMER Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. FRANCIS WOOD.
DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. BURROWS.
EASTBOURNE, Lismore-road, Terminus-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. ST. CLAIR.
GUILDFORD, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Mr. E. S. LANG BUCKLAND.
HORSHAM, Free Christian Church Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.
LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M., Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. COBDEN SMITH.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. J. JUPP. Harvest Services.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton Park, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. KLEIN. Evening, "The Search after Knowledge by Poor Men."

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. FORREST.

MANCHESTER, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M. MARGATE, Forester's Hall (Side Entrance), Union-crescent, 11 A.M., Mr. EDWARD C. SAPHIN.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. Dr. DRUMMOND.

PORTSMOUTH, General Baptist Chapel St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. THOMAS BOND.

PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. COSENS PRIOR.

RAMSGATE, Assembly Rooms, High-street, 6.30 P.M., Mr. EDWARD C. SAPHIN.

READING, Unitarian Free Church, London-road, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, B.A.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.

SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. WELBELOVED.

TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. RAWLINGS, of London.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant Unitarian Church Hout-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH

MANSFORD-STREET CHURCH and MISSION, BETHNAL GREEN.

HARVEST THANKSGIVING, Oct. 8.

8.15 P.M., Mr. ION PRITCHARD.
7 P.M., Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY, STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN-SQUARE, S.W.—Oct. 8th, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "The Three Stages of Western Religion: 2. The Protestant."

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. W. STODDART, B.A., is at LIBERTY to take occasional Sunday duty.—30, West Bank, Stamford-hill, London, N.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D. DAVIS, Fairfield High School, Liverpool.

NEWBURY PRESBYTERIAN CHAPEL.—PULPIT VACANT.—Letters of application, address T. SCOTT, Lonsdale, Newbury.

BARTON-STREET CHAPEL, GLOUCESTER.

BICENTENARY FUND.

A BAZAAR will be held on NOVEMBER 22nd and 23rd to provide a Fund for the extinction of the debt. The debt was incurred in 1893 by the Renovation of the Chapel, a new Heating Apparatus, Gas Fittings, &c., the cost being £760. The congregation, with the assistance of friends, raised £380, leaving a balance of £380, upon which interest amounting to nearly £100 has since been paid by the congregation. It is earnestly desired that the debt may be extinguished before the close of the year. The interest shown in the Bicentenary Commemoration in April last encourages the congregation to appeal to their friends for help.

Contributions of Money and Goods will be thankfully received by Mrs. C. W. WASHBOURNE, Annandale, Weston-road;

Mrs. WALTER LLOYD, The Hollies, Brook st.;

Mr. JAMES WAREING, 138, Westgate street;

ALEX. DUNN, St. Michael's-square.

Rev. WALTER LLOYD, Minister.

Contributions already received or promised:—

	£	s.	d.
Members of the Congregation ...	110	0	0
Frederick Nettlefold, Esq. ...	10	0	0

WANTED, re-engagement as LADY-COMPANION, many years' experience, and excellent references.—J., INQUIRER Office.

Schools, etc.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, SOUTH MARINE TERRACE, ABERYSTWITH.

PRINCIPAL ... MRS. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

MISS LOUISA DREWRY'S LECTURES, Readings and Lessons in English Language and Literature, and Kindred Subjects, will BEGIN again, at her own house and elsewhere, early in October.

Miss DREWRY conducts a Home Students' Literary Reading Society, 143, King Henry's-road, London, N.W.

SCHOOL FOR GIRLS AND LITTLE BOYS.—CONAMUR, SANDGATE, KENT.

PRINCIPALS:—Miss JARVIS and Miss CLARA BERRY.

Good House, close to the sea; south aspect.

Reference kindly permitted to T. GROSVENOR LEE, Esq., Clent, near Stourbridge; JOHN HRYWOOD, Esq., The Pike, Bolton, &c.

THE WARREN, KNUTSFORD.

PRINCIPAL:

Mrs. W. CARRINGTON WHITELEGGE.

Excellent individual TUITION and Home Care for the daughters of cultivated parents who would appreciate unusual advantages for Music and Languages.

NEXT TERM begins September 26th.

Essex Hall Year Book for 1900.

It is urgently requested that the forms for information for the above which have been sent out may be returned not later than OCTOBER 13th, 1899, to the Editor of the "Essex Hall Year Book," Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK

SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

TWO AND A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS of minimum monthly balance, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift, the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows Interest Monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY, HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANAC, Post free on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

FREDK. LONG & SON, AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS

4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

ITALIAN LAKES, ITALY.—Three more Members required to complete Select Party leaving London on October 19th.—Mme. ALBITES, 76, Beauford-road, Birmingham.

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms moderate.—Mrs. ROBERT TURNER, 94, Grosvenor-road, S.W.

BOARD and RESIDENCE, South of England. Healthy neighbourhood. Home comforts. Seven miles from Brighton, near South Downs. Station Hassocks (on main line L.B.S.C.).—Miss ROWLAND, Gothic House, Hurstpierpoint.

BOARDING HOUSE.—THE FELL, TROUTBECK, WINDERMERE, is situated 550 feet above sea level, and about 2½ miles from the station at Windermere. Every home comfort. Moderate terms.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea; sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address, Miss CHALDECOTT, Stirling House, Manor-road.

BRIGHTON.—Superior BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT, near sea and lawns; large pleasant rooms; bath and smoke rooms. Terms moderate.—Miss SILLIFANT, 11, Rochester-gardens, Hove.

MISS MARSDEN would receive two or three BOARDERS for winter months. Warm bracing climate.—St. Pair, Manche.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

Proprietor,

FREDERIC SMITH.

This first-class Hotel, conducted on strictly Temperance principles, is commended by the Rev. C. Aked, Liverpool; Rev. Rowland Hill, Bedford; Rev. G. Vance Smith, D.D., Bowden, Cheshire; Rev. J. C. Street, Birmingham; Rev. Charles A. Berry, D.D., Wolverhampton; Rev. Charles Garrett, Liverpool; Rev. Canon Howell, Wrexham; Rev. A. B. Grosart, LL.D., Blackburn; Dr. Norman Kerr, London, &c. Central, Quiet, Exceptionally Clean, Moderate in Charges. Spacious Coffee Rooms, Visitors' Drawing Rooms, Baths, &c. Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d. to 2s. Rooms, 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. Service, 9d. Printed Tariff on Application.

75, 77, 79, 97, 99, 101, 103, 105,

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, RUSSELL SQ., LONDON.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY, ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.

Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21, Mincing-lane, E.C.

Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.

Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.

STEPHEN SAWARD TAYLER, 151, Brixton-road, S.W., and Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made. Monthly repayment, including principal, premium, and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years, 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.; 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

The Willaston School, Cheshire

(BARKER FOUNDATION),

TO BE OPENED SEPTEMBER, 1900.

GOVERNORS.

REV. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.

R. D. DARBISHIRE.

REV. H. E. DOWSON, B.A.

REV. W. H. DRUMMOND, B.A.

REV. HENRY GOW, B.A.

H. P. GREG, M.A.

REV. P. M. HIGGINSON, M.A.

RICHARD D. HOLT.

C. S. JONES, M.A.

G. H. LEIGH.

REV. J. E. ODGERS, M.A.

HARRY RAWSON, J.P.

RUSSELL SCOTT.

REV. S. A. STEINTHAL.

A. H. WORTHINGTON, B.A.

Head Master—GUY LEWIS, M.A., late Scholar of Pembroke College, Oxford.

Clerk—EDWIN W. MARSHALL, 38, Barton Arcade, Manchester.

WILLASTON SCHOOL is now in course of erection. It is situated on the Grove Estate, formerly the property of the late Philip Barker, Esquire, Founder of the School, consisting of 21 acres of park-like land, about one mile from Nantwich Station. It is quite in the country, while its nearness to Crewe Station (3½ miles) renders it readily accessible from every part of England.

The situation is healthy, with a good water supply.

The drainage is being most carefully attended to under the direction of a qualified Sanitary Engineer and the North Eastern Sanitary Association.

The sub-soil upon which the School stands is gravel and sand.

THE BUILDINGS will be quadrangular, enclosing a Court, and will comprise:—

I.—THE SCHOOL-HOUSE, including the Head Master's house, four class rooms, a dining hall, three dormitories (for twenty, ten, and ten boys respectively), a library and reading room, and studies for the senior boys.

II.—Covered playground, workshop, gymnasium, and cycle house.

III.—A Sanatorium for infectious cases detached from the buildings, and on the opposite side of the road. The sick room in the School will be clear away from the dormitories, and adjoin the head master's house.

Dormitory accommodation will be provided, in the first instance, for 40 boys. In other respects the buildings will be sufficient for 60 or more, and by utilising additional dormitory space, which at first will not be called into requisition, ample room can be provided for the larger number. For increase beyond the number of 60 a second house will be built in a separate portion of the grounds. The dormitories are without cubicles.

The School is planned on the system of residence in separate houses, and will not, therefore, be in any sense a hostel.

There will be good cricket and football fields, and five courts.

Willaston School will provide a sound liberal education on public school lines. Provision will be made for teaching:—

Religious Knowledge.
Classics.
Modern Languages.
History and Geography.
English Language and Literature.
Mathematics.
Natural Science.

To the treatment of the first-named subject great importance will be assigned. The boys will be instructed in the history of the growth of religious and rational theological thought and opinion in England, and generally in religious subjects, and will be encouraged in sobriety, intelligence, earnestness, and piety, and in modes and by teachers free from the obligations of prescribed creeds or tests of religious belief.

Careful and individual attention will be given to the physical training and development of the boys.

The School will be divided into:—

I.—A CLASSICAL SIDE.—The subjects will be Religious Knowledge, English Language and Literature, History, Geography, Latin, Greek, French, German, and Mathematics. Boys will be prepared for the Universities and a Professional career.

II.—A MODERN SIDE.—The subjects will be Religious Knowledge, English Language and Literature, History, Geography, Latin, German, French, Mathematics, Physical Science. Boys will be prepared for Professional or Commercial life.

IN THE LOWER FORMS the course of instruction will be the same for all, and in these Elementary Science will be taught chiefly by object and diagram lessons, dealing with chemistry, physics, and natural history, and illustrated in daily life by familiar objects. Boys who at an early age show under this training a taste for observation and experiment may, with advantage, pursue scientific study on the modern side.

Special attention will be attached to the teaching of History, and of Geography, Physical, Political, and Commercial.

In the English Literature Classes the principles of literary criticism will be kept before the boys. The books in the School Library will be selected with the utmost care, due consideration being given to literary worth. The pupils will be carefully advised and helped in their reading, and an honest and systematic effort will be made to cultivate an appreciation of what is good, and a sound literary judgment.

There will be daily Morning Prayer, and a Religious Service in the School on Sunday. Special attention will be paid to the Religious and Moral education of the boys.

If any parent or guardian should, in writing, request the Head Master that his or her son or ward might be exempted from attending prayers or religious services or worship, or lessons on religious history or on any other religious subject, such son or ward (if not on the foundation) shall be exempted accordingly, without being deprived of any other advantage of the School.

FEES.

For Boarders -	£100 per annum (inclusive) or £33 6s. 8d. a term (inclusive)
For Day Boys -	£12 12s. per term.

FOUNDATIONERS.

In accordance with the wishes of the Founder, provision will be made for a certain number of boys as FOUNDATIONERS, for whom the fees will only be ONE-HALF THE FULL FEES. These Founder's Exhibitions are available in the case of a boy whose parent or guardian was at the time of the boy's admission to the School, a minister or a member of some congregation in England stately assembling for the public worship of God, and imposing no obligation upon any member thereof (whether minister, member, or otherwise) to subscribe or assent to any articles or article of religious belief or to submit to any test of religious doctrine. But the Governing Body in all cases to have power to decide, in their absolute and uncontrollable discretion, whether any parent or guardian was or was not a member of any such congregation as aforesaid; with power also to admit the sons or wards of persons who might be personally in full sympathy with, although they respectively might not actually be members for the time being of any such congregation as aforesaid.

Further particulars may be obtained from:—

GUY LEWIS (Head Master), New College, Eastbourne.

A. H. WORTHINGTON (Secretary), 1, St. James' Square, Manchester.

E. W. MARSHALL (Clerk), 38, Barton Arcade, Manchester.

BRITISH & FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

The FIRST MEETING of the COUNCIL for 1899-1900 will be held at ESSEX HALL, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, LONDON, on TUESDAY, October 24th, 1899. The Chair will be taken by the President, CHARLES W. JONES, Esq., J.P., of Liverpool, at Four o'clock.

Any NOTICES of MOTION by Members should reach the Office on or before Saturday, October 14. W. COPELAND BOWIE, Secretary.

PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY

OF

Non-Subscribing Ministers and Congregations of London and the South-Eastern Counties.

The ELEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING will be held at the UNITARIAN CHRISTIAN CHURCH WANDSWORTH (corner of Elmsleigh-road, East-hill), on TUESDAY, October 10th. Religious Service 11.30 A.M. Preacher, the Rev. SILAS FARRINGTON, of Richmond. The Introductory Service will be conducted by the Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON, of Essex Church.

COLLECTION in aid of the funds of the Assembly. Luncheon at Wandsworth Town Hall at 1 o'clock. Business meeting at 3 P.M., GEORGE W. CHITTY, Esq., President, in the chair. Tea 5.30.

PUBLIC MEETING at 7, J. F. SCHWANN, Esq., J.P., presiding.

Speakers:—Rev. Brooke Herford, D.D., C. W. Jones, Esq., F. Lawson Dodd, Esq., L.R.C.P., Revs. R. H. U. Bloor, B.A., W. Copeland Bowie, M.L.S.B., L. Jenkins Jones, W. G. Tarrant, B.A., and others.

Note.—The Church is 10 minutes' walk from Clapham Junction, and tramcars from Westminster and the Borough pass the door every few minutes.

Luncheon tickets (2s. 6d.) and tea tickets (1s.) to be obtained of Mr. Philip Green, Essex Hall, Essex-street, W.C., or the Hon. Secretary,

Rev. FREDERIC ALLEN,

5, Holland-grove, S.W.

SALE UNITARIAN CHAPEL.

RE-BUILDING FUND.

The Committee of the Sale Unitarian Chapel desire to thank most heartily the many friends who have helped them to complete the Restoration of their Place of Worship by contributing to the above Fund. They regret, however, that they require to ask further help. The cost of re-building has considerably exceeded the original estimates, the amount spent being £2,924 10s. 7d. Towards that sum £2,665 8s. 1d. have been received, including £1,750 from the Insurance Company. Thus £915 have been subscribed by the congregation and friends. But £260 are still required, and the committee venture to make a final appeal to Unitarian friends to assist them to clear off the adverse balance. An interim balance sheet has been prepared, and copies will be sent to all subscribers. The long delay in its preparation has been caused through difficulties with the contractors, and this indeed has regrettably hindered the progress of the Fund. The Committee trust, however, that this unavoidable delay will not affect the response which they hope will be made to their appeal for final help.

Subscriptions will be gratefully received and acknowledged by—

ALEX. LAWSON, J.P., Chairman,
The Grange, Ashton-on-Mersey;
JOHN SHAW, J.P., Hon. Secretary,
Fern Lea, Ashton-on-Mersey;
JOHN BARNES, Hon. Treasurer,
Sylvan House, Sale; or,
Rev. JAMES FORREST, M.A.,
Rookfield-avenue, Sale.

A GRAND CONCERT

on behalf of the Funds of the

MANCHESTER DOMESTIC MISSION

will be held in the

MEMORIAL HALL, MANCHESTER,

WEDNESDAY, Oct. 11th, 1899.

Artists:—Miss JULIET LIEBERT, Soprano; Mr. FOWLER BURTON, Baritone; Mr. WILLIAM H. DAYAS, piano; Mr. C. RAWDON BRIGGS, Violin.

To commence at 7.30. Tickets, 5s., 2s. 6d., and 1s. each.

BIBLE READINGS WITH MY CHILDREN.

By Mrs. PHILIP COHEN.

In two parts. Price 2s. each, or 2s. 3d. Post Free.

"Written in a style highly attractive to children."—The Very Rev. the CHIEF RABBI.

"Continues to be regarded in our private families as a most welcome friend."—Rev. G. EMANUEL, B.A.

"The charm of style is so attractive in its simplicity; will ensure a large and affectionate circle of readers."—The late Rev. A. L. GREEN.

Published by WERTHEIMER, LEA, and Co., Circus-place, London Wall, E.C.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

New Book by Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

OUR FAITH:

The Temples and Churches of many Lands—Our Church—The World's Greatest Teachers—Jesus of Nazareth—The World's Sacred Books—Our Aims and Hopes.

"This little book is meant for young people and others who have had hitherto no time or opportunity for a careful study, as distinct from the practice, of religion. It seeks to present OUR FAITH in its clearest and most definite form; and, at the same time, to indicate its relation to the general religious life of mankind. It is not, however, wholly or even chiefly concerned with matters of history, still less with dogmatic theology. The writer has tried to lead the mind to earnest self-examination and original thought, and with this view has ventured here and there to use words of direct appeal to the reader; but this is not done in any magisterial spirit, for both writer and reader are scholars in the great School of Life, where he is the happiest who helps another most."—Preface.

Cloth, 1s. net. Postage, 2d.

London: SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, Essex Hall, Essex St., Strand, W.C.

Manchester: H. Rawson & Co., 16, New Brown Street.

Liverpool: The Booksellers' Co., 70, Lord Street.

CHAPEL LANE CHAPEL, BRADFORD.

A GRAND BAZAAR will be held in the CHANNING HALL, adjoining the Chapel, on OCTOBER 19th, 20th, and 21st, 1899, to raise £500 for the clearing off of the Debt on the New Schools, the purchase of a new Heating Apparatus, the Renovation of the Chapel, and other purposes. The total cost of the scheme will be at least £2,000, towards which nearly £1,500 has already been raised.

The Bazaar will be opened on the three days respectively by Mr. CHARLES W. JONES, J.P., President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association; the Right Hon. Lady O'HAGAN, and Sir JAMES KITSON, Bart., M.P.

Donations of Goods and Money will be gratefully received and acknowledged by the—

Rev. E. CREDIG JONES, 18, Blenheim-road,

Bradford (Minister);

Mr. BYRON BOOTHROYD, 37, Mannville-terrace,

Bradford (Treasurer);

Miss HUDSON, 7, Blenheim-road, Bradford, and

Mr. GATHORNE HARGREAVES, 24, Spring

Cliffe, Bradford (Secretaries).

The following contributions have been received:

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	67 8 6
Mrs. Mielziner	2 2 0
Mrs. Mullineaux	0 10 0
Mr. C. H. Simonds	0 10 0
Mr. E. Weeks	0 10 0
A Yorkshire Friend	0 10 0

DRAWING, Painting, Design, Perspective, Geometry, &c. Schools and private houses. Lady. Certificated. Art Master (Kensington).—Apply, A. E. R., Mr. E. D. Davies, 50, High-street, Sydenham.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Fcap. 8vo, 108 pp., cloth, 1s. net.

THE RELIGION OF TIME and the RELIGION OF ETERNITY. A Study of Certain Relations between Mediæval and Modern Thought. By PHILIP H. WICKSTEED, M.A.

SUMMARY OF CONTENTS:—Multifold signs of renewed interest in the later Middle Ages. We are awakening from the misconceptions inherited from the polemics of the Renaissance and the Reformation, realising that the breach between mediæval and modern times was not so absolute as we supposed, and recognising in the weakness of the Middle Ages dangers not yet vanquished, in their strength sources of life not yet exhausted, and in both an unsuspected kinship with the forces that move our own lives. Hence the interest and the importance of a sympathetic study of the Middle Ages. The group of religious ideas selected for study gathers round the conceptions of Eternity, Fruition, the vision of God.

Fcap. 8vo, 100 pp., cloth, 1s. net.

BACK TO JESUS. An Appeal to Evangelical Christians. By RICHARD A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., Author of "God and the Soul," "Faith and Doubt in the Century's Poets," &c.

CONTENTS:—1. The Movement "Back to Jesus." 2. To what Jesus? 3. It must be the Jesus before the Gospels. 4. This was a Highly Spiritual Jesus. 5. The Fatherhood and the Brotherhood were his Cardinal Teachings. 6. We must then Survey those Texts which Teach the Fatherhood. 7. What Jesus Meant by the Fatherhood. 8. Why the Fourth Gospel is Omitted from our Analysis. 9. The Fatherhood in Matthew. 10. Prominence of the Fatherhood in Mark. 11. The Fatherhood in Luke. 12. The Fatherhood in John. 13. The Fatherhood in the Three Gospels. 14. Predominance of the Fatherhood. 15. What are the Conditions of Acceptance with the Father. 16. Full Meaning of the Fatherhood. 17. The Persuasiveness of Jesus. 18. What then is our Position? 19. Do we Want more than the Fatherhood? 20. Results of Failure to Grasp the Fatherhood. 21. Absence of Certain Doctrines from the Teaching of Jesus. 22. What has Given these Doctrines their Hold? 23. Are these Doctrines Essential? 24. The Religion of the Fatherhood is Essential Christianity. 25. Those who Hold it should not be Spiritually Divided. 26. This is True Loyalty to Jesus. 27. And so we Rest in the Ultimate Christianity.

273 pp., 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.

THE GREAT AFFIRMATIONS OF RELIGION.

An Introduction to Real Religion, not for Beginners, but for Beginners Again. By THOMAS R. SLICER.

CONTENTS:—1. The Nature and Uses of Religion. 2. The Natural Uses of Religion. 3. The Affirmation of God.—I. 4. The Affirmation of God.—II. 5. The Affirmation Concerning Man. 6. The Affirmation of the Dignity of Human Nature. 7. The Affirmation of God and Man: Personal Religion. 8. The Affirmation Concerning Prayer. 9. The Affirmation Concerning Jesus Christ.—I. 10. The Affirmation Concerning Jesus Christ.—II. 11. The Affirmation Concerning the Church. 12. The True Imitation of Christ. 13. The Perpetual Incarnation. 14. The Growth of a Soul. 15. Grace and Truth. 16. The Eternal Life.

London: PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

THE MILL HILL PULPIT.

A Monthly Sermon by the Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., Leeds.

Price 1d., post free 1½d. Annual Subscription, 1 copy, 1s. 6d. post free; 2 copies, 2s. 6d. do.

Vol. 8, No. 1. October:—"God's Way of Salvation—through Christ" (a Sermon on the Marked Testament).

Apply, Essex Hall; or Mr. CHAS. STAINER, 82, Ravenswood-terrace, Leeds.

THE ETHICAL WORLD.

EDITED BY DR. STANTON COIT and J. A. HOBSON, M.A.

Articles on Important Social Questions, Education &c. from a purely ethical standpoint Children's Page.

TWOPENCE WEEKLY.

Office: 17, Johnson's-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

Printed by WOODFALL & KINDER, 70 to 76, Long Acre, W.C. and Published for the Proprietor by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. City Agent, JOHN HAYWOOD, 29 and 80, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HAYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, October 7, 1899.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER]

No. 2990.
NEW SERIES, No. 94.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1899.

[ONE PENNY.]

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	653
MEETINGS:—
Provincial Assembly of London and South-Eastern Counties	655
OBITUARY:—
John Lang, Bridgeton, Glasgow	658
Mr. J. E. Hicks	658
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN	659
LEADER:—
The Jubilee of a Free Church	660
POETRY:—
Our Chapel	660
ARTICLES:—
Is Life Sad and Eternity Awful?	659
Tennyson's "Palace of Art"	661
Greenacre Once More... ..	662
The Rev. Stopford A. Brooke at Little Portland-street	663
PROVINCIAL LETTER:—
Manchester District	663
CORRESPONDENCE:—
A Larger Hymn Book	664
Summer Excursions Central Postal Mission.	664
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES	664
ADVERTISEMENTS	665

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

WITH bitter humiliation we record the fact, now undeniable, that war has begun, and must be carried through to its inevitable end. The immediate aggressors are the Boers, whether driven to such a course by despair or obstinate blindness; but that does not settle the question of the right and wrong of this whole lamentable business, and when Lord Rosebery appeals to the people of this country to close up their ranks in face of such an attack upon the Empire, we confess that the words sound to us as hollow mockery. Our deepest sympathy is now with our brethren in South Africa, both Dutch and British, who are directly involved in the tragedy of this conflict—needless, as it has appeared to us, and therefore iniquitous.

WE are requested to ask any of our readers who happen to possess cards for reserved seats at Little Portland-street Chapel, and who no longer require them, to return the cards to Mr. Bowie at Essex Hall. There is a large demand for cards from people in different parts of London who desire to hear Mr. Stopford Brooke, and it is impossible to provide accommodation for them unless some of the cards at present issued are returned.

THE forthcoming autumnal meeting of the London District Unitarian Society on Tuesday, the 24th inst., to which allusion was made in last week's "Provincial Letter," promises to be of special interest. Sir John Brunner will preside, and Mr. Charles W. Jones, President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, will deliver an address on "The Position and Prospects of Unitarianism at the Close of the Century." Dr. Brooke Herford is to open the discussion. The meeting is fixed for the evening following the Council, so that a number of country friends are expected as well as Londoners.

At a meeting of the Christian Conference held on Monday in St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross, the translation of a paper by Professor A. Sabatier on the "Necessary Renewal of Ancient Dogmatic Formulas" was read. The Professor was present, and subsequently himself addressed the meeting in French. The tenor of his paper may be gathered from the following significant paragraphs of a printed synopsis which was distributed at the meeting:—

It is not possible that a policy of ecclesiastical re-action and disciplinary repression should restore to the Christian conscience its internal unity, nor, consequently, its security and its joy. The evil is of an intellectual nature; the intellectual cause which produces it alone can heal it.

The historical method is the reigning force in our day in all the sciences, and also in theology. The critical history of the Bible, the historical method of interpretation, and the history of dogma have taken an extraordinary impulse, and have exerted a decisive action upon the traditional theology.

So far as regards holy Scripture, the transformation of the ancient opinions on inspiration and on the canon has had a happy effect on the Christian life by delivering it from the intolerable yoke of literalism, and by disposing the soul to be more attentive, and attach itself more closely, to the spirit. Instead of being a code or a manual of supernatural doctrines, the Bible becomes a collection of books which have life and individuality, of irrefragable historical documents concerning the work of redemption and education which God is carrying on in the world by His Spirit.* The Bible is no longer the actual revelation of God, but it remains as a collection of the most precious records of that revelation.

In this school of critical and practical theology, piety necessarily gains in spirituality and in morality, since it is obliged to renounce all identification of Christianity with any of the expressions which men have given it, that is, to renounce all idolatry. It is thrown back on its true principle, which is the personal experience of the truth, the actual and inward witness of the Holy Spirit, which is for the Christian the source of all certainty and of all peace.

Christians of different denominations, when they have come to realise that the value of dogmatic forms is relative, not essential, will find the barriers which separated them lowered. They will not condemn their brothers in the name of an ecclesiastical formula. Fraternal intercourse will be easier; there will be more feeling of solidarity. The universal family of the Father will be nearer to its realisation.

At the conclusion of Professor Sabatier's paper, Mrs. Humphry Ward read a paper on "Faith and Opinion," which we had hoped to publish in full this week. We regret to be obliged to hold it over until next week, when we shall also add some further notes on what was a deeply interesting conference.

WE are glad to be able to announce that a minister has been appointed to take charge of the new Unitarian movement at Auckland, New Zealand. The Rev. William Jellie, B.A., at present minister at Ipswich, and formerly minister at Stamford-street, London, has accepted the invitation of the Committee of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association to go out to Auckland. Mr. Jellie is one of our earnest and able young ministers, and we wish him all possible success in his pioneer work in the great colony of New Zealand. Mr. Jellie will leave England at the end of this year, or early in January, 1900. He will carry with him the good wishes of his many friends in London, Ipswich, and elsewhere.

THE Rev. Edward Sharp, whose appointment as minister at Devonport is announced in our "News from the Churches," was educated at the London College of Divinity. He was curate at St. Mark's, Plumstead, and afterwards at St. Mary's, Whitechapel. He resigned a few months ago, owing to his having become a Unitarian. He enters the Unitarian ministry with high testimonials as to his character and ability from clergymen and others with whom he lived and worked while in the Church of England.

REFERRING to Professor Max Müller's recent letter to Mr. Mozoomdar, The World and the New Dispensation, of Sept. 17, writes:—"The best minds amongst us ought to take up the discussion of this subject with earnestness and sympathy. The wide impression which the Professor's long letter has caused among all communities ought to awaken our thoughts and sense of duty on the important matter which he so ably sets forth. The Theistic Church of India is not likely to change its name and fundamental principles of love to God and to man. But that church believes and will always believe that its principles and the principles of spiritual religion as laid down by Jesus Christ himself are one and the same." In the same number we are glad to see a reprint of our recent article, "Beside Still Waters."

IN opening the Church Congress on Tuesday, the Bishop of London delivered an impressive address, in which he set forth a high ideal of the Church of England. It was a Church, he said, rooted in the minds and hearts of the English people.

From that home it can go forth courageously and face the world as it is, believing that God's revelation of Himself, once made in the person of Christ Jesus, is being continually explained to man by that progressive revelation of God's purpose which is continually being made by the Divine government of the world. Steadfast in its hold on the faith and on the sacraments by its unbroken link with the past, it exists for the maintenance of God's truth and its application to the needs of man—not for the purpose of upholding its own power. A Church fitted for free men, training them in knowledge and in reverence alike; disentangling the spirit from the form, because of its close contact with sons who love their mother and frankly speak out their minds; not wandering among formulæ, however beautiful, which have lost their meaning; finding room increasingly for every form of devotional life, but training its graces into close connection with men's endeavours and aspirations; having no objects of its own which it cannot explain and make manifest as being for the highest good of all; afraid of nothing, receptive of new impulses; quick, watchful, alert; proving all things, and ever ready to give a reason for its principles and for their application; exhorting, persuading, convincing; so rooted in the past that it is strong in the present, and evermore hopeful of the future. For the great work of the Church of Christ is to mould the future, and so hasten the coming of the kingdom. Its eyes are turned to the past for instruction and warning, not for imitation. Steadfast in the faith, built up on the foundation which its Master laid, it can speak the truth in love, using such words and methods as men can best understand; so penetrated by the importance of its message that it can speak it in manifold ways, to men of varying tempers and knowledge and feelings, but striving to speak it in such a way that the method of its teaching ever elevates and invigorates the taught.

DR. FAIRBAIRN, in the address which he delivered at the opening of the John Ryland's Library at Manchester on Friday week, concluded with the following eloquent sentences:—

"This library may be described as a personal library, while the other great libraries of Europe may be termed impersonal. Of these the most ancient is the Vatican. No man made it. It is the creation of time, place, opportunities, all in their degree unrivalled. The wonder is, not that it is so great, but rather that it is not infinitely greater. The Roman Empire, as well as the Roman Church, is here. The ancient and the modern world are joined by the mediæval schoolmen, the scribe and scholar of the Renaissance. We feel, then, this library enters into the life of the community, and is intended to accomplish for the life of that community, a new and a noble and a permanent thing. It seeks to benefit the sons of toil, for it ever has been the case that the men who have seen visions and dreamed dreams have not been the men of leisure, the moneyed, the retired, the class who could, as it were, command all time as their own; the men who have dreamed great things have been men like the herdsman of Tekoa, who lead the great army of literary prophets or that tent-maker who leads the great army of literary Apostles. They have been more like Socrates, the sculptor; Epictetus, the slave; Augustine the teacher of rhetoric. They have been men like Piers the Ploughman, whose vision almost inaugurated the reign and the course of English literature. They have been men like Shakespeare, the English yeoman; John Milton, the son of a London scrivener; or Robert Burns, the northern farmer; or Walter Scott, a lawyer's son; or John Keats, an apothecary. Here, amid toil, great ideas may be born. Idealism is the heritage of those who labour, it is the heritage that redeems them from that which seems to soil and begrime. Wealth is great when the men that make it are animated by a great purpose, inspired by holy and consuming passions. Fear not to cultivate in your midst a large and generous idealism. Your factories and your exchange will keep you practical enough. Then your city will stand proudly alongside the great merchant cities of the world. She will bear a name which will make her as honoured in letters, in art, in achievements we call culture and refinement, as in those that adorn the secular life. And when one asks 'Whence came this home?' let the answer go back 'It was made by a son of Manchester, a merchant who loved her, who loved letters, who loved, above all, religion, and who had no greater heritage to leave, out of the wealth he had amassed, than to create this centre of light and home for learning.'

MESSRS. CASSELL AND CO. have issued the first number of a new illustrated penny magazine for Sunday reading, with the title Sunday Chimes. It seems to be filled with pleasant, wholesome reading, and starts with admirable resolutions to give its readers a good time, but never to be goody-goody. Practical Christianity, practical godness, is its motto. After a brief introduction, the first article is on "Hymn Writing and Hymn Writers," giving a short account, with portraits and facsimiles of writing, of the Rev. S. Baring-Gould, author of "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and Mr. Thomas Hornblower Gill. Of Mr. Gill the writer says: "The fine Puritan spirit of the man is in itself an inspiration. He tells, for instance, how one Sunday in 1868 he came to write his grandest hymn, 'We come unto our fathers' God.'" One of Mr. Gill's most precious heirlooms is a staff bearing the date 1692, which belonged to a Puritan ancestor. It was while handling this staff that he became filled with the thought which forthwith took shape in the hymn—with a lively sense of fellowship with his fathers in their inspirations and endeavours, their sorrows, and their joys.

"Their joy unto their Lord we bring,
Their song to us descendeth;
The Spirit who in them did sing
To us His music lendeth."

In an article on "Philanthropy in Birmingham," in this month's Temple Magazine, the following reference to the Hurst-street Domestic Mission in Birmingham occurs:—

A movement which is meeting with great success is that conducted by the Court and Alley Open Air Concert Association. This movement originated in Liverpool; here its popularity is already immense. There is an average attendance of 4,000 people at those festivals in slumland, and well-known musicians willingly lend their aid. Curiously enough, the denizens of the courts are sincerely appreciative, although the comic element is not introduced. The Lady Mayoress has encouraged this splendid work by attending one of the concerts. Located in the People's Hall, Hurst-street, which is the home of the Concerts Association, there are also the Crippled Children's Union, the Military Veterans' Movement, the Police-Aided Association for Clothing Destitute Children, to say nothing of the important Domestic Mission itself. The leading spirit of all these is Mr. W. J. Clarke, who probably knows as much of Darkest Birmingham as any man in the town.

THE October number of the Mill Hill Pulpit begins a new volume, the eighth, of the monthly issue of sermons by the Rev. Charles Hargrove. The sermons are issued at a 1d., or 1½d. by post, and may be had from Mr. Charles Stainer, 82, Ravenswood-terrace, Hyde-park, Leeds. The new number contains a sermon on "God's Way of Salvation through Christ," suggested by the recently published "Marked Testament," in which passages usually regarded as the stronghold of evangelical doctrine are marked, but not those great words of Jesus which point to the true meaning of salvation in a faithful life.

THE Preacher's Plan for the current quarter of the Northumberland and Durham Unitarian Christian Association gives the following answer to the question, "Why go to Church?"

The object of all church-going is the same—the deepening of the religious life. Thanksgiving, aspiration, meditation, exhortation, prayer, have this as their ultimate aim—alone or in company with others the soul will be strengthened by their means; but public worship is especially valuable, because, in addition to the enthusiasm which the presence of numbers whose hearts are in unison imparts, there is the balancing and sobering effect of contact with varied religious experiences and the inspiration which flows from the presence of those whose spiritual life is deeper than our own. The instinct which bids us draw together in all affairs of our social life, does not mislead when we come to deal with the life of the soul. Most of us are but spiritual weaklings, and; if we are wise we shall gladly welcome every aid which will help develop our powers.

The holiest of men have found common worship almost a necessity, and have always welcomed its recurrence as a special means of grace. Jesus, who could spend nights of silent communion with God on the hill-top, did not disdain or neglect the service of the synagogue. When our strength is greater than his it will be time enough to consider whether or not we can dispense with the ministrations of the churches; when we have become spiritual giants we shall be in a position to discuss whether we can afford to miss a religious service.

THE habit of viewing things cheerfully, and of thinking about life hopefully, may be made to grow up in us like any other habit.—S. Smiles.

THOSE who are loyal to the ideal of a free religion have behind them a glorious tradition. It has been handed down unbroken through ages of heroic struggle. Keats tells us how Chapman opened to him the brave world of Homeric poetry. "Never did I breathe its pure serene, Till I heard Chapman speak out loud and bold."

So one does not know the historic significance of Independency and the splendid strength that may be in religious freedom till he hears Milton "speak out loud and bold." There is power in a great voice speaking out of the past which does not come from a contemporary.—Samuel M. Crothers.

PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY OF LONDON AND SOUTH EASTERN COUNTIES.

THE eleventh annual meeting of the Assembly was held at Wandsworth on Tuesday. Service was held in the Unitarian Christian Church, East Hill, at half-past eleven, conducted by the Rev. F. K. Freeston, and the church was well filled.

The preacher was the Rev. Silas Farrington, who took for his subject "The Functions of the Church," and for text: "That he might present himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing" (Ephes. v. 27).

As a body of Christians, he said, they were inclined to put the functions of the Church a little in the background, to leave them indistinct, possibly to think them superfluous or superseded. They inclined to emphasise their individualism, and then to pass straight to humanity, and the world at large, and to omit a middle term, which to many seemed an occasion of discord and error. The majestic conception of an organised body, holding in its hands the essentials of Christian truth, providing a common ritual for worship and a common discipline for life, had grown dim to them, and many, discouraged by the immense chasm between the ideal Church and the real, had come to look upon it as an illusion or a pretence.

Yet no Church could prosper which had not a clear and adequate notion of what it stood for, what needs it proposed to supply, and also a clear and adequate notion of the means to be employed to that end. No one could read the New Testament without seeing how large a place the idea of a Church filled in it—the idea of a society, taking in all the faithful, living by a law of its own, developing to meet the wants of men, reaching out always towards the world and trying to gather it in; a continuous society, a universal society, taking in all classes and races, having for its special functions the moral and spiritual training of men. It was the body, the embodiment of Christ, the organism through which his influence and thought were transmitted, and continued to act. In spite of all later distortions and unfaithfulness to that ideal, they must not abandon it, but aim to realise it afresh. All great work was done through organised societies, and so must it be with their religious work.

He then proceeded to speak of three necessary functions of the Church, which must never be neglected or overlooked. The first function was that of teacher. Its office was to maintain, and affirm, and impart continually the great essentials of moral and religious truth. Doctrine was essential to the Church. They must be faithful to present truth, yet always with charity towards those who differed from them. They must be clear what were the essential, central truths of religion, and teach them to their children and to all who would hear; but their teaching must not be by compulsion; they must simply declare the truth, and leave it to manifest itself to every man's conscience.

The second function was to make adequate provision for common worship. There must be ritual, however simple, some form of service, both to express and to awaken devotion. Many of them were very dependent on such helps to devotion. They were spoken of as "mere forms," yet much of their religious education and religious sentiment grew out of such forms. Tender and hallowed associations gathered about them, and they shaped ideas and habits. Such means and methods of devotion every Church should endeavour to supply, such an atmosphere it should strive to create. Its worship and teaching should harmonise and should strengthen one another. Every worshipper in true sincerity must bring his own aspiration and devotion, but there was need also of the vehicle, to give them expression in common worship. There was need of that noble and well-chosen form, of which they did not grow weary, which grew fuller and clearer as time went on, which created the sense of a religious home wherever it was found. To every Church which developed such a form, it became a natural language, a unifying force. Like one's native language, it brought the sense of fellowship, and any Church that was to act powerfully and permanently on the affections and sensibilities of men must find such a form for itself.

The third function was to offer a rule of life, a discipline. "What must I do to be saved?" was a very old question, but a very real one; and it was for the Church to give guidance in that matter also. The end and aim of the Church was to uplift human life, to help men towards goodness, towards holiness, and this it did as an associate, a corporate life.

There was need of common statements of what they held as fundamental religious truth, common forms of devotion, and common methods of religious training. The three implements for Church work were Belief, Ritual, and Discipline. Protest and freedom were not at the moment the cohesive, kindling watchwords they once were. Not because they were less valuable, but because they were so abundant, everyone had as much freedom as he would take. What they still wanted was a united witness to the essential truths of religion, a known and noble language for common devotion, and plain directions in the regulation of habit and life. Such was the business of the Church. In bearing such witness, her eyes would grow clearer to discern more and more of the eternally unfolding truth, her own devotion would grow deeper and stronger, her own life would be purified of old evils, and conformed to its divine pattern, she would become that glorious Church—not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing.

The collection in aid of the funds of the Assembly amounted to £17 2s. 8d.

After the service members and friends to the number of about 130 sat down to lunch in the Wandsworth Town Hall, where the business meeting and public meeting were subsequently held.

THE BUSINESS MEETING.

The business meeting was held in the afternoon, the President, Mr. G. W. CHITTY, in the chair. There were also present Mr. Walter Baily (treasurer), the Revs. Frederic Allen (secretary), T. E. M. Edwards (minister-at-large), S. Farrington, F. K. Freeston, W. Copeland Bowie, A. J. Marchant, H. W. Perris, R. H. U. Bloor, G. D. Hicks, A. Farquharson, J. E. Stronge, W. C. Pope, H. Rawlings, G. Carter, W. Wooding, W. G. Tarrant, J. S. Mummery, L. Jenkins Jones, J. S. Toye, W. G. Cadman, B. Kirkman Gray, F. Summers, J. Pollard, E. A. Voysey, J. A.

Brinkworth, R. C. Dendy, S. Burrows, Felix Taylor, Hubert Clarke, E. L. Buckland, G. St. Clair, S. G. Preston, J. J. Marten, T. A. Gorton, and V. D. Davis; Messrs. David Martineau, Charles W. Jones, Edwin Ellis, J. Ellis Mace, A. Madocks, C. W. Mellor, L. Tavener, A. J. Clarke, Hahnemann Epps, A. Bakewell, A. G. Stoessiger, Howard Young, W. S. Tayler, T. H. Stillman; Lady Wilson, Mrs. Suffield, Mrs. H. Rutt, Miss Tagart, Miss H. Busk, Miss Florence Hill, Miss Burkitt, and many others.

Apologies for non-attendance had been received from Miss Preston, the Revs. Dr. Brooke Herford, T. W. Freckleton, and E. M. Daplyn, Mr. F. W. Ruck, and Dr. Blake Odgers.

The roll having been called, the Revs. R. H. U. Bloor, E. M. Daplyn, G. S. Hitchcock, and G. St. Clair were admitted as members of the Assembly.

On the motion of the PRESIDENT, seconded by the Rev. H. RAWLINGS, the Rev. W. G. Tarrant was elected President for the ensuing year.

The other officers were re-elected, and the Committee appointed.

The Rev. W. G. CADMAN, in moving the appointment of the representatives of the South-Eastern Sunday School Union, pointed out with regret the falling-off of numbers, both of scholars and teachers, in the schools of the province, and strongly urged the need for more strenuous Sunday-school work. That part of their work ought to be put to the front, for the building up of their churches. It was patient work that was wanted, and in years to come it was sure to tell.

An invitation from the Horsham Congregation to the Assembly to meet there next year was cordially accepted.

The report of the Advisory Committee was read, and the Committee was re-appointed, the only change being in the President, who is a member ex officio.

On the motion of the PRESIDENT, seconded by the Rev. W. C. BOWIE, the Rev. F. K. Freeston was invited to be the preacher for next year, and the Rev. E. M. Daplyn was elected supporter.

The PRESIDENT then delivered his address, taking, as he said, for text, "Noblesse oblige." He spoke first of the comfort he had derived in the thought of those words at a time when doubts and difficulties had troubled as they troubled many of the younger members of their creedless Church. When the question was put, "What do you believe?" they might answer, "Noblesse oblige. There is that within us, the divine Spirit, ever impelling onward and upward." Doing their best, need they take anxious thought of an unknown and unknowable future? Their members were but few; their churches should be sufficiently broad to embrace the most conservative, the most progressive, united in one common aim, one high ideal, the social and spiritual uplifting of humanity.

Public worship had not yet ceased to have its influence on everyday life. The meeting together of old and young, rich and poor, tended to strengthen the feeling of a common humanity, and to kindle the desire for the moral and material advancement of mankind. They must cast aside selfish ease and in the spirit of noblesse oblige, by their presence and sympathy seek to stimulate and encourage those, their ministers, whose life's mission it was to strengthen in their flocks the spirit of true religion, the sense of individual responsibility, in that onward and upward march, the aspiration of every true-hearted man and woman. Many who were intellectually with them, yet from social considerations held aloof, were found in other places of worship. They made excuse that the Church of to-day was no longer the Church of the past, that the minds of the preachers were broader than their creeds, that the ritual was an aid to devotion, and by their presence they assisted the leavening process. But beneath it all, he feared, was the spirit of selfishness, as the ruling motive, quite antagonistic to the words noblesse oblige. The thought of individual duty and responsibility should compel. Then an era of prosperity would quickly come upon them, the depression created by empty pews and an empty exchequer, and all that now retarded their progress, would be quickly removed and their churches become what they should be, centres of active and intelligent usefulness.

He then referred to what must be uppermost in the minds of all—their dispute with the Dutch inhabitants of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State. He had no wish to express a pronounced opinion on the righteousness or unrighteousness of their case or the action of their Government. But he would be wanting in duty to himself and to his theme were he not to emphasise his conviction of individual responsibility in the formation of national opinion. They were too apt to think “I am but one.” They should endeavour to drop the but. He trusted, and he knew they would be all with him, that even at the eleventh hour wise counsels might prevail, passions be calmed, and the dread horrors of war be averted.

As Unitarians they were proud, and justly proud of the part their ancestors had played in the social, and political advancement of the country. They must follow in their steps, seeking to live up to their high standard, Noblesse oblige, and so carry forward the work, devoted to the service of God, which was the service of humanity.

The Rev. F. K. FREESTON moved the following resolution:—

That the ministers and delegates of the Provincial Assembly of London and South-Eastern Counties in annual meeting assembled, while determined to use all pacific means to secure equal rights and full justice for our fellow-countrymen in the Transvaal, are of opinion that the difference now remaining between what our Government has demanded and what the Boers have conceded are not sufficient to justify our plunging South Africa into war.

We enter our solemn protest against any appeal to the sword to settle our differences with the Transvaal until after the principle of arbitration affirmed by the Conference at The Hague has been tried and found wanting.

He felt strongly, he said, that the primary concern of that Assembly was the life of their churches; but he also felt that they would not think much of their Christianity unless they were willing at times, and especially at critical times, to apply it to social and national questions. Those familiar with the proceedings of the Provincial Assembly of Lancashire and Cheshire would know that the most interesting item in the agenda was the report of the special committee on public questions, and he thought it would be a right and proper thing for that Assembly to have a committee of inquiry into great social, educational, and national questions, which concerned them all, to report to the annual meeting. In regard to the question of the Transvaal, some might say it was too late, or that their knowledge was inadequate; and yet they must all wish to clear their conscience and utter a protest against unnecessary resort to war.

The Rev. G. DAWES HICKS seconded the motion, and expressed his satisfaction that in taking part for the first time in the public proceedings of the Assembly, it should be in connection with such a question as that. The form of the resolution, which was that of the national memorial, had been drawn up, as he understood, by no less a person than the present Master of Balliol, and his name, with many other members of his College, had been appended to it. In passing that resolution, they might be in the unpopular minority, but that was what their churches were accustomed to in religious and other questions. They must make an emphatic protest against the popular cry for war.

The previous question was moved by Mr. A. Bakewell, seconded by Mr. A. G. Stoessiger, supported by the Rev. G. St. Clair and Mr. H. G. Chancellor, but opposed by the Rev. B. Kirkman Gray and Miss Florence Hill.

Mr. EDWIN ELLIS said that if the question was simply of peace, there could be no difference of opinion. He had belonged for years to the Arbitration Society. But he should be obliged to vote for the previous question. If they could by any resolution stop a terrible war, he for one would most ardently desire it; but he believed they could now do no good, it was too late. And he agreed that they had a Government who had tried and were trying all they could for peace. It was not a question of party politics, and he would not utter one word which would make it more difficult for the Government in their very arduous task. They should have every confidence in those at the helm, and especially in their noble Queen, whose whole influence, as they all knew, made for peace.

The Rev. W. WOODING urged that the principle of arbitration as enunciated at The Hague was not applicable to the Transvaal dispute. War he abhorred, yet he felt that they would be helping not their own statesmen but Mr. Kruger to stand against reasonable demands.

The previous question, being put to the vote, was lost by a large majority.

The Rev. B. KIRKMAN GRAY, speaking on the original resolution, said that it erred, if anything, in being not strong enough. It had been said that the working-men shouted for war; but he mixed constantly with the working-classes, and after being at the wretched Trafalgar-square meeting, where it was chiefly well-dressed people who were the turbulent element, he had been thankful to find that among all sorts of the people there was strong opposition to such a war, which they felt (as he did) would be “to carry out by murder the policy of grab.”

The resolution, being put to the meeting, was carried by a large majority.

The PRESIDENT, having welcomed the representatives of kindred societies, Mr.

CHARLES W. JONES, as President of the B. and F.U.A., Mr. T. BOND, representing the General Baptist Assembly, and Mr. DAVID MARTINEAU, representing the London District Unitarian Society, responded.

The annual reports and the treasurer's statement were taken as read, and were understood without resolution to be accepted by the meeting. The year began with a balance of £39 16s. 11d. in hand, which had been increased to £66 5s. 4d. Annual subscriptions amounted to £128 5s. 6d., collections and donations to £149 9s. 2d. Grants to nine of the affiliated churches amounted to £131 5s. 0d., of which £61 5s. 0d. was received from the B. and F.U.A.

The report, looking back over the ten years since the formation of the Assembly in October, 1889, expressed the conviction that work of considerable value had been done. The sense of union had been strengthened, and the isolation of the smaller congregations in the country lessened. The visits of the minister at large were warmly appreciated. Lectures had been given at Ilford, and by the Rev. S. G. Preston in a suburb of Hastings. Sunday evening services at Ealing and Walham Green had also been held, grants had been made for repair of the chapels at Stratford and Deptford, and to the building fund at Richmond, where the church was now free from debt. The needs of the old chapel at Newbury were mentioned (but a member of the congregation explained that it was £250 that was needed for necessary repairs, not £150 as stated in the report). Ten pounds had been granted for Postal Mission work. During the year the Revs. J. Harwood, A. Hood, H. Rylett, H. Rawlings, J. B. Barnhill, and M. Godfrey had resigned, and the Revs. R. H. U. Bloor, E. L. Buckland, G. S. Hitchcock, G. St. Clair, and E. Daplyn had accepted pulpits in the province. Members of the Assembly were working heartily for the London Bazaar, and the Rev. T. E. M. Edwards had been appointed organising secretary. The report recorded with sorrow the death of the Rev. Robert Spears, “a man conspicuous for his zeal, energy and untiring labours in the cause of religion, the friend and brother of all, and never weary in well-doing”; also of the Revs. J. T. Whitehead and J. W. Lake, Mr. Edward Cobb of Lewes, and Mrs. Mace of Tenterden.

The President having called special attention to the needs of Deptford and Newbury, the meeting adjourned for tea.

THE PUBLIC MEETING.

In the evening a very successful public meeting was held, under the presidency of Mr. J. F. SCHWANN, Chairman of the Wandsworth congregation.

The CHAIRMAN, after an opening hymn, referred to the object of that Assembly, to encourage a feeling of sympathy between the larger and smaller congregations in the district. Wandsworth as one of the younger churches, but one that had made substantial progress, was anxious to share in that work, and he offered on behalf of the congregation a very hearty welcome to the members of the Assembly.

The Rev. L. JENKINS JONES then gave an address on “Our Message to the Masses”—their message as Unitarians to the people at large. If there had been failure in their appeal to working-men, it had not been due to their message, but to their method; for their message was as vigorous, broad and healthy as that of any denomination which had consecrated itself to the realisation of the hopes, yearnings, and aspirations of working-men. If they were going to do any great good they must, as Sir William Harcourt had said in another connection, ally themselves with the aspirations of the people. If they were not in touch with the feelings and sympathies of the people, they might write Ichabod on their denomination. It was not enough that their churches should have ancient glory, to have, e.g., a chapel in which Matthew Henry had preached, or to say that the venerable Dr. Martineau had preached in a certain pulpit, or that a chapel was identified with Benjamin Disraeli. That would not vitalise a church or make it successful in modern times; they must throw themselves into sympathy with the present needs and yearnings of the people. Christianity itself as a religious movement had arisen from the people, for the people. The founder of Christianity himself was a working-man, and they must go back to the people and preach to them even as Jesus of Nazareth did. Their message to the masses was the revealing of the majesty and sacredness of life, the simplicity and reasonableness of their position, and the democratic freedom of their organisation. The majesty and sacredness of human life in itself, in the present, apart from all thought of what might be beyond, was what they had to declare to the people—that life was worth living for its own sake; that every man had his own place, and even the humblest could be a saint no less than the great apostles; that the workman was as essential to civilisation as the millionaire. Then as to the simplicity and reasonableness of their position, he had no sympathy with those who said a man must be very intellectual to be a Unitarian. If they took their message in its simplicity to the people it could not fail to be understood. They put conduct before belief, and to-day before to-morrow, as Jesus had preached the present Kingdom of God. They declared the reign of God on earth where men toiled for each other, and consecrated their best powers to the life which now is, leaving the rest to Him who is supreme over all. Their democratic organisation was also best for the masses of the people, and if they did not gain the masses it was because of something lacking in themselves. The world was open to Unitarians, who would love God and man, and their position demanded of them that they should energise themselves to gain the men and women who were the flowers of the heart of God.

Mr. CHARLES W. JONES, President of the B. and F.U.A., having congratulated the Assembly on the work going on in that part of the country, spoke of the work in other parts, and particularly described three events in his own district—the opening of the Liscard Memorial Church, the stone-laying of Willaston School, and the opening of the Ullet-road Church in Liverpool. He wished that more of their people would follow the example of Mrs. Elam, who had built the Liscard Church herself, at a cost of £5,000, in memory of her husband. As to the Willaston School, the late Mr. Barker had left not only his house and grounds but £23,000 as endowment for the school. That the governors wished to keep intact for the benefit of scholars, and they asked for £15,000 for the building and outfit of the school, £9,000 of which had been already promised. Special attention was to be given to the religious training of the boys. There was no body in which such training was more needed and more neglected than among Unitarians. Their boys were not found in the Sunday-schools, and when they were sent to the great public schools and the Universities they generally came back caring very little for Unitarians and Unitarian work. Willaston would be a fine, healthy, manly school, and they had secured a splendid headmaster. Boys of their Unitarian families would be able as foundationers to obtain special advantages from the school, being admitted for half fees. On their new church in Liverpool a great deal of money had been spent. It cost £25,000 altogether, and two of their members were spending another £10,000 on a congregational hall and cloisters, while one was spending £3,000 in putting frescoes on the library ceiling. He mentioned that, not as boasting of the amount, but to express his conviction that nothing they could spend was too much, in making their churches really beautiful. They rightly gave of their best for such a cause.

The Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE spoke on "Our Attitude towards Religious Education." It was a matter of supreme importance to them and to the whole community. He paid a high tribute to the unstinted devotion of many of the High Church clergy in their work among the poor, and yet priestcraft was the enemy of progress and liberty in religious thought and life. When they saw these clergy trying to stifle freedom, to educate the children not to love simply truth and goodness, but to love the Church and obey the priest, they felt it was a danger to their kind and to the future of religion. It was, therefore, an urgent call of duty to more liberal religious thinkers to do all in their power to present to the young sounder thoughts about God, the world, human life, and duty. He wished their parents and young people would give a little of their spare time to the careful study of deep religious questions, and school themselves in the best thought and literature of their own community. Many of their people did not know what there was in their literature, and especially what beautiful and helpful books of devotion. In a period of ecclesiastical turmoil he urged that they should lead their young people to the quieter, deeper, more permanent things of religion, which would survive when all the controversies of the day had passed away. He had no fear in regard to their work and their movement. He was not troubled as to what the future might call itself, whether by the Unitarian name or some other; but they must do the work that lay to their hand, and spread the truth in a clear straightforward way, that people could understand. Unitarianism had never yet pretended that it was going to shut the door on any higher truth. They kept an open door. But they were not going to talk for ever about the open door, but to go on and do their work and spread the truth, and then the blessing of God would go with them.

The Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR spoke of the freedom of their church life, and emphasised the inestimable value of freedom as insuring spontaneity, the essential thing in character. Even the thief who stole their property would not do so much harm in any community as the man who attempted to steal their freedom.

The Rev. T. E. M. EDWARDS also emphasised the need of religious education and of greater devotion to the work of their churches.

Dr. BROOKE HERFORD, who was to have been present, sent the following letter, which was read by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant:—

DR. HERFORD'S LETTER.

Dear Friends of the London and District Provincial Assembly,—

I was asked to speak to you on the relations of Unitarianism with the Liberal Orthodox, here and in America. Well, you know that here it is rather timid and grudging. The Liberal Orthodox are afraid of having much to do with us. But I will not say much about that. I would like to speak, rather, of how it is in America. For in nothing is American religious life more instructive than in this—in showing how there may be sects, how Christianity has to group itself into different forms, and yet these may exist, and yet at the same time there be very little bitterness and a great deal of fellowship and co-operation.

Of course there, as here, the separation between our Unitarian churches and the others is wider and more marked than the divisions among those others, but—this is what specially struck me—that separation between Unitarianism and the rest is nothing like as marked and rigid as here, and yet the Unitarianism there is much more open, avowed, and outspoken. I think partly all this arises from the absence of any dominant or established sect—the churches are all on the same wholesome footing—free groupings of the religious life. Every church stands for what it is worth; every clergyman, of whatever body, for what he is. If the local militia want a chaplain, it will be the manliest clergyman of the place who will be chosen—quite as likely the Unitarian as any one else. If the public cemetery or a free library is to be dedicated, it will be the minister most respected as an earnest helpful worker who will be asked to offer the prayer. To a Unitarian, accustomed to our English isolation, so far as religion is concerned, there is something very helpful and stimulating in all that. Of course, as I have said, he is more separate than the others, but it is a separation that is certainly being ignored or bridged. Let me give you a few illustrations of this greater unity that have come under my own notice. I remember how astonished I was to find at Nahant, one of the oldest of the great summer resorts of Boston, a beautiful little Union church, which for sixty years has been supported jointly mainly by Episcopalians and Unitarians, with a few Congregationalists as well. There, all through the summer, they have the best ministers they can get of different bodies—five or six of ours, a few leading Independents, Baptists, or Presbyterians, and five or six Episcopalians—and, among them, a bishop or two. The regular Anglican bishops here would not do that! Indeed, a few years ago one of them from Canada, going to spend his summer there, was shocked at such a state of things, and got another room and started a separate service, with a few of his more rigid sort. But the Boston Episcopalians would not go to it; resented his narrowness, and in a few weeks his separate church collapsed. And what struck me almost more was to find that the hymn-book in use there is that published by our own A.U.A. I once asked the warden—who practically runs the whole thing, and who is a good Episcopalian—how he came to choose that book. “Well,” he said, “I looked over quite a number of hymn-books, and that seemed to me the best, and to have almost all our best hymns in it, and so I got it.”

Or, take the arrangements for the religious life at Harvard University, with its 3,000 students. There is a corps of six “preachers to the University” appointed, of whom, at present, two are Unitarian, two Episcopalian, a Congregationalist, and a Presbyterian. They take the College morning prayers, which always include a two or three-minute address, and the Sunday services in the College chapel, and in the sixteen or eighteen years since this Union plan was adopted there has never been a note of friction, but the kindest and most cordial co-operation. And in the Harvard Divinity School, which occupies exactly the same position of “a Free School of Theology,” as our Manchester College, some of the professors are members of Orthodox churches, and so are nearly half of the students.

Or, take the services which I had on Friday evenings in my own church. I invited my nearest Episcopalian, Congregationalist, and Baptist neighbours, and a Universalist, each to take a service, and none of them made the slightest demur; and my Congregationalist neighbour asked me to give up the closing service on Good Friday evening, in order that I might take part in a great Union service in his church, in which most of the same men took part, with Phillips Brooks, afterwards made Bishop of Massachusetts, in addition. And that same Good Friday evening there were almost similar Union services, in which our minister took part, in two of the largest Episcopal churches in New York.

I might multiply such illustrations indefinitely, but I want to show you the other half of the lesson that they taught me. For, how comes this fuller interchange and fellowship? Because these men who thus unite with us are Unitarians? Not at all. They are not, and will stoutly tell you so. Because, then, the Unitarians keep their own distinctive name and faith in the background? Not at all. It is the very opposite. As I have already said, Unitarianism is far more avowed and outspoken there than here. There is not less freedom—there is not less of openness for the gradual changes that time may bring in the future as it has brought them in the past. The old first church of Boston, Unitarian to-day by virtue of the breadth of the original covenant under which it was gathered in 1630, and the second church, whose ministers range all the way from Cotton Mather and the old Calvinists to Ralph Waldo Emerson—these and all our churches guard that broad openness as their most precious birthright, but they take the ground that the value of that openness is to enable them distinctly to avow their Unitarian position to-day, just as it enabled their great-grandfathers to be Calvinists, and will enable their children’s children to be whatever in the next century they deem the truest! So they frankly take the Unitarian name, not cutting it into the stonework which is for the centuries, but never having the smallest hesitation about adopting it in their announcements for to-day. They call their local conferences Unitarian, and their national conference “Unitarian,” only mostly leaving the door for wider fellowship open by adding Unitarian—“and other Christian churches.” And so in a score of ways they stand squarely out as Unitarians. Now, mark you, I don’t join—I never have joined—with those who would impute our English hesitation in using the Unitarian name to any cowardice. It is not so. We have had no braver men than those who have most used their influence against its use. It has arisen from a fear lest they might lessen the freedom of the future; from a dread of recognising mere sectarian distinctions more than could be helped; from a wish to plant themselves before the world upon that which is common to all Churches, rather than upon that which is special to ourselves. But, all the same, I have always felt it to be a mistake, and I never was so sure of it as through the experience of those eighteen years in America. The fact is—and the more practical directness of the American mind has been quick to see it—if we hold a form of Christianity sufficiently distinct to oblige us to worship alone, it is best to let the world around us know what it is we hold, and why we hold it, and where those who want to know about it may find it. That is not merely justice to ourselves, but justice to our truth, and we want to do it in the openest and most straightforward way. That is just what our American churches have done, from Channing’s time downwards, and the consequence is that their position before the world is every way clearer and better understood; they are not more avoided and isolated than here, but far less so; they are not more shut out from the fellowship of the other denominations, but, the very opposite, are achieving year by year more of that wider fellowship for which we all long. I would like our work in England to be done as freely and broadly—and yet with that same clear letting-the-world-know how far our freedom has brought us, and what we are standing for!

The Rev. W. G. TARRANT, having read Dr. Herford’s letter, spoke further of their relations to other Free Churches, and gave some interesting particulars as to friendly relations he held towards other ministers in Wandsworth, while yet the anomaly remained of a Free Church council, which excluded the freest of the free. He spoke also of the old historical associations of Wandsworth, the presbytery founded there as early as 1572, and the Huguenots and Walloons who had settled there.

A vote of thanks to the Chairman, moved by Mr. FENTON, seconded by Mr. CHITTY, brought the meeting to a close, Mr. CHITTY also adding a word of thanks on behalf of the visitors to the Wandsworth friends for the admirable arrangements for the meeting.

Mr. Tarrant pronounced the Benediction.

It is very seldom that you have the opportunity of saving the life of a fellow-creature; but every day you may make some little contribution to the happiness of those with whom you live, either by a kind look or an encouraging smile.—Furness.

OBITUARY.

JOHN LANG, GLASGOW.

THERE has passed away during the past week one who will be missed in the Unitarian life and work of Glasgow and the west of Scotland. John Lang of Bridgeton, Glasgow, was favourably and affectionately known to all the Unitarian ministers who have been in Glasgow since the year 1848. He joined the Glasgow Unitarian Church there, which met in the premises now occupied by the Glasgow Daily and Weekly Mail in Renfield-street. The congregation is now known as the St. Vincent-street Christian Unitarian Church and during Mr. Lang’s time it had for ministers, the Revs. G. Harris, H. W. Crosskey, J. P. Hopps, Frank Walters, and A. Lazenby.

Besides being a member of St. Vincent-street Church, all through these years, a living and helpful member be it noted, Mr. Lang has from the first been one of the principal members of St. Mungo-street congregation. His sympathy and purse could always be depended on for the advancement of religious free thought. He was keen in observation and kind in action; everybody loved the openness and generosity of the real man he always unfolded.

He was conscious to the last, and counselled his children in the way they should go. He told them he did not know whence he came, and he did not know whither he was going. The hand that guided him in the past would guide in the future, and he was confident all was provided for. He had walked humbly before God, he had acted justly, he had loved mercy, and what more could God require of him. In politics he was an advanced Radical up to the time of Gladstone’s Home Rule Bill. Since then he has been prominent on Liberal Unionist platforms. He was on the committee that welcomed Ernest Jones to Glasgow, and he liberally subscribed to the Chartist cause. The passing away of John Lang will be felt as a severe loss to Unitarians in Glasgow and the philanthropic workers in the west of Scotland. Through him the love making for righteousness in the universe accomplished much. He is now dead and gone, but the life he lived is reproducing itself in the life of others and convincing us that nothing which is good ever dies.

G. McL.

MR. J. E. HICKS

THE Portland-street Church at Southport has just sustained a great loss in the death of Mr. J. E. Hicks, secretary of the congregation and superintendent of the Sunday-school.

Of a singularly modest and retiring disposition, and a convert from Congregationalism a few years ago, Mr. Hicks was little known in the denomination at large, but here in Southport he was known and appreciated as a stalwart pillar of the Church, to be relied upon in every emergency.

For the last dozen years he has been a power for good amongst us. His influence in the Sunday-school has been remarkable. Rarely has any teacher or superintendent drawn to himself the affection and confidence of the whole school as Mr. Hicks has done, and they mourn for him as for a dear friend taken. After a comparatively short illness, he passed away from us on Monday last, 9th inst., leaving a widow to mourn his loss, and a son now entering upon his last year at Manchester College, with every prospect of a successful career in our ministry.

IS LIFE SAD AND ETERNITY AWFUL?

FROM a leaflet headed "Meeting Places in our Father's Church," we are glad to take the following copy of a helpful letter:—

"To one who wrote that 'Life here is a sad thing' and 'We are so helpless and weak, in the awful face of Eternity,' this was said in reply:

'I think we ought not to feel satisfied to say that "Life here is a sad thing." It sometimes is, and it is to some. But Life, in the main, is a great moving river of buoyant happiness: and much of the seeming misery is mainly "seeming": and I who say that know well what real misery is, after living over 60 years.

'Nor is the face of Eternity "awful." It is The Father's face: and, though that face were shrouded in blackest night, it would still be The Father's face. Everything is His; and "Death," as we call it, is one of His angels, and is as natural as Life. Nay, but it is Life—intenser Life.

'Besides, even as regards this life, if there had been no sorrow, no struggle, no death, we should have had no play of hope and fear, no longing and intensity and loving, no poetry of pathos, no Bible, no Shakespeare, no Emerson, no great Art, no deep Music—nothing but the insipidity of a slush of thin enjoyment—and there would have been as little education as bliss in that.

'This is a world of soul-growth; and the soul can grow only by experience. But there could be no experiences if there were no opposites—no light and shade, no joy and sorrow, no victory and defeat, no happy memories and no remorse. We are at school, but the school is not at rest. It moves on with us, and we shall never leave it.

'Your letter itself shows that your great sorrow is already great education. You see errors, neglects, withholdings; you see that this and that might have been different and better; you are now strongly discriminating; you are coming to the knowledge of good and evil. The process is painful, but is it not perfectly plain that the process is worth the pain, and that the result in yourself will far outweigh the price you pay?

'It is in this way that the human race has been thus far created, and it is in this way that it will go on being created—that, just as it has emerged from the brute condition by experience of struggle and victory, joy and sorrow, remorse and longing, so, by these experiences it will go on from the human to the angelic and the divine. There is no other way; but it is worth it.'

CARMARTHEN COLLEGE.—The entrance examination, which was conducted in the last week of September by Dr. Daniel Rees, of Cardigan, has resulted in the admission of thirteen new students, five of whom are understood to be connected with the Baptists and eight with the Independents. The session opened on Wednesday, Oct. 4.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

I READ an American story the other day about a runaway engine. I don't know whether engines ever do runaway in England.

Try to picture to yourself a lonely little station in the woods. There was no village or other houses near. The nearest station was fifteen miles away. The single line seemed to lose itself, whether you looked up or down, between the countless pine trunks on both sides, and the branches met high above it. There were only four trains a day, and very few passengers. You can think it was rather dull for the young fellow who was station master, and signal man and telegraph clerk all in one. He was standing on the platform one day, thinking to himself, when he heard the familiar click of his telegraphic machine. He knew that meant a message from the next station. This was the message that came to him: "Runaway engine on line. Turn the switch for No. 40 to go on the siding." No. 40 was the next train, due in a few minutes, from the other direction. He turned the switch, and then he tried to think what he could do to stop the engine.

Now while he is thinking, let us think about this runaway engine too.

You can see what a dangerous thing a runaway engine must be. It comes thundering, rushing along the line, faster and faster, with no one to guide or check it, a blind terrible force, dashing on till it meets, perhaps, a train, or, perhaps, some obstacle that throws it off the line. It is bound to do a frightful harm either to itself or to something else if it is not caught. What makes a runaway engine so dangerous?

An engine is not a bad thing in itself, is it? No, it is one of the most wonderful, and useful, and even majestic creations of human ingenuity and skill. I never see one of those splendid engines that draw an express train without admiring it, without feeling a kind of awe of it. It is so strong and so serviceable. It does exactly what it is bid. Yes, the engine is wonderful, is admirable, when it is under control—so long as there is reason and intelligence to guide and govern it.

The runaway engine was dangerous because it was not under control. It had started off blindly without any intelligence to direct it, and all it could do was to dash on faster and faster, till its force was spent. It was a danger to itself and to everything that came in its way. All its tremendous power was hurrying it on to some catastrophe. Instead of being a helpful power it had turned into a destructive power, just for want of control, of direction.

After all I am not sure but that there are runaway engines in England as well as in America. Did you ever see anyone very angry? Did you ever get very angry yourself? so angry you didn't know what you were doing? so angry that while it lasted, you couldn't listen to any reason, or any explanation? so angry that you could strike anyone who interfered, even your best friend?

I have heard of a father, who, in a passion, struck his little son such a blow that the boy became an idiot! I sometimes read in the paper of a man, in a fit of anger, killing his wife!

The anger goes down after a while just as the steam in the boiler of the engine after a time is spent. Good sense, reason, kind thought come back—the driver gets on the engine again. The man thinks—how could I have done such a brutal, such a frightful thing? The boy smiles again. He knows he was silly. He can't think why he was in such a rage. Happily he hasn't done any great harm to anyone. But you see what a runaway engine Temper may be. While the fit lasts, self-control is gone, reason is gone; the man and those around are at the mercy of this blind force of passion.

Sometimes a whole nation gets possessed by one of these fits of passion. Its suspicion, its jealousy, its pride, its self-will, its resentment are blown upon till by-and-by the flame catches. The steam rushes into the pipes. All its machinery is started on the line of war. The mass of the people don't know what it is about, or they have a wrong notion of what it is about. But they get just as excited, just as hot, just as eager. If nations could only keep their good sense, if they could only see truly the real causes of the quarrel, if intelligence had its hand on the great machine—yes, if only one of them were reasonable—I think there would be very little war. War comes when nations get into a rage, when they lose self-control. Then a nation becomes dangerous. It is a runaway engine.

Very likely you are wishing to know the end of the story we began with. Did the man stop the engine? Well, this is the end of the story. As he thought, in a kind of despair, what can I do, what can I alone do to stop this engine? he saw some coils of rope lying on the platform. In an instant it flashed into his mind—could I fasten this across the line and stop the engine? If there were only time! He worked like three men. He fastened the rope from one great pine trunk to another, across the line. He did it again and again, while the roar of the coming engine began to sound though the woods, till the engine itself was upon him. Would his rope barriers hold? The great engine broke through the first, the second, the third. Then its force seemed to slacken. The next rope strained before it broke, and before the last was reached, the man had climbed on the cab, his hand was on the lever that controlled it.

Now I don't know enough about engines to know if this is a true story. But this I do know that every little barrier in the way of these other runaway engines counts for something in checking them. Only keep on trying. Put one good thought after another, one good habit after another across the line. Don't be discouraged in trying to hold them in, even if you don't succeed the first time. Let us never be tired of trying to control ourselves, and so helping others to self-control.

He that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city. C. A. F.

EPSS'S COCOA.	The most nutritious.
EPSS'S COCOA.	Grateful and comforting.
EPSS'S COCOA.	For breakfast and supper.
EPSS'S COCOA.	With natural flavour only.
EPSS'S COCOA.	From the finest brands.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any News-agent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are:—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER ...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR ...	3	4
PER YEAR ...	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE ...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE ...	2	10	0
PER COLUMN ...	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN ...	0	3	8
BACK PAGE ...	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, OCTOBER 14, 1899.

THE JUBILEE OF A FREE CHURCH.

ON Wednesday next the Jubilee of Hope-street Church is to be celebrated in Liverpool. Fifty years is no very long period in the life of a church, and the history of the congregation goes much further back, so that before many years are past it will celebrate its bicentenary. But Hope-street Church must always hold a special place in the affections and veneration of our people, because the first ministry by which for nine years it was consecrated was that of JAMES MARTINEAU.

The recent opening of the new Ullet-road Church called to mind the early history of Nonconformity in Liverpool, with its first home in the Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, and the congregations subsequently formed in the town itself. It was in 1707 that a second town congregation was formed akin to that of the Ancient Chapel in the Park, and Castle Hey, which towards the close of the seventeenth century began the succession now so worthily maintained in Ullet-road. The second town congregation met first in a chapel in Key-street, under the ministry of CHRISTOPHER BASSNETT. In 1791, when JOHN YATES was minister, they moved into Paradise-street Chapel. Mr. YATES is to be remembered with honour as one of the first ministers of religion in Liverpool boldly to speak out against the iniquity of the slave trade. It was as assistant to his successor, the Rev. JOHN GRUNDY, that JAMES MARTINEAU first came as a young man to Liverpool in 1832, so that he had already completed a ministry of sixteen years in Paradise-street Chapel, when the congregation removed into the new Hope-street Church.

The foundation-stone was laid on May 9, 1848, and on that occasion Mr. MARTINEAU delivered an eloquent address. Having spoken of the troubled times in which they were testifying to their faith in the permanent things of the religious life by the building of that home of piety, and having glanced at the similarly revolutionary days in which their old chapel had been built, which was to have been opened by Dr. PRIESTLEY, had not the violence of the Birmingham mob intervened, he proceeded to enunciate the principles of the religious life in which they were united, and in the following words declared the fundamental principle of a Free Church, which from that day to this he has so consistently and ardently maintained:—

We dedicate our church to no creed. . . . Not—let me be understood—that we are, individually, without definite belief; or collectively, without a belief strongly marked by common characteristics. We do not pretend to be mere seekers, with a system awaiting us in the future. We are not drawn together by the sympathies of a universal unsettledness, and the resolve to discuss an infinite series of open questions. No, we raise here, not a school, but a church; not a hall of debate, but a shrine of God; and shall collect, not a parliament of critics, but a brotherhood of worshippers. For this end there must be a faith in each not wandering very far from the faith of all. Only where there is essentially one heart and mind can the many find themselves represented by the breathings of a single spirit. We do not look, therefore, for the presence of various creeds together; we simply offer no hindrance to their appearing successively. And as we possess, not our own acquisitions only, but a heritage from predecessors; as we build, not for ourselves alone, but for our descendants; as our society runs through generations, constant, indeed, in their religion, but variable (may I say progressive?) in their theology, we presume not to impress our own peculiarities on this church. We own the partnership of other ages in the baptism and character of this place, and will not forfeit our affinity with the ancient and the unborn to gratify the egotism of a sect. Let it not be said that we want a refuge for vagueness of conviction, an excuse for cowardice of profession. We know what we believe; we love what we believe; we plainly tell what we believe. I am a Unitarian; you, who will meet here from week to week are doubtless Unitarian too; but the society of worshippers, of which we are only the living members, and the church erected here, of which we shall be but transient tenants, these are not to be defined as Unitarian. To stamp them with such doctrinal name, would be to perform an act of posthumous expulsion against many noble dead whom it is an honour to revere; and perhaps to provoke against ourselves, from a future age, the retribution of a like excommunication. . . . Why may not our churches rise, not in blind expectation of perpetuity for the present types and classifications of theology, but in pure faith that God and the human soul will ever seek each other; and that, so long as Heavenly Mercy shall stoop, and earthly aspiration rise, a court of audience for trust and prayer cannot be obsolete?

On Oct. 18, 1849, the new church was opened, and on the following Sunday morning Mr. MARTINEAU preached that sermon on "The Watch-night Lamps," which with other special sermons belonging to that time will be found in the collected edition of his essays and addresses. That church, he said, was dedicated to Endeavour, Humiliation and Trust, to Service and Communion; at the close he drew a striking picture of the conflicting tendencies of the day, represented by the Oxford Movement on the one side, and the Positivist on the other, and he concluded in these words:—

Who shall abide in peace the crash and conflict of this war? He only, I believe, whose allegiance is neither to the antiquated Past, nor to the speculative Future; but to the imperishable, the ever-present soul of man as it is; who keeps close, amid every change, to the reality of human nature which changes not; and who, following chiefly the revelations of the Divine Will to the open and conscious mind, and reading scripture, history and life, by their interpreting light, feels the serenity and rests on the stability of God.

Dr. MARTINEAU's ministry in Liverpool was concluded in 1857, and if any ask what he had been preaching there the answer will be found in his "Endeavours after the Christian Life," and his "Hours of Thought on Sacred Things."

On the roll of ministers of Hope-street Church who succeeded him are found the names of WILLIAM HENRY CHANNING, CHARLES WICKSTEED and ALEXANDER GORDON, EDMUND MARTIN GELDART, CHARLES JOHN PERRY and RICHARD ACLAND ARMSTRONG. It is matter for sincerest congratulation that with renewed health Mr. ARMSTRONG will celebrate with the congregation he has served for fifteen years the jubilee of their church. No one has more worthily maintained the high tradition of Dr. MARTINEAU's religious teaching, or with more whole-hearted loyalty has held to the great principle of Freedom to which Hope-street Church is dedicated.

OUR CHAPEL.

BY THE LATE ROBERT LEIGHTON.

Not in all England's temple-built domain
Can I behold such beauty as I may Within the blue-ceil'd, marble-pillar'd faue
That draws my Sabbath day.

I almost get all that my soul can need
Of worship, merely there to sit and look;
For Beauty is my idol, half my creed—
God's universal book.

So, in its beauty has our chapel grown From Thee, O God! a very poem inspired;
And, drinking in its every line and tone,
My heart is never tired.

Up in the azure heaven of its roof
I lose my thoughts, as in God's outer skies;
The checker'd panes shed down the golden woof,
Like beams from angel-eyes.

The sun throws in the window's pictured scenes,
And Jesus moves in light from seat to seat;
The Marys come, and Christ's own Galileans
Pass by with silent feet.

But when the organ stirs the enraptured air,
And touches chords our wisdom may not reach,
Ah, then we have the sermon and the pray'r,
Though none were there to preach!

I love our Chapel for its beauty's sake,
And for a promise on its altar laid—
A promise that I did not need to make,
And have not wish'd unmade.

I love it for that mighty soul who shone—
And shines—the brightest of our gospel's lamps;
And that great heart who pass'd from us half known,
To watch the embattled camps.

I love it for the coming hope, though dim.
The old renown still hangs about these walls;
And, 'tis my faith, whoever comes, on him
Elijah's mantle falls.

TENNYSON'S "PALACE OF ART."

THE purpose of this poem is to show that none of us can live to or for ourself alone and be happy.

This may seem a very ordinary idea, one that we are well acquainted with. It would appear to be the old, old fact that selfishness is a failure either as a policy or a principle. But there are various forms of selfishness; there is a nineteenth-century form of selfishness so refined, intellectual, artistic and even moral, that we are neither disgusted nor shocked by it, and hence do not realise its danger. When we speak of selfishness we are accustomed to think of greed, or close-fistedness, or bodily indulgence, or caring only for number one. But suppose a person so well off in a worldly sense as to have no further need to crave for the material things over which folks get selfish; suppose such a person so cultured and refined as to have absolutely not a care upon his mind concerning material wants, which are all luxuriously attended to; suppose such a person thus so situated as to have mind and soul, time and wish perfectly free for intellectual and moral, artistic and spiritual pursuits—is it sure to be unselfish? Is it impossible for it to be selfish? Nay, it may, it often does, fall into and develop the most fearful form of selfishness—a selfishness which merits and receives the most awful form of punishment.

In a sense this phase of selfishness may be called modern because it was never so widely possible as now. It requires wealth and culture to start with. These are the necessary conditions of its existence. Then it becomes so sensitive that it cannot mix with the common people. Its taste is so refined that hardly anybody is fit for it.

Are there not such people in England? Tennyson found such. More or less all educated people stand in danger of becoming such. To a certain extent we are each liable to fall into the danger when we look upon all the world, except our own little one, as a poor affair, and the common people as a bad lot; and so wrap ourselves round in the lofty pride of isolation. But, given wealth and culture, with no faith in ordinary human nature and no faith in the growing good of the world; wealth and culture which, therefore, withdraws itself within its own artistic self-satisfactions, and you get the finished type of modern or nineteenth-century selfishness.

Now Tennyson, in "The Palace of Art," gives a picture of such a soul, of the fine enjoyments it provided for itself, and of the inevitable consequences.

Perhaps he calls the poem "The Palace of Art" because it is to art—to all things as art—that this kind of soul usually devotes itself. It does not care for things for the Good that is in them, only for the Beauty. Knowledge it loves, but not as knowledge, and certainly not for the good that knowledge can do. No; Beauty, artistic Beauty, is its object of devotion; Science and Religion, Knowledge and Experience, only in so far as they can add exquisiteness to Art, and the æsthetic enjoyment of it.

"Very well," says Tennyson, "you shall have a veritable 'Palace of Art,' and let us see what the result is."

And so, in this wonderful poem of seventy-five verses, the poet describes the Palace which he built for his soul, the marvellous grandeur of it without, the enchanting beauty of it within, the exquisite life of pure isolated enjoyment in it for full three years, and then the punishment which seems to turn the Palace into a Tomb, and makes the hitherto self-satisfied soul to howl—

I am on fire within.

There comes no murmur of reply.

What is it that will take away my sin,

And save me lest I die?

For a full description of the Palace, and the soul's life within it, you need to read the poem itself; and its beauty and power alone are a rare treat. But as we are interested in the poem chiefly for the good that is in it I shall limit the telling of its story almost to that point.

I built my soul a lordly pleasure house,

Wherein at ease for aye to dwell,

I said: "O Soul, make merry and carouse,
Dear Soul, for all is well."

To which my soul made answer readily:

"Trust me, in bliss I shall abide

In this great mansion, that is built for me,
So royal-rich and wide."

Thus the poem opens. Then there is given a wonderful word-picture of the Palace. Alone, high up "far from the madding crowd," the Palace stands; and there the "soul" will "live alone unto herself."

Surrounding the Palace are four glorious courts with green lawns and dragon fountains. Beyond these stretch mighty woods.

Running round the Palace roofs is a gilded gallery, golden railed, like a fringe of fire. From this gallery the dweller in the Palace could behold in all directions the loveliness and beauty of country, mountain, shore, and sea.

But nothing human met the gaze. That, to this Soul, was the chief satisfaction. It wanted to see nothing of the people, except at a very great distance when they looked like "darkening droves of swine" on yonder far-off plain. "There," says this Soul, "let them stay; in their 'filthy sloughs,' let them 'roll a prurient skin; and graze and wallow, breed and sleep. But I—let me have my exquisite enjoyment to myself!'"

And so we turn into the Palace. We pace the "long-sounding corridors," enter the "great rooms," and here on the walls, hung with arras curiously wrought in perfect colours, are every image of Nature and human nature that you could imagine. "One showed an iron coast and angry waves." "And one a full-fed river winding slow by herds along an endless plain." "And one, the reapers at their sultry toil. In front they bound their sheaves." Here was another in

Green and blue,

Showing a gaudy summer morn,
Where with puffed cheek the belted hunter blew

His wreathed horn.

And one, an English home—gray twilight poured

On dewy pastures, dewy trees,
Softer than sleep,—all things in order stood,
A haunt of ancient Peace.

These were some of the decorations of the rooms. Then the floors of the rooms were "all mosaic, choicely planned." All stories of human life were figured beneath your feet. For example:—

The people here, a beast of burden slow,
Toiled onward, pricked with goads and stings.

And you could walk over them!

But there was one room in the Palace most glorious of all. Here in this room it was that the Soul had set up her throne. In the towers above, the great bells swung, moved of themselves, with silver sound. Around this royal dais were hung "choice paintings of wise men."

For there was Milton like a seraph strong,
Beside him Shakespeare bland and mild;
And there the world-worn Dante grasped his song,

And somewhat grimly smiled.

Then in the Oriels or Eastern Windows behind her throne

Thro' the topmost coloured flame

Two god-like faces gazed below;

Plato the wise, and large-browed Verulam,
The first of those who know."

This was "The Palace of Art." Here dwelt the artistic soul in isolation of delight. Nothing to hamper her; nothing to jar:

Singing and murmuring in her feastful mirth,
Joying to feel herself alive,
Lord over Nature, Lord of the visible earth,
Lord of the senses five.

Communing with herself:

All these are mine,

And let the world have peace or wars,
'Tis one to me!

Yea, and when the bells of silver chimed she took her throne self-satisfied, sat and sang, discussed the moral instinct, intellectual affairs—ay, felt sure of her own immortality.

And so she thrived and prospered: so three years

She prospered; on the fourth she fell,
Like Herod when the shout was in his ears,

Struck thro' with pangs of hell.

What was it? What had happened? A great doubt seized her. God plagued her with despair. Confusion came upon her mind. Where'er she looked a hand seemed to write, "Thou art weighed in the balances and found wanting."

She tried to throw it off—this fear. She tried to laugh it away, to think it away, to will it away. "What! is not this my palace of strength," she said, "my spacious mansion built for me?" But no; the despair remained; "deep dread and loathing of her solitude fell on her."

How strange the Palace looked! There, in "dark corners, stood uncertain shapes." Here were "white phantasms weeping tears of blood." Yonder were "hollow shades enclosing hearts of flame," and

There against
The wall stood corpses,
Three months old at noon.

Thus did this self-centred soul suffer an agony that bordered on insanity. Her pride of isolation had brought her the punishment of desolation.

And death and life she hated equally,
And nothing saw, for her despair,
But dreadful time, dreadful eternity,
No comfort anywhere.

She felt herself

Shut up as in a crumbling tomb, girt round
With blackness as a solid wall,
Far-off she seemed to hear the dull sound
Of human footsteps fall.

She howled aloud:

I am on fire within.
There comes no murmur of reply.
What is it that will take away my sin,
And save me lest I die?

The sin? What was the sin? Note this: "It was not that she loved beauty and music and fragrance." There is no sin in that. But it was because "in her love for these things she lost her moral sense, denied her human duties, and scorned, instead of pitying and helping her brother men who lived on the plain below. This is the sin of selfish pride, the sin which drives out the Christ because he eats with publicans and sinners, the unpardonable sin which makes its own hell. And it is just this sin, the poet declares, which transforms the Palace of Art into a prison of despair."

And what remedy? Well, it is a very simple and very homely one. It only takes one verse to tell it. The remedy is to get into human relationship with others; to go down and live with and for others in natural, sympathetic, everyday helpfulness. That is the remedy: Be human to become divine. Be helpful to become holy. Only he "that shuts love out," says the poet, "in turn shall be shut out from love, and on her threshold lie howling in outer darkness."

So when four years were wholly finished,

She threw her royal robes away.
"Make me a cottage in the vale," she said,
"Where I may mourn and pray."

So she began to be kind. She mingled helpfully and happily with those whom she had stood away from in contempt and scorn.

And did she thus forsake Art and Knowledge, leave Culture, or lose Refinement? Ah no! Not one whit. But, she added to them pity, sympathy, and love; blending the Beauty that can be enjoyed with the Good that can be done.

And so the last verse is very striking. It clearly indicates that it is not art that is at fault, but heart. Let that be right—let it beat for others and with others—and then even "The Palace of Art" may be a heavenly-happy place. Hence she significantly says on leaving it:

Yet, pull not down my palace towers, that are
So lightly, beautifully built:
Perchance I may return with others there
When I have purged my guilt.
J. J. WRIGHT.

GREENACRE ONCE MORE.

Providence, Sept. 21, 1899.

SIR,—Some twenty years ago, in a letter to THE INQUIRER, I used the words

"There's a divinity that shapes our ends rough,

Hew them how we will;"

and on receipt of the paper, I had occasion to remind your proof-reader that it was not William Shakespeare, but your nineteenth-century correspondent, whose letter he had to print; for he had transferred the word rough from the end of the first line, where I had placed it, to the beginning of the second, thus giving an entirely different meaning to my words. And so I find that by substituting an M for an N in my letter printed in THE INQUIRER of Sept. 2, credit has been given to Dr. James for the works of Dr. Janes. We have a Professor James at Cambridge, Mass., who is well known in Great Britain by his Gifford lectures at Edinburgh University; but Dr. Lewis G. Janes, whom I mentioned as the director of the Monsalvat School of Comparative Religion, is a different, and in some respects a unique personage. A Master of Arts of Brown University, Providence, R.I., he has been president of the Brooklyn Ethical Association, instructor in History, lecturer on Sociology and Civics, a productive writer in our magazines on social, historical, ethical and religious topics; and this spring, when Colonel Higginson retired from the presidency of the Free Religious Association, Dr. Janes was unanimously appointed to occupy the vacant post, so worthily occupied before him by Octavius B. Frothingham, Felix Adler, William J. Potter, and Colonel Higginson. It is well that your readers should be accurately informed about him, as they are likely to hear much about him in future.

The Sunday's experience described in THE INQUIRER of Sept. 2 was so interesting to me, that I returned to Greenacre as soon as possible, and was fortunately able to spend a whole fortnight among the tent-dwellers on the banks of the Piscataqua River (please put the accent on the cat), enjoying the quiet of the pleasant country life, and the intellectual treat provided by Dr. Janes and by Miss Farmer in the Greenacre Lectureships.

It was on Friday, Aug. 18, that, coming from the North, I reached Greenacre for the second time. Wandering after supper through the tented field, I came unexpectedly upon a scene that might have served a painter as a model for some picture representing the shores of the Lake of Galilee. Although the sun was already hidden behind the purple hills of New Hampshire, its many-hued rays were still thrown back by the clouds upon the mirror-like surface of the Piscataqua, broadened by the rising tide till it seemed almost like a lake. Reclining on the ground between the tents and the river was a crowd, mostly of women, listening to a statuesque man, clothed in Syrian robes, who was chanting in musical tones, now a few Arabic verses, and then what seemed to be their English equivalent in poetic phrase. What he said I do not remember, for my thoughts involuntarily wandered to Eastern scenes of which I had read long ago in the books of Harriet Martineau, of Lamartine, or of Renan; and there came into my mind those words of Matthew Arnold in his poem on Senancour's Obermann:—

While we believed, on earth he went,
And open stood his grave,
Men called from chamber, church, and tent;
And Christ was by to save.
Now he is dead! Far hence he lies
In the lorn Syrian town;
And on his grave with shining eyes
The Syrian stars look down.

But soon the melodious voice ceased, and I was called from my reverie by the unmistakably American tones of a lady, who invited me to approach the group and be introduced to the orator. I found in him a tradesman of Providence, Mr. Shehadi Abd Allah Shehadi, one of those Syrians who, driven from their native land by that Turkish Friend of Beaconsfield and Salisbury, have brought a large contribution of Asiatic blood to our many-languaged Republic, and, lecturing here with great ability on the social and religious customs of the Syrians and Bedouin Arabs, earns his daily bread by trading in Damascus wares.

He was not the only Asiatic that I was to meet here. The new facilities of travel through Californian and British Columbian ports to the Western shores of the Pacific Ocean have brought to our Eastern cities not only the Chinaman and the Japanese, but also many representatives of those older faiths, which, born in Hindustan, contributed some light from Asia to the Gospel of our Western world. Some of these men come here to correct what they believe to be the errors of Western scholars regarding them. Others find here ready sympathy for their complaints about British rule in India, and carry back to India the hopes which this sympathy has excited. Others like Mozoomdar, at the Parliament of Religions in Chicago, serve as reconcilers and interpreters between the almost antagonistic modes of thought and life in the West and the East, and of these some specimens were present at Greenacre. I have already mentioned Mr. Pandianof, Madras. He is a member of an old Zemindar family, and his Greenacre lectures on "India, Past and Present," "The Disabilities and Wrongs of the Oppressed Classes," "The Women of India," and "The Social, Religious, and Economic Condition of the People of India," have fully justified the commendations which he brought here from eminent European scholars.

The Swâmi Abhedânanda, a Sannyâsin monk, of the same brotherhood as the Swamis Vivekânanda and Saradânanda, has been lecturing for some time in New York, Washington, and Cambridge, on the Vedanta Philosophy; while a singularly able man, Mr. Virchand R. Gandhi, B.A., M.R.A.S., a member of the Indian National Congress, and secretary of the Society for Female Education in India, who first visited the Chicago Parliament of Religions as representative of the Jains, gave us five lectures on the "Religion and Philosophy of his People." The Rabbi Joseph Silbermann, colleague of the well-known Rabbi Gottheil, once of Manchester, England, at the Temple Emanu-El, New York, gave us three lectures on the "History of Ethics and Theology of the Talmud." To me the most interesting lectures of all the course were those of a talented and eloquent young German, Emanuel Schmidt, Professor of Semitic languages at Cornell University, on "Job, the Philosopher as Poet"; "Ecclesiastes, the Philosopher as Critic"; "Philo, the Philosopher as Allegorist"; and "John, the Philosopher as Mystic." Charles Malloy completed the cyclis of Oriental study by giving us four lectures on "Emerson's Relations to the Bhagavad Gita."

But now—to quote Matthew Arnold again—

Unduped of fancy, henceforth man
Must labour: must resign
His all-too human creeds, and scan Simply the way divine.

And after all these Oriental studies, Dr. Lewis brought us to the practical religion of our Western world in four lectures on "Social Science and Applied Religion."

That is all that the Monsalvat School offered at Greenacre, and it was enough to reward the visitor; but alongside of it were the special Greenacre lectures, organised by Miss Sarah J. Farmer, maintained for a great part at her expense, and extending over eight weeks, which I must describe in another letter.

JOHN FRETWELL.

THE REV. STOPFORD A. BROOKE AT LITTLE PORTLAND STREET.

It is not often, especially in London, that any difficulty is experienced in finding seats for those who desire to attend one of our chapels, and it is a testimony to the hold which Mr. Stopford Brooke has on the Metropolis that applications for upwards of 550 reserved seats were received beforehand for the six Sundays on which he is to preach. At the first service on Oct. 8, every available seat was occupied before the service began. We were glad to observe that though a few well-known Unitarians were present, the vast majority were not of the class who usually frequent our metropolitan churches. The order of service was a shortened form of the one formerly used at Bedford Chapel, and a selection of hymns for special services was printed for use during the six Sundays. The sermon, which lasted about forty minutes, and was listened to with devout attention and interest by the crowded congregation, is summarised in Monday's Daily News as follows:—

Mr. Brooke took his text from the 107th Psalm and the 23rd and few following verses, from "They that go down to the sea in ships" . . . to the words "He bringeth them to the haven where they would be." Many years ago, he said, he had preached from this text, and he had forgotten the sermon except the way in which he had introduced it. He spoke of his early life by the sea. The text was an epitome of a sailor's life, and it became in a young idea a picture of human life. Of late it had been recalled to his mind. He had been among Cornish fishermen, and had stayed by the sea in Ireland. He had seen the ocean in absolute peace, and had heard it roar in storm, and when he thought of preaching in London this text had come to his mind. But why not take a topic of the day, some would ask?

The war in the Church; the question of Education; the growth of Nonconformist unity—though by their noble sternness, the Nonconformists excluded Unitarians; or the subject of peace or war in the Transvaal? Have you not, he said, enough of these during the week? Cannot you give one hour to the deep things of God? All the tempestuous questions in which you are so desperately concerned are of little moment compared with the education of the soul of man into fitness for, and union with, the peace of God. How many things he had seen and laboured through in his life which had been thought of the greatest moment, and now where were they? Many had been settled in a way none had foreseen. But this other thing of God's movement of the human soul and the response to the call of the Master who brought them to the haven at last—this was of supreme importance, and lived a million years. It would be with them when they passed from the vain fret of this life to the peace beyond. How like the text was to human life! He had seen men and women almost wrecked, and some had sunk. There were times when most of them had stood aghast at the long misery of man. There were days when faith could not see the stars. It was an awful thing to see the evil of the world and behold no good beyond. But it was well for men and women to have known the tempest; well even for those who had gone into the depths. Do not, he cried, allow your life to be withered; do not become morose by any trouble whatsoever. Determine to let the storm rage as it may, but sail your ship with courage and hope. God is with you. You shall yet see the shining haven and the peace that is born of love. Gain the courage the root of which is faith in goodness; the hope which sees the bright morning beyond the stormy night, and the victory over evil with faith in God. If we have not gained this position we ought—I say we ought—to have gained it. But numbers of folk are weak and fearful, and, perhaps, terribly passionate. They cannot at first stand the storm. Help them. When we feel the love of man we can begin to feel the love of God. First the natural, then the spiritual. There was one absolute necessity for man. It was that he be at absolute unity with his Father. If a man set himself against that law he must suffer. Suffering brought men to understand that law, and then suffering helped them to help others. But then there were those who sank! If there was no life beyond the grave, what was the use of their coming into the world? But there was the life beyond, when He would bring them into union with Himself. To see something of these works of God in human life, in the life of nations, and of the race, was indeed the greatest vision man could have. You might be angry with God in the storm, but by-and-by you may find peace in Him, and realise that He is a Father who loves mankind. Then at evening time there shall be light; peace in the decay of the body, peace in the expansion of the spirit, peace as we look at the shore beyond.

Correspondents are requested to note that to be sure of insertion the same week, news must reach the Office by the first post on Thursday at latest, and the earlier in the week the better.

PROVINCIAL LETTER.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT.

WHEN honour is conferred upon any of our Church members we all rejoice, and feel that it somehow redounds to the honour of the Church. It is natural enough for us to feel proud when some public distinction is bestowed upon one who is associated with us in religious worship and work. I have, therefore, much pleasure in referring to the fact that our esteemed friend, Mr. Harry Rawson, has recently been invited to accept the office of Lord Mayor of Manchester. No one was surprised to hear of this, for there is no more active or more honoured member of the City Council. It is marvellous to us all how Mr. Rawson gets through so much trying public work in addition to the demands made upon him by his business; he does not slacken with increase of years, and, indeed, his withdrawal from the municipal and public honorary offices which he holds in so distinguished a manner, would be an irreparable loss. We all much regret that from private reasons he was unable to accept the honour that was offered him; for he would have filled the highest official position in this city with distinction, and we should have felt that we were in a sense sharing the honour. Mr. Rawson, however, thinks that all good work carries with it its own reward; and he is content to give of his best for the public weal unostentatiously, and without special acknowledgment.

This is not the only recognition of worth bestowed upon a member of our own religious faith in this district. The Freedom of the City was conferred, Oct. 6, on Mr. R. D. Darbishire, who bears an honoured name in our midst. What Mr. Darbishire has done for our churches and colleges can never be measured up. He has been the trusted adviser of nearly all the churches in this district in turn. His legal knowledge and clear insight have always been at the disposal of any of our trustees or committees who were in difficulties and who wanted guidance. For many years, too, he was the leading spirit of our Domestic Mission, and to whatever he allied himself he was a generous and whole-hearted supporter. The late Sir Joseph Whitworth appointed him a co-trustee along with the late Lady Whitworth and Chancellor Christie, to administer for charitable purposes a very large estate. In fact, Mr. Darbishire himself told us the other day that as much as £1,250,000 had passed through their hands during the last ten years, and that they were personally responsible for the allocation of £960,000 of that sum. We Manchester people have good reason for knowing how wise has been their administration, and how conscientiously they have spent every penny of it; and although public honours are poor payment, we have shown our appreciation by conferring upon both the surviving trustees the Freedom of the City. The city honours itself by prompt recognition of this sort.

Friday, Oct. 6, was a red-letter day with us. The Freedom of the City was conferred upon a third person—namely, Mrs. Rylands, the widow of the late John Rylands, who also left an enormous fortune at his decease. Mrs. Rylands has sought to perpetuate the memory of her husband, and at the same time to confer an immeasurable benefit upon this city by erecting what is said to be one of the "most distinguished and the most perfect architectural achievements of this century." It is called "The John Rylands Library," and it has been handed over to the city in trust, replete with the finest private collection of books in the world. It includes the renowned Althorpe Library, and, in addition, many thousands of books got together for the purpose by Mrs. Rylands herself. Particularly rich is it in biblical and theological literature. This was formally opened and dedicated the same day, Friday; the inaugural address being delivered by Dr. Fairbairn. It was a magnificent address, worthy of such an occasion.

Ere this letter is printed a concert will have been held in the Memorial Hall, for the benefit of the funds of the Domestic Mission. It has been kindly offered, gratuitously, by Mr. C. Rawdon Briggs and friends, and it is to be hoped that the proceeds will materially help up the income of the Society for the present year. There seem to be periods in the lives of most philanthropic institutions when their finances are at a low ebb, and the treasurers wonder whether really prosperous times will ever come again. The Manchester Domestic Mission is just now passing through such a period, and yet if all the members of our district churches knew as well as the Committee what splendid and much-needed work is being done, they would surely be proud of contributing to its maintenance. It requires additional annual subscriptions up to about £100 before all anxiety, to its future will vanish. It is undoubtedly a piece of practical Christian work which can legitimately demand the support, not only of men and women living in Manchester and its immediate suburbs, but also of those who live further away in country villas and who make their money in Manchester. An anonymous friend has generously promised a donation of £200 at the end of the year for the purpose of clearing off accumulated deficits, on condition that the income for the current year covers the expenditure. Friends of the institution will surely not allow this opportunity to slip, for it will be encouraging work to extend the subscription list when it is known that the additional income will not be swallowed up by an old deficit.

The Unitarian Home Missionary College has commenced its winter session with fourteen students, of whom ten are taking lectures at Owens College, and the remaining four are taking a theological course at the Memorial Hall. The Rev. J. E. Manning's opening address on "Jerome and the Vulgate" was able and interesting, and the attendance was fairly good. The character of the College is maintained, and its students have been successful in passing the examinations in connection with the London and Victoria Universities.

The church buildings, both at Urmston and Bradford, are nearing completion, though a long delay has occurred at the former place owing to the plasterers' strike and the usual difficulty in obtaining terracotta dressings, &c. However, it will not be very long now before the Urmston church is formally opened, and then it will be possible to accomplish the work which we believe is waiting to be done there. Mr. Davison is temporarily in charge, looking after the visiting and the Sunday-school, and, although he has not been there more than a month or two, his influence is having a most beneficial effect. Heaton Moor has launched its building scheme at last. It has commended itself in general principle to the governing body of the Association. It is not over-ambitious, but is a design which provides the possibility of future extension. A plot of ground is decided upon, and negotiations for its purchase are proceeding. Aprpos of building, it may interest your readers in other parts of the country to compare notes. At my own church at Moss-side we raised a building fund of £6,000 in three months (including £1,000 from one member), and thought we could at once commence operations. This was at the beginning of the year, and we have not turned the sod yet. We aimed at getting a church for £4,000, excluding organ (the ground is already ours), and we instructed our architect accordingly; but when the builders' tenders were opened, the lowest was £6,250, and we were informed that the difference was mainly due to the increased prices in materials and wages. Of course, we had to put on our considering caps and discover a way of reducing the cost without seriously affecting the character and capacity of the building. These preliminaries are not even yet completed; but we hope to be in a position to commence operations in another week or two.

CHARLES ROPER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

A LARGER HYMN-BOOK.

SIR,—Permit me to suggest that an enlarged "Essex Hall Hymn-book" would be a good thing with which to begin the new century. There are scores of beautiful and original hymns quite suited to our worship, and they certainly ought to be in our collection—e.g., "Our Father! while our hearts unlearn," &c. (O. W. Holmes), "Give to the winds thy fears," "The King of Love my Shepherd is," "Now with Creation's morning song," &c. not to mention many by Dr. M. J. Savage, and other Americans in our household of faith.

I may add that I have collected a goodly number of these poetic aids to devotion. If the above idea could be realised, such an enlarged edition might then come into more general use in our churches.

E. RATTENBURY HODGES.

Newark-on-Trent, Oct. 7.

SUMMER EXCURSIONS, CENTRAL POSTAL MISSION.

SIR,—May I through your columns inform your readers it is proposed to hold a Soirée at Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, on Friday evening, Nov. 3, to bring together again all those who had such a happy meeting at Grindelwald and all who have joined previous "Pink parties."

Mr. Shrubsole will kindly give a selection of the best photographs taken in Switzerland, in lantern slides, with some account of the scenery and the doings of the parties. Full particulars will be announced by advertisement in THE INQUIRER.

Perhaps I may be allowed here to say that I regret I cannot answer individually the number of kind and appreciative letters I have received from the Grindelwald excursionists, but I am rejoiced to learn that they have returned to their homes in improved health and spirits, that such happy friendships have been formed, and that such pleasant memories will abide to cheer the coming winter.

M. LUCY TAGART.

President of the Central Postal Mission.
Oct. 11.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Ainsworth.—The members of the reading circle in connection with the Unitarian Sunday-school gave a party and dance on Saturday last, which was well-attended, and a very pleasant evening spent. During the evening Mr. James Mason gave a recitation.

Ballyhemlin.—At the harvest thanksgiving service held last Sunday afternoon, the church was crowded with a congregation representing every denomination of the district, including Roman Catholics. The Rev. R. Maxwell King, of Newtownards, presided at the organ, supported by a large choir, and the service was rendered in a very harmonious and pleasing manner. The Rev. Charles Thrift preached on "The Necessity for Labour." A tasteful arrangement of flowers, fruit and corn, symbolising the autumn season, suggested very beautifully the bountiful gifts of God.

Belfast: York-street.—The third annual harvest thanksgiving services were held on Sunday, Oct. 8, when large assemblies of members and friends were present. The interior of the church presented even a more attractive appearance than that of preceding years. The services were conducted respectively by the Revs. Alex. Ashworth, minister of the church, Douglas Walsley, B.A., and Dr. S. H. Mellone, and were warmly appreciated. The music was greatly strengthened at the afternoon service by the kind help of the choir and organist of the First Church.

Bradford.—The Chapel-lane Bazaar, to be opened by Mr. Charles W. Jones, J.P., President of the B. and F.U.A., on Thursday afternoon, aims at raising over £500, in liquidation of the debt on the new school, the renovation of the chapel and other objects.

Clifton.—The Rev. James Black, M.A., of London, was the preacher on Oct. 1, when harvest services were held, the church being very tastefully decorated for the occasion. On Oct. 5 the Literary and Social Union opened its session with a successful and well-attended "at home" at the Whatley Hall. A Junior Working Party has been formed by Mrs. Warchauer, a sale of work is in contemplation, and the services will shortly be brightened by the introduction of the Berwick Hymnal (edited by the Rev. Charles Hargrove, M.A.).

Devonport.—The Rev. Edward Sharp, until recently a curate in the Church of England, has accepted an invitation to the Christ Church pulpit. On Sunday, Oct. 8, the harvest festival services took place, and were conducted morning and evening by Mr. Sharp. The church was beautifully decorated, and special anthems were sung. The evening congregation numbered nearly 300.

Glasgow: South St. Mungo-street.—The annual harvest thanksgiving services were held last Sunday, conducted by the Rev. E. T. Russell. Special music was rendered by an augmented choir. The fruit and flowers were distributed on Tuesday to the members of the Young People's Guild. The Literary Society opened for the new session on Thursday week, with a social meeting. Mr. W. G. McLeod presided over a large gathering, and an interesting programme of music and readings was rendered. Among the lecturers announced for the session are the Revs. J. Bell, of Whitehead Congregational Church, Dr. Hunter, of Trinity Church, and J. M. Connell, of All Souls' Church.

Horsham.—Harvest thanksgiving services were held in the Free Christian Church last Sunday, the Rev. J. J. Marten being the preacher. The collections were for the Sunday-school. After each service the national memorial on the subject of the Transvaal was extensively signed. In connection with the Museum Society a very pleasant evening was spent on the following Thursday, when a conversation was held in the schoolroom. Refreshments were provided by ladies interested in the institution, and at intervals practical demonstrations of photography, wood engraving, the wonders of insect life, microscopic and other matters of interest, were in the hands of adepts, whose explanations were listened to with much interest.

London: Forest Gate.—On Thursday, Oct. 5, in connection with the eleventh anniversary of the church, and the first anniversary of the Rev. H. Woods Perris, a tea and public meeting were held, Mr. A. Tifford being in the chair. Letters of regret for non-attendance were read from Dr. Blake Odgers, the Revs. W. C. Bowie and W. G. Tarrant, and Messrs. S. S. Tayler and David Martineau. The secretary, Mr. Bull, gave a short account of the work of the church, and stated that there had been an increase both in attendance and in membership, with a decidedly hopeful outlook. Encouraging addresses were given by the Rev. T. E. M. Edwards and Mr. H. Epps, and the congratulations of the church members and congregation were expressed in a felicitous address by Mr. Jose, who was followed by Mr. Thomson. Mr. Perris, having expressed his acknowledgment, proceeded to sketch in outline the work he intended to undertake in the coming months. After the usual votes of thanks, the meeting closed with a short prayer by Mr. Perris.

London: Stratford.—Harvest thanksgiving services were held here on Sunday last, conducted in the morning and afternoon by Mr. T. Elliot, and in the evening by Mr. L. Tavener. The church was tastefully decorated, and the congregations were good, especially in the evening, when there were 100 present. Special hymns were sung, the music to one being arranged by the organist, Mr. W. J. Noel, and an anthem was well rendered by the choir.

Longton.—Harvest services were held here last Sunday, when the Rev. W. F. Turland preached to good congregations. The chapel, under the guidance of Miss Farmer, was beautifully decorated. On Monday a social tea and meeting were held, when earnest, hopeful addresses were given by the Revs. J. Howard, W. Turland, Mr. Hawley, and others. The outlook for the future is good.

Manchester: Upper Brook street.—Harvest festival services were held last Sunday week. Mr. John Trevor preached in the morning and the Rev. J. C. Odgers in the evening. It is interesting to notice that on the previous Sunday our minister, the Rev. Charles Peach, preached one of the harvest sermons by invitation at an orthodox Congregational chapel—namely, the Octagon Chapel, Stockport-road. Last Sunday a party of thirty "fisher wives and girls" from Newhaven attended at the morning service. They had been taking part in the Lifeboat procession on the previous day. They were the guests of our churchwarden, Mr. W. B. Pritchard, J.P., and as they announced themselves as "Free Kirk" he brought them with him to his own place of worship—the Free Church. On Monday evening next we resume our popular lectures, when the season will be opened by Mr. W. H. Shrubsole, who will lecture on "America's Wonderland: the Great Yellowstone Park."

Nantwich.—Successful harvest thanksgiving services were held last Sunday, the preacher being the Rev. J. Morley Mills, minister of the chapel. The collections were in aid of the trust fund. On the previous Sunday evening Mr. Mills had preached on the Transvaal crisis, and had uttered a strong protest against the resort to war.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—On Monday, Oct. 9, 1899, at a well-attended meeting of the Ladies' Sewing Society, of the Church of the Divine Unity, a presentation was made to Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. Coysh, in recognition of Mr. Coysh's untiring services as assistant-secretary. Mr. Robert Affleck, J.P., presided, and the presentation was gracefully made by Mrs. John Tweedy. The testimonial took the form of a bookcase, and a silver tea service for Mrs. Coysh, and had been subscribed for by members of the congregation. Among those who were present was the Rev. James C. Street, a former minister of the church.

South Shields.—Harvest thanksgiving services were held here on Sunday last, the church being tastefully decorated for the occasion. Large congregations attended both the morning and evening services, and the excellent discourses of our old friend the Rev. W. H. Lambelle, of Middlesborough, were much appreciated. On Monday evening a very successful fruit banquet and musical evening took place in the schoolroom.

South Wales Unitarian Society.—The

autumnal quarterly meetings of the above Society were held at Cribin on Wednesday and Thursday, Oct. 4 and 5, under very favourable circumstances. The service on Wednesday evening was commenced by the Rev. T. J. Jenkins, Gellionen, and two able and powerful sermons were delivered by the Revs. T. A. Thomas, Llandyssul, and E. G. Evans, of Manchester College, Oxford. On Thursday morning at 9, the business meeting of the Association was held, but no very important business was transacted. At 10, the first service of the day began. The Rev. W. James, B.A., J.P., Llandyssul, who was to have preached the Association sermon, was prevented by illness from attending, and so his place was taken by the Rev. R. J. Jones, M.A., Aberdare. The other sermon of the morning was preached by the Rev. Jeekyn Thomas, Pendleton, who was gladly welcomed, as this was his first appearance among us since his removal to Manchester. The preachers of the afternoon were the Revs. T. J. Jenkins, Gellionen, and J. H. Davies, Cefncoed, who gave us two of the best sermons of the series, one theoretical and the other practical. At the evening service at six, the Rev. R. C. Jones, Lampeter, introduced, the two discourses being delivered by the Revs. J. E. Jenkins, Dowlais, and John Davies, Altyplaca. These were a very fitting conclusion to a long and very successful series of meetings, which, let us hope, will do much to quicken spiritual and moral life in the district. The chapel was crowded throughout by an earnest and attentive audience, and the collections were good.

Stockport.—The annual school sermons were preached on Sunday, Oct. 8, morning and evening, by the Rev. H. S. Tayler, M.A., of Dukinfield. There was a large attendance at the evening service. The claims of the Sunday-school were forcibly urged upon the attention of the congregation, the preacher contending that teachers have not always accorded to them the kind sympathy which congregations ought to give. Though we still have to look for workers chiefly from men and women of the humblest walks of life, we, nevertheless, secure a degree of simple-minded earnestness which the pulpit itself can rarely exceed. The work of the Sunday-school still remains to be carried on, and we are bound to bring our best gifts to the cradle of the race.—On Thursday week, Mr. John Harwood, of Manchester, delivered, in the Sunday-school, his interesting lecture, entitled, "The Art of Public Recitation: A Leaf from my own Experience." The Mayor of Stockport presided. Mr. Harwood described how he became a public reciter. He gave some hints on the selection of pieces and their arrangement, described the mode of study and rehearsals, the peculiar qualifications necessary, two of which were a nervous temperament and sympathy even to "softness," and after dwelling upon the advantages of instruction and the suitability of rooms, pointed out the peculiarities and humours of different audiences. In the second part of his programme, the lecturer gave a recital of five pieces of a humorous and pathetic success, which were rendered with much description. Mr. Harwood's lecture may be commended to other churches. Votes of thanks closed the proceedings. There was a large audience, the proceeds (about £10) being in aid of the School Auxiliary Fund.

Sunderland.—On Wednesday evening, Oct. 4, a successful conversation was held in the Bridge-street Chapel, Mr. J. G. Stirling in the chair. The musical portion of the programme, which was much enjoyed, was under the superintendence of Mr. R. L. Smith, late of Liverpool, the newly-appointed choir-master. The proceeds went towards forming a choir fund.

BIRTHS.

RYMER.—At 150, Coningham-road, London, W., on Saturday, the 10th Oct., the wife of Harold R. Rymer, of a son (Francis Holmes Rymer).

MARRIAGES.

ELLIS.—ROWLAND.—On the 3rd Oct., at Lewisham, by the Rev. Chynoweth Pope, Leon Ellis, of Guernsey, youngest son of the late Cyrus Ellis, of Hambledon, to Kathleen, youngest daughter of the late Robert Rowland, of Horsham.

DEATHS.

HICKS.—On the 9th Oct., at 2, Acre Grove, Southport, Joseph E. Hicks, in his 58th year.
LANG.—At 162, London-road, Bridgeton, Glasgow, on the 6th Oct., aged 75 years, John Lang, Sen. Friends please accept this the only intimation.
WHITEMAN.—On the 9th Oct., at 3, Sybil-road, Liverpool, Francis William, infant son of the Rev. J. Morgan Whiteman. Cremated at Anfield, Oct. 11th.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, October 15.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Bermondsey, Fort-road, Upper Grange-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. HAROLD RYLETT.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M. Chapel Anniversary and Carter-lane Old Scholars' Services. Solo, in the evening, "Angels ever bright and fair" (Theodora), Miss Clara Brooker.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS.
Deptford, Alliance Hall, Albury-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. MARCHANT. No Morning Service.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. WOODS PERRIS.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.
Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. BROOKE HERFORD, D.D. Collections for the Blackfriars Mission.
Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. EDWARD SHARP.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. DAWES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D.
Kentish Town Free Christian Church, Clarence-road, 11 A.M., Rev. A. FARQUHARSON, "The Worship of God," and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. MUMMEY, "A Certainty in Religion."
Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. STRONGE.
Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. C. POPE.
Little Portland-street Chapel, near Oxford-circus, 11 A.M., Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D., and 7 P.M., Rev. H. RAWLINGS, M.A.
Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. CADMAN.
Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. CARTER.
Plumstead, Common road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.
Richmond, Free Church, Omond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., and 3 P.M., Service for Children Rev. S. FARRINGTON.
Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Mr. LUCKING TAVENER.
Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.
Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Mr. S. FIELD.
Wanlsowth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M., Rev. Dr. MUMMEY, and 7 P.M., Rev. A. FARQUHARSON.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. F. W. STANLEY.
BEDFORD, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. ROWLAND HILL.
BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
BLACKPOOL, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. BINNS.
BLACKPOOL, Unitarian Lay Church, Masonic Hall, Waterloo-road, South Shore, 6.30 P.M.
BOOTLE, Free Church, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. MORLEY MILLS.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. COE.
BRIGHTON, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road, North-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. A. HOOD.
BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. GEORGE STREET.
CANTERBURY, Blackfriars, 11 A.M.
DEAL and WALMER Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. SHAKESPEARE.
DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. BURROWS.
EASTBOURNE, Lismore-road, Terminus-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. ST. CLAIR.
GUILDFORD, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Mr. E. S. LANG BUCKLAND.
HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. MARTEN.
LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. F. H. JONES, B.A.
LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M., Rev. A. COBDEN SMITH, and 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. J. JUPP.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton Park, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. KLEIN. Evening, "The Search after Knowledge by the Weak and Infirm."

MANCHESTER, Sale 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. FORREST.

MANCHESTER, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

MARGATE, Forester's Hall (Side Entrance), Union-crescent, 11 A.M., Mr. EDWARD C. SAPHIN.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. Dr. DRUMMOND.

PORTSMOUTH, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. THOMAS BOND.

PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. COSENS PRIOR.

RAMSGATE, Assembly Rooms, High-street, 6.30 P.M., Mr. EDWARD C. SAPHIN.

READING, Unitarian Free Church, London-road, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, B.A.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.

SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. WELLBELOVED.

TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant Unitarian Church, Hout-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY,
STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN-SQUARE,
S.W.—Oct. 15th, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON
SULLIVAN, "The Three Stages of Western Religion: 3. The Ethical, the Universal Religion of the Future."

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. W.
STODDART, B.A., is at LIBERTY to take occasional Sunday duty.—30, West Bank, Stamford-
hill, London, N.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D.
DAVIS, Fairfield High School, Liverpool.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE,
E.C.
Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21,
Mincing-lane, E.C.

Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A.,
7, Pall Mall, S.W.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.
Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.

STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, 151, Brixton-road, S.W.,
and Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent.,
withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made,
Monthly repayment, including principal, premium,
and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years,
13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.;
10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

"THE INQUIRER" CALENDAR.

SUNDAY SERVICES are advertised at a charge of 10s. per year, prepaid, a space of two lines being given to each announcement; extra lines are charged 4d. each. Orders can be sent for a portion of the year, not less than thirteen weeks, at the same rate. Calendar Notices not prepaid £1 the year. Single Announcements 6d. per line. All information as to the change of preachers should reach the Office not later than Thursday.

Essex Hall, Strand, W.C.

Schools, etc.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

The College adheres to its original principle of freely imparting Theological knowledge without insisting on the adoption of particular Theological doctrines.

SESSION 1899-1900.

The Rev. W. E. ADDIS, M.A., will deliver the OPENING ADDRESS on MONDAY, October 16, at 5 P.M.

H. ENFIELD DOWSON, } Secs.
A. H. WORTHINGTON, }

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, SOUTH MARINE TERRACE, ABERYSTWTH.

PRINCIPAL ... MRS. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public
Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium.
Swedish drill.

HINDHEAD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

PRINCIPALS—Miss J. F. GRUNER (Certif. Student of Girton College), Moorcroft, Hindhead,
Surrey.

Miss MACRAE MOIR (Cambridge Higher
Local), Lingholt, Hindhead, Surrey.

The aim of the School is to combine the advantages of a good Boarding School with a thorough Education and healthy outdoor life. Girls may be prepared for College-entrance and other examinations.

The district of Hindhead is one of the healthiest parts of England, and much recommended by doctors for its bracing air and gravel soil.

Miss MOIR receives ten boarders in a thoroughly
well-built modern house, with southern aspect.
Great attention is paid to healthful conditions of life. References allowed to parents of present and past pupils.

Terms for Board and Education on application to the Principals.

THE WARREN, KNUITSFORD.

PRINCIPAL:

MRS. W. CARRINGTON WHITELEGGE.

Excellent individual TUITION and Home Care for the daughters of cultivated parents who would appreciate unusual advantages for Music and Languages.

NEXT TERM begins September 26th.

FREDK. LONG & SON, AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS 4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

ITALIAN LAKES, ITALY.—Three more Members required to complete Select Party leaving London on October 19th.—Mme.
ALBITES, 76, Beauford-road, Birmingham.

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms
moderate.—Mrs. ROBERT TURNER, 94, Grosvenor-road, S.W.

BOARD and RESIDENCE, South of England. Healthy neighbourhood. Home comforts. Seven miles from Brighton, near South
Downs. Station Hassocks (on main line L.B.S.C.).—
Miss ROWLAND, Gothic House, Hurstpierpoint.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West
Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT.
Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table.
Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade.
Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable
private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea;
sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address,
Miss CHALDECOTT, Stirling House, Manor-road.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59,
Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and
RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated.
Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

Proprietor,

FREDERIC SMITH.

This first-class Hotel, conducted on strictly Temperance principles, is commended by the Rev. C. Aked, Liverpool; Rev. Rowland Hill, Bedford; Rev. G. Vance
Smith, D.D., Bowden, Cheshire; Rev. J. C. Street, Birmingham; Rev. Charles A. Berry, D.D., Wolver-hampton; Rev. Charles Garrett, Liverpool; Rev. Canon Howell, Wrexham; Rev. A. B. Grosart, LL.D., Blackburn; Dr. Norman Kerr, London, &c. Central, Quiet, Exceptionally Clean, Moderate in Charges. Spacious Coffee Rooms, Visitors' Drawing Rooms, Baths, &c.
Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d. to 2s. Rooms, 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d.
Service, 9d. Printed Tariff on Application.

75, 77, 79, 97, 99, 101, 103, 105,

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, RUSSELL SQ., LONDON.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK

SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

TWO AND A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST
allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS of minimum monthly balance, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift, the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows Interest
Monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY,
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR
TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANAC, Post free on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

IT IS NOT

Reckitt's

PARIS Blue

UNLESS RECKITT'S NAME IS ON THE WRAPPER.

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

The Annual Autumn Meeting and Soiree

will be held at

ESSEX HALL,

On TUESDAY, 24th OCTOBER, 1899.

The President, Sir JOHN T. BRUNNER, Bart., M.P., in the Chair.

An Address will be given on "The Position and Prospects of Unitarianism at the close of the Century," by C. W. JONES, Esq., President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. The Rev. Brooke Herford, D.D., H. Epps, Esq., Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A., David Martineau, and other well-known ministers and laymen have promised to be present.

Tea and reception at 7. Chair will be taken at 8.

Tickets may be had at Essex Hall, or on application to the Hon. Secretaries, Mr. G. HAROLD CLENNELL, 87, Downs-road, Clapton, or the Rev. J. E. STRONGE, 13, Ulysses-road, Kilburn.

HOPE-STREET CHURCH,
LIVERPOOL.

OPENED 18TH OCTOBER, 1849.

The NEW CHURCH HALL, the JUBILEE GIFT of W. B. BOWRING, Esq., J.P., will be opened on WEDNESDAY, 18TH OCTOBER, at 4.30 P.M.

A Service in celebration of the 50th Anniversary of the Opening of the Church will be held on Wednesday, 18th October, at 8 P.M.

The Devotional Part will be conducted by the Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., and the Sermon preached by the Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., of Leeds.

A Collection will be taken for the Jubilee Fund.

On Thursday, 19th October, a Soirée will be held in St. George's Hall, at 7.30 P.M.

Admission by invitation card only, to be obtained from Mr. A. COOPER, 11, Gambier-terrace, Liverpool.

SALE UNITARIAN CHAPEL.

RE-BUILDING FUND.

The Committee of the Sale Unitarian Chapel desire to thank most heartily the many friends who have helped them to complete the Restoration of their Place of Worship by contributing to the above Fund. They regret, however, that they require to ask further help. The cost of re-building has considerably exceeded the original estimates, the amount spent being £2,924 10s. 7d. Towards that sum £2,665 8s. 1d. have been received, including £1,750 from the Insurance Company. Thus £915 have been subscribed by the congregation and friends. But £260 are still required, and the committee venture to make a final appeal to Unitarian friends to assist them to clear off the adverse balance. An interim balance sheet has been prepared, and copies will be sent to all subscribers. The long delay in its preparation has been caused through difficulties with the contractors, and this indeed has regrettably hindered the progress of the Fund. The Committee trust, however, that this unavoidable delay will not affect the response which they hope will be made to their appeal for final help.

Subscriptions will be gratefully received and acknowledged by—

ALEX. LAWSON, J.P., Chairman,
The Grange, Ashton-on-Mersey;
JOHN SHAW, J.P., Hon. Secretary,
Fern Lea, Ashton-on-Mersey;
JOHN BARNES, Hon. Treasurer,
Sylvan House, Sale; or,
Rev. JAMES FORREST, M.A.,
Rookfield-avenue, Sale.

LADY would be glad of a post as HOUSEKEEPER, or the care of an Invalid;
very domesticated, and a good needlewoman.—
W., 63, Belsize-road, N.W., London. No agents.

AN experienced GOVERNESS desires re-engagement (daily) after Christmas.
Neighbourhood of Edgbaston preferred.—Address,
A. B., INQUIRER Office.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

New Book by Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

OUR FAITH:

The Temples and Churches of many Lands—Our Church—The World's Greatest Teachers—
Jesus of Nazareth—The World's Sacred Books—Our Aims and Hopes.

"This little book is meant for young people and others who have had hitherto no time or opportunity for a careful study, as distinct from the practice, of religion. It seeks to present OUR FAITH in its clearest and most definite form; and at the same time, to indicate its relation to the general religious life of mankind. It is not, however, wholly or even chiefly concerned with matters of history, still less with dogmatic theology. The writer has tried to lead the mind to earnest self-examination and original thought, and with this view has ventured here and there to use words of direct appeal to the reader; but this is not done in any magisterial spirit, for both writer and reader are scholars in the great School of Life, where he is the happiest who helps another most."—Preface.

Cloth, 1s. net. Postage, 2d.

London: SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
Essex Hall, Essex St., Strand, W.C.

Manchester: H. Rawson & Co., 16, New Brown Street.

Liverpool: The Booksellers' Co., 70, Lord Street.

CHAPEL LANE CHAPEL,
BRADFORD.

A GRAND BAZAAR will be held in the CHANNING HALL, adjoining the Chapel, on OCTOBER 19th, 20th, and 21st, 1899, to raise £500 for the clearing off of the Debt on the New Schools, the purchase of a new Heating Apparatus, the Renovation of the Chapel, and other purposes.

The total cost of the scheme will be at least £2,000, towards which nearly £1,500 has already been raised.

The Bazaar will be opened on the three days respectively by Mr. CHARLES W. JONES, J.P., President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association; the Right Hon. Lady O'HAGAN, and Sir JAMES KITSON, Bart., M.P.

Donations of Goods and Money will be gratefully received and acknowledged by the—

Rev. E. CEREDIG JONES, 18, Blenheim-road,
Bradford (Minister);
Mr. BYRON BOOTHROYD, 37, Mannville-terrace,
Bradford (Treasurer);
Miss HUDSON, 7, Blenheim-road, Bradford, and
Mr. GATHORNE HARGREAVES, 24, Spring
Cliffe, Bradford (Secretaries).

The following contributions have been received:

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	71	10	6
Mrs. Rainbach	1	0	0
Mrs. Bradshaw	0	10	0
Mr. H. Dyson	0	5	0
Miss Davies	0	5	0
Mr. Evans	0	2	6
Rev. S. Jenkinson	0	5	0
Rev. L. Williams	0	10	0
Mrs. Eadon	5	0	0

FRAMLINGHAM AND BEDFIELD.

ANNIVERSARY SERVICES and MEETINGS,
Sunday, Oct. 29th; Monday, Oct. 30th, and Tuesday, Oct. 31st.

WANTED, English GOVERNESS for two girls, aged seven and half and six.
Thorough English French (conversational), music.
Salary, £40 to £45.—Write, full particulars, to Mrs LEON, Hillsdon, Sidmouth, Devon.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Fcap. 8vo, 108 pp., cloth, 1s. net.

THE RELIGION OF TIME and the RELIGION
OF ETERNITY. A Study of Certain Relations between Mediæval and Modern Thought. By PHILIP H. WICKSTEED, M.A.

SUMMARY OF CONTENTS:—Manifold signs of renewed interest in the later Middle Ages. We are awakening from the misconceptions inherited from the polemics of the Renaissance and the Reformation, realising that the breach between mediæval and modern times was not so absolute as we supposed, and recognising in the weakness of the Middle Ages dangers not yet vanquished, in their strength sources of life not yet exhausted, and in both an unsuspected kinship with the forces that move our own lives. Hence the interest and the importance of a sympathetic study of the Middle Ages. The group of religious ideas selected for study gathers round the conceptions of Eternity, Fruition, the vision of God.

Fcap. 8vo, 100 pp., cloth, 1s. net.

BACK TO JESUS. An Appeal to Evangelical
Christians. By RICHARD A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., Author of "God and the Soul," "Faith and Doubt in the Century's Poets," &c.

CONTENTS:—1. The Movement "Back to Jesus." 2. To what Jesus? 3. It must be the Jesus before the Gospels. 4. This was a Highly Spiritual Jesus. 5. The Fatherhood and the Brotherhood were his Cardinal Teachings. 6. We must then Survey those Texts which Teach the Fatherhood. 7. What Jesus Meant by the Fatherhood. 8. Why the Fourth Gospel is Omitted from our Analysis. 9. The Fatherhood in Matthew. 10. Prominence of the Fatherhood in Luke. 11. The Fatherhood in Mark. 12. The Fatherhood in John. 13. The Fatherhood in the Three Gospels. 14. Predominance of the Fatherhood. 15. What are the Conditions of Acceptance with the Father. 16. Full Meaning of the Fatherhood. 17. The Personality of Jesus. 18. What then is our Position? 19. Do we Want more than the Fatherhood? 20. Results of Failure to Grasp the Fatherhood. 21. Absence of Certain Doctrines from the Teaching of Jesus. 22. What has Given these Doctrines their Hold? 23. Are these Doctrines Essential? 24. The Religion of the Fatherhood is Essential Christianity. 25. Those who Hold it should not be Spiritually Divided. 26. This is True Loyalty to Jesus. 27. And so we Rest in the Ultimate Christianity.

273 pp., 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.

THE GREAT AFFIRMATIONS OF RELIGION.

An Introduction to Real Religion, not for Beginners, but for Beginners Again. By THOMAS
R. SLICHER.

CONTENTS:—1. The Nature and Uses of Religion. 2. The Natural Uses of Religion. 3. The Affirmation of God—I. 4. The Affirmation of God—II. 5. The Affirmation Concerning Man. 6. The Affirmation of the Dignity of Human Nature. 7. The Affirmation of God and Man: Personal Religion. 8. The Affirmation Concerning Prayer. 9. The Affirmation Concerning Jesus Christ—I. 10. The Affirmation Concerning Jesus Christ—II. 11. The Affirmation Concerning the Church. 12. The True Imitation of Christ. 13. The Perpetual Incarnation. 14. The Growth of a Soul. 15. Grace and Truth. 16. The Eternal Life.

London: PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

THE ETHICAL WORLD.

EDITED BY DR. STANTON COIT and
J. A. HOBSON, M.A.

Articles on Important Social Questions, Education
&c. from a purely ethical standpoint
Children's Page.

TWO PENCE WEEKLY.

Office: 17, Johnson's-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

The Benscliff Ballads, & other Poems.

By F. T. MOTT, F.R.G.S.,
Author of "Corona," "King Edda's Parables," &c.

GAY and BIRD, Bedford-street, London.

HOME FOR HEALTH CULTURE,
THE FIRS, BROMYARD, HEREFORDSHIRE.

This Home provides a course of Systematic Daily Exercise, combined with regular outdoor life and occupation, for Ladies and Children who are not in normal health. The exercises are given in a Gymnasium fitted with Swedish apparatus, and consist of Ling's Swedish Movements. Special treatment is given for Spinal Curvature, Anæmia, Hysteria, Indigestion, Neuralgia, &c.

For further particulars, apply to The Principal
Miss JESSIE BAKER (trained by Mms. Bergmon, Österberg).

DRAWING, Painting, Design, Perspective, Geometry, &c. Schools and private houses. Lady. Certificated. Art Master (Kensington).—Apply, A. E. R., Mr. E. D. Davies, 50, High-street, Sydenham.

BUILDING FUND.

Chorlton-cum-Hardy Unitarian Church.

Established for the Worship of God and the Furtherance of Practical Religion.

There is no Doctrinal Test for Membership.

This Church is a member of the Manchester District Association of Churches, and is one of the four Forward Movement Churches.

The population of Chorlton in 1880 was about 600, and now contains over 1,800 houses with an estimated population of 9,000, ever increasing. Worship is at present held in an upper room, used for entertainments during the week, and having an insignificant entrance and narrow stair and furnished unsuitably for a church. There is a settled minister, and a membership of over 70.

A site having been secured, the congregation is endeavouring to build a church and school, but all funds available, including the grant from the Grand Bazaar, are inadequate, the lowest builder's tender proving much higher than expected. If a building suitable to the district is to be erected, over £600 more are immediately needed.

Efforts are, therefore, being made to secure 600 donations of £1 each (or more); and the generous help of all well-wishers of liberal religion is earnestly solicited. A Bazaar is also to be held on Oct. 27 and 28 in aid of the Building Fund, the particulars of which will be announced next week.

In addition to the value of goods and money contributed to the Grand Bazaar amounting to £592 8s. 10d., this small congregation has contributed the further sum of £242 14s. 11d., making in all £835 3s. 9d.

The following is the present financial position :—

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
Congregational Building Fund	242	14	11	Jordan, E., Stretford	1	0	0	Troup, J., London	1	0	0
A Friend, Liverpool	0	10	0	Knott, Thos., Crumpsall	1	0	0	Turner, H., Chadswell, near Clitheroe	1	0	0
A Friend, Manchester	5	5	0	Knowles, Mrs., Sale	2	2	0	Taylor, Mary, Bolton	5	0	0
A Friend	5	0	0	Kerfoot, Jno. O., Dukinfield	1	0	0	Thomas, G., Manchester	1	1	0
A Friend, Manchester	0	10	6	Klein, Rev. Dr. de Beaumont, Liverpool	1	0	0	Thornley, Wm.	3	0	0
A Friend, Clifton	0	10	0	Lawrence, Miss, London	5	0	0	Thomas, H., Bristol	1	1	0
Allen, J. E. T., Mubberley	1	1	0	Lawson, Mrs., Manchester	2	0	0	Thompson, H., Woolcott, Cardiff	1	0	0
Anon.	0	5	0	Laycock, Jas., Scarborough	2	0	0	Upton, C. B., Oxford	1	0	0
Anon., Leeds	0	5	6	Leigh, Miss Lydia, Swinton	10	0	0	Vallance, A. C., Mansfield	0	10	6
Affleck, R., Gateshead	1	0	0	Leigh, G. H., Swinton	10	0	0	Wade, R., Manchester	2	0	0
Blackley, Dr., Southport	2	2	0	Leigh, Percy H., Worsley	10	0	0	"Willcebe"	1	0	0
Bowring, T. B., Liverpool	5	0	0	Linnell, W., Stretford	5	0	0	Winder, T. H., Bolton	1	1	0
Brierley, James, Southport	1	0	0	Little, D. A., Bowdon	1	1	0	Wright, R. W., East Croydon	0	10	0
Broome, J., Manchester	10	0	0	Lawson, R. G., Manchester	1	1	0	Woolley, H., Manchester	1	1	0
Bruuner, Sir J., M.P., Wavertree	1	0	0	"M," per R. C. Law	5	0	0	Withnall, F.	2	0	0
Bylton, J., Higher Crumpsall	1	1	0	Martineau, Miss, London	2	2	0	White, J. H., Mansfield	1	0	0
Briggs, A. Currer, Leeds	1	0	0	Martineau, Dr., London	5	5	0	Ward, T. F., Middlesborough	0	10	0
Cooper, P. B. S., Bowdon	1	0	0	Megson, A. H., Sale	2	2	0	Whitehead, J. B., Manchester	0	10	0
Cooper, J., Manchester	0	5	0	Morton, H. J., Scarborough	1	1	0
Crook, Mrs., Swinton	0	10	0	Mumford, Dr. A. A., Chorlton-cum-Hardy	1	1	0
Chitty, G. W., Dover	1	0	0	Monks, F., Warrington	1	1	0
Cook, G. T., Manchester	5	0	0	Marsland, H., Stockport	1	0	0
Dougill, R., Manchester	0	10	0	Montgomery, Rev. J. K., Chester	1	0	0
Dowson, Rev. H. E., Gee Cross	1	1	0	Moore, Rev. John, Hindley	1	0	0
Elce, James, Barnsley	0	10	0	Nettlefold, F., London	10	0	0
Elce, Geo., Accrington	1	0	0	Nanson, W. E., Eccles	2	2	0
Elliott, Admiral Sir G., London	1	1	0	Nettlefold, Mrs., Birmingham	5	0	0
Every, J. H., Lewes	0	5	0	Nettlefold, O., Hyde Park	1	1	0
Every, Jno., Lewes	1	1	0	Oggers, Dr. Blake, London	1	0	0
F. W. B.	1	1	0	Oggers, Rev. J. C., Bury	1	0	0
Garrett, Miss L. K., London	2	2	0	Oggers, Rev. J. E., Oxford	1	0	0
Gerrard, Miles, Bolton	1	1	0	Oggers, Mrs., Oxford	1	0	0
Gerrard, W., St. Petersburg	0	10	0	Peacock, Mrs., Manchester	2	2	0
Goodey, W. H., Derby	1	1	0	Pollitt, Sir Wm., Bowdon	5	0	0
Green, H., Croydon	1	1	0	Paget, Miss E. S., Leicester	1	0	0
Greenfield, Mrs., Torquay	1	0	0	Rathbone, W., Liverpool	5	5	0
Grundy, Cuthbert C., Blackpool	1	0	0	Rawson, Alderman H., Manchester	3	3	0
Hadfield, Mrs., Altrincham	2	2	0	Risque, J. A., Manchester	1	1	0
Hadfield, George	2	2	0	Rylands, Mrs., Longford Hall	3	3	0
Harris, R., Southport	1	1	0	Schuster, E. J., London	2	0	0
Harrop, Jno., Manchester	1	1	0	Shakespeare, Misses, Sheffield	1	0	0
Harwood, Jno., Bolton	10	0	0	Shawcross, Mrs., St. Leonards	3	0	0
Harwood, T., Bolton	1	1	0	Stannus, Hugh, Lndn	1	0	0
Haslam, W., Bolton	5	0	0	Spiller, Wm., Hampstead, N.W.	5	0	0
Hibbert, Miss, Southport	1	0	0	Sorensen, M., Chorlton-cum-Hardy	1	0	0
Holt, Mrs. E., Liverpool	10	0	0	Slater, W., Brighton	0	10	6
Holt, Miss E. G., Liverpool	10	0	0	Smith, Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Vance, Bowdon	5	0	0
Hollins, Mrs., Mansfield	1	0	0	Simister, Mrs., Cheetham Hill	1	0	0
Haslam, L., South Kensington	2	0	0	Taylor, J. E., London	5	0	0
Harrison, W. G., South Croydon	2	2	0	Thomas, Rev. E. L. H., Scarborough	0	2	6
Heywood, P., Manchester	0	5	0	Thomasson, J. P., Bolton	10	0	0
Harrison, J., London	1	1	0	Trevelyan, Lieut.-Col. W. R., Penzance	2	10	0
Ywin, F. J., Horsham	1	1	0

£528 0 5

PROMISED GRANTS AND DONATIONS—

Manchester District Association of Presbyterian & Unitarian Churches 1,500 0 0

British and Foreign Unitarian Assotion 50 0 0

Lord, Wm., Chorlton-on-Medlock ... 1 0 0

Hudson, Mrs., Chorlton-cum-Hardy. 5 0 0

Preston, S. W., Hampstead... 2 2 0

Anon. (received) 1 0 0

Further Congregational Promises
(payable) 8 7 0

Total to Sept. 30.h, 1899 £2,095 9 5

SUMMARY—

Receipts and Promises 2,095 9 5

Less Architects' Fees, Iron Railings, and Sundry Payments and Expenses to date 75 10 0

Amount available £2,019 19 5

J. RUDDLE, Minister.

ROBERT C. LAW, Chairman.

HENRY PILLING, } Hon. Secretaries.
ROBERT SORENSEN, }

ARTHUR E. PIGGOTT, Treasurer,
78, King Street, Manchester,

To whom Contributions may be sent.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 2991.
NEW SERIES, No. 95.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1899.

[ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	669
ARTICLES :—
The Glory that has Passed away	671
The Inward Life	675
Faith and Opinion	677
Promoting the Gospel	603
CORRESPONDENCE :—
The Unitarian Church at Auckland	674
A Larger Hymn Book	674
London District Unitarian Association	674
Manchester Domestic Mission	674
Can Mr. Mczoomdar be called a Christian?	674
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN	675
LEADER :—
The New Reformation	676
MEETINGS :—
The Jubilee of Hope street Church, Liverpool	673
Manchester College, Oxford	678
Elland Bicentenary	680
OBITUARY :—
Mary Ellen Champion Guest, Sheffield	681
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES	681
ADVERTISEMENTS	682

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

At the opening of the new session at Manchester College, Oxford, on Monday, the Rev. W. E. Addis, M.A., received a very warm welcome on entering upon the duties of the Professorship of Old Testament Literature, in succession to the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter, M.A., who, it will be remembered, is still to serve the College at Hibbert Lecturer on The Comparative Study of Religions. The brightness of a beautiful October day came with other happy auguries to the friends of the College who gathered to hear Mr. Addis's opening Address, and the highest hopes are cherished of the lasting benefit to be derived from the connection with the College of another teacher so distinguished in scholarship and of a personality so winning and devout. The Address, of which we give a summary in our present issue, will doubtless be published in full, and will be helpful and stimulating to a much wider circle than that of the students to whom it was more especially directed.

ANOTHER new departure at the opening of the College Session, is the gathering of the students into a common residence, in the houses belonging to the College in Holywell. Two of the houses have been especially adapted for this purpose, and divided into sets of rooms, while a third house is occupied by Mr. Addis, who as warden, if we may use the term, will be the responsible head of the settlement, and will be in close touch with the students. The houses, which have a frontage in Holywell, are connected at the back with the College grounds, so that the residents during the day may pass freely in and out from their rooms to the chapel, the library, and the lecture room. The chief meals of the day will also be had in common in the College dining-room. Towards the conclusion of his opening address, Mr. Addis referred to their entrance upon that completer collegiate life, and, in describing what was implied in such a common table and a common life, quoted the following striking passage from Newman's "Sermons on Subjects of the Day," as the utterance of one whose voice had once been heard with thrilling effect in the University :—

God has given us wine that maketh glad the heart of man, and oil to make him a cheerful countenance, and bread to strengthen man's heart. And these good gifts by which our life is strengthened, send the soul out of itself in search of sympathy and fellowship : they end not in themselves, nor can be enjoyed in solitude : they create and convey and blend with social feelings : they are means and tokens of mutual goodwill and kindness ; or, to speak more religiously, they are of a sacramental character. They are intended by being partaken in common to open our hearts towards each other in love ; and this being the case we may judge how fearful is the abuse of God's gifts in riot and sensuality, for it is in some sort a profanation of a divine ordinance, a sacrilege.

To this Mr. Addis added some wise and sympathetic words of his own, which will be found in our summary of his address.

THE offer of Miss Frances Power Cobbe to bequeath her valuable library to the town of Barmouth has naturally been accepted with the utmost cordiality and gratitude by the inhabitants, and a committee is now vigorously engaged in fulfilling the condition made by Miss Cobbe, that a suitable building should be provided. The Cambrian Railway Company have leased a piece of land close to the Barmouth Station to the District Council, at a nominal rental, for sixty years, and the plan is to erect buildings which shall include a reading-room and library, a special room reserved for Miss Cobbe's books, a recreation-room for a young men's club, a small museum, and apartments for the librarian. It is hoped to raise for this purpose a sum of £2,000, of which about £600 has already been locally promised. Mrs. Talbot, of Brynffynon, one of the trustees of the library, heading the list with £300. The other trustees of the library are Mrs. Edwards (Dolserau, Dolgelly), Miss Blanche Atkinson (Tynyffynon, Barmouth), and Miss Marianne Farningham (Northampton), who writes in the Christian World an appeal to friends interested in Barmouth, and the gift it is to receive, asking their help towards the erection of the buildings. Either of these ladies will be glad to receive donations for that purpose.

THE public meeting arranged by the Christian Conference on Monday week to consider the divisions of Christendom was significant of a healthy spirit of brotherly fellowship if not of any practical hope of "re-union." Dr. R. F. Horton, who spoke for the Congregationalists, made a restrained but very effective speech, raising a smile at the outset by the remark that he was called upon first, he supposed, because his Church was the most primitive. The Congregationalist definition of the Church, he said, was that of the Thirty-nine Articles, and their complaint against the Church in the old days had been, not that her definition was wrong, but that the facts did not answer to the definition. He then referred to the work of a great Churchman, Professor J. A. Hort, of Cambridge, on the Christian Ecclesia, and quoted passages to show that in the New Testament the Church was Congregational. What Hort thus affirmed as the result of his studies the old Independents of the sixteenth century had found by their reading of the Bible.

THE Bishop of Hereford, who presided, said that many Churchmen would object to his taking part in such a meeting. He was quite aware of his duty "to drive away false doctrine, but his warfare should not be by persecution, but by the method of free and friendly discussion and the spirit of conciliation." As typical of the spirit of their gathering, he referred to Dr. Martineau, as a teacher from whom members of every Christian communion were glad to learn, and quoted the following passages from his writings :—"Far apart on the great circles of belief lights have appeared which it is impossible to deny are lights of heaven. Is there a man at once intellectual and devout, in any land where the English language is spoken, who does not own spiritual obligations to both the Newmans ? or who has not on his choicest shelf the Christian Year and the In Memoriam ? Is not Mr. Maurice revered as a deliverer by numbers of people, both more or less orthodox than himself ? In what cultivated home of English religion has Frederick Robertson not preached his word of power ? " "If Churchmen feel a generous pride in sheltering within their communion the contrasted apostolates of Simeon and Venn, of Pusey and Keble, of Robertson and Stanley, they are ready for a yet more capacious hospitality. . . . If without forfeiture of fellowship the varying lines of thought can be followed within the Church of England, they can be followed beyond ; and to claim communion with Wilberforce and Newton, while refusing it with Chalmers and Guthrie ; to own it with Law and Fletcher, while disclaiming it with Robert Hall and Elizabeth Fry ; to affirm it with Patteson, and deny it with Livingstone, is possible only by arbitrary trifling with a sacred bond."

THE paper by Professor A. Sabatier, Dean of the Protestant Faculty of the University of Paris, on the "Necessary Renewal of Ancient Dogmatic Formulas," to which we referred last week, contained a strong statement of the difficulties of the conflict between modern thought and the traditional views of religion and the Bible. Liberal Romanism, or "Americanism," he said, was in constant conflict with Ultramontaniam, and while hitherto the tyranny of compulsion to silence had prevailed, there were very many souls in France, America, and Germany only rebelliously silent. There was really less spiritual unity in Roman Catholicism than elsewhere. Any difference between science and conscience was a profound menace to Christianity; there could be peace and confidence only where there was organic unity. The historic method had given them new insight into the Bible. In the Old Testament they saw the progressive purification of the idea of God, up to the fatherly Theism of Jesus. The revelation of God in the heart of man never ceased, and in Christ was the unique, supreme flower of that revelation. In the New Testament they traced the evolution of primitive Christianity and its transformation into the Catholic Church. Christianity did not begin with theological definitions, but with a living trust in the Master.

THE historical method, Professor Sabatier said, must be applied also to the dogmas of the Church. They were the result of theological controversies, the foreign mould into which the living Christian truth was run, and came out in a form which the Galileans who listened to Jesus would find it difficult to understand. These dogmas, if they were to be rejuvenated, must be transformed by a new exegesis. Greek theology must be translated into the language of to-day. Yet they must not abandon the old symbols, but love them, so long as they did not profess literally to believe them. In the Lutheran Church in France the clergy when ordained had still to accept the Confession of Augsburg, but their conscience was helped over the difficulty by the acknowledgment—"I adhere to this Confession of Faith in the spirit of faith and liberty of the Reformers." Evangelical Christians had the right to interpret Scripture, and so, said Professor Sabatier, they must have the right to interpret the old formulas. There was practically no discussion on the paper, or the point might have been raised, whether the two cases were parallel. The interpretation of Scripture implies the aim to get at what is actually meant by the words. The interpretation of old formulas would seem to mean the putting of new meanings into the words, which were not meant by the writers. And one might suggest that it would be better to do without such old formulas altogether, and be content with the avowal of allegiance to Persons, which came before all the doctrines.

FOR the opening of the John Ryland's Library in Manchester, on Oct. 6, Canon Rawnsley wrote the following sonnet, which appeared in the Manchester Guardian of that date:—

Some build for show, and some for servile end,
Luxurious self or Mammon's lust of gold;
The hand that raised this treasure-house was bold
To welcome thought and call the student friend.
And here, for books that to the future lend Strength from the past, she built a fortress-hold
And stored it with munition manifold,
And bade a city's care her gift defend.

To-day we enter to her palace fair,
Thronged with the minds that, having passed thro' strife
And sorrow, speak from Heaven's eternal calm;
Upon our spirits falls a gracious balm,
For carven stone and blazoned pane declare
The deathless love of a devoted wife.

To last week's Speaker the Dean of Ripon (the Very Rev. W. H. Fremantle) contributed an extremely interesting article on "The Broad Church Movement," from which the following passages are taken:—

If the Broad Church or Liberal Christian movement were, as it is often thought to be, merely a lax form of ordinary Christianity, it would soon and deservedly die out—a fate which some believe to have already overtaken it. But its true significance is that it insists on Christian righteousness as supreme in the Church and in humanity, and consequently regards all other things—peculiar customs of life, systems of doctrine or of worship—as secondary. It may be thought that the negative side of this, the comparative unimportance of system, is that which has been most prominent to the public eye: but this is inevitable; all true reformers have had to pull down before they could build up. But no one can doubt that with those whose names are chiefly connected with the movement the positive interest in the moral welfare of mankind has been paramount, as with Arnold's and Jowett's zeal for education, with Maurice's and Kingsley's Christian Socialism, with Stanley's enlightened charity.

The liberal Christian judges all matters of religion and life by the standard of righteousness, which is to be established in the hearts and lives of men. Thus questions of ritual fall at once into a place of secondary importance; and as to doctrine, "his faith makes him feel that no teaching which is really Christian can conflict with righteousness. He will dwell on God not merely as Almighty, but as loving and fatherly; on the Incarnation not as a mere wonder, but as an indwelling, uplifting power; on the Atonement as self-sacrificing love which draws and reconciles men to God; on Election as being not to separate happiness, but to Christian service; on Inspiration as the working of the righteous spirit in divers ways, of which we also partake."

"This fuller and more liberal Christianity seems to be growing amongst us. The laity everywhere asked for a simple, intelligible, practical religion. Many of the less intelligible doctrines have fallen into neglect, and Christianity is seen to be a simple thing—the religion of the Sermon on the Mount, of the Prodigal Son, of the Good Samaritan. The criticism of the Bible has made it a more living source of righteousness; that of the Early Church has shown that the pretensions of clericalism, which limit righteousness and salvation, have no solid base. Above all, the attention of all religious men has been directed more and more to social questions. The Nonconformists have broadened out their theology; and we may hope that, as all of us learn to rise above the disputes about ritual and dogma which separated Christians from one another in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, we may be found all co-operating in the great work of national righteousness, fulfilling the wish of the Puritan poet—

That we may build Jerusalem
In England's fair and pleasant land."

THE MEMORIAL AGAINST WAR WITH THE TRANSVAAL.—We are requested to say that this Memorial was delivered to the Foreign Office on Tuesday with the following letter:—

The Right Honourable the Marquis of Salisbury, Downing-street, S.W.

My Lord,—We have the honour herewith to remit to your Lordship a memorial signed during the past twelve days by 53,833 adults living in various parts of the United Kingdom, and formally endorsed by a number of religious, political, and other bodies, in favour of a patient and pacific policy in relation to the Transvaal. The text of the memorial is as follows:—

"We, the undersigned, while determined to use all pacific means to secure equal rights and full justice for our fellow-countrymen in the Transvaal, are of the opinion that the differences now remaining between what our Government has demanded and what the Boers have conceded are not sufficient to justify our plunging South Africa into war.

"We enter our solemn protest against any appeal to the sword to settle our differences with the Transvaal until after the principle of arbitration affirmed by the Conference at The Hague has been tried and found wanting."

Your Lordship will see from the attached list of names, that many of the memorialists are men and women of substance and influence in different walks of life—teachers, representatives, administrators, artists—and it will be evident to your Lordship that the number of persons who have attached their names to this statement is not a small part of those who hold these opinions. Hostilities having now begun the Memorial was closed, but it is forwarded as evidence of the strong feeling on the part of a large number of our countrymen against the policy which precipitated this war, and the strong desire that exists that the practical suggestion unanimously agreed upon at The Hague shall be acted upon with a view to bring this disastrous civil war in South Africa to an early close.

We have the honour to be,
Your Lordship's obedient servants,
(Signed) G. H. PERRIS
J. F. GREEN.

40, Outer Temple, Strand, W.C., Oct. 16, 1899.

On the list of signatories, which includes many of the most honoured of our citizens, we find the names of several Bishops and many Rectors and Vicars of the Established Church, the Rev. Dr. Clifford, the Rev. Dr. Guinness Rogers, the Rev. F. B. Meyer, the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, the Rev. Dr. Rendel Harris, and other leaders of Nonconformity, Professor Estlin Carpenter (Oxford), Professor Muirhead (Birmingham), Dr. C. H. Herford (University College of Wales), Lady Carlisle, Lady Agatha Russell, Mr. Henry Holiday, the Hon. Rollo Russell, and several sons and daughters of John Bright, Richard Cobden, and Bishop Colenso.

THE GLORY THAT HAS PASSED AWAY.*

BY THE REV. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A.

Who is left among you that saw this house in its former glory? and how do ye see it now? is it not in your eyes as nothing? Yet now be strong, O Zerubabel, saith the Lord; and be strong, O Joshua, high priest; and be strong, all ye people of the land, saith the Lord, and work: for I am with you, saith the Lord of Hosts, and my spirit abideth among you: fear ye not.—Haggai ii. 3, 4, 5.

It may seem to some of you that the text is very inappropriate for the occasion: for we are met to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the opening of this church, and it becomes you to rejoice and give thanks, and with legitimate pride commemorate your predecessors who built this house of prayer for themselves, and for you, and for all that shall here succeed. "Honourable was it to them," said the preacher at the service of the dedication,† "to their feelings and their principles, that it was in their heart, as it was in their power, to raise up this beautiful structure for themselves and their families to worship in—devoting it, not to the interests and fashions of a world that passeth away, but to the interests and welfare of that higher life which shall not pass." The honour due to their faith and generosity and zeal and openness of mind and appreciation of beauty, that honour has here in this building its permanent memorial, and all who meet here partake of it in measure as they conform to the spirit and purpose of its builders.

There can, indeed, be no comparison between this Hope-street Church and the Paradise-street Meeting-house which preceded it. Here all is ordered to gratify the refined eye, and through things of sense to uplift the spirit to the contemplation of Eternal Beauty: unlike a comfortable reception-room or a handsome hall of assembly, it has a character of its own, which at the same time sets it apart from all other public buildings, and claims for it lot and inheritance in the family of the English Christian Churches throughout the land. There, in the old meeting-house, the stern simplicity of Presbyterian tradition declared itself equally against ornament and ritual, and they banished from the place of worship everything which might recall the religion of their forefathers prior to the Reformation, or hint at any relationship with what they deemed an idolatrous superstition.

If that former temple were still standing, we might visit it to-day as a relic of olden times, when Dissenters from the Established Church had to be thankful for permission to exist, and were wont to demean themselves humbly as strangers who had no part in the story of the national religion; but you would return here with congratulation on your lips and gratitude in your hearts, this your "holy and beautiful house, and all its pleasant things"—to use the prophet's words of endearment—standing in memory of the fathers' work, and welcoming the children to its shelter.

And yet, dear friends and brethren, though the foundations have been laid sure and the structure be firm as it was fifty years ago, though the marble has lost none of its lustre nor aught be changed since that day of dedication unless it be for further adornment, yet are you not conscious of a glory which has faded since then? Conscious perhaps still more of the need for such words of cheer and encouragement as the Hebrew prophet was commissioned to speak to his fellow-builders of the Temple and to all generations to come?

Few among you can remember that day; far the greater part of those here present were then unborn; those who now are advanced in years were then very young, boys and girls, youths and maidens who had taken no active part in the work and could not be deeply impressed at the completion of it. But all of you will have seen, and honoured at a distance if you have not had the privilege of more intimate acquaintance, some one or more of the noble men and women who were chiefly responsible for the erection of this church.

It would ill become me, who was then a child brought up in a faith as far removed from that here believed and preached as it were possible for Christian to be from fellow-Christian, to attempt to recall to your minds the varied characters or even to rehearse the list of those who took the leading place on that occasion. But it is impossible that any intelligent person should be present here to-day, whether stranger attracted by sympathy with your prospect and retrospect, or guest invited by you to help in fitting commemoration of the jubilee of your church, but that there should be present to his mind the thought of one who as pastor occupied the place of honour in the congregation of that time, and has since, by right of acknowledged genius, made for himself a secure place among the great religious teachers of the world. "In distant lands, through waiting months," he said, on the first Sunday the congregation met in their new church "my eye has rested upon this day; which has appeared as a star of hope behind the perspective of every scene, and looked down with a clear and guiding sanctity, on intervening tracts that had sometimes no other, and never a diviner ray." It had come at length the day so ardently desired, as all comes, even what seems to the impatience of youthful longing the furthest off; and it has passed, as all passes to those who are yet under the sway of Time and catch but glimpses now and again in favoured moments of that far-off vision of God's Eternity, where there comes nothing new which has before been wanting, nor is taken away aught of good which is once present; that Eternity which is the fulness of desire, undiminished, unaugmented for ever.

It has passed, that day he longed for, and greeted as a man in the prime of early manhood, conscious of great work to be done and great powers wherewith to do it. Fruitful have been the fifty years since then, and heaped up the measure which he has poured out of his own abundance for the nourishment and illumination of his brethren. Not till he had passed the age of eighty did he retire from the active duties of life, and then employed his leisure in work which would have severely taxed the faculties of the very ablest of his contemporaries, even in the prime of their days. Now at last, his labours accomplished to the full and his years multiplied far beyond the lot of men, surrounded with the reverence of those who knew him as pastor and teacher, and honoured by all the world of those who think, he awaits in hallowed peace the call which shall summon him to the higher life of which he was here the prophet, and to the company of friends and fellow-workers gone before him.

"Of course," you say; "to see how many of my old acquaintance are dead" is a reflection which a Mr. Justice Shallow can make without any preacher's stirring him thereto. "Death, as the Psalmist saith, is certain to all," and we don't need to be told it. "One generation passeth away—and another generation cometh," dawn succeeds to sunset, and summer follows upon winter, and youth replaces age. The loss of death is ever made good by the gains of birth, and life is still triumphant on earth. True, and yet there are losses which cannot be made good; there are days the like of which we never see again; there are individuals who pass, and none rise who can take their place and do their work.

I will not for a moment admit—no, not even in mood of deepest despondency—that the men of to-day are inferior to any generation which have preceded them. And from what I can learn of the past, and what I know of the present, I am fully persuaded that in our own group of churches there is at least as much devotion, and ability, and learning, and generosity in our ranks to-day as ever there was before. Yet I cannot conceal from myself that in one respect we and the whole world are poorer as compared with our predecessors. The average of worth is perhaps higher than it has ever been before: there are more good speakers, good writers, good scholars, good artists, good poets even, than in any preceding generation, but the Great are in every department of human activity lacking to us.

Amongst ourselves there are not wanting men—and the present minister of this congregation is a notable instance—who, by their writings and their conduct, have won reputation far beyond the limits of a denomination; and we have amongst us still eminent laymen, wealthy and making good use of their wealth, men of light and leading, manfully withstanding the temptation to desert an unpopular sect and frankly owning a name of no credit in society—men and women, honourable, useful, loveable, forward in every good cause, such as those who have but just now given proof of their zeal and faith in the new church erected in Ullet-road as companion to this.

And yet, looking backwards, it seems to me as if, from a region of high mountains and deep valleys, we had arrived in our day on a fairly lofty table-land, rising here and there into respectable hills, on the whole a good country to live in, healthy and fertile. But we miss the grandeur of those solitary heights which uplifted themselves above the clouds, and, crowned with the glory of eternal snows, caught the sun's earliest and latest splendours, and revealed to those who watched below the light they could not as yet see themselves.

Martineau, Channing, Parker—is there among our best and most eminent ministers to-day one who would not deem it the insult of flattery to equal him with these; men whose influence is limited neither by sect, nor country, nor time; men whose names will be had in honour as long as the religious movement of the nineteenth century is remembered, as long, one might almost dare to say, as the world and the Church shall last. These three, they were not simply good and learned and able and zealous, they were Great Men, distinguished above all their fellows by that supreme, mysterious gift which is, as the glory of Moses' face, caught from nearer intimacy with heaven.

* A sermon preached in Hope-street Church, Liverpool, on Wednesday evening, Oct. 18, the fiftieth anniversary of the opening of the church.

† The Rev. Thomas Madge.

And of how many their contemporaries may the same be said. Where now among many voices sweet and strenuous are poets such as Wordsworth and Coleridge, Tennyson and Browning? Where among the distinguished men of science any able as Darwin and Huxley and Tyndal to rise above the detail well mastered, and take such comprehensive view of Nature that they lead even the unscientific to a better understanding of the ways of God? Where is there such a prophet as Carlyle, whose words were as thunder reverberating through the land? Where are leaders of the people like Gladstone and Cobden and Bright? Or, in the Churches, men of renown like to Pusey and Stanley and Jowett, or to the three English Cardinals—Wiseman, Newman, and Manning? Other names crowd upon my mental vision as distant peaks of various altitudes, but all, it seems to me, higher than any about us where we find ourselves to-day. There are Dickens and Thackeray, Maurice and Kingsley, Macaulay and Froude; Longfellow and Emerson, John James Tayler, Sir John Bowring, Charles Beard, and John Hamilton Thom among our own. About some of these I am probably mistaken, as oftentimes we are deceived in estimating the height of mountains by not allowing for the perspective. But of this I am sure that we have not to-day men of the commanding genius which has made for ever illustrious more than two or three of the generation of which Ruskin and Martineau are now the only distinguished survivors.

There has passed away a glory from the earth, a glory from this place since that day when a crowd of the leading citizens of Liverpool gathered here round their great leader and began the services of which the fiftieth year is now complete. Now

"A common greyness silvers everything,—
All in the twilight, you and I alike,"* orthodox and liberal, politician and artist, poet and scholar, preacher and writer, there seems to have arisen not one, "like unto Moses, who knew the Lord face to face." Our inspiration is at second hand, we are rich with the wealth bequeathed to us, and great with our forefathers' greatness. The noble enthusiasm, the exalted hopes, the confident assurance of those bygone days are satisfaction—nay, in more ardent natures, have been replaced by a disappointment too often akin to despair.

"All toned down to sober, pleasant"

Peace! progress! enlightenment!—these were the strains to which we marched onwards a generation ago. But the century closes upon a world in arms, an empire at war, reaction in religion, the reassertion of the superiority of force, the cult of sport and athletics as the chiefest interests of man. I know that this is a partial view of the situation, and I am not loth to contemplate a much more favourable one which might be presented. But if not the whole truth, it is still true; and it is the fact, that many who would have been among the most enthusiastic a while ago, are discouraged and dispirited, tempted to let hands hang down and knees get feeble, in despair of a world which does not seem to get better, and of a Church which in some respects seems to get worse.

Well, my brethren beloved, you who share with me the responsibility and the disappointments of this age in which God has cast our lot, Hear, I beseech you, the word of the Lord, word all the surer that I do not pretend to have received it direct from heaven, message committed of old time to the prophets, and repeated and its truth confirmed by all the world's history since.

"Rejoice ye with Jerusalem," with the city of God, the kingdom of heaven upon earth, "and be glad with her all ye that love her; rejoice for joy with her, all ye that mourn for her: that ye may be satisfied with the breasts of her consolation, that ye may be delighted with the abundance of her consolations. For thus saith the Lord, Behold I will extend peace to her like a river, and the glory of the nation like an overflowing stream . . . and ye shall be comforted in Jerusalem, ye shall see it, and your heart shall rejoice, and the hand of the Lord shall be known to his servants." (Isaiah lxvi.)

"O foolish men, and slow of heart to believe in all that the prophets have spoken," to read aright the story of Man-kind!

For it happens to the human race as to those "that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters"; and they who diligently observe the way we have been borne through the trackless waters of time, "these see the works of the Lord and his wonders in the deep." Nor are they lightly discouraged or unduly depressed in untoward times, when it seems as if "the righteous perisheth and godly men are taken away," but make it the burden of their song as they onward journey, "O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful works to the children of men!"

Watch the boat at sea, how the stormy wind arises and lifts on high the waves; "they mount up to heaven, they go down again to the depths": to themselves it seems long time they are suspended on the crest of the wave; long time they are down in the hollow, the waters making gloom on either hand; but the spectator who watches the course from above, sees them borne along fairly and direct, through height and hollow, towards the haven where they would be.

Even so is it in the world of men; winds of the spirit rise and fall, blow as He listeth who commandeth the storm and calm, and die away at His bidding. Now is there a stirring of the soul of Man, and now a general relaxation; we may be sure at the best that a worse is nigh at hand; sure, too, at the worst, that a better time is coming.

Whatever be the drawbacks of our day as compared with fifty-years ago, however great the apparent dearth of men of commanding genius such as then abounded, far worse did it fare with the world at the close of last century. It seems as if the great men whose names adorn the period from 1775 to 1825 were just in the middle of it to be all numbered in one of three classes—the dead, the disabled, the unrecognised. To mention but a few out of many (for the subject is too large for such cursory treatment). Educated men of middle age would then recall the names of Johnson and Gibbon, of Voltaire and Rousseau of Burke and Mirabeau as giants of whom they were proud to have been contemporaries. The young would remember Robert Burns whose untimely death left to Britain but one true poet, and he, William Cowper, was slowly dying in the stupor of a melancholy madness. Two great statesmen there were in England, the one William Pitt, baffled in all his noble purposes by the war he sought in vain to prevent; the other with whom his name is inseparably associated rendered powerless by his own weakness and the contrariety of the times. Wesley was dead; Priestley had gone into exile, driven out by the violence of his countrymen. Wordsworth and Coleridge were known as the obscure authors of some minor poems, if not altogether unknown. It seemed as if the light of genius had faded from the earth, and mediocrity, of greater or lesser merit, should be henceforth supreme.

But even then men great in every department of human activity, whose names would make for ever illustrious the story of the nineteenth century, were shining as stars yet low on the horizon, unnoted save by the diligent observer. And constellations were slowly rising, presently to brighten the firmament with their undying glory. I will not begin, for I could not soon end, to rehearse the great names now inscribed on the immortal roll of fame, which were unknown, or little thought of, when the eighteenth century was closing in a season of reaction and despondency and paltry aims.

And I take heart, and I bid you, my brethren—you my brother, who hold here the office of Joshua, no priest nor pretending to any priestly rights, but prophet to speak what God shall speak to you in hours of inspiration—I bid you, O all who are called to be leaders of the people as was Zerubbabel, you whose temptations are greater as your responsibilities are nobler—"be strong and work." These are not heroic days upon which we have fallen, and the bright prospects which gladdened the hearts and inspired the efforts of our immediate predecessors have proved a desert mirage as we have journeyed on. Empire, wealth, comfort, physical well-being, knowledge which can be turned to gain, satisfaction of eye and ear in worship as in ordinary life, those are the ideals of the day, openly proclaimed and unblushingly avowed. They are not any of them base or contemptible, they all are good in their degree; but presented as man's highest, as the objects which the community should set before itself as supreme, and the individual make the mark of his highest aspiration, they are shameful and degrading. For man is a soul, not a living body, and God has made and owns him, "partaker of the divine nature" (2 Peter i. 4).

Certain is it that it was for no such purposes that this holy and beautiful house was built, but to quote the words of my dear and revered predecessor at Leeds, who nine months before had opened his own new church, and now was invited to preach on the first Sunday after the opening here—"it is devoted, this temple, to the building up of human souls for the conflicts of earth and the inheritance of heaven." For such high purpose has it stood these fifty years, may it never serve to lower uses nor these be forgotten or discredited; but from generation to generation may the divine work here be carried on to train the young and to sustain the old in the path of the higher and Eternal Life!

* Browning's "Andrea del Sarto."

THE JUBILEE OF HOPE-STREET CHURCH, LIVERPOOL.

HOPE-STREET CHURCH was opened for public worship on Thursday, Oct. 18, 1849, during the ministry of the Rev. James Martineau, and the fiftieth anniversary of this event was celebrated on Wednesday and Thursday, Oct. 18 and 19.

The celebration began on Wednesday afternoon with the presentation by Mr. W. B. Bowring, J.P., of a New Church Hall to the congregation, as his jubilee gift. The hall is built on the ground to the rear of the church, with its chief entrance from Caledonia-street, but is also connected by a door with the octagonal lecture-room at the east end of the church. The architect (Mr. James Rhind) has used with great skill the space at his disposal, and has provided a hall architecturally in harmony with the church, and admirable for the purposes for which it is designed. It is capable of seating about 200 people, and its apsidal end, with lancet windows, which are handsomely curtained, has a very pleasant effect. There are also two class-rooms and cloak-rooms. The whole is lighted with electric light. At the end of the hall is a plate in beaten copper (the work of Mr. R. L. Rathbone) bearing the following inscription:—

This building was presented to the congregation worshipping at Hope-street Church, by William Benjamin Bowring, on the 18th Oct. 1899, in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the opening of the Church, in the year 1849.

In the entrance is placed a copy of the well-known bust of Dr. Martineau in his younger days.

Among those who were present at the opening ceremony and at the service in the evening, were Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Bowring, the Revs. R. A. Armstrong (minister of the church), A. Cobden Smith (assistant minister), Charles Hargrove, L. de Beaumont Klein, L. P. Jacks, J. K. Montgomery, P. M. Higginson, H. W. Hawkes, J. Crossley, T. Lloyd Jones, J. Anderton, J. L. Haigh, J. M. Lloyd Thomas, H. B. Smith, J. M. Mills, H. D. Roberts, T. Robinson, W. Harrison, J. M. Whiteman, R. S. Redfern, and V. D. Davis; Mrs. Armstrong, Mrs. Greene, Mrs. George Holt, Miss Holt, Miss Rawlins, Miss Johnson, Miss Darbishire, Miss Florence Melly, Mrs. J. P. Brunner, Messrs. Charles W. Jones, Walter Holland, R. R. Meade-King, T. Cook, F. Cook, T. Chilton, F. Robinson, J. H. Burroughs, A. W. Hall, A. Cooper, Lawrence Hall (secretary), and many others.

The company first gathered in the church, and then proceeded to the door of the hall, at which the Rev. R. A. Armstrong presented to Mr. Bowring a silver key on behalf of some friends who appreciated his very generous gift to the church as a memento of the occasion.

Mr. BOWRING, having acknowledged the presentation, proceeded to open the hall, which was quickly filled to overflowing. The chair was taken by Mr. Tom Cook, treasurer of the congregation.

Mr. BOWRING, rising, said that fifty years ago that very day Hope-street Church was opened for public worship, when the Rev. James Martineau was minister, and they were thankful to say that Dr. Martineau—for the public had now recognised his great merits—was still living, and, he ventured to hope, might be thinking of them at that time. For fifty years the light then lit by him and those around him had burned in that place of worship, with more or less brilliance, and the principles he had so eloquently enunciated of reverence for Almighty God and a reverent search after truth, were their prized inheritance. It was therefore felt by the congregation that the jubilee of the opening of their church ought to be marked by some celebration, and that there should be a memorial of a permanent character, which would be of use to their community, and to the community of Liverpool generally. After earnest discussion it was decided that there was need of new and improved accommodation for the Sunday-school and other institutions of a religious, philanthropic and social character associated with the Hope-street congregation, and it was therefore agreed, with the consent of the trustees, that that Church Hall should be built. He was personally deeply interested in the occasion, and as by descent and family ties for three generations he had been associated with the congregation which worshipped first in Paradise-street and then in Hope-street Church, he claimed the privilege, which was cheerfully given him, of carrying out the wishes of the congregation, and the result was the building of the hall. He presented it to the trustees of Hope-street Church, without question, without any conditions whatever, except that they should administer it in accordance with the very broad trust-deed of their church. He was sure that it was a matter of great regret to them all that one whom they had hoped would be present to receive that building at his hands, one of the honoured members of the church and an original trustee, Mr. H. W. Meade-King, was, owing to ill-health, unable to be present. But in his absence they had Mr. Cook, the treasurer of the church, whose father was also identified with Paradise-street and Hope-street, but who could not, on account of ill-health, be present that day.

Turning to the Chairman, Mr. Bowring then formerly presented the building to him as representing the trustees of the church, expressing the hope that they would think it not unworthy of the church, and the cause they represented. He thanked the Committee who had taken such loving care in the erection of the building, and the architect who, under difficulties, had schemed a building which did not in any way detract from the great beauty of the church. He also expressed their indebtedness to the contractors, and concluded with the expression of the hope that the hall would be found of great service, and be ever full of good works and good workers, who would work to the Glory of Almighty God and for the best interests of their fellow-men.

The CHAIRMAN, in accepting the gift, first read the following letter from Mr. H.

W. Meade-King to Mr. Lawrence Hall, secretary of the church.

It is with very great regret that I have decided that I cannot, on account of my uncertain health, take any personal part in the ceremony of next Wednesday, as I had hoped to do. Will you allow me to express by letter my sense of gratitude to Mr. Bowring for his most noble gift to the church of which I have been an attached member ever since it was built.

He then offered to Mr. Bowring the heartfelt thanks of the congregation. At an earlier meeting of the congregation, specially called to consider his offer, they had expressed their sense of his generosity, but had not then realised what a beautiful hall it was his intention to give them. None of them thought that such an elegant, commodious, and useful building could have been erected on the space available, and they participated that day in his pleasure at seeing how completely Mr. Rhind had carried out his ideas and his desire to benefit the church. It was their desire that God would bless his good gift, and that their church might enter on a career of increased usefulness, and that they might show their gratitude to him and to Mrs. Bowring, by making the best possible use of the new hall. In the name of the congregation, he begged Mr. Bowring to accept their most sincere thanks for his truly noble gift, which would enable their church, with greatly increased facilities, to maintain the continuity of that teaching, which for the last fifty years had, they believed, combined the ripest scholarship with the most enlightened views of philosophy and religion.

Samuel Longfellow's hymn "God of ages and of nations!" was then sung in an adapted form, the last verse being:—

God of ages and of nations!
Even in this younger time
Fill us with thine inspirations,
Show to us thy truth sublime.
Here thy Holy Spirit visit
Children of the newer day!
Here goodwill and kindness blossom,
Heartening pilgrims on the way!

and the meeting closed with a prayer of dedication offered by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong, and the Benediction.

In the evening a service of commemoration was held in Hope-street Church, conducted by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong, and the Rev. Charles Hargrove preached the sermon, which is printed in full in our present issue.

The anthems, "Send out thy light" (Gounod), and "Arise! Shine!" (Cobb), were sung; and one of the hymns was Jeremy Taylor's "Descend to thy Jerusalem, O Lord!" which was also sung at the opening service fifty years ago.

On Thursday evening a soirée was held in St. George's Hall, at which the guests were received by Mr. and Mrs. Bowring, and the Rev. R. A. Armstrong. Addresses were given by several speakers, of which we hope to publish a full report next week.

EPPS'S COCOA. The most nutritious.
EPPS'S COCOA. Grateful and comforting.
EPPS'S COCOA. For breakfast and supper.
EPPS'S COCOA. With natural flavour only.
EPPS'S COCOA. From the finest brands.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

THE UNITARIAN CHURCH AT AUCKLAND.

SIR,—It will doubtless be of much service in establishing the movement, of which I go out as the organiser, to have a list of those who are known to sympathise with our Liberal Faith.

If any of your readers have relatives in New Zealand, who would welcome our message, and if they will kindly forward me their names and addresses any time between this and December, I shall endeavour, when I arrive, to put myself into some kind of communication with them.

WILLIAM JELLIE.

35, Christchurch-street, Ipswich.

A LARGER HYMN-BOOK.

SIR,—I should like to second the motion of Mr. Rattenbury Hodges concerning an enlarged (and revised) edition of "Essex Hall Hymn-book." The book has been well received, and deserves to be improved. Somebody should be appointed on the Committee of Revision (or if one man does the work he can apportion one section of his brain to this department), to hold a brief on behalf of the original author; so that in cases where the author's hymn happens to be a good deal better than the alterations and abridgments with which we have been content the better form may be restored. In many cases a return to a form somewhat nearer the original would be a distinct improvement: compare the hymn, "Lo, God is here," in the "Essex Hall," and several of our hymn-books with the original (Wesley 494),—the six-line stanza is in each case richer and fuller. The hymn entire is not possible for us, but the three stanzas we now sing might each be made complete.

By the way, "Give to the winds thy fears," is in the "Essex Hall." See 133, and read as far as the second verse.

J. RUDDLE.

Chorlton-cum-Hardy, Oct. 14.

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

AUTUMNAL MEETING.

SIR,—We wish to draw the attention of your readers and our London friends to the notice of the above meeting appearing in your advertisement columns this week, and to extend to all interested in the work of the Society a hearty invitation to the President's (Sir John T. Brunner, Bart., M.P.) reception at 7 o'clock, on Tuesday, Oct. 24. Following the reception a meeting will be held, when an address on "The Position and Prospects of Unitarianism at the close of the Century" will be given by Charles W. Jones, Esq., President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and the Revs. Dr. Brooke Herford and W. G. Tarrant will also be present and address the meeting.

We feel confident that this subject is one of deep interest to all who have the welfare of our cause and our churches at heart, and we trust there will be a large gathering of our friends at Essex Hall, on Tuesday evening.

Tickets of admission have been sent to all the ministers and secretaries of our London churches, and we hope the meeting of the Society will be made as widely known as possible in the short time now available.

G. HAROLD CLENNELL,
J. E. STRONGE,
Joint Hon. Secretaries.

MANCHESTER DOMESTIC MISSION.

SIR,—The concert given in the Memorial Hall, Oct. 11, for the benefit of the Mission, by Mr. C. Rawdon Briggs and his friends, was most successful. The audience was worthy of the occasion; friends coming in from such places as Wilmslow, Knutsford, Altrincham, and heartily combining with Manchester folk in contributing to the funds of the Mission. They were amply repaid by the high class character of the concert, the programme of which included Beethoven's "Kreutzer Sonata," and a Fantasia, by Schubert, for violin and piano, by Messrs. W. H. Dayas and C. Rawdon Briggs, and songs by Miss Juliet Liebert and Mr. Fowler Burton. We have very few occasions of this sort, when members of our various churches can meet under one roof, and spend so pleasant an evening in each other's company. This is a good thing in itself; it is inspiring; and it makes us realise our powers of achievement whenever we choose to co-operate with one mind in any good work. The Trustees of the Hall were good enough to make no charge whatever for its use. So that with a minimum of expense incurred, a very handsome profit of about £50 was realised; while in addition to this a donation of £20 was sent from a distant friend to swell the funds. A further sum of £60 is now required before the end of the year, to enable us to claim the redemption of the promised conditional donation of £200. Then the deficit would be wiped out, and the Mission could start afresh. However, even then it will be essential, in order to keep out of debt, to increase the annual subscription list by over £100. This seems at first sight a big thing; and no doubt it means considerable effort and enthusiasm; but when one bears in mind the number of people within a twelve or fifteen mile radius of Manchester, whose names do not appear in the subscription list, one would think the task should be easy, and that to give publicity to the need were quite sufficient. The encouragement which unsolicited subscriptions and donations give to an anxious committee is proverbial; and the Rev. S. A. Steinthal (chairman), and the Rev. W. Harris (secretary), would be much gratified upon receiving intimation of additional help from friends of the Mission; an institution so intrinsically valuable, that its claims ought not to require any special advocacy.

CHARLES ROPER.

CAN MR. MOZOOMDAR BE CALLED A CHRISTIAN?

SIR,—I find a lively interest is being taken in Professor Max Müller's recent letter to the Statesman, and friends are naturally anxious to know how far the allegation, that the Rev. Protap Chunder Mozoomdar is a Christian in all but name, is true. My friend, Babu Bipin Chandra Pal, pointed out in a letter in THE INQUIRER of Oct. 7 that Mr. Mozoomdar does not speak for the entire body of the Brahmos in India, but for the Church of New Dispensation only. How far even the Church of New Dispensation will go with him in the Christian tendencies of Mr. Mozoomdar, if there be any, is doubtful. But, after all, is there really any ground for believing that Mr. Mozoomdar is a Christian in all but name? He has, indeed, in some of his recent addresses and writings used expressions which are Christian. But he, like the late Keshub Chunder Sen, uses them in a sense different from that of the Christian Church. It is well known that Mr. Sen used such expressions as "Trinity" and "Resurrection" in a purely uneccelesiastical sense. And Mr. Mozoomdar certainly does not mean by a "personal and private relation with Christ" what an orthodox Christian would. It is unfortunate that he ever used the phrase—unfortunate, at least, for the reason that people misunderstood him. Some of his friends, like the Editor of the Indian Messenger, apprehended the danger, and tried to point it out at the very beginning. But beyond this verbal misunderstanding, I do not think there is much reason for anxiety on the part of his theistic friends or for exultation in the Christian ranks. If Mr. Mozoomdar speaks of a "personal and private relation with Christ," he does the same with reference to Buddha and Chaitanya, and other great religious teachers of humanity. If he sometimes admits himself a follower of Christ he as well calls himself a follower of Mohammed and Chaitanya. Now if the Christians would claim him as one belonging to their confession, so might the Mohammedans. He calls himself a follower of Christ in the sense that he tries to tread in the same path that Jesus did. The special relation with Christ he speaks of is the relation of indebtedness to his life and teachings. All men that ever lived and will live are our relations—are our brethren. But with the great teachers like Jesus and Buddha we have a special relation, because each one of us who have ever come into contact with them through their teachings is specially and individually indebted to them. We might not approve the expressions "special" and "private." But Mr. Mozoomdar's language was the language of a devotee and not of a theologian; it had the abandon of a religious enthusiast, and not the precision of a scholar; it was a sentiment and not a creed. If any one think from it that he is a Christian, he might as well consider a Christian minister speaking of "dwelling in the light of the countenance of God" an idolater. We venerate Christ, we love Christ, we follow Christ, if you like, but so do we love and follow Buddha, Mohammed, Chaitanya, and others, because they all followed truth, sought God. We do not call ourselves Christians or Buddhists or Mohammedans; but we are simply worshippers of God, and that is the exact meaning of the expression Brahmo Somaj—the congregation of the worshippers of God.

HEM CHANDRA SARKAR.

Manchester College, Oxford.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c., received from the following:—E. S. A.; R. B. D.; T. S. G.; H. B. L.; W. A. L.; F. T. R.; G. F. S.; P. H. W.; A. R.

THE INWARD LIFE.

From Dr. Martineau's "Pause and Retrospect," 1848.

NOTHING has been nearer to my heart than to substitute among you the Religion of Consciousness for the Religion of Custom. It is quite true, and it is a truth too plain to miss, that it is the business of religion to preside over our inner world—to rule the thoughts, to quiet the passions, to elevate the will. It is also true, and it is a truth far less understood, that the condition of that inner world itself determines our religion—that, precisely in proportion as the affections are pure and deep, the conscience clear and strong, and the imagination familiar with great and beautiful examples, are heavenly realities discerned, and the windows of Reason thrown open to the empyrean light. In the mind barren with selfishness, the very root is withered from which the blossom and the shade of holy hope must spring. To one who dishonours himself by sloth and excess, God becomes invisible and incredible. From him who quickens his business, or hurries in his talk, in order to push aside the whispers of a smaller but a truer voice, the awful form of Duty sorrowfully retires, and lets him believe that life is given to play his own game, and not to serve another's will. From such man, the very power of perception itself is absent: they look through no transparent medium, but through a glass clouded with earthly steams: so that, demonstrate as you will the realities beyond, they cannot see. Moral and emotional disorder as effectually excludes religious truth, as intellectual mania vitiates ordinary judgment; and the best schooling will teach nothing till the wounded nature is healed, and the fever of the soul abates. Both the theoretical doubts, and the practical deadness of religion will remain, I believe, untouched, till they are dealt with by this rule. They are but symptoms, which it is useless directly to attack, and which can vanish only with an altered mind. Till the soul attains some loftiness, by the free and faithful activity of its best powers, faith is not really possible to it: and when it has assumed this temper, misgivings will trouble it no more. Men rise into holy truth as into a vision denied to the low level and sluggish atmosphere of a flat spirit: you must lift their feet upon the mountains, and make them feel the wing of the upland air, and pierce the cloud-belt that floats between earth and sky: and then, amid the wilderness of glories, they will discern the palace of the Infinite, and feel the silence of the Eternal.

* * * * *

I have also wished to elicit the moral beauty, the inherent sublimity, and the natural authority, of Christianity. Without the full feeling of these characteristics, I have feared that an appeal to the external attestation of preternatural events would produce a feeble, or even an unhappy, impression; while on the other hand, the largest amount of historical belief, when gained, can do no more than awaken this feeling, and bring us in discipleship to the feet of Christ. The imperfect media through which the incidents of the Advent are transmitted to our knowledge, may render it difficult to obtain assurance as to many of its external facts. But they leave no doubt as to that grand central figure, in which all that is august and tender in the religion is collected and impersonated. To look upon that form, blending the majesty of the Prophet with the sweetness of the child; to hear that voice of grace and truth, revealing the open secrets of the heart, and, with the ease of self-renunciation, giving precepts that have the depth of prayer; to watch the vicissitudes of his mind, the flush of early hope, the shade of deepening grief, the light of constant trust; to follow him to the beach, the village home, the leper's haunt, the cross, the skies—and to feel, as he speaks to the various lot and many-coloured quilt of men, the penetration of his simplicity—if this be not enough to bring us to his feet, I do not think that we are of his sheep, or shall ever know his voice. If we discern the perfectness of his spirit, if we recognise it as divine, is anything wanting to the sense of its authority? And if we do not discern this, could any coercion of outward demonstration create the feeling? Nothing surely can have authority with us, save that which touches the seat of all authority—the conscience. Hence, to harmonise the teaching of Christ with the moral intuitions of the mind, to show how they raise us to a consciousness of duty and capacity unfelt before, to clear away the confused rivalry of other images, and make it apparent that, in all human history, he stands at the unapproached summit, the mingling point of the ideal and the real; this has been the purpose I have followed with the fullest heart.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

I HAVE often said, like a great many other people at this time of the year, "how sorry I am that summer is over! Now, very soon, all the leaves will fade from the trees, the rain and wind will sweep over the dismantled countryside, and we shall no longer be able to lie on the sweet grass, stroll through shady woodlands, or gather flowers in the garden."

I don't think I shall ever talk like that again; at least, I am quite certain that it is wrong to speak so regretfully of the glories of the summer, as if autumn—and even winter—had no beauty of their own. And, remembering as I do how lovely the lanes and fields looked in a certain part of Shropshire not more than a week ago. I can't help thinking that some of the poets who write so beautifully about the seasons, should write more verses than they do about September and October—yes, and about the four cold months which come after these as well!

How quietly autumn steals upon us! She makes no fuss: she is not as young as spring, and has not such high spirits; consequently, you do not hear her voice in the distance before she approaches, and, in fact, you think very little about her until the creeper-trails on the garden wall are seen to be changing colour, and the leaves begin to fall one by one from the trees. But all the time, while you, perhaps, have been enjoying a delightful holiday, Nature has been painting her autumnal tints in the fields, and orchards, and hedges; and now we have to realise as we walk along the lanes what a wonderful artist, as well as a great provider, she is.

Look at those delicately-tinted crab-apples—these purple sloes covered with soft bloom! See how full of scarlet berries the thorny branches, which in June bore wild roses, have become! And did you ever see so many blackberries in your life before? One could count them by the thousand; and, good as they are to eat, they are things of beauty too, as they hang in rich black clusters on the brambles. As I write these words, I imagine that I am taking you with me down an old lane near the Wrekin, in the quiet county where I have been staying. It is a very narrow lane, now almost entirely unused, and, in some parts, so overgrown, that you have to put the boughs aside as you go along, while your feet sink deep in the long grass which carpets the winding track. They say it is very pretty here in May. I know it is in September, when the hazel-nuts crowd the bushes, and the hedges are decked in green and red. Sometimes you pass under the shade of an oak-tree, from which hundreds of acorns have fallen upon the ground. There are the tiny cups, from which some of them have broken away, lying about ready for the fairies to drink out of when they come this way!

Bracken, too, grows in my lane, great wide fronds of it, just beginning to turn brown at the tips, and here and there you see a fragile harebell nodding on its slender stalk. Sometimes one catches sight of a spray of late honeysuckle, which reminds one of the summer just gone; while the shining holly-leaves beneath conjure up a very different picture, in which ruddy fire-light and merry faces play an important part. Then the track grows steeper and at last loses itself on the wooded slopes of the Wrekin, where the way is strewn with fir-needles, and the blackberry bushes are everywhere creeping up the hill. Well, all these colours will fade—all these beauties vanish—very soon! The last rosy apple will be pulled from the bough, the last ripe berry from the hedge. What then? Now comes the time for work, and for treasuring up delightful memories of the days that are gone; for all the lovely things which you have seen during the bright months of this splendid year cannot fade from memory as easily as they faded from sight, but remain to provide many a sweet and helpful thought for us to ponder over and be grateful for, and act upon, when the days seem dull and cheerless. But days very rarely are quite dull and cheerless! Even the dripping branches on a rainy day have a beauty of their own; and the darkest winter sky sometimes shows a rift of wonderful golden light. Always look for the loveliness in things. Searching for beauty is like trying to be good. We must keep right on, as that pretty creeper does which climbs over the sides of our south-country houses. In the colder north, it is harder for it to grow; and those who set it think sometimes that the frail tendrils will never "take hold." But in time the delicate, finger-like leaves begin to grope their way up the brickwork, and spread out in a fairy-like pattern, till by and by someone comes to the house who has been away two or three months, and says: "How beautifully the creeper is growing, and how pretty it looks!"

I think it is something like that with us; so let us all try to "take hold," and make use of every sunbeam and shower that is poured upon us by the gentle, helping hand of Nature.

LAURA G. ACKROYD.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any News-agent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are:—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER ...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR ...	3	4
PER YEAR ...	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE ...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE ...	2	10	0
PER COLUMN ...	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN ...	0	3	8
BACK PAGE ...	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, OCTOBER 21, 1899.

THE NEW REFORMATION.

MRS. HUMPHRY WARD contributes to the current number of the Nineteenth Century an article on "The New Reformation," in which, following up her recent letter to the Times, she makes an earnest plea for a "conscience clause for the laity" of the Church of England. With this article should be read Mrs. WARD's paper on "Faith and Opinion," read on Monday week at a meeting of the Christian Conference, which we are privileged to print in full in our present issue. In this paper it is shown what are the real objects of faith, in which an abiding unity of Christian fellowship may be found, and how hopeless have proved the older attempts at dogmatic uniformity. In the Nineteenth Century article Mrs. WARD first deals very forcibly with the reply of Lord HALIFAX to her Times letter that the comprehensive tolerance for which she asked was impossible, since the doctrine of the Virgin birth of CHRIST—as to which, among others, she had pleaded for revision—was "the central truth of Christianity," "the very rock on which it is founded." Mrs. WARD shows how idle is the plea that the method of critical and historical research is discredited, because the conclusions of more recent scholars have set the dates of New Testament books, as affirmed by the school of BAUR, back again more nearly into line with the received tradition. The meaning of this result is simply as HARNACK himself has shown, that less time is allowed than formerly—and yet ample time considering the circumstances—for the remarkable development of thought enshrined in the New Testament; and the real stress of historical inquiry is now engaged, not so much with the date and authorship of books, as with the matter of the book itself. Study of the two centuries before the coming of CHRIST has yielded rich results, especially in the interpretation of apocalyptic literature, showing how much of the doctrine afterwards taken up into the thought of the Christian Church already existed in the mind and heart of Jewish faith. Thus the strongest reasons are adduced for the relief of earnest, thoughtful Churchmen, aware of these results of recent scholarship, from the necessity of professing to believe such doctrines as that of the Virgin birth, the descent into hell, and the ascension of CHRIST, which are included in the so-called "Apostles' Creed."

The reply of the orthodox majority is that whoever denies these doctrines must find a religious home outside the Church, that no "Unitarian" doctrine can possibly be admitted, since that would be destructive of the very foundations of the Church.

And yet, says Mrs. WARD, we claim to be Christians still. We see how those doctrines were evolved in the natural process of Christian thought in those early days, and they are not essential to the mind of CHRIST.

To be a Christian is to adopt at once Christ's doctrine of God, and his view of the kind and nature of that life which leads us to and reconciles us with God. It is also to feel Christ himself as a Reconciler and Revealer, and the influence of his life, historically working in us, as a healing and impelling force. It is to stand for Christ; against the selfish and material elements of the world. It is to tenderly and humbly eager to obey the few and simple directions that he laid down as to the outward rites of his society, or ecclesia—to bring our children to baptism, unto God, in the name of the Lord Jesus—to partake of his memorial feast, as the symbol and food of our mystical union with him, with the brethren, and with God. It is to recognise the Kingdom of Heaven, the striving life of "faith," and the society of the faithful, as that to which Christ calls us, and to own himself as its King and Leader. It is so to live this life in his love and service, and in the faith which flows from his heart into ours, that when death comes our dearest hope may be—within the general, tremulous, yet inextinguishable hope of humanity—that beyond the darkness and storm of the great change we shall in some way, inconceivable to human imagination, find our Master, and yield our humble account to him, and know him at last more truly even than Mary or Peter or John knew him on earth, in the presence and the light of God.

Many members of the Church of England now hold such a view of the meaning of their Christian discipleship, and Mrs. WARD asks for them, Why should they be driven out of the Church? Why may not such relief be afforded to them, that they may conscientiously remain in the Church of their baptism, frankly recognised as rightfully there in spite of their heresy, and welcomed to its communion? Might not a broader formula be offered to candidates for confirmation who wished it, asking simply a confession of their desire to take upon themselves "the service of God and the following of CHRIST?" And might there not be clergymen appointed in each diocese, in sympathy with such broad views, to undertake the training of those claiming the conscience clause? Thus, while there would be still the doctrines of the orthodox majority retained in the public worship of the Church, such members would have cleared their conscience, and could peacefully remain within the fold where they desired to be. "If we are driven out, because the personal relief we claim is denied us, we go with a sense of wrong and exile, protesting in our Lord's name against a separation which is a denial of his spirit and an infringement of his command."

We are not Unitarians (writes Mrs. WARD), and with all our personal respect and gratitude towards the Christian Society which contains amongst its members the greatest religious thinker of our day, we have no wish to be Unitarians. The word "Unitarian" has a definite historical meaning. The Unitarians are the left wing of the English Presbyterians, who have developed as they have done under the "open trusts" and more liberal conditions of membership which originally differentiated them from the Independents. Their divergence—through their Presbyterian ancestry—from the national Church was originally a difference partly of doctrine, but still more of Church government. The influence of science and criticism have worked upon their modern life as they have upon the life of the Church, but through different channels, and taking other forms. The growth of liberal thought within the English Church has a history and stamp of its own, just as the school of Ritschl and Harnack has a special history within the Prussian Church. The intellectual influences may be the same; the local religious forms on which they work are quite different. To us the Church forms are natural and dear.

In this passage it is clear that Mrs. WARD is speaking of "the Unitarians," not as the holders of a special form of doctrine, but as the members of a separate religious community, and her meaning is that those who feel with her—like the old English Presbyterians—do not wish to become Dissenters, but rather that the Church should be so broadened that they might conscientiously remain within the fold. The actual doctrinal position which Mrs. WARD has described as held by many members of the Church of England, or those who desire still to be included in the fellowship of that Church, is practically the same as that of many of "the Unitarians." The difference is that such a broad interpretation of Christian truth as they hold has a natural and unchallenged place in the Free Churches into which many Unitarians are gathered, while its right to recognition within the Church of England has to be contended for as a well-nigh forlorn hope.

With such a plea we must have the warmest sympathy, as with that eloquent appeal which closes Mrs. WARD's article, that this country through the persistence of a Ritualist clergy may not suffer the lamentable divorce between the religious instinct and the rational life which, in countries dominated by the Roman Catholic Church, has had such disastrous results. But even if the Church of England should refuse that call of God, which Mrs. WARD recognises in the movements of fresh knowledge in our own day, and the Protestant principle of free criticism and personal judgment should be driven out of the Church, much as we should lament it, we could not on that account despair of the religion of the people of England. For the communion of the Anglican Church, so narrowed in sectarian exclusiveness, would be less than ever the Church of England, and the strong, free life of our people would be poured, even as it is largely poured already, into other channels of faith and religious activity.

We cannot wish for the Broad Churchmen a disappointment of their earnest aspirations, and yet we have the vision of a great spiritual unity, which may arise into visible activity, even if the outward unity of the Church of England should be shattered into fragments. The New Reformation, in spite of discouragements and apparent retrogression in prominent quarters, yet is making its way in many different communions with resistless force; and it is for those of us who are members of Free Churches, to see to it that we are doing our part, true to the great ideal of that for which we hope and pray.

In our fellowship there may be already what is desired in the wider communion of the Church of England; and if the heretics should be ultimately driven out into exile, we ought to be able to offer a veritable religious home, where the deepest reverence may be glad to be at rest, where a strong and free spiritual life is nurtured not in sectarian narrowness, but with the broader outlook and the true spirit of catholic inclusiveness and Christian charity, where work may be done, and faith and hope may be nurtured, that should be worthy of the best life of our people and of the one Catholic Church of the living God.

HAPPY the religious movement which gives birth to powers that are fated to excel it; that breeds not "pale solitary doves" of meditation, but eagles that soar above it. This is the eternal law manifest in human history, that what men desire and love and worship, the beautiful order that wins the assent of their souls, that they are ready to work for and sacrifice themselves for, till in the fulness of time the first in beauty becomes first in might. —Samuel M. Crethers.

FAITH AND OPINION.*

BY MRS. HUMPHRY WARD.

To those of us who have read, with pleasure and assent, the very interesting lecture by M. Sabatier, which has been translated into English and published in this country—who are aware, moreover, of his influence and work in Protestant France—the opportunity of hearing his paper to-day has been very welcome. Those who have the courage to express these things within the borders of the organised Churches are not yet a very numerous host. If what they have to say finds an echo in our hearts, our first duty, it seems to me, is to come forward and show our sympathy.

The whole controversy which M. Sabatier raises is one which must, above all, force upon the mind the oft-debated question, What do we mean by "faith"? Do we mean in Catholic language a "pia affectio ad credendum," which having given weight to ordinary arguments of history, or common sense, passes beyond them—discards, indeed, and contemns them—in order to fasten upon the ultimate and only certainty, "the things divinely revealed and promised" in the Word of God, as discerned, and propounded, and interpreted by the Church? Or do we mean faith in the Lutheran sense, as "a lively and solid trust in the grace and mercy of God," conditioned, however, by a strict doctrine of inspiration—which substitutes the Bible for the Church as the supreme judge, and confides its interpretation to the "illuminated Christian conscience"? Or is it to be faith in the modern sense which is given to it by Professor Green when he says that "reason"—not a book or a Church—"is the source alike of faith and knowledge," and faith is "a personal and conscious relation of the man to God," carrying with it a new insight into the things of God, and a new energy of love," protesting at the same time against making faith dependent upon certain past events or documents, or holding that belief in these events "not different in kind from the belief that Cæsar was murdered on the Ides of March, must be an integral part of it"?

The first thing to be noticed about these descriptions of faith, perhaps, is that they all of them suppose some preliminary work of the reason. The Catholic admits that before "divine faith" comes into being there must be a reasoning process, depending on "motives of credibility," which inclines a man towards the Catholic Church rather than towards any other of the world's manifold forms of religion. The very name of Protestant, again, implies a reasoning process which has substituted one ultimate judge for another—the Bible for the Church—and made the living Christian conscience, guided by the Spirit, and not ecclesiastical tradition, the ultimate interpreter. While in Professor Green's case the matter is, of course, plain enough—"Reason is the source both of faith and knowledge"—and in one mode or other of itself covers the whole field.

For otherwise, as the Catholic perceives no less clearly than his non-Catholic neighbour, without this preliminary work of reason, faith might be exercised on wrong objects. There would be no guarantee that it would not fall into superstition and fanaticism, and mistake its own fancies for the Word of God. The Christian religion, moreover, is not the only religion that offers scriptures and authority. Some cognitive, discriminating work of the reason, therefore, there must be, before the work of faith is set up.

The whole question, then, is really a question of relation and proportion. The Catholic Church demands that the action of the natural reason, in matters of religion, shall cease comparatively soon. As soon as "divine faith" is induced, whole tracts of knowledge are withdrawn from the free exercise of the reason. The inspiration of all Scripture, including the Apocrypha, the history and authority of the Church, the "Apostolical and Ecclesiastical traditions," together with "all other things which the Sacred Canons and General Councils, and particularly the holy Council of Trent and the Ecumenical Vatican Council have delivered, defined, and declared, and in particular concerning the supremacy and infallible teaching of the Roman Pontiff"—these are no longer matters for the reason, they have passed into the domain of divine faith, and are to be accepted by that mysterious faculty, on the word of the Church.

The Protestant, of course, enormously enlarges the field of reason. He sacrifices ecclesiastical tradition en bloc, and brings innumerable doctrines and practices which for the Catholic are matters of faith to the bar of criticism and of common sense. He pushes the barrier back; but he does not remove it. The Scripture, and certain doctrines which he believes to issue from Scripture, are still to him extra-reasonable. Not that he would admit that they involve any real antagonism to reason, but he would maintain that reason is not their ultimate judge. Also, if reason seems to destroy them, reason must be held back by force—Luther and Calvin were agreed here—for the ultimate judge is not reason but faith, which is spiritually given and can only be spiritually verified. To this the modern Anglican adds a modified doctrine of authority, which is not only intended to steady and guide the Christian soul in its decision, but also propounds a larger content to faith. He believes that too much was sacrificed in the Protestant revolt, and he returns to the undivided Church in search of a less discredited authority.

Meanwhile another form of Christianity refuses altogether to restrict the work of reason in religion; it breaks down the barriers, indeed, between reason and faith; it declares that "reason is the source alike of faith and knowledge," and that the reasoning life is only another aspect of that divine life in man which expresses itself most perfectly and most intimately through the experience of faith. Faith is only necessary, it seems to say, because the work of the reason is for ever imperfect. Beyond the utmost range of knowledge there will always remain a region where only faith can tread. But it is the function of reason to be perpetually annexing and settling domains which were once given over to faith alone; and if we could recognise it aright, the spirit which moves us to faith is also the same spirit which perpetually moves us to these annexations, and to the never-ending task of reasonable thought.

* A Paper read at a meeting of the Christian Conference at St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross, Monday, Oct. 9, after a Paper by Professor A. Sabatier on "The Necessary Renewal of Ancient Dogmatic Formulas."

The whole question, then, is a question of limit and degree. No religious person will question that at some point or other faith takes its rise, or that faith is the divinest element of man's spiritual life.

But where is it to begin? What are matters of faith? Can any statement of history or literature become matter of faith in the religious sense? Yes, we may perhaps reply—on conditions. History enters into faith—becomes part of our philosophy—when reason has done its work upon it. Faith, we have seen, issues from the reasoning process, and exists because that process is for ever imperfect. But clearly such a view implies that we must have carried the reasoning process as far as we can. We must let it expend its full strength on these matters of history and literature which are to be submitted to faith, and only when we have loyally done the best we can with those powers which make us reasoning beings, in contact with a world of experience, may we rise to the higher trusts and inferences of faith,—or in other words, take our history up into our faith. But the perpetual tendency of the human mind is to draw the line too soon; to cut short the reasoning process, and so to confound matters of faith with matters of criticism. The effects of faith are discernible in the moral life and temper; the effects of criticism are effects upon opinion, and this opinion, whatever it may be, is not faith, is eternally not faith, however constant may be the inclination of men to confound the two.

In many conspicuous instances we are all agreed as to the error of this tendency. The Roman Church confounded the Ptolemaic astronomy with faith—in which, indeed, she was no worse than orthodox Protestantism—and it took her two hundred years to make the official confession of her blunder. Roman, Protestant, or Jewish orthodoxy long identified the Mosaic account of creation and the Pentateuchal chronology with faith. It is hardly too much to say that, except in a few of the backwaters of religious life, the identification has disappeared. Then, on the literary side, faith has been identified with the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch, or the literal inspiration of the Bible. The publication of Richard Simon's "Critical History of the Old Testament" threw the great Bossuet into dismay. In the interests of faith he secured the burning of the whole edition; and Protestantism was no less vigorous than Catholicism in denouncing the whole nascent school of Old Testament criticism as impious and irreligious. Two hundred years pass by, and we have the Catholic Congress at Freiburg im Breisgau of last year, and the widespread transformation of opinion on Old Testament interpretation, amongst ourselves, and throughout Protestantism, to remind us once more that not in critical or historical opinion can faith ever make her abiding city. Opinion changes, and she remains.

Again—for six hundred years innumerable minds within the Roman Church identified faith with the genuineness of the Pseudo-Isidorian Decretals. They ranked for a large section of the educated class as a part of faith, and when Cardinal Cusa brought them under criticism in the fifteenth century there was much distress and bitter opposition. One can easily imagine the feelings of some old and pious scholar for whom the Decretals had entered into faith. Nevertheless, faith was victoriously disengaged, and the alien material fell away. So with that most curious of literary phenomena—the acceptance within the Church, for more than a thousand years, of the supposed writings of Dionysius, the Areopagite. Popes, Councils, Doctors had accepted them as aids to faith. Thousands of religious souls had been nourished on their mystical visions—had taken them up into faith. But the scholars of the Renaissance brought them within the scope of criticism, set faith free of them; and Scaliger suffered therefore the extremest penalties of Jesuit rage and calumny. But Catholic faith to-day is free of the Decretals, and free of the Areopagite—thanks to the critics.

Are we to suppose that the process has ceased to-day?—that we are no longer in danger of confounding faith and opinion, and endeavouring by arbitrary methods to stop the march of that criticism which has really shown itself in history as a delivering force, rooted in energies no less indispensable, and no less divine, than those which make for faith? Far from it. The old confusions are still going on, and the old denunciations and exclusions. We are come, indeed, to matters which we suppose to be far more vital to us than the Ptolemaic astronomy, or the Mosaic chronology. A critic tells us, perhaps, that certain portions of the Gospels, or the Acts are not history, but poetry or legend; that the Fourth Gospel is the freely composed work of an Ephesian presbyter of the early second century; that the Book of Revelation is a Jewish apocalypse interwoven with Christian additions; that even the Apostles' Creed contains earlier and later deposits, and statements of very different authority; and that the Nicene Creed is the product of Greek philosophy working on the soil of the Gospel. And instantly there is a cry that faith is attacked, and those who hold these opinions are to be excluded from the household of faith. But the whole history of the Christian past is there to warn us against such feelings and such action. The opinions may be true or untrue. But they cannot have anything to do with faith, if history and experience are to count for anything. Faith cannot possibly depend upon conclusions about documents and past facts which are wholly within the competence of the reasoning process to decide. Not here, surely, is to be the test of Christian fellowship, unless the whole experience of the past is a useless illusion.

What, then, is the test? Where can we take our stand? Only, I would reply, on a certain attitude of the soul, a certain disposition of the heart; for "with the heart man believeth unto righteousness." At its highest, this disposition issues in the utterance of St. Paul, "Not I live, but Christ liveth in me"; at its lowest, it is a yearning towards Christian fellowship, an inchoate, often half-conscious sympathy, which through all intellectual difficulty or moral distress still approaches and still loves. It is, in essence, the passion for the morally better, for the next step higher, which is the source of the world's good; but in the Christian Church it is coupled with the recognition of God and the acceptance of Christ. Under what conditions the mind yields this acceptance, what it precisely means by it, in what framework of ideas it sets the love which impels it—is that yours to ask? "There is no one which shall do a work in my name who will lightly speak evil of me—forbid him not," said the Lord. No one—outside the ground of mere habit and convention—will join the services of the Christian Church, no one will desire to share in the Christian Eucharist, no one will enter upon the fight with evil in the name of Christ, in whose mind, at least, the germs of Christian love and service are not present. Are you going to set up the old barriers of opinion against him, which have been already moved so often, and call them faith? Are you going once more, and for ever, to confuse faith and opinion, and under the guise of assent to a dogma to exact a particular historical or critical judgment from the Christian soul?

The orthodox majority, as it is called, of any Christian Church may indeed do all these things—only too effectually. But the great process marches nevertheless; what was faith yesterday becomes opinion to-morrow, and that without affecting in the least those great moral and spiritual realities on which the relation of the soul to God and to the Son of Man ultimately rests. Meanwhile suffering and loss and impoverishment come from the old perennial mistake. Difference is magnified, the sense of brotherhood lessened. And yet, to quote a Greek moralist, with the alteration of one phrase, "Every matter has two handles, one of which will bear taking hold of, the other not. If thy brother differ from thee, lay not hold of the matter by this that he differs from thee; for by this handle the matter will not bear taking hold of. But rather lay hold of it by this that he is thy brother, thy born mate; and thou wilt take hold of it by that which will bear handling."

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

THE new session at Manchester College was opened on Monday afternoon by the delivery of a public address by the Rev. W. E. Addis, M.A., the newly-appointed Professor of Old Testament Literature. The session opens with nine full divinity students and seven special students, including two Indian students. There are also six undergraduates at Oxford colleges or elsewhere, who are preparing to enter Manchester College on taking their degrees. The common residence for the students, in the houses belonging to the College in Holywell, is now opened, Mr. Addis also being in residence, as Warden, in the adjoining house. There was a large attendance of visitors at the opening address.

OPENING ADDRESS BY THE REV. W. E. ADDIS, M.A.

The Address dealt first with the nature of knowledge. True knowledge, Mr. Addis said, was precise and exact; the ideal scholar was one who refrained absolutely from using words he did not thoroughly understand. He was content to know a little well. He was independent, though modest; he tried to see for himself, though he accepted most thankfully the advice and guidance of more experienced persons. Still, he would not be the slave of great names. He did not forget that there was a fashion in opinion as in dress:

he brought all theory to the test of fact. It was worse than useless to have a smattering of many sciences. The danger was imminent in the present day, when all the gates of knowledge were opened wide, and especially in a great University. Even the unlimited access to books had its perils as well as advantages. It was very easy for a young man to waste his time in strenuous and eager idleness, to hear about a vast variety of subjects, without seriously studying, let alone mastering any one of them. On the other hand, they must not undervalue knowledge because it was elementary. They could not understand the general sense of an author till they thoroughly comprehended the words he used and the construction of his sentences. That was true all the more in proportion to the greatness of the author studied. A man of genius did not fling about words at random, but was careful to clothe noble thoughts in noble form. The young theologian could plead no exemption from that kind of patient labour. How, for example, could he enter the spirit of St. Paul's epistles without studying the language in which the Apostle wrote, as it existed in St. Paul's time, and in the circle within which he lived and moved. There was good sense in the old adage, Bonus grammaticus bonus theologus; and the divines of the English Church, men like Lightfoot and Westcott in their own day, had laboured with success in theological learning because their training in grammatical scholarship had been so thorough and so sound. The study of language was not dry, when conducted on rational principles; it was the study of human thought finding its utterance in speech.

The student must exercise discriminating judgment in the object matter of his study, and bear in mind the difference between ascertained fact and mere hypothesis. Hypothesis, even when it did not rise above a low degree of probability, might be exceedingly serviceable, because it could at least furnish a basis for argument. But they must begin with facts, which were the common ground on which all differences between contending schools must be fought out and settled; only on such a firm foundation could sure results be built up. And they must understand the relative importance of diverse facts. To know the date of an author and the genuineness of his works would be of little value if the works themselves were not worth reading, or if they did not enter into the spirit of the work. Criticism, they must remember, was only means to an end. To know all the theories as to the origin of the Iliad or as to the language of Shakespeare and the authenticity and chronology of the plays, was deplorable if there was no true enjoyment of those glorious works. And so with the theological student, there was real danger of knowing a great deal that had been said in Germany and elsewhere about the Bible, while ignorant of the Bible itself. The great question for them was, What could the Bible do to promote the Christian life in the souls of men and in the world.

There was a great gulf fixed between books bad or indifferent and good books, and a vital distinction to be made between books that were good and the very small number of those which were the best, the great masterpieces of all literature. Young men were strongly attracted to the literature of their own day. That was right and just, for such literature came home to them with special force, interpreting their own thoughts, dealing with the conditions under which they lived. Nevertheless, the greatest books demanded close and constant study till they were known and loved. The world had pronounced judgment; and that judgment seldom, if ever, erred. The classics of any language had proved their vitality. It was worth while to try to find in the greatest writers what others better qualified to judge had ever found. To do so would cost time and trouble; but the study of a great work over and over again became more and more fascinating, more and more profitable. Such books did great things for them. They enlarged their horizon, and helped them to grow tolerant and wise, filled them with noble thoughts and interpreted life for them. Then, as years advanced, the experience of their own life interpreted the books for them and made them living counsellors and friends. He who set that hope before him would welcome any information that would direct him in his study of great literature, but he would never suffer a history of literature to replace the literature itself or allow the most learned notes to relieve him from the primal necessity of interpreting the great author for himself.

Further, their studies must be connected, so that they might escape the danger of neglecting one in the supposed interests of another and of attempting to become specialists in vain, because they made the attempt too soon. The history of Israel could not be rightly studied, apart from that of the Assyrian, Babylonian and Persian empires, and of Alexander and his successors. Church history could not be separated from the secular history of any period.

The Greek Testament could not be read without some acquaintance with the grammar and history of the Greek language. The principles of criticism were identical, whether applied to Herodotus or to the Books of Samuel. If they mastered Professor Jebb's brief introduction to the study of Homer they were furnished with an admirable model for the study of Old Testament criticism. The philosopher could not content himself with abstract reasoning, he had to consider the thought of God as it had been evolved in the general history of mankind, in Holy Scripture, in the doctrines of the Catholic Church and of the Reformation. The principles of economic science they could apply most usefully to the study of the Hebrew prophets, who dealt with a time when Phœnician trade added greatly to the wealth of a few, and enabled them to enslave the peasant proprietors who were impoverished by war with their northern neighbours. And so to the New Testament and early Christian times the same principles might be applied.

Study, they must always remember, was to draw out and develop the hidden powers of the mind. It must make them zealous for accuracy, which was another name for truth. Such a habit of mind could not fail to tell upon their work as ministers. Business men were aware that accuracy was the condition of their own success, and they were quick to discover it in others. A man's words told when he was trained to avoid exaggeration, slipshod methods, the pretence of knowing what he did not know, the pedantic ostentation of the little knowledge he had. Knowledge should teach them the true perspective, the relative importance of truth. If they were patient they would learn the meaning and essential truths of doctrines they could not accept without some reserve, and would not make the fatal mistake of indulging to their own intellectual and moral hurt in acrid controversy. Truth, said the proverb, stands on two legs, though that false idol which the fanatic mistakes for truth always stands on one leg. Reading should enlarge their sympathies and teach them good taste, and he might add that a sense of the ridiculous was among the most valuable gifts they could derive from literature. True, it was born with a man, but they all had it in some degree, and they could cultivate it, in order that they might not make themselves more ridiculous than need be. They could not learn without much self-denial and self-restraint. For teacher and taught there were difficulties which could not be overcome save by dogged resolution. That discipline, that wholesome asceticism, which all study worthy of the name invited, reacted upon the moral character. Surely it should make them modest, faithful, manly, real. There had been good soldiers of Christ's who fought the good fight with weapons which were not intellectual, who made no use of books. But no such course was open to them. They were there to study: to them neglect of study was neglect of duty, and if they did not mind their books they were deceiving themselves and their religion was vain.

In conclusion, he referred to the collegiate life on which they were entering, and asked them to consider how much was implied in a common table and the common life which bound them together. Small as their society was it gave opportunity enough for cultivating that spirit of wise toleration which made little account of differences in antecedents or outward circumstance, that kindly feeling which made men one in spite of differences of taste, opinion, or habit. They entered on the new College year with the hope that the esprit de corps which had always been strong among them might grow stronger than ever, and prove the utter death of selfishness and vulgarity, and of that sensitive vanity which made a man querulous and egotistical, a torment to himself and others. The more men of different sorts could be brought together with mutual goodwill and respect, the better, provided they did not suffer society to rob them of their time of study. So they might form friendships which would be a joy and blessing in after years, and begin to know something of men and the way to deal with them. As Christian ministers they would have to be pastors, and should never degenerate into mere preachers. They had to comfort and encourage. They had to take an interest in the affairs of others, an interest kindly but never intrusive; they had to attract and direct the young; sometimes they had to make peace; always they had to show an example of patience, forbearance, tact, and common sense. For that great work College life furnished an excellent introduction, while the solitary student was at a manifest disadvantage. So they would go forth to their labour, anxious to learn, anxious to help each other, mistrusting themselves, and trusting God.

ELLAND BI-CENTENARY.

THE Bi-centenary of the congregation now worshipping in Christ Church, Elland, was celebrated on Sunday, Oct. 8, and the following Wednesday, although the congregation seems to date back to the year 1685. A meeting-house was opened in September, 1697, Oliver Heywood being the preacher. John Lister is mentioned as the first minister of the congregation, and after him came Jeremiah Bairstow, whose ministry was the longest in the record of the congregation, lasting from 1699 to 1731. The tablet erected to his memory in the parish church recorded that he was "a truly venerable man, if the science of letters, probity of manners, and sanctity of life have any claim to that character." From 1771 to 1782 John Houghton was minister, who had been at Platt Chapel and Gee Cross before coming to Elland, and was the father of Pendlebury Houghton, who was once minister at the Octagon, Norwich, and at Paradise-street Chapel, Liverpool. In 1866 the congregation moved into Christ Church, which was opened in June of that year, by the Rev. P. W. Clayden, the minister of the High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham. For some years after 1884 Christ Church was supplied by lay-preachers, and in 1897 the present minister the Rev. James Taylor, entered on the charge.

In celebration of the bicentenary the Rev. J. TAYLOR preached a special sermon on Friday evening, Oct. 8, his subject being "Our Church: A Look into the Past." Taking for his text part of the third verse of the Epistle of Jude, "Contentend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints," he spoke of the long line of honoured ministers who had served the congregation in the old chapel at Southend, and of their close association with the first educational efforts in the town and district of Elland, as they were severally masters of the Brooksbank School from its foundation in 1712 to 1860, when the school and the chapel trusts were separated. He also drew attention to the principle of freedom on which the congregation was founded and traced briefly how it had, in virtue of this freedom, left Calvinism and reached to Unitarianism. Mr. Taylor's sermon is reported verbatim in the local papers.

On Wednesday, Oct. 11, a special service was held at 3.30. The Rev. J. HANSON GREEN, B.A., of Lydgate, conducted the devotional service; and the Rev. H. ENFIELD DOWSON, B.A., of Gee Cross, preached the Commemoration Sermon. Mr. Dowson delivered a very impressive discourse from the words, "One generation goeth, and another generation cometh" (Eccles. i. 4).

The church was tastefully decorated for the celebration services, and the congregation was a large one on Wednesday afternoon. After service, tea was served in the schoolroom, and a good number of friends from Halifax, Huddersfield, Leeds, and other places, who had been present at the service, partook of an ample repast. Mr. C. P. Trevelyan, M.P. for the Elland Division, Lady Trevelyan, Mrs. G. H. Smith, of Halifax, and Miss Brown, of Leeds, paid a visit to the meeting.

At the evening meeting, the Rev. A. CHALMERS, President of the Yorkshire

Unitarian Union, took the chair, and spoke at some length about the origin and history of many old chapels of the district, and of the heroism and suffering of the Rev. Oliver Heywood, who did so much to plant some of the old congregations in the West Riding.

The Rev. E. C. JONES, M.A., of Bradford, proposed, and the Rev. A. W. FOX, M.A., of Todmorden, seconded, a resolution of congratulation and good wishes to the congregation on behalf of the Yorkshire Union and other friends present.

The Rev. J. TAYLOR briefly responded on behalf of the congregation.

The next resolution was one of thanks to the Revs. H. E. Dowson and J. H. Green for their services that afternoon. This was proposed by Mr. WILLIAM BROOK, the oldest member of the congregation, and was seconded by the Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., of Leeds, in a speech full of earnestness and of friendship for the Elland Church.

The Revs. H. E. DOWSON and J. H. GREEN replied, Mr. Dowson speaking of his deep interest in our old chapels and of the cause which they represent.

Mr. F. CLAYTON, of Leeds, also expressed his good wishes in proposing a vote of thanks to the Chairman and all other friends who had contributed to the success and pleasure of the day's proceedings.

The singing of the hymn, "Ye servants of the Lord," and the benediction pronounced by the Rev. A. Chalmers, brought the meeting to a close. The church was well filled at the evening meeting.

PROMOTING THE GOSPEL.

FROM A MINISTER'S POINT OF VIEW.

IF a man has not got his congregation solid and square around him, he cannot succeed in doing much by way of propagating his gospel. And nothing helps a man half so much as that intimate knowledge of and acquaintance with the members of his Church which systematic and conscientious visiting ensures. For the Gospel with us is a wide and inclusive term. It embraces infinitely more than mere speculative theology, which may be obsolete to-morrow and be changed many times within a century; it is a message of peace and goodwill, as well as a series of arguments about the Future Life, Human Origin and Redemptive Grace. That remark, however, applies particularly to one's own people. The world of folk believe in a gospel of peace and goodwill as much as we do; therefore we must appeal to them on other and intellectual grounds. First, the peace and harmony and enthusiasm and active life within the Church, and an eagerness all round to let others know the religious beliefs held, and a desire to bring other men into an intellectual agreement with us: get this, and then you can proceed.

Again, let us not be misled by those people who say that we must rely entirely upon the young people growing up in our midst for the maintenance and the increase of Church membership. This is a delusion and a snare, and I think it is an overstatement of fact due to the very grievous leakage of our young folks in past years. A lamentable percentage of them have drifted away and abandoned the faith and worship of their fathers; and I am sorry to think that probably they never truly knew what the faith of their fathers was! Of course, all the scholars who pass through our schools, and all the children born in the families of our Churches, ought to grow up into Unitarians; at any rate they ought to have a knowledge of what we stand for religiously, and in what we differ from other and orthodox Churches. Sunday is a heavy day for a minister if he habitually teaches in his Sunday-school, and yet I believe he has a most important work there, and that there is some responsibility and obligation which he cannot delegate to others. There may be exceptional schools with exceptional teachers—I cannot assert and I cannot deny; but I never came across a Sunday-school in which it was not a moral obligation on the part of the minister to personally see that no scholars should pass through it without hearing what he had to say in exposition of the faith that was in him. If the young people of Church and School do not in after years identify themselves with us, the minister's conscience should be clear with regard to the fact. He cannot control the drift of things and people as if he were a god; but he can have a clear conscience. If there is any sense in what the Roman Catholics say about their contentment if only they can have charge of a child's religious training up to the age of ten or twelve, surely there is much more force in the advocacy of taking boys and girls through a clearly explained course of Unitarian belief when they have attained the age of fifteen and upwards. You cannot compel your teachers to attend a special class for instruction and guidance in this matter; where they accept your invitation it is most satisfactory, and then they can prepare the way for the minister's class so that his teaching may be much more effective; but I venture to say that even a successful Teachers' Preparation Class does not release the minister from a personal obligation of coming into direct touch with his elder scholars, and letting them hear from his own lips the grounds and principles of his faith.

Well, assuming that to be satisfactorily dealt with, there is still the further legitimate demand upon us of promoting the gospel in the direction of endeavouring to bring into the fold men and women of mature years, and of more or less mature thought, who may be ignorant of the superiority of our Unitarianism. And I confess that it is being more and more borne in upon me that we must have a name of some sort that shall indicate our intellectual position, and that shall differentiate us from the rest, and which shall justify our separate existence. Why should people go to the services of a conventicle up a back street, with no name attached to it indicating either heresy or orthodoxy? They may not be satisfied with what they hear in their own church; but they continue to go for association's sake, and because there is nothing to attract them to the consideration of their religious problems. Then, probably, if they go inside this said conventicle they hear a colourless, ethical discourse, with less emotion in it by far than what they are accustomed to; and they do not care to forfeit their emotionalism unless a doctrinal, intellectual equivalent be given to them. They have never heard of Unitarianism; the said conventicle has a reputation of being broad and open and free; but they just drop in on ordinary occasions and, of course, hear nothing specially helpful. All of us, I suppose, preach most of our sermons for our own people, and not for the strangers who happen to be within our gates. If we knew when they were coming we could do otherwise. But the minister at the before-mentioned conventicle never advertises any special series of explanatory doctrinal discourses, and so the wanderer finds no beacon light, and those slumbering in ignorance and superstition are aroused by no clarion-call to exercise the God-given faculty of thought.

I fear this question of name cannot be held back much longer; it will have to be settled once for all. Either a new name must be invented acceptable to all, or we must boldly proclaim our acceptance of the old one. Any man who holds a set of truths dear, and regards them in his soul as superior to what the world generally accepts, is bound to desire to propagate them, to bring other men round to his way of thinking. If any man said otherwise, I could not believe that he had a genuine enthusiasm such as characterised a real devotee of truth. Then we should seek to promote the gospel by periodically asking our fellow-citizens outside our own Church to come in and hear what we have to say in illustration and in defence of our faith. In this connection we should adopt business methods. Advertising may be objectionable; but it is a recognised medium, and we should throw away no chance of bringing light to darkened minds. I do not say that a preacher should be everlastingly and furiously knocking down the dogmas and creeds of other Churches; but he ought at times to invite attractively his neighbours to come in and hear why this church stands in the same street as the parish church, which has sufficient empty pews to more than accommodate his little following. As far as I can see, the orthodox Churches are still ahead of us in the adoption of attractive methods. I see nothing infra dig. in musical services, in advertising in the newspapers, in handbills in a district. Success in trade is desirable enough; but advancement and instruction in divine truth, in that which pertains to the soul of man rather than his body, is infinitely more important; and surely it is legitimate for us to compel the world to know what we have to offer it. Yet it is no use offering a colourless article, something that you cannot name; it must be offered boldly and persistently and whole-heartedly, whatever it is.

It seems to me that we ought individually and collectively to do something special next year, to mark the end of the nineteenth century. We hear of twentieth-century funds, and that sort of thing in other denominations. If such large effort is impossible with us, surely our District Associations should aim at collecting sufficient money to enable them to hold a series of Unitarian services in every large town in the country, and to engage the best and most popular men amongst us for the purpose. Also they should offer special services to any existing church that feels its enthusiasm could be aroused by such means; and organise conferences in individual churches and for combined churches on every and any subject that may be thought to be provocative of useful discussion; and in a large place like Manchester special services should be held in some large hall in every municipal division. Then I believe that these simultaneous and well-planned efforts would materially promote our gospel, and result in an increased church membership. Finally, we must not only promote the gospel; but we must ourselves be promoted by it. We must be willing to grow. Our gospel must be constantly adding new territory, new possessions; it must adapt itself to the revelations of new and increasing knowledge; and we must take care that we are not unduly conservative; for our justification is our professed belief that there is no finality about God's truth, but that generation after generation He will reveal Himself to men's minds in increasing clearness, and that, as sons of God, we should be anxious to extend the knowledge of our common Father amongst all our brethren.

CHARLES ROPER.

OBITUARY.

MARY ELLEN CHAMPION GUEST.

We record with sorrow the death of Mrs. Guest, who was one of the most earnest and devoted members of the Upperthorpe Congregation, Sheffield. Coming to us from another religious body on the occasion of her marriage with Mr. Guest, she has made the interests of our Church her own, and her genial presence has been a gracious influence in all its institutions. She left us only a few weeks ago, apparently in perfect health, for a short holiday at Brighton, in company with her husband. Her friends were startled to learn that on the evening of their arrival at that town she was seized by an alarming illness. Her friends hoped against hope that she might be spared to them, but on Oct. 9 she was called to the Higher Life, in the fifty-fifth year of her age. Her mortal remains were interred in the graveyard adjoining Fulwood Church, on Thursday last. By the kind courtesy of the vicar, Rev. Mr. Hewlett, who read Psalm 90, the Rev. John Ellis, minister of Upperthorpe Chapel, officiated both in the church and at the graveside.

On Sunday morning last the Rev. John Ellis, preaching from text John xiv. 1, 2, said, in the course of his sermon:—"For the moment our sky is darkened. A radiant life has been withdrawn from our midst. A cheerful, pure-souled friend has gone, leaving a gloom that is felt. She lived to brighten the lot of others. By a thousand acts of kindness unknown to the world she helped the poor, the sick, and the sorrowful. She was the sunshine of the home. She wove a golden thread into the experience of him to whom she devoted the best of her thoughts, feelings, and activities. It is a sad commentary on our life that we only realise our blessings to the full when they are withdrawn. We know now what we have lost, and our hearts are sorrowful, and we are perplexed with life's mysteries. But, mingled with our sorrow, there is deep thankfulness that God has permitted us to come within the reach of that sweet influence. For all her kindness and goodness and love; for her large heart and liberal hand, we thank God. We believe in her, and because we believe in her we have richer thoughts of God. Every good life reveals to us the Eternal goodness more fully. And because we believe that goodness can never die, we are carried in thought to the many abiding-places in the good Father's home."

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

[To PUBLISHERS.—All Books, &c., sent to THE INQUIRER will be acknowledged under this head, with name of publisher and price, if supplied. The necessities of our space, however, compel us to limit the number selected for critical notice and review.]

London University Guide. (University Correspondence College Press, Burlington House, Cambridge.)

The Ghost of Samuel and Other Sermons. By the Rev. F. F. Carmichael. 3s. (Simpkin, Marshall.)

The Moral Order of the World. By A. B. Bruce, D.D. 7s. 6d. (Hodder and Stoughton.)

New World, Mind, International Journal of Ethics, Herald of the Golden Age.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Aberdare.—Harvest thanksgiving services were held at the Old Meeting House on Sunday last. The Rev. William James, B.A., J.P., officiated morning and evening in Welsh, and the Rev. David John Williams in English. The ladies had decorated the chapel very nicely. The audiences throughout were fair, the sermons good, and the collections, made as usual for the poor of the congregation, very satisfactory. We were very pleased to have Dr. Zimmer, Professor of Sanscrit at the University of Greifswald, Germany, with us at these services. The doctor has been spending his holidays in Wales, getting up a conversational knowledge of the vernacular. When will our English friends begin their study of Welsh?

Ainsworth.—A lecture on "The Art of Public Speaking and Private Thinking" was delivered in the Unitarian Sunday School, on Wednesday week, on behalf of the members of the reading-room, by the Rev. M. R. Scott, resident minister. There was a large attendance. Mr. W. Sellars, secretary of the school and president of the reading-room, occupied the chair, and sketched the history of the Society and said that a new era was opening up for them in the work they were about to undertake that winter—namely, the study of Shakespeare's Macbeth, under the leadership of Mr. Scott. The lecture was illustrated by readings from the works of Frederic Harrison, John Morley, Ruskin and Frederick Robertson.

Ashton-under-Lyne.—The second annual sermons of the Sunday-school were preached last Sunday in the Mechanics' Institute by the Rev. Alex. Gordon, M.A., Principal of the Unitarian Home Missionary College. The attendances were: afternoon 120, evening 320. Collections taken at the services realised £13 18s. 3d.

Chester.—The bi-centenary of the founding of Matthew Henry's Chapel will be held on Sunday and Tuesday evenings, the 22nd and 24th. The Sunday services will be conducted by the Rev. C. H. Wellbeloved, of Southport, and the Tuesday by the Rev. Charles Hargrove, M.A., of Mill-hill Chapel, Leeds. (See Advt.)

Croydon.—At a congregational gathering held last week at the Free Christian Church, Mr. R. K. Doss, B.A., gave an address on "Raja Ram Mohun Roy." Mr. Doss is studying law in London, and is deeply interested in the religious life of India, through its various developments. The address, well thought out and well delivered, presented the great Theist as reformer, social economist, linguist, and theologian. A very interested audience loudly applauded the suggestion, made by the minister, that another address on the same subject should be given some Sunday in the church.

Derby.—The chapel anniversary, harvest festival, and annual social gathering were held on Sunday and Monday last. The Rev. John Birks, F.G.S., preached on Sunday morning and evening. A children's service was held in the afternoon, conducted by Mr. J. W. Avery. The collections were good, and in advance of former years. The annual tea meeting was held on Monday, and was well attended. The pastor, Rev. J. Birks, presided at the after meeting, which was held in the lower schoolroom. He gave a cordial welcome to all, especially to the Rev. C. D. Badland, M.A., a former minister of Friar-gate Chapel, who, with Mrs. Badland, attended the meeting. Addresses were given on "The Ministry of our Free Churches," by the Rev. C. D. Badland; "Congregational Life," by the Rev. J. R. Smith, of Belper; "The Sunday School in Relation to the Church," by the Rev. W. Lindsay, of Nottingham. An interesting event of the meeting was the presentation of a testimonial in the form of an address, beautifully illuminated and in richly gilt frame, to Mr. W. G. Timmons on his retirement, through ill-health, from his connection with the schools, which, as scholar, teacher, superintendent, secretary, treasurer, librarian, and savings-bank treasurer, had extended over thirty-five years.

Framlingham.—The Old Meeting-house has undergone complete renovation, and the organ has been rebuilt with improvements and additions. Reopening and anniversary services and meetings will be held on Sunday and Monday, Oct. 29 and 30. (See Advt.)

Kirkcaldy.—On Sunday morning last a harvest thanksgiving service was held. The fruits, &c., were afterwards sent to the Cottage Hospital. The Rev. A. E. Parry, addressing an audience of about fifty, took for his subject, "The Unseen Harvest." In the evening, he spoke to a congregation numbering about eighty. The lecture, which was very well received, was entitled, "What is Unitarianism."

London: Kentish Town.—The opening conversation of the Social and Literary Institute was held on Thursday evening, Oct. 12. A very pleasant evening was spent with music and in playing games. Although it was a wet evening, there was a good attendance; forty-eight members were enrolled—a slight improvement on last year.

London: Kilburn.—Very successful harvest thanksgiving services were held in the church-hall on Sunday, Oct. 8. The hall was tastefully decorated with choice flowers and fruits, and there were good congregations. The evening congregation especially was encouraging, as the hall was well filled, many strangers being present. Anthems were sung at both services by an augmented choir. The Rev. J. E. Stronge preached an appropriate sermon in the morning, and in the evening continued his course of lectures on "Five of the Great Religions of the World," which is arousing some interest in the district. Collections were made in aid of the funds of the church, and were larger than in previous years.

London: Mansford-street, E.—The harvest festival services were held on Sunday, Oct. 8. In the afternoon Mr. Ion Pritchard addressed the scholars, teachers and friends. In the evening the Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A., conducted the service. There were very large congregations. On Monday, the 9th inst., the congregational party to inaugurate the winter work was held. Mr. Stanton W. Preston presided, and was supported by several friends of the mission. Alluding to the winter programme, the chairman noticed specially the rooms which had been fitted up at the expense of Mr. J. C. Drummond to provide headquarters for a young men's club. He said that their thanks were due to Mr. Drummond for the interest he was showing in this matter, and expressed the hope that his kindness would be appreciated. The Rev. W. G. Cadman gave a short address and seconded Mr. Preston's motion, which was heartily approved by all present.

Merthyr Tydfil.—Harvest thanksgiving services were held last Sunday morning, afternoon, and evening. "A Harvest Festival Service" was rendered in the afternoon and the evening. The Rev. Professor J. H. Weatherall, B.A., of Carmarthen, preached two able sermons, and delivered an address in the afternoon. Collections were made at all the services for the South-East Wales Unitarian Society.

Rushall (Wilts): General Baptist Chapel.—On Sunday, the 193rd anniversary was commemorated. The Rev. J. A. Brinkworth, of Saffron Walden, Essex, preached, afternoon and evening, the latter being a harvest service; good congregations assembled. On Monday afternoon the trustees of Mrs. Ann Tyler's Charity, Rushall, Wilts, met in the chapel and transacted their annual business. The chapel is very prettily located in this village under the Downs; it is in excellent preservation and well cared for. The burialground gives a picturesque frontage to it, whilst the grave of the donor is conspicuous. A tea-meeting followed, being more largely attended than we have seen before. The subsequent public meeting was presided over by Mr. Frank Stratton, C.C., of Manningford. The Chairman's address was followed by speeches by the Rev. A. J. Marchant, of London, Junior Messenger of the General Baptist Assembly of England and Wales; Mr. William Walker, J.P., C.C., of Trowbridge; the Rev. J. Wain, of Bristol, minister-elect of Congre Chapel, Trowbridge; the Rev. R. Moody, of Bottlesford; Messrs. J. Keates and J. Elliott, of Trowbridge, minister and assistant minister of this church; and the Rev. J. A. Brinkworth, Senior Messenger of the General Baptist Assembly, addressed the meeting. The meeting was one of the best held here for some years past.

Sevenoaks.—Harvest thanksgiving services were held in the Old Meeting House, Bessell's Green, on Sunday last, the preacher being the Rev. R. C. Dendy. The chapel was beautifully decorated, and the attendances were good. After the evening service a programme of music was performed by Mrs. Banderet, Miss Ethel Peppercorn, Mrs. Whitlock and Mrs. Dearden. Readings were given by Mr. Cowell and Mr. Hooker, and Mr. Banderet presided at the organ.

South-East Wales Unitarian Society.—The autumnal meetings of this Society were held at Highland-place Church, Aberdare, on Monday, Oct. 16. There were present, among others, the President of the Society (Mr. J. Moy Evans, Swansea); Mr. L. N. Williams, treasurer; Mr. John Lewis, Pontypridd; and Rev. D. J. Williams, Merthyr Tydfil, hon. secs.; Rev. E. Robinson Hughes, Aberdare; Rev. J. Tyssul Davies and Mr. W. A. Moore, Cardiff; Messrs. Gomer Ll. Thomas and Robert Lloyd, Merthyr Tydfil; Rev. W. J. Phillips and Mr. Thos. Griffiths, Nottage; Rev. Dr. Griffiths and Mr. G. F. Hacker, Pontypridd; Rev. W. T. Jones, Swansea; Rev. T. J. Jenkins, Gellionen; Rev. Dr. Rees and Mr. Lewis, Pentre; and Rev. Dr. Evans, Wick. The Executive Committee met in the afternoon to determine what missionary work should be undertaken during the coming winter. A general meeting of ministers and delegates was held later in the afternoon, when various matters of importance to the churches were discussed. In the evening a public meeting was held, to extend a welcome to the Rev. E. Robinson Hughes, the new minister at Highland Place, who has lately joined our ranks from the Baptist denomination. Colonel Thomas Phillips occupied the chair. In introducing Mr. Hughes to ministers and the friends in the district, he said, the Unitarian minister had an arduous as well as an agreeable duty to perform: he had to contend with prejudice and bigotry, but he had the peculiar privilege of working out his own salvation by leaving a free hand and a free mind. The minister was there (as he conceived his duty) to help them to worship the One Eternal God. The secretary of the congregation, Mr. L. N. Williams, read letters of apology for their unavoidable absence from the Rev. R. J. Jones, M.A., Aberdare, and the Rev. H. W. Hughes, the grandfather of the new minister, who is in his eighty-seventh year, having been for many years a minister of light and leading in the Baptist denomination. The president of the Society welcomed the new minister on behalf of the Society. The Rev. T. J. Jenkins offered a hearty welcome on behalf of the Welsh ministers. The Rev. W. T. Jones, as a recent convert to our faith, fully sympathised with Mr. Hughes in the course he had taken, and said that great as was the wrench at parting from old associations and friends, he would find that the gain would more than compensate for any loss which he had sustained. Mr. D. R. Griffiths sang a solo. The Rev. Tyssul Davies, in a humorous speech, urged the congregation to give their minister fair play. Mr. John Jones, Pontypridd, addressed the meeting in Welsh, as a friend who had known Mr. Hughes from childhood. Dr. Griffiths, Pontypridd, urged it was not necessary for a minister in coming over from another denomination to break entirely with old associations, and advised Mr. Hughes on his part to do all he could to be on friendly terms with the other ministers of the town. Miss George sang a solo. Mr. L. N. Williams welcomed the minister on behalf of the congregation at Highland Place Church. Mr. Hall, on behalf of the Sunday-school, in a brief speech, extended a hearty welcome to Mr. Hughes. The Rev. E. Robinson Hughes, in feeling terms acknowledged the various expressions of hearty welcome, and said he would try to do his best, fully expecting and believing that he would receive their sympathy and encouragement. A vote of thanks to the Chairman who so ably presided, proposed by the Rev. W. J. Phillips, and seconded by the Rev. D. Williams, brought the meeting to a close.

Whitchurch.—The harvest festival was held in the Church of the Saviour on Sunday, Oct. 1, the Rev. W. F. Turland being the preacher. The church was most beautifully decorated by members of the guild and church. The festival was continued on Oct. 3, when the Rev. J. Howard, of Tamworth, conducted the service.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, October 22.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Bermondsey, Fort-road, Upper Grange-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. HAROLD RYLETT.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. ALLEN.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. H. WOODS, M.A., of Manchester College.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS.
Deptford, Alliance Hall, Albury-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. MARCHANT. No Morning Service.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. WOODS PERRIS.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M., Rev. W. WOODING, B.A., and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.
Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. BROOKE HERFORD and Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN. The Minister's class for children recommences after Morning service.
Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. DAWES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D. Evening, "Browning's 'Natural Theology in the Island.'"
Kentish Town, Free Christian Church, Clarence-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. A. FARQUHARSON. Morning, "The Cry of the Soul." Evening, "Willing to Live, Ready to Die."
Kilburn, Quez-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. STRONGE.
Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. C. POPE.
Little Portland-street Chapel, near Oxford-circus, 11 A.M., Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D., and 7 P.M., Rev. H. RAWLINGS, M.A.
Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. CADMAN.
Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. CARTER.
Plumstead, Common road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.
Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., and 3 P.M., Service for Children Rev. S. FARRINGTON.
Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M., Mr. LUCKING TAYNER, and 7 P.M., Rev. T. E. M. EDWARDS.
Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A., of Hackney, and 7 P.M., Rev. W. WOODING, B.A. Sunday School Anniversary Services.
Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M., Rev. T. E. M. EDWARDS, and 6.30 P.M., Mr. L. TAYNER.
Wansworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. F. W. STANLEY.
BEDFORD, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. ROWLAND HILL.
BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
BLACKPOOL, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. BINNS.
BLACKPOOL, Unitarian Lay Church, Masonic Hall, Waterloo-road, South Shore, 6.30 P.M.
BOOTLE, Free Church, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. W. HAWKES.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. COE.
BRIGHTON, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road, North-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. A. HOOD.
BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. GEORGE STREET.
CANTERBURY, Blackfriars, 11 A.M.
DEAL and WALMER Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. SHAKESPEARE.
DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. BURROWS.
EASTBOURNE, Lismore-road, Terminus-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. ST. CLAIR.
GUILDFORD, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Mr. E. S. LANG BUCKLAND.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. MARTEN.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.

LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M., Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. CODDEN SMITH.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. J. JUPP.

LIVERPOOL Ullet-road, Sefton Park, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. KLEIN. Evening, "The Search after Knowledge by the Wealthy."

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. FORREST.

MANCHESTER, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

MARGATE, Forester's Hall (Side Entrance), Union-crescent, 11 A.M., Mr. EDWARD C. SAPHIN.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. W. E. ADDIS, M.A.

PORTSMOUTH, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. THOMAS BOND.

PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. COSENS PRIOR.

RAMSGATE, Assembly Rooms, High-street, 6.30 P.M., Mr. EDWARD C. SAPHIN.

READING, Unitarian Free Church, London-road, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, B.A.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.

SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. D. ROBERTS, of Chester.

TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Mr. F. LAWSON DODD.

YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant Unitarian Church, Hout-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY, STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN-SQUARE, S.W.—Oct. 21st, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "Two Phases of Western Religious Thought: 1. The Worship of Humanity."

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. W. STODDART, B.A., is at LIBERTY to take occasional Sunday duty.—30, West Bank, Stamford-hill, London, N.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D. DAVIS, Fairfield High School, Liverpool.

CITIZEN SUNDAY, OCT. 29th, 1899.

The Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D., will preach at the MANSFORD-STREET CHURCH AND MISSION, BETHNAL GREEN. Doors open at 6.15. Service at 7 P.M. All seats free. Collections for Special Services Fund.

WANTED, by a lady, small furnished FLAT, or part of good HOUSE. Neighbourhood of West Hampstead, near Met. and North London stations preferred.—Address, M., Office of INQUIRER.

BIRTHS.

COLLIER—On the 16th Oct., at 2A, Montagu Mansions, W., the wife of Fred. G. Collier, of a daughter.

FORDHAM—On the 17th Oct., at 51, Campden House-road, W., the wife of Montague Fordham, of a son.

TAYLOR—On the 13th Oct., at Ash Lawn, Heaton Bolton, the wife of Frank Taylor, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

ASPLAND—THORNELY—On the 17th Oct., at the Unitarian Church, Portland-street, Southport, by the Rev. C. H. Wellbeloved, assisted by the Rev. H. E. Dowson, of Gee Cross, Hyde, Arthur Brook Aspland, only son of A. P. Aspland, Esq., Gee Cross, Hyde, to Caroline A. Thornely, second daughter of the late A. J. Thornely, Esq., G dley, Hyde.

Correspondents are requested to note that to be sure of insertion the same week, news must reach the Office by the first post on Thursay at latest, and the earlier in the week the better.

Schools, etc.

CHANNING HOUSE, HIGHGATE, HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, AND BOARDING SCHOOL.

For the daughters of Unitarian Ministers and others.

London Matriculation, English, Latin, French, German, Mathematics, Science, Elocution, Greek, Drawing, Class Singing, Dressmaking, Cookery, Calisthenics, Playground, Swings, Cricket, Garden, Outside Sanatorium, Laundry at home. Outside Examiner.

Fees per Term:

Boarders, £10 13s. 6d. or with Music, £12 5s. Extras: Violin, Solo Singing, Painting, £2 2s.

Shorthand, Dancing, 10s. 6d.

Day scholars, 3 to 5 guineas, with Music extra. Kindergarten, 2 to 2½ guineas.

Manager—Miss MATILDA SHARPE.

HALF TERM begins MONDAY, Nov. 6.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, SOUTH MARINE TERRACE, ABERYSTWITH.

PRINCIPAL ... MRS. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

SCHOOL FOR GIRLS AND LITTLE BOYS.—CONAMUR, SANDGATE, KENT.

PRINCIPALS:—Miss JARVIS and Miss CLARA BERRY.

Good House, close to the sea; south aspect.

Reference kindly permitted to T. GROSVENOR LEE, Esq., Clent, near Stourbridge; JOHN HEYWOOD, Esq., The Pike, Bolton, &c.

THE WARREN, KNUFSFORD.

PRINCIPAL:

Mrs. W. CARRINGTON WHITELEGGE.

Excellent individual TUITION and Home Care for the daughters of cultivated parents who would appreciate unusual advantages for Music and Languages.

NEXT TERM begins September 26th.

AN experienced GOVERNESS desires re-engagement (daily) after Christmas. Neighbourhood of Edgbaston preferred.—Address, A. B., INQUIRER Office.

WANTED, English GOVERNESS for two girls, aged seven and half and six. Thorough English French (conversational), music. Salary, £40 to £45.—Write, full particulars, to Mrs. LEON, Hillsdon, Sidmouth, Devon.

WANTED, engagement as LADY COMPANION. Many years' experience and good references.—J., INQUIRER Office.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK

SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

TWO AND A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS of minimum monthly balance, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift, the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows Interest Monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY, HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY, HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANAC, Post free on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms moderate.—Mrs. ROBERT TURNER, 94, Grosvenor-road, S.W.

BOARD and RESIDENCE, South of England. Healthy neighbourhood. Home comforts. Seven miles from Brighton, near South Downs. Station Hacks (on main line L.B.S.C.).—Miss ROWLAND, Gothic House, Hurstpierpoint.

BOARDING HOUSE.—THE FELL, TROUTBECK, WINDERMERE, is situated 550 feet above sea level, and about 2½ miles from the station at Windermere. Every home comfort. Moderate terms.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea; sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address, Miss CHALDECOTT, Stirling House, Manor-road.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

Proprietor,

FREDERIC SMITH.

This first-class Hotel, conducted on strictly Temperance principles, is commended by the Rev. C. Aled, Liverpool; Rev. Rowland Hill, Bedford; Rev. G. Vance Smith, D.D., Bowden, Cheshire; Rev. J. C. Street, Birmingham; Rev. Charles A. Berry, D.D., Wolverhampton; Rev. Charles Garrett, Liverpool; Rev. Canon Howell, Wrexham; Rev. A. B. Grosart, LL.D., Blackburn; Dr. Norman Kerr, London, &c. Central, Quiet, Exceptionally Clean, Moderate in Charges. Spacious Coffee Rooms, Visitors' Drawing Rooms, Baths, &c. Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 8d. to 2s. Rooms, 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. Service, 9d. Printed Tariff on Application.

75, 77, 79, 97, 99, 101, 103, 105,

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, RUSSELL SQ., LONDON.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY ADELAIDE PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.

Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21, Mincing-lane, E.C.

Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.

Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.

STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, 151, Brixton-road, S.W., and Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made Monthly repayment, including principal, premium, and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years, 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.; 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

FREDK. LONG & SON, AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS 4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

The Annual Autumn Meeting and Soiree

will be held at

ESSEX HALL,

On TUESDAY, 24th OCTOBER, 1899.

The President, Sir JOHN T. BRUNNER, Bart., M.P., in the Chair.

An Address will be given on "The Position and Prospects of Unitarianism at the close of the Century," by C. W. JONES, Esq., President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. The Rev. Brooke Herford, D.D., H. Epps, Esq., Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A., David Martineau, and other well-known ministers and laymen have promised to be present.

Tea and reception at 7. Chair will be taken at 8.

Tickets may be had at Essex Hall, or on application to the Hon. Secretaries, Mr. G. HAROLD CLENNELL, 87, Downs-road, Clapton, or the Rev. J. E. STRONGE, 13, Ulysses-road, Kilburn.

UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH, HORWICH.

A GRAND BAZAAR will be held in the MECHANICS' INSTITUTE on NOV. 8th, 9th, and 11th, 1899, for the purpose of raising £500, and as much more as possible towards a sum of £1,000, needful for the redemption of ground rents (nearly £30 a year), and the formation of an Independence Fund. Towards the amount required Mrs. Samuel Fielden, of Todmorden, has generously contributed £100.

All donations will be announced at the Bazaar, and will be printed in the Report, a copy of which will be sent to every subscriber.

The Bazaar will be opened respectively by Mrs. JOHN HARWOOD, Bolton; Sir JOHN BRUNNER, Bart., M.P., and W. H. LEVER, Esq., of Thornton Manor, Cheshire.

Contributions of Goods or Money will be thankfully received and acknowledged by any of the following:—

Rev. R. C. MOORE, Horwich, Bolton.

Mr. C. J. P. FULLER, Bazaar Treasurer, Mona House, Horwich, Bolton.

Mr. F. C. ASHTON, Bazaar Secretary, Crown-lane, Horwich, Bolton.

FRAMLINGHAM AND BEDFIELD.

ANNIVERSARY SERVICES and MEETINGS.

SUNDAY, Oct. 29th, FRAMLINGHAM, 11 and 7; BEDFIELD, 2.30 and 6.30. Preachers, Revs. G. LANSLOWNE and A. AMEY.

MONDAY, Oct. 30th, FRAMLINGHAM, Tea at 6, Meeting, 7.30, Mr. J. YOUNGMAN, Chairman; Lady WILSON, Mrs. and Miss LAWRENCE, Revs. G. LANSLOWNE and W. JELLIE, and others to take part.

TUESDAY, Oct. 31st, BEDFIELD, Tea at 6, Meeting at 7.30, Lady WILSON will preside; Mrs. and Miss LAWRENCE, Miss F. HILL, and others to take part.

ANNUAL MEETINGS of NORTH MIDLAND PRESBYTERIAN and UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION at HIGH PAVEMENT, NOTTINGHAM, on TUESDAY, Oct. 24th:—11.45, Public Worship—Rev. A. N. BLATCHFORD, B.A., preacher. Business Meeting, 2.30. 5.30, Conference on "Decay of Dogmas," introduced by Miss K. GITTINS.

SUMMER EXCURSION SOIRÉE

(Central Postal Mission and Unitarian Workers' Union), ESSEX HALL, ESSEX-STREET, STRAND, W.C. FRIDAY EVENING, Nov. 3rd. 6.30 to 10 o'clock.

Tea at 7. Lantern (Swiss Views), W. H. SHRUBSOLE, F.G.S.

Members and friends should apply early for tickets, 1s. each, to Miss FLORENCE HILL, 13, Christchurch-road, Hampstead, N.W., and enclose stamped and directed envelope.

UNITY CHURCH, ISLINGTON.

The OPENING LECTURE of the LITERARY SOCIETY will be given on THURSDAY NEXT, Oct. 26th, by the Rev. G. DAWES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D., on "The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer: an Exposition and a Criticism."

Chair to be taken at 8. Friends invited.

BIBLE READINGS WITH MY CHILDREN.

By Mrs. PHILIP COHEN.

In two parts. Price 2s. each, or 2s. 3d. Post Free.

"Written in a style highly attractive to children."—The Very Rev. the CHIEF RABBI.
"Continues to be regarded in our private families as a most welcome friend."—Rev. G. EMANUEL, B.A.
"The charm of style is so attractive in its simplicity; will ensure a large and affectionate circle of readers."—The late Rev. A. L. GREEN.

Published by WERTHEIMER, LEA, and Co., Circus-place, London Wall, E.C.

BARTON-STREET CHAPEL, GLOUCESTER.

BICENTENARY FUND AND BAZAAR.

A BAZAAR for the extinction of the debt of £380 will be held in the Unitarian School Room, Gloucester, on NOVEMBER 22nd and 23rd.

Contributions in Money or Goods will be gratefully received and acknowledged by

Mrs. C. W. WASHBOURNE, Allendale, Weston-road;

Mrs. WALTER LLOYD, The Hollies, Brook-st.;

Mr. J. T. PRESTON, Esq., 138, Westgate;

Mr. A. DUNN, St. Michael's-square; or,

Mr. W. HORSLEY, Secretary, Weston-road.

	£	s.	d.
Members of the Congregation ..	114	3	0
F. Nettlefold, Esq.	10	0	0
J. T. Preston, Esq.	2	2	0
The President of the B. and F.U.A.	10	0	0
Herbert Thomas, Esq.	5	0	0

BRADFORD BAZAAR.

OCT 19TH, 20TH, AND 21ST, 1899.

With sincere thanks the Committee desire to acknowledge the following additional subscriptions:

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged ..	79	8	0
Anon.	0	10	0
Mrs. Redfern	1	1	0
Miss Pridden	1	0	0
Mr. C. E. Liebreich (Building Fund)	1	0	0
A Maidstone Friend	1	0	0
Mrs. Kell (£2 2s. for Building Fund)	3	3	0
Mrs. H. Harwood	0	10	0
Mrs. Lever	0	5	0
Mr. S. F. Dufton, M.A., D.Sc.	5	0	0
Mr. W. M. Broughton	2	0	0
Mrs. Steele	0	10	0
Mrs. Laycock	0	10	0
Mrs. Bailey	0	5	0
A Friend	2	0	0
Lady Durning-Lawrence	1	1	0
Rev. John Ellis	1	1	0
Mrs. Durman	0	3	0
Anon.	0	7	6
Mr. W. F. Raisbeck	0	5	0
The President of the B. and F.U.A.	10	0	0
Mr. Thomas Bolton	1	1	0
Mrs. Ballantyne	0	15	0
Mr. J. Ellis Mace, J.P.	0	10	0

Rev. E. CEREDIG JONES,

18, Blenheim-road, Bradford (Minister).

MATTHEW HENRY'S CHAPEL

RE-ROOFING AND GENERAL RESTORATION.
£300 STILL REQUIRED.

	£	s.	d.
Amount already acknowledged ..	578	10	0
"Two Old Members"	0	10	0
Liverpool Fellowship Fund	5	0	0
"Another Member"	0	5	0
E. F. L.	3	3	0
Collected by M. M.	0	5	0

RE-OPENING SERVICES.

Sunday, Oct. 22nd, 11 and 6.30, Rev. C. H. WELLBELOVED, of Southport. Tuesday, Oct. 24th, 7.45 P.M., Rev. CHAS. HARGROVE, M.A., of Leeds.

COLLECTIONS FOR RESTORATION FUND.

HOME FOR HEALTH CULTURE,

THE FIRS, BROMYARD, HEREFORDSHIRE

This Home provides a course of Systematic Daily Exercise, combined with regular outdoor life and occupation, for Ladies and Children who are not in normal health. The exercises are given in a Gymnasium fitted with Swedish apparatus, and consist of Ling's Swedish Movements. Special treatment is given for Spinal Curvature, Anæmia, Hysteria, Indigestion, Neuralgia, &c.

For further particulars, apply to The Principal Miss JESSIE BAKER (trained by Mme. Bergmon, Österberg).

PLAYS FOR WINTER EVENINGS.

Written by Rev. H. W. HAWKES.

1. Robin Hood.
2. Dick Whittington.
3. Cinderella.
4. Babes in the Wood.
5. Beauty & the Beast.
6. Red Riding Hood.
7. William Tell.
8. King Amor, or the Beggar's Bride.

Price 3d. each net, by post 3½d. The seven post free for 2s.

"These are very taking little dramas on familiar stories. The 'Plays' are written in rhyme, and are of good tone without being too didactic. They are just the thing for our juvenile societies, Bands of Hope, &c."—INQUIRER.
"These are the first instalment of a series of plays for boys and girls. They are short and simple in character, being versions of the familiar old stories whose titles they bear, and can be commended to the notices of those who are on the look-out for suitable pieces of the nature for representation."—LITERARY WORLD.

BY "AUNT AMY."

The Prince's Triumph, or the Three Riddles. A Drama for Home Representation. Cloth, gilt edges, 1s.

Romance and Reality, or Sophy's Adventure. A Play for Six Girls. 3d.

London: B. C. HARE, 4, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Fcap. 8vo, 103 pp., cloth, 1s. net.

THE RELIGION OF TIME and the RELIGION OF ETERNITY. A Study of Certain Relations between Mediæval and Modern Thought. By PHILIP H. WICKSTEED, M.A.

Fcap. 8vo, 100 pp., cloth, 1s. net.

BACK TO JESUS. An Appeal to Evangelical Christians. By RICHARD A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., Author of "God and the Soul," "Faith and Doubt in the Century's Poets," &c.

THE NEW WORLD.

Vol. 8. No. 31. SEPTEMBER, 1899.

Price 3s. net; by post, 3s. 3d.

CONTENTS.—Greek Religion, by George Santayana; Popular Education and Public Morality, by Charles W. Wendte; Jesus' Foreknowledge of his Sufferings and Death, by Otto Pfleiderer; Necessity and Limitations of Anthropomorphism, by George A. Coe; The Genesis of Faith, by Albert G. H. ing; The Scientific and Christian View of Illness, by James T. Birby; Substitution, a Stage in Theological Thought, by Henry F. Coe; Progressive Judaism and Liberal Christianity, by Clinton Harby Levy; Unitarians and the Beginning of English Liberalism, by Edward Porritt; The Ethics of the Bhagavad-Gita, by Bipin Ch. Pal; Book Reviews, &c.

London: PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

THE ETHICAL WORLD.

EDITED BY DR. STANTON COIT and J. A. HOBSON, M.A.

Articles on Important Social Questions, Education &c. from a purely ethical standpoint Children's Page.

TWOPENCE WEEKLY.

Office: 17, Johnson's-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

The Benschiff Ballads, & other Poems.

By F. T. MOTT, F.R.G.S.,

Author of "Corona," "King Edda's Parables," &c.

GAY and BIRD, Bedford-street, London.

SCOTCH TWEEDS and SERGES at Mill Prices, Ladies' or Gents'; best quality only. Patterns post free; orders carriage paid.—GEO. McLEOD & SONS, Hawick, N.B.

Printed by WOODFALL & KINDER, 70 to 76, Long Acre, W.C. and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. City Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 29 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, October 21, 1899.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 2992.
NEW SERIES, No. 96.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1899.

[ONE PENNY.]

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK ..	685
POETRY :—
To Lift the Children up ..	686
Dedication of a Church ..	694
MEETINGS :—
British and Foreign Unitarian Association...	687
London District Unitarian Society ...	689
East Cheshire Christian Union ...	691
The Jubilee of Hope street Church, Liverpool	697
LITERATURE :—
Dr. Sadler and the Children...	692
Our Faith ...	692
Publications Received ...	693
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN ...	693
LEADER :—
Strong in their Strength ...	694
ARTICLES :—
Half a Century's Religious Development ...	695
What is a Church ? ...	701
CORRESPONDENCE :—
Temperance Sunday, November 26 ...	699
Promoting the Gospel ...	699
To be Noted ...	700
PROVINCIAL LETTER :—
The Midlands ...	700
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES ...	701
ADVERTISEMENTS ...	702

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

TO-MORROW is "Citizen Sunday" in the metropolis, when several of our ministers will take the opportunity of speaking on the relation of religion to civic duty. We are glad to note that on that day, the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke will preach, we believe for the first time, in the East-end of London, and the occasion and the place are in every way appropriate. Mansford-street Church, where Mr. Brooke is to preach on Sunday evening, is found by passing along the Bethnall-green-road or the Hackney-road, and can be reached easily from Liverpool-street or Shoreditch by omnibus passing the end of Mansford-street.

THE eighteenth annual meeting of the American National Conference of Unitarian and other Christian Churches opened at Washington on Monday week, the meetings being held in the first Congregational Church. At the first meeting on Monday evening an address was given by the Rev. R. T. Slicer of New York, who dealt with the great question of the Personality and immediate presence of God. In all holy emotions, he said, in the sanctities of aspiration and affection God is present with us, and there is immediate contact between the Infinite and the conscious personality of man. Professor Charles M. Tyler, of Cornell University, afterwards gave an address on "Recent Tendencies towards Anthropomorphism in Religious Thought." His plea was that Personality was the Ilium not to be surrendered. Neither science, philosophy nor religion can get on without belief in personality. To refund all things, and man also, in the absolute impersonal did not solve the problem of evil or of progress. Personality, the goal of man's strenuous endeavour, was perfect in God, imperfect in man. The essence of religion was the pursuit of the ideal of good, of which the perfect realisation was in God. The religion of moral goodness was the religion of the future. On Tuesday morning, Oct. 17, the Communion service was held in All Souls' Church, conducted by the Rev. Robert Collyer, of New York, and the Rev. Charles G. Ames, of Boston. This was followed by the President's Address.

THE sixty-sixth anniversary of the death of Raja Ram Mohun Roy was celebrated in Calcutta on Sept. 27, the day on which he died in 1833 at Bristol. A service was held at seven in the morning, in the Prayer Hall of the Sadharan Brahmo Somaj. In the afternoon a public meeting was held at the City College, where the large hall was crowded. The chair was taken by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, and addresses were given by a number of speakers, including Mr. A. M. Bose. We hope next week to give some report of what was said.

WESTMINSTER COLLEGE, the theological school of the Presbyterian Church of England, of which Dr. Dykes is principal, was opened at Cambridge, on Tuesday week, having been previously established in London. The new College buildings have been raised at a cost of about £40,000, and have been opened free of debt, owing largely to the energy and enthusiasm of Dr. John Watson. The Vice-Chancellor of the University, the Master of Trinity, Professor Ryle, and other distinguished members of the University and of the Church of England, joined in according a warm welcome to the College. Dr. Fairbairn, Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford, also took part in the proceedings.

THE Second International Congregational Council (the first having been held in London in 1891), which was held in Boston, U.S.A., during the last week in September, was a great success. Tremont Temple, where the meetings were held, is said to have sitting accommodation for 2,500, and enthusiastic estimates of the numbers crowded in vary from 3,000 to 4,000. England was strongly represented, Dr. Fairbairn having preached the sermon, and Dr. Forsyth, of Cambridge, having made a great impression by his address on "The Evangelical Principle of Authority," which was presumably what appears as the last article in this month's Contemporary.

Dr. Mackennal, Dr. Brown, of Bedford, Professor Massie, the Revs. J. Hirst Hollowell, C. Silvester Horne, H. A. Thomas (Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales), Mrs. Armitage, Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., Mr. J. Compton Rickett, M.P., and Mr. William Cressfield were also among the speakers. It is pleasant to note that while of course Unitarians had no part in the Council, two of their number, the Governor of Massachusetts and the Mayor of Boston, gave the official welcome to the members before the President's address, and among the subsequent greetings from other denominations was that of Professor F. G. Peabody, of Harvard. It is, perhaps, also worth noting that after Dr. Forsyth's paper, amid a scene of strong emotion, when someone suggested that they should sing "There is a fountain filled with blood," he intervened and asked instead for that good old Unitarian hymn, "In the cross of Christ I glory," which was sung with magnificent effect.

REFERRING to the address given by President Eliot, of Harvard University, at one of the sessions of the International Congregational Council in Boston, the Christian Register says :—

Harvard College was founded by Congregationalists in the early days of the colony, in order that sound learning should not perish, and that an educated ministry might always be provided for the Church. In the course of time Harvard College gave up the standards of orthodoxy as maintained by Jonathan Edwards and George Whitefield. About 1740 the line began to be drawn between the old and the new forms of Congregationalism. In the early part of this century, by easy transition and in continuation of the movement in 1740, Harvard College was found to be officered throughout by Unitarians. A large portion of the students also came from Unitarian Churches. Time passed; and, in the interest of that liberty which should prevail in the republic of letters, sectarianism in education began to lose its power. Under the administration of President Eliot, a pronounced Unitarian, the Unitarian government of the college and the university has abolished sectarian control. The address of President Eliot and his administration of affairs are, then, an illustration of Congregationalism a little in advance of the general movement; and this address very properly found its place in the proceedings of the Congregational Council.

At a meeting of the Burnley Free Church Council on Friday week, Mr. John Baldwin, president of the Council, in the chair, a paper on "Morals and Municipal Life" was read by Mr. J. S. Mackie, treasurer of the Council, and a member of the Trafalgar-street Unitarian Church. At the outset of a very vigorous address, Mr. Mackie said that the chief contribution of the Anglo-Saxon race to the world's progress would probably be the great principle of self-government. The genius of the race for liberty and self-government had produced the United States and the great British Colonies. In municipal life they must have only one standard, and that the highest—that of the Man of Nazareth. He then proceeded to deal with various aspects of municipal life, including overcrowding and the question of drink, and concluded as follows:—

I believe there is a great future before the municipal institutions of our land—an ever-widening scope for the exercise of good and evil influences. It is quite possible—nay, I should say, likely—that all the functions of local self-government will ultimately be discharged by one great democratic body of men and women, truly representative of the intelligence and moral force of an enlightened and purified community, men and women gifted with strong common sense and inspired by noble ideals. The new municipal spirit will recognise ever more and more fully its duty towards the mental and moral, as well as to the physical needs of man. A bright day will indeed dawn for rich and poor alike when all shall know and feel that "man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." The light may seem to be but dimly burning in the far distant future; but that is no reason why we should not try to bring it a little nearer. We need to be baptised with a passion for service, taking as our motto those memorable words: "He that would be greatest among you, let him become the servant of all."

In the June-July number of his Interpreter, Mr. Mozoomdar prints the letter which he received from Professor Max Müller on the subject of his relation to Christianity, and adds two interesting foot-notes which are practically replies to points of special interest. In reply to the suggestion "If you are satisfied with being Christians, disciples of Christ, then form your own Church, &c.," Mr. Mozoomdar says:—

"Disciples of Christ" we certainly are, but we would not call ourselves "Christians," because we decline to add another petty sect to the innumerable petty sects which Christians have split themselves into.

And when later in the Professor's letter Mr. Mozoomdar and those who think with him are asked to try whether they could not be lay-members of the Church of England, the reply is:—

In Indian Christianity the Church of England has no other distinction than its State revenue, its Ecclesiastical government, and its proud exclusiveness, the Dissenters and Roman Catholics are more spiritual. The Brahmo Somaj of India, or Church of the New Dispensation, will always remain a Theistic Church, though its spirit and its religion will be the spirit and religion of Jesus Christ.

The same number of the Interpreter contains the substance of a lecture by Mr. Mozoomdar on "The Christ of Revelation," which further explains his position.

I have said sometimes, and I say it again, that the simple principles of our theism are so universal, that if our countrymen liked to confess what they feel, three-fourths of them would be found to be Brahmos. And I make bold to declare that the same simple universal creed of love to God and love to Man was the religion held and preached by Jesus Christ. The peculiar theologies and sacerdotalisms that have made subsequent Christianity so perplexing, are not to be found in Christ's sayings, nor are they at all essential to the religion of Christ. We can be followers of Christ without being followers of what is called Christianity. The broad lines of spiritual thought and character along which the great Christian religion in its undenominational aspect has moved, are the lines which we have followed. The yearnings of soul which ago after age have made up the progress of Christendom are our yearnings; and now between advanced Christians and advanced Brahmos there is scarcely a detectable difference.

How can we profit by the teachings of the Christian religion or Christian civilisation if we leave Christ in the background? After all it is one God who breathes these new inspirations in mankind, it is one Humanity that is receiving these inspirations, one truth whose progress we all seek. Let there be no more isolation, then, but oneness of life in God, and in Christ who is the spirit of divine humanity.

Among the letters of R. L. Stevenson which have been appearing in Scribner's Magazine, and of which a larger collection in book-form is announced, there are two in the October number, written in the early summer of 1889, telling of his visit to the leper colony at Molokai. He thus describes his landing at the settlement, being rowed to shore in a boat from the steamer that had brought them, with some Sisters of Mercy who were going there to work among the Lepers:—

I do not know how it would have been with me had the Sisters not been there. My horror of the horrible is about my weakest point; but the moral loveliness at my elbow blotted all else out; and when I found that one of them was crying—poor soul!—quietly under her veil, I cried a little myself; then I felt as right as a trivet, only a little crushed to be there so uselessly. I thought it was a sin and a shame she should feel unhappy; I turned round to her and said something like this: "Ladies, God Himself is here to give you welcome. I'm sure it is good for me to be beside you; I hope it will be blessed to me; I thank you for myself and the good you do me." It seemed to cheer her up; but, indeed, I had scarce said it when we were at the landing-stairs and there was a great crowd, hundreds of (God save us!) pantomime masks in poor human flesh, waiting to receive the Sisters and the new patients.

And again, when the visit was over, he wrote:—

I have seen sights that cannot be told, and heard stories that cannot be repeated; yet I never admired my poor race so much, nor (strange as it may seem) loved life more than in the settlement. A horror of moral beauty broods over the place: that's like bad Victor Hugo, but it is the only way I can express the sense that lived with me all these days. And this, even though it was in great part Catholic, and my sympathies flew never with so much difficulty as towards Catholic virtues. The pass-book kept with heaven stirs me to anger and laughter. One of the Sisters calls the place "the ticket-office to heaven." Well, what is the odds? They do their darg, and do it with kindness and efficiency incredible; and we must take folk's virtues as we find them, and love the better part.

We have received at the last moment, and must keep until next week, a report of the annual meeting of the North Midland Presbyterian and Unitarian Association, held at Nottingham on Tuesday.

TO LIFT THE CHILDREN UP.

Of such a call, received by himself, the late George Smith, of Coalville, once told the writer of these lines.

"Give me a task, Lord—give me a task to do!

I am thy servant, even in weakness true. Give me a task, fitting my strength and will,

Thy wishes to fulfil."

So sighed a man and prayed, as on the road

He plodded his way; upon his back a load Full heavy, while about him and above Nature her garment wove.

"A task, Lord, give!" a thousand times he'd pled,

As with rapt eyes and high up-lifted head, He sought the feet of Him who built the spheres

And measured the twelve-span years.

Yet once again the words rose to his lips, When at his feet a toddling baby slips, Rolls in the dirt, and with a plaintive cry Calls him a-nigh.

He lifts the fallen, carries him back to where

He'd seen a woman shading against the glare

O' th' sun her eyes, and lo! she softly smiled

As she took the child.

Then on again he went, and still once more

Upon his tongue the prayer came as before:

"Give me a task, Lord—give me a worthy task—

'Tis all dark!"

Then, plain as the plover's cry in stillly morn,

He heard the words into his rapt ear borne:

"That be thy task—'twill fill the life-long cup—

To lift the children up."

Thenceforth his prayer took on another form:

"Teach me the way to lift them and to warm

The cold world in their favour: Lord, but this

I ask for all of bliss." A. T. STORY.

At the recent autumnal meeting of the Congregational Union held at Bristol the President, the Rev. H. Arnold Thomas, took for the subject of his address "The Value of Religion." The meaning of religion, he said, was not found in the building of churches, the arranging of services, or in theological disputes, but, as Jesus had said, in worship of the Father in spirit and truth. To be religious was to be in direct and personal relations with God. One of the most difficult problems they had to face was in the many upright and lovable persons who seemed to have lost all sense of the worth and the need of religion. They must ask whether the churches were doing all they might to bring God and the souls of men together. He had sometimes been inclined to wonder whether in their services the human element was not too constantly obtruded, and whether more of reverent silence might not help them to feel more truly the divine presence in their midst.

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

COUNCIL MEETING.

A MEETING of the Council was held on Tuesday afternoon, Oct. 24, at Essex Hall, and there were present—Mr. Charles W. Jones, J.P., the President, in the chair, Miss Burkitt, Mr. G. Callow, Rev. George Carter, Mr. G. W. Chitty, Mr. Howard Chatfield Clarke, Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A., Mr. R. Eve, Mr. J. Harrison, Rev. Brooke Herford, D.D., Miss Florence Hill, Rev. R. J. Jones, M.A., Mrs. Alfred Lawrence, Miss E. M. Lawrence, Mr. Henry Lupton, Miss M. Martineau, Mr. David Martineau, J.P., Mr. C. F. Pearson, Rev. H. W. Perris, Rev. W. Chynoweth Pope, Miss Preston, Miss Pritchard, Mr. Ion Pritchard, Mrs. Henry Rutt, Mr. J. F. Schwann, J.P., Miss E. Sharpe, Mr. Hugh Stannus, Mr. J. Sudbery, Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A., Miss Tayler, Mr. S. S. Tayler, Miss Teschemacher, Mr. E. C. Thurgood, Mr. I. M. Wade, Sir Roland K. Wilson, Bart., Mr. T. Pallister Young, B.A., LL.B., and the Secretary (Rev. W. Copeland Bowie).

Letters regretting their inability to be present were received from:—Lady O'Hagan, of Burnley; Mr. Edwin Clephan, of Leicester; Mr. B. Dowson, of Nottingham; Mr. Edwin Ellis, of Guildford; Mr. Charles Harding, of Birmingham; Rev. George Heaviside, of Coventry; Mr. H. J. Morton, of Scarborough.

The minutes of the Council Meeting of April 18 having been read and confirmed, Mr. I. M. WADE offered a very cordial welcome to the President of the Association on taking the chair. Dr. BROOKE HERFORD seconded, and said that they looked for much benefit to the work of the Association from Mr. Jones's presence in the chair, who would bring to their deliberations the power of his strong leadership, and his able business capacity and enterprise. The PRESIDENT, in acknowledging the welcome, said that he had always appreciated the work of the Association, and now that he was to some extent behind the scenes he appreciated it more than ever. A large amount of good was being done, and the work ought to be loyally supported throughout the country.

The SECRETARY having announced the election of the new Council (a list of which was printed in the Annual Report) read the report of the Executive Committee, as follows:—

REPORT.

Since the date of the annual meeting of the Association, the Executive Committee have met three times, and there have been fourteen meetings of sub-committees. The Committee at their first meeting appointed eight sub-committees for dealing with the varied work of the Association. Each of these sub-committees elects its own chairman, and the following are the appointments for 1899-1900:—Finance Committee, Mr. Percy Preston; Scottish Committee, Mr. Charles Fenton; Mission Committee, the Rev. James Harwood, B.A.; Publications Committee, the Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A.; Indian Committee, Mr. Ion Pritchard; Civil Rights Committee, Mr. W. Blake Odgers, Q.C.; General Purposes Committee, Mr. Howard Chatfield Clarke; Special Services Committee, Mr. J. F. Schwann.

It is the practice of the chief sub-committees to meet one week before the Executive Committee, and it is important that secretaries of congregations and others, desiring a speedy answer to their communications, should observe this fact, as all applications for grants are first considered by a sub-committee before they are dealt with by the Executive Committee.

Finance.—The following is a brief statement of the receipts and expenditure from Jan. 1 to Sept. 30, 1899: Receipts:—Subscriptions, £1,475; donations, £77; collections, £65; dividends and interest, £725; book department, £846; transferred from investment account, £349. Expenditure:—Grants, £2,180; maintenance, £151; anniversary expenses, £53; book department (exclusive of salaries), £625; salaries, £525.

It was mentioned in the previous report that Mr. Charles Cochrane, of Stourbridge, had left a legacy to the Association, and the sum of £2,720 was received in May last. A legacy by Mr. John Bentley, of London, of £100 (less duty) has also been received. The ordinary income from subscriptions and dividends having proved insufficient to meet the current expenditure, stock to the amount of £300 has recently been sold.

Publications.—Since the last meeting of the Council the following books and tracts have been published:—"The Religion of Time and of Eternity," by the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, M.A., being the Essex Hall Lecture for 1899; and "Back to Jesus," an appeal to Evangelical Christians, by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B.A.; the Rev. C. Hargrove's paper on "Ritualism," read at the anniversary meetings, has been printed, and is being circulated among those likely to be interested and benefited by its vigorous plea.

The following pamphlets and leaflets have been reprinted:—"Reasons for Secession from the Church of England," by the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke, M.A., "What Unitarians Believe," by the Rev. C. Hargrove, M.A., "Is Salvation Possible after Death?" by the Rev. John Page Hopps, "Unitarian Affirmations," by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, and "Unitarianism," by the late Mr. Samuel Sharpe. Arrangements are in progress for issuing the Essex Hall "Pocket Almanac and Year Book, for 1900," on the general lines of the editions of last year. The Committee at the request of the Rev. W. H. Drummond, and at the cost of the literary executors of the late Mrs. Sadler, printed and published for private circulation, a series of "Addresses, Prayers, and Hymns," by the late Dr. Sadler. The Committee are also publishing for the Rev. Walter Lloyd, "The Story of Protestant Dissent and English Unitarianism." This latter book is passing through the press, and will be issued in the course of a few weeks. At the request of ministers and others in South Wales, the Committee have issued a series of Unitarian pamphlets in the Welsh language; the following have already been published:—"Yrolwg Ddiweddar ar yr Hen Destament," by the Rev. W. Griffiths, Ph. D., "Jesu, Ein Harweinydd," by the Rev. D. J. Williams, "Cresfydd a Duwinyddiaeth," by the Rev. J. Ewart Jenkins. These pamphlets have been favourably noticed by several newspapers in Wales, and their contents have attracted the attention of inquirers. A translation of Dr. Herford's lecture on "Roman Catholicism" has been published in Welsh and will be circulated in Wales among ministers and others. Grants of 296 books, and 39,934 tracts, valued at £104 11s. 10d., have been made to congregations, ministers, postal missions, and private inquirers for the six months ending Sept. 30, 1899.

Mission Work.—A special meeting is held once a year for the consideration of grants for mission work, and these annual grants were reported at the last meeting of the Council, but the Committee receive applications for assistance of various kinds throughout the year, and since the last meeting of the Council the following grants have been made:—

Aberdare, £10 for special expenses; Bridgend, £20 for special services with the view of resuscitating the Unitarian cause in the town; Chester, £50 towards the re-roofing and other repairs to the old chapel; Devonport, £10 special grant for payment of supplies; Deptford, £10 towards alterations and repairs; Denton, £50 towards the minister's salary; Halstead, £10 for expenses of services; Ilkeston, £10 towards repairs; Leicester, F. C. C., £100 for new church building in Narborough-road; Mansford-street, £5 for special services; Mountpottinger, £50 towards enlarging the church and erecting new school buildings; Stratford-on-Avon, £50 toward a minister's salary, the Midland Union having undertaken to pay a similar amount; Swinton, £20 towards clearing off the debt on chapel; Newbury, £20 for repairs to the old chapel; Sychbant, £5 for supplies; Welsh services in London, £6. The Committee have pleasure in reporting that a new movement has been organised at Burton-on-Trent by the Rev. John Birks, of Derby, and there is promise of a permanent cause being established. The services at Newton Abbot, towards which the Committee have made a grant, have resulted in attracting good congregations.

McQuaker Fund.—The Committee regret to report that the attempt to resuscitate the Unitarian cause in Paisley, under the ministry of the Rev. A. C. Henderson, has not proved successful. The attendances were good for a time, but the people seem to have lost heart, and have decided to discontinue the services for the present. At Aberdeen the Rev. A. Webster conducted very successful evening services in the Trades Hall, when the attendance had ranged from 400 to 600 each Sunday evening. A grant of £15 was voted towards the cost of purchasing the right of way at the rear of the church building and land at Aberdeen. Mr. Webster is at present delivering lectures, expository of Unitarianism, in several towns in the north of Scotland; and the Rev. E. T. Russell has been authorised to deliver a short course of lectures in districts near his own church in Glasgow. An application from the congregation at Kilmarnock was received, inquiring if the McQuaker trustees would help them with a grant. The secretary paid a visit to Kilmarnock and held a conference with the congregation, and, after considering his report, it was resolved to make a grant of £100 a year in aid of the minister's salary at Kilmarnock for two years, subject to a reduction of not less than £10 a year after that time. The Rev. A. E. Parry, of Kirkcaldy, has undertaken to organise and superintend Postal Mission work in Scotland, on behalf of the Trustees, and he has taken steps for circulating suitable pamphlets and other literature in Scotland. The secretary had also visited Dundee, and he reported that the alterations which had been made had given great satisfaction, and were a decided improvement and advantage to the congregation, especially in their week-evening work. Mr. Stopford A. Brooke will deliver two week-night lectures at Aberdeen, Edinburgh, and Glasgow on "Religion in Literature" and "Religion in Life." He will also preach on the Sunday mornings, Nov. 19, 26, and Dec. 3 at these three cities.

Foreign Mission Work.—The Committee are glad to report that, under the ministry of the Rev. R. H. Lambley, the congregation at Melbourne is steadily improving. A grant of £25 a year was paid, and this grant has been reduced to £10 for the third year. Mr. Lambley is conducting special services and delivering lectures in one of the large suburbs of Melbourne, and the Committee have made a small grant of £5 towards the expenses. In regard to Auckland, the Committee are now able to report that the Rev. William Jellie, B.A., at present minister at Ipswich, has accepted an invitation to become the minister of the new movement at Auckland. He will sail from London at the beginning of January, 1900, and the Committee feel sure he will carry with him the best wishes of the Council for the success of his work in New Zealand. The Committee regret to report that the health of Mr. Martin Simonfi, the Hungarian student, gave way at Oxford, and he was compelled to return home. There is, therefore, no Hungarian student at Manchester College during the present session, but hopes are entertained that another student will be sent to England next year. Mr. Theo Berg, of Copenhagen, is still publishing his little paper "Det Glade Budskab," in Danish, containing translations of Unitarian pamphlets, and expositions of Liberal Theology. The Committee are in communication with the congregation at Sydney, and they hope to render some assistance in re-establishing the Church and helping it to become strong and self-supporting again, in spite of the defections caused by Mr. Walters' withdrawal. The Committee are also in correspondence with Hobart Town, Tasmania, and they are glad to report that the movement there is in a healthy condition: there are several excellent laymen who conduct the services, and the Committee have been glad to assist them with hymn-books and a small grant towards the expenses of a visiting minister.

Work in India.—The Rev. S. Fletcher Williams has forwarded several interesting reports of his work in India. He has lectured and preached a great many times in Calcutta to the general public, and especially to University students, and his services have been very much appreciated, for on many occasions large audiences have gathered to listen to his discourses. He visited the Khasi Hills Mission centres, and his report has given the Committee much valuable information and insight into the work that is going on in the Khasi Hills district. An additional grant of £10 has been voted in aid of the work there. In his most recent communication Mr. Williams informs the Committee, among other things, that a course of six Sunday evening lectures in one of the suburbs of Calcutta had been given, when there was an average attendance of about 300, including many of the principal inhabitants of the district. His Theological Lectures on Saturday evenings at the Students' Weekly Service, in connection with the Sadharan Brahmo Samaj, have been attended by audiences of 150 to 200. Mr. Williams is also contributing articles to the Indian Mirror, the Indian Messenger, and other newspapers. The Committee feel that they are fortunate in having a man of his energy representing the Association in India. Mr. Williams will shortly leave Calcutta for a missionary tour in different parts of the country, arranged for him by Pandit Sivanath Sastri. He will go to Barasil, Dacca, and Mymensing, afterwards he will start on a tour through the Central and North West Provinces to Lahore, Hyderabad, and other important centres. Mr. Hem Chandra Sarkar is pursuing his studies for the second session at Manchester College, Oxford, and the Principal reports that he is giving great satisfaction as a student. Mr. Bipin Chandra Pal has applied to the Committee to be released from his scholarship at the end of his first year. He has pointed out in his letter that at his age and with his special work in view, he would hardly be likely to benefit to any great extent by taking the ordinary course of lectures at Manchester College during the forthcoming session, much as he had appreciated the great benefits he had received during his first session. The Committee, under the circumstances, agreed that, with the consent of the Committee of Manchester College, Oxford, Mr. Pal's resignation should be accepted. Mr. Pal is a man of great ability and resource, and the Committee have conveyed to him their best wishes for his future usefulness as a teacher of religion in India. Every mail from India brings some fresh applications for books and pamphlets, expository of Unitarian Christianity and Liberal religious thought; and the Committee are always glad to respond to these applications, where they have reason to believe that the literature will be wisely and profitably used.

The Committee presented Mr. Swivenda and Mr. Rao with copies of Dr. Martineau's "Study of Religion" and "Types of Ethical Theory" as prizes for essays on Mr. Armstrong's "God and the Soul." Mr. Kelkar, another essayist, was presented with Dr. Drummond's Hibbert Lectures, and Mr. Lal with Dr. Martineau's "Seat of Authority in Religion." The Committee are considering the advisability of offering book prizes for further essays early next year. Professor Chatterjee, of Allahabad, has applied for further copies of Mr. Armstrong's book to be presented to University graduates who have specially applied for copies of this valuable volume. The annual report of the Indian Committee, which is issued in a separate form, will be forwarded in the course of a few weeks to all subscribers to the Special Fund for Work in India.

Special Services.—The Committee have arranged for Mr. Stopford Brooke to preach at Little Portland-street Chapel, London, on six Sunday mornings from Oct. 8 to Nov. 12. Personal applications for seats have been received from upwards of 800 people. Indeed, so numerous were the applications that the Committee were unable to supply cards for reserved seats to all those who applied for them. Mr. Stopford Brooke will also preach at Mansford-street, Bethnal-green, next Sunday evening, Oct. 29. After the services in London are over, he will proceed to Scotland, where, as already intimated, he will lecture and preach at Aberdeen, Edinburgh, and Glasgow. His other engagements are as follows:—Warrington, Dec. 10; Swansea, Dec. 17; Wandsworth, Dec. 24; Chester, Jan. 7; Rochdale, Jan. 14, in the morning; Oldham, on the same date, in the evening; Platt, Jan. 21; Hull, Jan. 28; Burnley, Feb. 4, in the morning; Padiham, on the same date, in the evening; Oxford, Manchester College, Feb. 11. The Committee regret that they have again been compelled to decline a large number of requests by congregations in different parts of the country for visits by Mr. Stopford Brooke.

Deputations.—At the annual meeting of the Western Union, held at Gloucester, Mr. T. Grosvenor Lee represented the Association. The Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A., represented the Committee at the annual meeting of the Yorkshire Union at Hull; Miss Tagart attended the annual meeting of the Eastern Union at Baintree; Mr. H. Chatfield Clarke, the annual meeting of the Southern Association at Southampton, and at the annual meeting of the London and South Eastern Counties Provincial Assembly held at Wandsworth, the Association was represented by the President, Mr. Charles W. Jones. The Committee have accepted a very cordial invitation conveyed to them through the Rev. A. N. Blatchford, to hold the autumnal meetings of the Association at Bristol on Tuesday, Nov. 21; and Wednesday, Nov. 22. There will be a religious service in the afternoon, when the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter, M.A., will preach. A public meeting will be held in the evening, and a conference on the following morning. The arrangements are in progress, and there is every expectation that successful gatherings will be held. The Committee have received a very cordial invitation to take part in an International Conference of Unitarians to be held in Boston, U.S.A., in May, 1900. Dates and details are still under consideration, but the Committee hope to make arrangements to send representatives from England, and they trust that some members of the Council and others may find it convenient to visit Boston at that time.

Association Sunday.—The annual collections on behalf of the funds of the Association will take place on Sunday, Nov. 19. A letter has been addressed to ministers and secretaries, signed by the President, the treasurer, and the secretary. The President has pointed out in this communication that the work of the Association is so well known, its claims for support so widely acknowledged, that it is hardly necessary to remind its friends and supporters throughout the country that the Association renders aid to many of the old churches, makes grants to new churches, and assists generally in maintaining missionary work at home and abroad. In order to do this work the Association requires continually increasing support, and the yearly collections have proved of great assistance. One hundred and seventy congregations contributed the sum of £522 9s. 2d. last year, and the Committee trust that both the number of congregations and the amount contributed will again show an increase. The number of congregations and the amount collected during 1898 was larger than in any previous year. If Nov. 19 is inconvenient to any congregation, perhaps another day can be set apart for the collection.

Deceased Members.—It is with deep regret that the Committee report the death of five honoured and valued members of the Council. Mrs. Thomas Colfox, of Bridport, was a warm friend, an earnest worker, and a most generous supporter of the Association. For several years she carried on a very successful postal mission, and she was so thoroughly convinced of the importance of the work done by the Association, that she subscribed £100 a year to its funds. Right up to the end, her interest in the promotion and spread of Unitarian Christianity never flagged, and she has left behind her an example of enthusiasm and of strenuous effort which may well inspire others to follow in her footsteps. Sir Philip Manfield was present at the last meeting of the Council. He was a man of great energy and strength of purpose. By his industry and intelligence he built up a large and successful business, but amid and throughout all his activities, he retained a strong love of literature and a warm interest in liberal religion. Lady Manfield, who died a short time before her husband, was for many years the Local Treasurer of the Association at Northampton, and Sir Philip was a generous supporter of the Association and its work. The beautiful church in Northampton is a fitting memorial of their enthusiasm and generosity on behalf of the Unitarian cause. Mr. Arthur Greg and Mr. Benjamin Heape were cultivated and honoured laymen, whose labours on behalf of all good causes are remembered with appreciation and respect in Lancashire and Cheshire. Mr. J. H. Rowland was frequently seen at the annual meeting of the Association, and in South Wales he was widely known as a steadfast and generous supporter of Unitarian work. The members of the Council will desire to convey to the relatives and friends of the deceased an expression of sympathy in the great loss they have sustained, and to place on record their appreciation of the earnest devotion and sterling worth of those who have passed beyond the veil.

The PRESIDENT then moved the following resolution:—

The members of the Council have learned with deep regret of the death of Mrs. Thomas Colfox, of Bridport, Mr. Arthur Greg, of Bolton, Mr. Benjamin Heape, of Prestwich, Sir Philip Manfield, of Northampton, and Mr. J. H. Rowland, of Neath, all of whom were associated in promoting and strengthening the work of the Association; they desire, at this the first meeting held since their death, to convey to the relatives and friends of the departed an expression of their tender sympathy in the sorrow that has befallen them. The Council also desire to place on record their high appreciation of the valuable services which the deceased rendered to the Association and to all good causes that made for liberty and progress.

These were, he said, heavy losses which they had to regret, and he referred especially to Mr. Arthur Greg and Mr. Benjamin Heape, as belonging to his own part of the country, of whom he had the most intimate knowledge; their loss to the body was greater than could be expressed. When such men passed away they left an example which he hoped would be followed by the generations to come. It was his conviction that they never lost anyone who could not be replaced. Their example of good work for the cause raised up others, and the work would be carried on as well as before.

Mr. DAVID MARTINEAU, in seconding, said they could ill afford to lose such men. They must keenly feel the departure of old friends. He had been closely associated with Sir Philip Manfield, who had been at the last meeting of that Council, and they would remember how helpfully he had spoken. There was a mournful satisfaction in offering to the relatives and friends an expression of their sympathy.

Dr. BROOKE HERFORD supported the motion, and said that he desired to say a word specially about one of their friends, and of what Mrs. Colfox's liberal and eager helpfulness had been to him on a special occasion. When he came back with something of youthful energy from Boston and had been stirred up to propose at the annual meeting of the Association that there should be a general doubling of their income, he did not know how the proposal was going to be received. Though as he came down from the platform one friend had wrung his hand warmly, and said he was in favour of it, he subscribed 5s., and would double it, and one other promise also reached him, yet by Sunday night he had concluded that he had missed fire, and it would not take place. Then on Monday morning came a warm-hearted letter from Mrs. Colfox, who had been a subscriber of £15, saying that she had read the report of the meeting, and was so moved by what had been said that she was going to subscribe £100 a year as long as she lived. Then he felt that the thing must go through, and though the writing of six or seven hundred letters and the reasoning with all sorts of people took a good deal out of him, it was done, and the Association gathered itself together for its extended and more vigorous work. That eager helpfulness of their friend coming in just then was very encouraging. It really turned the corner of his irresolution, and he was very grateful for it. He kept hoping that other friends would come forward in the same way. He then referred also to the other friends—strong-hearted, earnest men—who did their part in many spheres, and had left a name behind them and a memory that would linger long with those who knew them.

The resolution having been passed, the President invited questions on the report.

The Rev. R. J. JONES said that their weak churches in Wales had received much help, for which they were grateful, and he asked how it would be in the future. If more help could be sent to some of the congregations it would be well expended. He hoped that support would not be withdrawn from the Welsh movement in London. There was a band of earnest young people, with only narrow resources, and they deserved warm sympathy and support.

MISS FLORENCE HILL hoped that if Postal Mission work was organised in Scotland, a committee of ladies would undertake the heavy work of correspondence, for which a minister, single-handed, could hardly spare time.

The SECRETARY explained the conditions under which the Rev. A. E. Parry was undertaking of the work, in conjunction with the McQuaker Trustees, and that he would communicate with the Central Postal Mission.

MISS SHARPE wished that the interest in their work could be more widespread, and that they could more frequently take counsel together as to forwarding it throughout the country. If their business could be more publicly known and discussed she thought there would be a better feeling up and down the country.

The PRESIDENT then moved the adoption of the report. It was a great satisfaction to him to support such good work. As to finance, they had a theory in the north that no society was doing its duty unless it spent more than it received. But when they got an adverse balance they sent the hat round and made up the deficit. He thought the selling out of investments should never be allowed. The Association would be spared that for a time by Mr. Cochrane's generous legacy, left under special conditions, but the matter ought not to be lost sight of. The publications he thought some of the most valuable work of the Association. Mr. Armstrong's new book "Back to Jesus" he had read with the greatest interest, and was sure it would do good. He expressed to Mr. Jellie, who was present, the hearty good wishes of the members of the Association on his going out to New Zealand. He also referred with satisfaction to the Indian work, for which the Rev. S. F. Williams, whom they had known in Liverpool, was so eminently fitted, and to the great benefit of the services of the Rev. Stopford Brooke throughout the country. He was glad to note the increasing success of Association Sunday, which served to extend the interest in their work and brought in new subscribers. There was a time when the Association was looked upon as a southern society, and in the north they had gone about their own work; but now they saw that it was for the whole country, and their whole body ought to give to the Association the warmest support.

The Rev. R. J. JONES seconded the motion, which was adopted.

The Rev. W. JELLIE, on the invitation of the President, then addressed the Council. He was greatly obliged for the good wishes that had been expressed. He hardly realised as yet, perhaps, all that lay before him in going out to New Zealand, but he should go with a stout heart and a good deal of determination, if not to achieve success, at least to deserve it. It seemed strange that it was so difficult for them to establish worshiping societies in such progressive places as Melbourne, Sydney, and Adelaide; but from what he heard there seemed greater hope for liberal Christianity and liberal religion in New Zealand. The tone of life and culture seemed to be on a high level and of the same quality as in English life, and it gave him a great amount of hope. He had already begun work. His letter in THE INQUIRER had brought replies from different parts of the country, and he was hearing of places and people likely to be interested in the movement. Such knowledge would be a great help and would guide him in his efforts; for if they were to work with any chance of success in Auckland, it was clear to him that they must make the whole country, or a great part of it, the basis of their work. Their efforts would be directed towards the establishment of a self-supporting movement; 12,000 miles was a long way off, and they must look eventually even to educating their own ministers. They must work with the broadest ideals and aims before them. He would go out with the most earnest determination to do the best that was possible to add another colony to their spiritual empire.

Mr. DAVID MARTINEAU having invited the members present to attend the evening meeting of the London District Society, the meeting terminated.

LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

THE annual autumn meeting and soirée of this Society was held at Essex Hall on Tuesday evening, and was very largely attended. When the chair was taken at eight o'clock by the President, Sir J. T. Brunner, Bart., M.P., the body of the hall seemed to be well filled, and many leading members of our London churches were present. The President was supported on the platform by Mr. Charles W. Jones, J.P., President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, Mr. David Martineau, the Revs. Dr. Brooke Herford, W. G. Tarrant, W. Copeland Bowie, J. E. Stronge, Edgar Daplyn, and Mr. G. H. Clennell, secretary.

The PRESIDENT, in opening the proceedings, expressed his hearty sympathy with the Society. He thought that it behoved them as Unitarians to have more self-assertion. They knew well that the message they had for their fellow-men would bring comfort, strength, and happiness to them, and they had in the past been sadly lacking in that self-assertion which he recommended. It was a pleasure to him to be associated on that platform with Mr. Charles Jones, a man after his own heart, strenuous in his faith and in the expression of it. Mr. Jones was the son of a Unitarian minister, a beginning which he thought offered very great advantages. The son of a Unitarian minister was brought up free from prejudices, instilled with principles in many respects opposite to the principles of his neighbours and the majority of men; and if he stood by them, he had put into his composition an amount of steel that enabled him to get on in the world. Mr. Jones was now a partner in the great firm of Lamport and Holt, and one of the protégés of the late W. J. Lamport, who had done more to encourage able young men of their faith to get on in the world than any other man he had known. He bespoke for Mr. Jones a hearty welcome and earnest attention.

Mr. CHARLES W. JONES said that he had been announced to speak on the position and prospects of Unitarianism at the close of the century, but he should claim the privilege, which all the parsons claimed, of wandering from his text and saying whatever it occurred to him to be useful to say. And he would ask first whether they had any grievances? Some of their friends complained of isolation, because they were not admitted into what was called the Federation of Free Churches. But he did not care for that kind of Free Church, which only meant free from State control. He did not care so much for freedom from State control and had never been an ardent abolitionist; what he cared for was freedom from the bondage of creed, and if he had been in the House of Commons he would have brought in a Bill every session for the repeal of the Act of Uniformity, hopeless as it might have appeared at first, and would have persevered until it was carried. He did not know of any other grievance, and thought that they might rather be getting near to that state when all men spoke well of them—or rather, not well of them, but of their opinions; for while many people were professing the truths they held, they were very careful to say that they were not Unitarians. He would read to them two extracts from recent utterances:—

A Church that can go forth courageously and face the world as it is, believing that God's revelation of Himself, once made in the person of Christ Jesus, is being continually explained to man by that progressive revelation of God's purpose that is continually being made by the Divine government of the world. A Church fitted for free men, training them in knowledge and reverence, disentangling the spirit from the form; not wandering among formulæ, however beautiful, that have lost their meaning; afraid of nothing, receptive of new impulses, proving all things, and ever ready to give a reason for its principles. The great work of the Church and Christ is to mould the future. Its eyes are turned to the past for instruction and warning, not for imitation.

And this again:—

He seemed to see the day when the creed of the great mass of the English-speaking Christians might once more be a simpler creed than the creed of Christendom had ever been since Apostolic times; when doctrinal differences which now separated them might no longer be held as insuperable barriers to union; when, with a keener consciousness of the Divine Fatherhood and our Common Brotherhood in Christ, men would be content to rely for their spiritual union less exclusively upon dogmatic definitions and more on filial piety and the spirit of Christian charity, which was the clearest intimation that had been vouchsafed to them of their share in the divine life.

Those passages were from speeches by the Bishop of London and the Bishop of Hereford at the recent Church Congress, and he thought that it might be well for them to make use of that statement, of which many people were so fond, that "they were not Unitarians."

He then gave a quotation of a very different kind to show that they were safe yet from being spoken well of by all men, a quotation from an article in the current number of the Nineteenth Century, by Mr. G. W. E. Russell, in which he spoke of a bishop "fraternising with a Socinian blasphemer." They need not mind very much what a man like Mr. Russell said, but they would understand how disgraceful the expression was when they remembered that the man so referred to was spoken of in another article in the same Review, by a very different writer, as "the greatest religious teacher of our day." He had no quarrel with Mr. G. W. Russell, because he did not care a straw what he said, but he had with the editor, who, he thought, had no right in a respectable magazine to let such ribaldry appear. For his own part he was thankful to have been born a Unitarian. In Biblical matters people had many things to unlearn, but he found that he had nothing to unlearn, since those things which Mrs. Ward, in her article, had said were no longer to be held by thoughtful people, he had never been taught, but from childhood had learnt not indeed to scoff at the incredible things in the Bible, but to think of them reverently as beautiful legends of the olden time. Proceeding to speak of religious education, he said that he did not think in Board Schools they could have anything that could be called religious education. He wished most earnestly that the compromise had never been adopted. The only system of perfect education was for the Government to deal with secular education and leave religious education to the clergy and ministers of religion. It was only men specially trained for such work, which was the very highest work of education, who could do it as it ought to be done. He would rather have religious teaching confined to the Sunday, if there were no other way, but why should they not take an hour a day from school hours, and let the ministers of religion go to the schools to give religious instruction? There was no more miserable compromise in religious instruction than the reading of the Bible without note or comment. The Bible was a book that might do a great deal of harm, if put into the hands of children, without any guidance or explanation. Nothing ought to exercise their Churches more than the question of the religious education of their children. They were behind other Churches in that matter, and it was of the utmost importance.

As to propagandism, which was an ugly word for a good thing, they had to make their views known. But in undertaking new work it was a difficulty that they could not spare their best men, whose whole strength was wanted in their own churches. He felt that when they started new places they did not sometimes give them up soon enough. When they found that new efforts did not answer, they should be given up. And they ought not to think that because there was an old building, it necessarily followed that it was any use trying to work there. They wanted first the living movement, and the building next. In his own district they had sold the old Ormskirk and Prescott chapels, and could use the money to much better purpose, where there was better work to be done. In conclusion, he wished to say that there was no one who cared more for the success of Unitarianism than he.

Dr. BROOKE HERFORD said that he agreed with Mr. Jones, they had no grievances. The way was never so open as it was to-day for any good work and any strong, helpful word. There had been in the last half-century a great wave of materialism, what some had regarded as irreligion, and scepticism and agnosticism, but deep down below there never was so much eagerness on the part of thoughtful people to come to some clear strong standing-place, on which they could pray and work and live. That was to be seen in many ways, and they must live up to it. They must give thoughts that were real thinking and should help men in their thinking, and in their feeling of the reality of religion, and then they would always find men and women drawn to them and feeling the blessing of a helpful religious faith. The reform of Christianity had always been their aim, and it had gone a great way in their time. The old formulas still kept their place, but for the most part, like old guns of a couple of hundred years ago kept by the Border farmers over the fireplace, they were not for use and were not alluded to. They were no longer practical instruments of mental and spiritual warfare. The new catechism of the Free Church Federation he welcomed, not that it went far enough for them, but it showed how much agreement had been reached on the central realities of religious faith. When he remembered how tightly the Evangelical bodies held to their statements fifty years ago, instead of being inclined to scoff he was thankful the catechism went as far as it did. When he began his ministry, his next neighbour, the minister of a Congregational Church, looked him in the face and said that he did not think there was any possibility of his being saved—a good kind man, who would not have burnt his little finger; but he believed it in a theological sense. They believed such things in their minds, but not in their hearts. Things had changed since then. Men's thought about human nature had been so changed that they could hardly recognise the old statement of the corruption and damnation of infants as having any relation to the practical thought of their Evangelical friends about the children. And their thought about the Bible was widening out all round. The doctrine of eternal damnation was almost played out. Now and then they brought it in at a revival meeting, but as a living force it was almost gone. This widening out of the thoughts of men all round of course made their work in some ways a little more difficult. They could not place the exact line between the common thoughts of other Churches and their own. But they had to emphasise the fact that men must not only hold such views, but stand out for them, and have worshipping churches where the wider thought could have free play. The thoughts of men were widening, but the speech of men to the common people wanted greatly widening too. A few of the great Broad Churchmen did speak out, but too often thought was masked in phrases which had one sense for the deacons and another for themselves. At the end of the century the prospect for their work was more free and more hopeful than ever before. The only question was, were they equal to the work, and how by God's grace, by His help and blessing, they might become more equal as the years went by.

Mr. DAVID MARTINEAU, as treasurer of the Society, pointed out how greatly their work had extended during the twenty-five years that he had been in office. They had founded eighteen or twenty new churches, and they had always wanted more money. That very afternoon the Committee had been considering a district of London where the appearances were very favourable, and there seemed an opening for successful work; but for that again, more money would be required. That year they had taken over a deficit of about £250, and his estimate was that at the end of the year, with the work in which they were engaged, it would be increased to £350 or £400. They had, however, received from their late friend, Mr. Bentley, a legacy of £100 (£90), and another friend had sent him a donation of £100. But even so, they required another £200, and more than that, if they were to launch out into new work.

The Rev. E. M. DAPLYN spoke of the advantage it was to a minister to have his position clearly defined, and he had found the Unitarian name very useful. In both the pulpits, which he had formerly occupied, he had found that the clergy when they knew where he stood, were not afraid of the name, but were interested to find out what he really held; and both among Church of England people and Nonconformists he had noticed that his presence as an avowed Unitarian had exercised a moderating influence upon their dogmatic expressions. It was for them to stand firmly, and where possible to stand firmly together, declaring their faith; and they must pay the greatest attention to the education of the children.

The Rev. W. WOODING gave an interesting account of his passage from the Church of England, in which the home of his childhood had been, and to which the happiest and sweetest memories of his life attached, through the Congregational Ministry to his present position, where he was grateful for the liberty accorded to him by his congregation at Newington-green. As one whose time was largely occupied by teaching in a public school, he strongly insisted on the necessity of separating religious and secular education. In a common public school there was no chance for a man to teach religion. They might read the Bible, but were expected to read it without comment. They might not touch on difficulties even if they were questioned by the boys. The only issue, so far as he could see, was that they must entirely separate secular from religious matters, and let parents, ministers and churches do the best they could in respect of religious education. In the public schools they were far more likely to develop a hypocritical spirit than to generate a feeling of reverence and goodness, and love of truth. The boys were very quick to observe, and they saw that a man in such a position was hampered and bound, and might not speak what was quite true to himself.

On the motion of the Rev. W. G. TARRANT, seconded by Mr. HAHNEMANN EPPS, a cordial vote of thanks was passed to Mr. JONES for his address, and a similar vote having been accorded to the President, on the motion of Mr. S. S. TAYLER, seconded by the Rev. J. E. STRONGE, the meeting terminated.

THE First Presbyterian (non-subscribing) Church of Holywood, co. Down, celebrated the jubilee of the dedication of their present place of worship, on Sunday and Monday last, the Rev. S. A. Steinthal, being the preacher. The history of the church goes back far into the seventeenth century. Our report of the proceedings we regret to be obliged to hold over until next week.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c., received from the following:—D. A.; J. B.; J. E. C.; J. D.; W. H. D.; J. F.; E. H.; W. H.; W. F. T.; J. H. W.

EAST CHESHIRE CHRISTIAN UNION.

THE annual meeting of this Union was held at Congleton on Saturday week, and there was a large attendance of delegates from the congregations of the district. Service was held in the afternoon in the Cross-street Chapel, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. E. P. BARROW, M.A., from the text, "Go ye and make disciples" (Matt. xxviii. 19, R.V.). The sermon drew a distinction between making proselytes and making men learners of Christ, and urged that the aim of their society must be to spread, not a denomination, but the Kingdom of God.

Immediately after the service the annual business meeting was held, Mr. F. NICHOLSON, in the absence of the Rev. H. E. Dowson, presiding. The reports from the affiliated societies having been read, the executive's report and statement of accounts were read by the secretary.

The report referred to the settlement of the Rev. C. E. Oliver, B.A., as colleague to the Rev. L. Scott, at Denton, under the most promising conditions, and with many signs of success already visible. It spoke of the remarkable success of the new movement at Ashton, and their building scheme which will require about £3,000, towards which the congregation have already raised about £630. It appealed for larger financial support in face of the increased outlay at Denton and Ashton, and showed how easily the Union's income might be doubled by every member subscribing even the small sum of one or two shillings a year. It thanked the ministers of the aided churches, the lay preachers, the local treasurers, and the local secretaries for their valuable services, and confidently appealed for continued and increased support.

The following officers for the ensuing year were elected:—President, the Rev. H. E. Dowson; secretary, the Rev. B. C. Constable; treasurer, Mr. T. H. Gordon; plan secretary, Mr. J. F. Hamilton.

Tea was provided in the schoolroom, to which about a hundred ladies and gentlemen sat down.

Subsequently a public meeting was held at which the MAYOR of CONGLETON presided, and spoke of the hopefulness of the prospects of their congregation in the town.

The Rev. C. E. OLIVER in the course of an earnest speech, beginning with a quotation from Ruskin, contrasted the religious professions and the actual conduct of men in this country, and urged that the Christian Churches had failed in their duty to enforce a true standard of public and social life. Dealing with the complaint that parsons mixed in politics, he said that the parson was indeed out of place on the platform if he was there as a mere party hack, and allowed himself to be carried away by the passions which were frequently rife in such assemblies, but if he stood there to raise his voice not for party but for principle, not to serve selfish interests of church or of class, but to support what he honourably believed to be the best men and the best measures for the promotion of a higher and purer national and social life, then such men could be inspired from the platforms. Too many of the other sort were there already. In God's name let them speak from pulpit, from platform, from pavement, or anywhere else, and let them not fear to incur the reproach of partizanship. Every man, be he parson, peer, or peasant, who studied human duty, human perfection, human happiness, had a right and was bound to speak on matters of public concern, though his judgment might be condemned by party politicians. Politics were not mysteries which only the initiated must deal with. It was the pride of the country that they belonged to the people. Public questions were and ought to be subject to the moral judgment of the community. They ought to be referred to the religion they professed. Religion was concerned in the whole of life in God's world. To fence off any sphere of human action from its direct influence was virtually to say that in that sphere of action religion was good for show, but would not work, was virtually to deny its divinity, and to absolve all men from its control. Keep religion out of politics! Again he asked, was it not the most momentous duty of our time to bring religion into politics? If the Churches would give over being frightened into silence by this bugbear of politics and strive to cultivate and give voice to a collective conscience on matters social and political, what would not such a focussing of the now scattered moral forces do in deepening the sense of moral responsibility in the national life? If the Churches found nothing to say at times like the present when they were face to face with matters which virtually affected the welfare of nations, when the solemn questions of peace and war, and life and death hung in the balance, if they did not help everybody under their influence to know about them, and to see them in the light of the Sermon on the Mount, what right had they to call themselves Christian Churches?

The Rev. A. C. Fox then spoke of the character and work of their Union. He confessed that they did not succeed in their work as they desired, and asked what was the cause of that. It was not in their gospel. Did the fault lie with the preachers? It might be that they were not earnest enough, active enough, competent enough, to preach that gospel of Jesus, but as to that he would leave it to their judgment. Was it in the people to whom the gospel was preached? He was afraid he was now treading on delicate ground, but nevertheless, he would say what he had to say, and what he had to say would be on somewhat different lines than those followed by the able speaker of that afternoon. He wanted to ask them to become zealous proselytizers, to make converts and make the people come over to them. He did not know why there should be so much objection to the word proselytizing. One of the great causes of their comparative failure was in not reaching the masses of the people. He did not mean the members of other Churches, because he would not disturb them, but he meant those outside any Church. He thought too much was left to the parson. They wanted more of the missionary spirit in them. If they would only get over the prejudice to proselytizing, if they would give their friends an invitation to their services and make them welcome and enter into friendly talk with them; if they would take up the work of the minister and carry it out in the world; he thought the kingdom of God would spread amongst them, and their Church would do a great deal more than it was doing. Let it remind them of the words addressed to Timothy, "Preach the word of love to God, love to man, be constant in season, out of season, reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering, and teach." They must follow the example of the founders of their Church. They were proselytizers who didn't hesitate to bring men over to Christianity by earnest preaching in and out of season. The apostles and the disciples as well, founded the Christian Church, and it was for them, by doing the same kind of work, to propagate the gospel and cause the Church to flourish.

The Rev. H. E. Dowson referred to the missionary work that was being carried out in various towns connected with that Union. The enthusiasm was rising, and he wished his readers to rally round the Union, and help in the noble missionary work that was being done by it. Their Churches were not played out. The Puritan spirit was as much wanted to-day as it was two hundred years ago. There was too much pleasure-seeking, idleness, and self-indulgence, and too much national immorality. They had a good work to do and they must do it with their might.

LITERATURE.

DR. SADLER AND THE CHILDREN.*

THERE is a fine spiritual quality about certain books and lives which gives to their influence an almost resistless attractiveness. What is its secret essence? If it is religion, it is religion in its purest and most refined expression. If it is Christianity, it is Christianity according to Christ's highest teaching. If it is theology, it is that theologia pectoris which lies deep and quiet in the reverent heart. Perhaps this special personal quality is best described as Piety. But "piety" as a word, if not as a thought, has a little fallen into disrepute, and is considered no longer up to date. Like its companion "godliness," it has sunk into disuse, or else is tinged with distrust. Early piety seems to us a precocious unnaturalness. Austere piety, long-faced and straight-laced, repels us, of course, by its unattractiveness. There would appear to be a doubt, amounting almost to a disbelief, that a simple, cheerful, retiring piety can now exist in the midst of these assertive and competitive times.

Yet that unassertive and unaggressive godliness which we thus push into the past and then describe as picturesque, can still live and move in gracious ways even in the thick of modern demands. And when we find it, how we love it and linger upon it! Is there not a sweet spirit about even present-day piety; a special flavour of purity and odour of sanctity which win us to admit its surpassing excellency?

We have been led along this line of reflection by Dr. Sadler's "Sermons for Children." This pure and pious spirit breathes through every page of the book, and it is very fragrant. It is fitting and well that "Sunday Thoughts at Rosslyn Hill Chapel" should now have a companion volume of addresses to the children. To those who had the privilege of sitting in the pews at those spring and summer evening services, and hearing these simple words as they fell from Dr. Sadler's own lips, the pleasure of reading the printed page will be touched with tender memories. They will quietly recall a voice that is still and a face of speaking gentleness, so faithfully reproduced in the frontispiece. How well we remember drinking in, though not one of the children, the address, in simplest paraphrase, on "The Story of a Short Life." Both Dr. and Mrs. Sadler had a special fondness for Mrs. Ewing's stories, as also for all dumb creatures, and his sympathy for Sweep the black dog was hardly less than for the invalid Leonard who learned to be brave after all, though a cripple. The tenderness with which he told us of Leonard's book of "Brave Poor Things," in which the blind organ-tuner headed the list, made an abiding impression upon one hearer at least, who often-times again hears those words "brave poor things."

But the sermons of deepest interest are those in which Dr. Sadler illustrates religious truths by happy references to his own childhood or later experiences. And in the twenty-six manuscripts here put into print there are few from which this personal note is entirely absent. We are told in turn of the first hymn he used to sing after his child-prayer every evening, of his first visit to London, of the Quakers and their meeting-house near that in which his father preached (at Horsham) and where he used to worship; of the thirty or forty German children he heard singing on the Brocken in the early morning, of his Sant engraving of Samuel, purchased in memory of a dear child with money she herself had saved, of his visit to Venice and his impression of Titian's "Presentation of the Virgin," of his rebuke to the boys in Pilgrim's-lane, of the old lady, alone and infirm, who told him her greatest comfort was twenty hymns she had learnt by heart—these and other personalalia all fall into their place so naturally, and help to illustrate respectively such vital subjects as "The Inward Voice" or such useful habits as "Learning Hymns." Two short extracts will suffice to show this personal simple directness in speaking for instance of the Fatherhood of God, and of the life after this world.

I don't know anything that so convinces me that God is really my Father in heaven as that He gave to my father and mother their love for me, and to me my love for them. My father and mother have long been dead, but I love them still. Last week I went to the town where they lived, to the funeral of a relative, and there was the place where my father and mother were buried, and three sisters and a brother; and I felt that I loved them as much as ever; and as I felt this love I felt that God who gave it me is indeed my Father in heaven.—"Christ and the Little Children."

A friend whom I had long known came to me in great trouble. He lived in the country, but he had two sons at school in London. When he came to me he had only one son with him; and he said, "I have brought my son: this is my only son now—the other has gone." After a short illness he had died here at Hampstead. When I visited the father some time later in his own home, I found him still bowed down in grief. I spoke to him of the hope of meeting again in a better world; but he answered, "We know nothing about that." I said, "You believe God to be your heavenly Father." "Yes," he replied, "I believe that." Then I said, "But if you believe that, does not your own heart tell you that your boy is safe in the heavenly Father's keeping?" And that seemed to comfort him more than anything else, as well it might.—"On Knowing the Father."

From those two instances alone it will be seen that there is no avoiding the deep things of religion, no "talking down" to the children about matters of trivial concern, no intrusion of merely humorous stories to keep up a flagging interest, no laboured moralisings to enforce obvious lessons, but instead an entire reliance on the spirit to do its own work and touch the child's heart. Miss Cobbe has told us in her autobiography how "religious ideas were from the first intensely interesting and exciting to me." Dr. Sadler takes for granted that religious ideas are interesting in themselves, and hence he resorts to no adventitious aids, but goes straight to the purpose of his address. All the same, there is a plenitude of illustration taken fresh from life, or from literature. We have referred to the former, and are not surprised to find amongst the latter more than one author held in favour by Dr. Sadler, as Luther, Charles Lamb, Dickens, Hartley Coleridge, Dr. John Brown, John Woolman and Wendell Holmes. What a treasure-house of illustrations our English literature supplies for those preachers and teachers who will make use of its precious stores!

Dr. Sadler's love for the lower animals finds eloquent witness in four addresses. In the first is quoted Rowland Hill's remark that he would not "give a farthing for that man's religion whose cat and dog are not the better for it." "A Sermon on Worms" gives a simple summary of Darwin's famous "mould" discovery. In "How St. Francis Loved," we are reminded afresh of the Saint's kindness to animals, and of that excellent society, the Band of Mercy. In a charming "Bird Sermon," we are introduced to Dr. Sadler's tame study sparrow so well known to visitors at Rosslyn Manse; and to that beautiful saying of Thomas à Kempis, "By two wings a man is lifted up from things earthly: one is simplicity, the other purity." We think that Dr. Sadler's hymn, inspired by this saying, might fittingly have found a place amongst those given at the end of the volume.

Of these hymns the least we can say is that they display in an admirable degree the very qualities of simplicity and purity. To write hymns for children, and not about them, hymns which shall be neither namby-pamby in expression, nor puerile in tone, is a difficult and rarely accomplished achievement. But we would single out as of special merit those on the Prodigal Son and the Good Samaritan here turned into not unbecoming rhyme, and also a little hymn of catching melody, beginning "Lord, may I remember Thee."

To all parents who are anxious for the "nurture and admonition" of their children, we sincerely commend this volume: in it they will find the very essence of religion condensed into its simplest form, and made plain to the youngest understanding. To the Rev. W. H. Drummond, who writes the Preface, and to his co-editors in their delightful task, we prophesy in advance the thanks of all its readers.

F. K. FREESTON.

"OUR FAITH."*

THIS is a little book of religious instruction for young people, in the form of addresses such as Mr. Tarrant may have given to the members of his own congregation. To a stranger the book may prove at first rather puzzling, not knowing whose faith or whose Church is being dealt with. Towards the end of the first chapter, indeed, Mr. Tarrant says:—

* "Sermons for Children." By the late Thomas Sadler, Ph.D. James Clarke and Co. 3s. 6d. net.

* "Our Faith." By W. G. Tarrant, B.A., Sunday School Association, Essex Hall. 1s. net.

In all that follows in this book, the main thing in view will be to describe, if possible, that form of religious culture, that Church and faith, which may best supply a spiritual home for us, and which will best fit us to fulfil the purposes of our life on this earth.

But only as the second chapter draws to a close is it seen that the writer is a Non-conformist and a Unitarian. This may be no disadvantage, for it awakens curiosity and so commands attention, and is evidently part of the method of the book, which opens with a picture of the life of great cities, and so comes to speak of "the temples and churches of many lands," and to a deduction of the meaning of religion. By a similar method, in the second chapter on "Our Church," the main principles of a Church that is undogmatic, non-sacerdotal, and founded on faith in the Eternal Goodness are described, with indications of other forms of faith thus excluded.

Then follows a chapter on "The World's Greatest Teachers," telling of Moses, Zoroaster, Confucius, Buddha and Mohammed, and leading up to a very helpful chapter on "Jesus of Nazareth," in which stress is laid not only on the influence of his teaching, but of his personality, and the true meaning of his faithfulness unto death. To those who value the Bible, Mr. Tarrant suggests a sympathetic study of other sacred scriptures, both for their own sake and as showing the diversity of religious enlightenment throughout the world, but also at establishing the supreme worth of the scriptures in our Bible.

The sixth and concluding chapter is on "Our Aims and Hopes," of which the keynote is the Kingdom of God and its promotion. Laying stress on the vital importance of a true spiritual life, instinct with moral earnestness, Mr. Tarrant shows how the religious movement of which he speaks is based upon the conviction of the Goodness of God, and repudiates as a contradiction of such faith the old doctrine of everlasting hell.

We proclaim a gospel of all-triumphant Love, not of half-defeated Love. We aim chiefly at recalling men to a sense of a divine Pity that willeth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should turn from his wickedness and live. We aim at showing men that the penalty for broken law is a warning, stern but salutary, that they can only obtain blessedness through obedience. We feel that the Divine Goodness is most good in ordaining this to be so. We strive to win men to the right side by showing how beautiful it is, how their faithfulness in duty blesses all around them, and enables them to see and to enjoy the grace and glory of an existence of which a faithful Friend is the indwelling Spirit.

Such an ideal excludes whatever would materialise religion, and any spiritual despotism. Its aim is to build up "a brotherhood of free spirits who claim no authority over each other in matters of conscience, but who help and are helped as God makes possible for them."

In the service of this ideal, Mr. Tarrant's little book is written. It does not attempt to lay down the lines of a complete course of religious instruction, but to help the young people of our immediate fellowship—Unitarians, worshipping in Free Churches—to realise the principles and the responsibilities of their Church membership. To the thoughtful reader, and in the hands of a skilful teacher, the book should prove helpful; and we would add, especially so to those who have already mastered such a book as Mr. Armstrong's "Man's Knowledge of God," and so are grounded in the fundamental truths of the religious life.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

[TO PUBLISHERS.—All Books, &c., sent to THE INQUIRER will be acknowledged under this head, with name of publisher and price, if supplied. The necessities of our space, however, compel us to limit the number selected for critical notice and review.]

Quality of Voice. By Emil Sutro. 5s. (Putnam.)

Heroes of the Reformation: Erasmus. By Ephraim Emerton, Ph.D. 6s. (Putnam.)

The Map of Life. By W. E. H. Lecky. 10s. 6d. (Longmans.)

Bishop Sarapion's Prayer Book. Translated by the Right Rev. J. Wordsworth, D.D. 1s. 6d. (Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.)

The Epistle of St. Clement, Bishop of Rome. By Rev. J. A. F. Gregg. 1s. (Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.)

Echoes of Old Lancashire. By W. E. A. Axon. 7s. 6d. (Andrews and Co., Dock-street, Hull.)

The Conscience of the King. By J. C. Spence. 6s. (Sonnenschein.)

Prayers. By Archbishop Benson. 3s. 6d. and 6s. (Isbister.)

Renan's Anti-Christ. Translated, with an Introduction, by W. G. Hutchison 1s. 6d. (Walter Scott.)

The Natural History of Selborne. By Gilbert White. Edited by Grant Allen. Illustrated by E. H. New. 21s. (John Lane.)

The Ritschlian Theology. By A. E. Garvie. 9s. (T. and T. Clark.)

Singing Time. Music by Arthur Somervell. Drawings by L. Leslie Brooke. 5s. (Archibald Constable.)

Good Words, Sunday Magazine, Cornhill, English Historical Review, Woman at Home, Review of Reviews, English Illustrated.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

In the "good old days of yore," when men and women were but dimly groping after the light of truth and the way of holiness, it was believed by many that men could best serve God by retiring altogether from contact with the world, so far as this might be possible, and living a life devoted to prayer, fasting, and scourging, and the mortification of the body. The poet Tennyson has written two poems which may, perhaps, help us to see whether this effort to live apart from contact with others, and to devote one's self to care for one's own soul alone is really the best way of carrying out God's purpose concerning us; or whether he does not best serve his Maker who loves and serves his fellowmen—striving, even though but in some humble way, yet ever striving to help and bless others.

The first of the poems to which I refer is called "St. Simeon Stylites." Incredible as it may seem, this man is said to have spent thirty years upon the top of a column, or pillar, in the hope that by so doing he would save his soul, gain heaven, and be accounted one of the saints. At length the poor, wretched creature—his "thighs rotted with the dew," "half deaf," and "feeble-grown," and "almost blind"—feels that if any martyr ever merited, by his sufferings, the title to saintship that, surely, must be he! For has he not been slowly dying in agony for years?

But now let us ask, "What doth the Lord require" of us? Is it not that we should live so as to honour Him, rather than waste His great gift of life in fruitless self-torture?

Tennyson, in the poem called "St. Telemachus," portrays to us a man who, in the fifth century, began to consecrate himself to a life of prayer and fasting, living in a cave, and never changing words with men. One day, when all the West was bathed in lurid crimson, at set of sun, Telemachus seemed to hear a voice cry—"Wake, thou deedless dreamer, lazying out a life of self-suppression, not of selfless love." And after this the anchorite believed that in his ear was whispered the magical word "Rome!" The Imperial city being at this time the great centre of Christendom, and the desire of all the faithful, this call seemed to Telemachus at once the voice and call of God. He arose; and, "after following a hundred sunsets, and the sphere of westward-wheeling stars, at length he touched his goal." Being "all but deaf through age and weariness" on entering the city, he became "borne along by a stream of men," all bent on reaching the huge Colosseum, where the monstrous fights between men and animals took place, and where eighty thousand (so-called!) Christian faces might watch man murder man. During the combat—suddenly gliding from his place, upheld as it were by a strength from Heaven—Telemachus "flung himself between the gladiatorial swords," crying, "Forbear, in the great name of him who died for men, Christ Jesus." The reward of Telemachus for this brave and noble deed was death; for the enraged spectators, being thus debarred from the brutal sight of the contest and slaughter they had hoped to see, took up stones and cast them into the arena, and the old man was killed. But Telemachus, by this crowning act of his life (looking no more to the saving of his own soul, but throwing himself, with passionate earnestness, into the struggle against evil), won the love and admiration of all men. His deed was talked of by high and low; and "preachers linger'd o'er his dying words, that would not die"; and finally the Emperor decreed that such Pagan sports should no longer disgrace the city of Rome.

Alas, that even to-day, in this nineteenth century of Christian teaching, war, bull-fights, and other barbarities should still be possible! May you, who are now the boys and girls of England, in the years to come, help towards the dawn of the glad time when men and women will love only to do good; and will shrink with horror from inflicting needless pain on any living creature!

ALICE A. LUCAS.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any News-agent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are:—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER ...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR ...	3	4
PER YEAR ...	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE ...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE...	2	10	0
PER COLUMN ...	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN ...	0	3	8
BACK PAGE ...	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, OCTOBER 28, 1899.

STRONG IN THEIR STRENGTH.

WE are glad to be able to offer to our readers a full report of the further celebrations of the jubilee of Hope-street Church, in addition to what we published last week, and we would specially ask of the young people of our churches throughout the country to read Mr. ARMSTRONG'S noble sermon, with its heart-stirring appeal. There are reports this week of other meetings also, at which many brave and earnest words were spoken. From various sides there come to us tokens of active life, of serious purpose, and a desire for far more fruitful service. One of the best signs of hope is the absence of self-satisfaction, and we should welcome even the most vigorous words of rebuke, wisely directed, that should stir our people, perhaps to a keener shame for what has been left undone and great opportunities that have not been grasped, and certainly to more determined effort, to fresh self-sacrifice, to more complete devotion to the cause we have at heart.

As we think of the wide field of our duty, the many posts of honour and of difficulty to be held, and those often the most difficult, and therefore honourable, which seem most insignificant in the world's eyes, we long for a closer touch with all solitary workers, and a new and keener sense of companionship in a holy service, that should be a source of joy and courage to those whose need is greatest.

There is, indeed, a great ideal of religious life which unites us as one people, and on this the solitary heart may feed and be of a good courage, even as he finds in his self-surrender to the living God the supreme comfort and the unfailing strength of his life. It is God who has given us our ideal and has called us to this service, and the meaning of it is brought home to us in such grateful commemoration and thankful resolve as formed the best part of the recent celebrations in Liverpool. We thankfully commemorate our great leaders whose work is done, but who are never lost to us while there is a faithful heart to be quickened by their faith and the inspiration of their lives. There may be none equal to them now upon the field, but what of that? If we should be discouraged, then they have lived in vain. Not their departure, but our little faith would be to blame. That is not the lesson of the Hope-street Jubilee, but rather that in their strength we may still be strong.

We have our great ideal, in whatever lonely outpost two or three may be gathered for earnest worship and unselfish work. We have our ideal of a Free Church, in which we are to bear our witness to God, and to the supreme trust of our religion, that He is with us, that His guidance never fails, that the reverent and humble heart may be without fear and needs no other safeguard in the fellowship of freedom, but simply that surrender to His truth teaching inwardly. It is a glorious inheritance we have in that freedom of the Spirit, in which our churches are built for a true home of the religious life, for satisfaction of the deepest cravings of our nature for worship, and surrender, and loyalty to truth and right. Into that fellowship comes to us not only the presence of the Holiest, but all that He has given us for the enriching and strengthening of our life; the witness of all faithful souls, and of the great Chief of faithful souls. There comes to us the Master's presence, and we know that in our Free Churches we are to bear a joyful testimony to the power of Christian discipleship, the redeeming grace of that lowly and loving spirit, and prove in the temper of our lives and in daily duty in the world what it really means to be a Christian. So also there comes to us the constant presence, even when they are taken from our sight, of our own closest friends and teachers, they who have most clearly shown to us what we possess in the treasures of the past, who have been in their word and in their lives our best interpreters of CHRIST, and make so large a part of the home-feeling of our churches.

These all belong to our inheritance, for which we must be unspeakably thankful. They are given to us as a priceless possession, for the uplifting of our lives, for the solace of our times of rest and our inspiration in the active duties of our day. In accepting the trust of our Free Churches we are undertaking no light thing. It is a great appeal they make to us for faithfulness, for reverence, for self-surrender, for constant watchfulness, lest any part of our testimony to the things of God be suffered by neglect to fall away. But it is a noble calling that may well bind us together in the closest brotherhood, that may lift us above despondency and give us an undaunted courage; and not for ourselves alone, but because the world needs such a united witness to simplicity of faith, in the freedom of the Spirit, and single-hearted Christian service.

We often hear discussions about our churches, their defects, their needs, their resources. As we desire that they should be strong and effectual ministers of the things of God to mankind, we must learn to think and to talk less about ourselves and our churches, and more of what they are to accomplish. We must forget ourselves in the reverent worship of God and the helpful service of our fellow-men.

DEDICATION OF A CHURCH.

O THOU whose Spirit witness bears
Within our spirits free,
That we Thy children are and heirs
Of Thine eternity,—

Here may this simple faith sublime
O'erarch us like the sky;
Secure below the drift of time
Its firm foundations lie.

Our thought o'erflows each written scroll,
Our systems rise and fall;
The life of God within the soul
Lives and outlasts them all.

Here may that witness clearer grow
Each waiting heart within,
The way of filial duty show,
And glad obedience win.

Here be life's sorrows sanctified,
Here truth its radiance pour;
While hope and faith and love abide,
Forever more and more.

F. L. HOSMER.

THE MINISTERS' BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.
—The forty-seventh annual meeting of this Society was held in the vestry of the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham, on Tuesday, Oct. 24, under the presidency of the President, the Rev. H. McKean. There were also present the Revs. H. Eachus, J. Howard, J. C. Street, and I. Wrigley, Messrs. E. P. Beale (hon. treasurer), Charles Harding, A. W. Wills, and T. H. Russell (hon. secretary). Apologies for non-attendance were received from the Revs. Joseph Pollard, G. A. Payne, L. P. Jacks, W. H. Lambelle, Walter Lloyd, R. Clarke Moore, A. Harvie, and G. Heavyside, and Messrs. H. K. Beale, J. Arthur Kenrick, T. F. Walker, and Richard Peyton. The treasurer's accounts and the report of the directors, which were submitted to the meeting, were received and adopted. On the motion of the President, seconded by the Rev. J. C. Street, a vote of thanks to the retiring officers and to the board of directors was passed, and the following officers were elected for the ensuing year, viz.:—President, the Rev. L. P. Jacks; vice-presidents, Mr. W. Colfox and Mr. W. G. Harrison; hon. treasurer, Mr. E. P. Beale; hon. secretary, Mr. T. H. Russell; and auditors, Messrs. F. S. Bolton and Edward Nettlefold. A vote of thanks to the chairman brought the meeting to a close.

HALF A CENTURY'S RELIGIOUS DEVELOPMENT.*

BY THE REV. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.

"And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout the land unto all the inhabitants thereof: it shall be a jubile unto you."—Leviticus xxv. 10.

I WONDER how many of you have had the curiosity to search out those passages of the ancient Law of Israel which have given to us that word "Jubilee," which has so often been on our lips in the past few days. To the observers of the Levitical Code the year of Jubile was a year of rest and restoration, when fields were to lie fallow and men should neither sow nor reap. To us the season of Jubilee is a time of grateful reflection on the past and strenuous resolution for the future, a moment of mingled retrospect and resolve, in which we strive to gather life and force for larger duties and fuller consecration.

And if this morning I strike the note of retrospect rather than that of anticipation, it is but that we may gather guidance and inspiration, above all that the young among us may gather knowledge, understanding, and stimulus for the life and work of our Church in the half-century to come. For with all my heart I believe, with a speaker of last Thursday night, that "to-day is better than yesterday, and to-morrow will be better than to-day."

And so I have asked you to consider with me "half-a-century's religious progress"; for if once we clearly conceive what the movement has been for fifty years gone by, we shall the better understand how to strive to shape the movement for fifty years to come.

Now it would be very natural to try to sample the movement of the half-century since 1849 by comparing the utterances which have successively fallen from this pulpit during that long procession of years. But there would be one fatal flaw in such a method, resulting from the fact that on that Sunday fifty years ago, when the first Sabbath worship was held within these walls, the preacher was a man already far in advance of his time in religious thought, and therefore affording no index whatsoever to the then general standpoint of the religious world. Even from his own earlier position James Martineau at forty-four had already made considerable advance.

In fact one great revolution in his thinking on the great problems between man and God, Martineau had already completed. He had been brought up to believe that a man's conduct is determined by inevitable law, and that he has no real choice of action. Out of this position he had been gradually struggling some four or five years, when that great year of illumining which his congregation gave him in the University lecture-rooms of Germany, immediately before the opening of this church, flooded his mind with new and brighter light; and he stood up in this pulpit on Sunday, Oct. 21, 1849, a convinced believer in the magnificent truth of the freedom of the human will, and in the allied philosophy which finds the fundamental sources of religious belief in the immediate voice of the living God in the living mind and conscience of his child.

With regard to the Bible and the authority of the miracles recorded in Hebrew and Christian Scripture, I do not think that he had yet fully thought himself out of the traditional views. Like many another mind which fought its unseen battles in those middle years of our century, he first grew into a spiritual atmosphere in which the miracles became unnecessary as evidence of Christian truth or a support to the religious life, and then by slow degrees awoke to the fact that the evidence on which they themselves had rested was altogether defective and inadequate. A dozen years before, he had held the miraculous essential to Christianity and declared that without it the Gospel of Christ would fall;* now, I think, he had found out that the Gospel of Christ has foundations infinitely deeper and more secure than miraculous narrations; but it was as the fifties and the sixties slowly rolled away that he became a master of that criticism under which the miracles themselves dissolve into the rainbow tints that play about a mighty personality, and grew towards the frame of mind in which at last he wrote that most revolutionary, yet most profoundly conservative treatise, "The Seat of Authority in Religion."

But it is clear enough that in this at least the mental biography of James Martineau cannot help us. It cannot serve as index to us of the general shifting of religious thought between the day on which the doors of this church were first thrown open and the day on which we celebrate its Jubilee. The mind of this great preacher and philosopher has been far too independent and too powerful for that. And if we are indeed to trace the general development of religious thought during these fifty years, we must turn away from such personal investigation.

As I wish, then, to be very clear and to speak so that those young folk who may be the old folk of Hope-street Church in another fifty years shall fully understand, let me say at the outset that I find the main change which the half-century has wrought in a great breaking down of the dividing wall between the sacred and the secular right through the whole field of life. To take one very simple and very obvious instance first of all. Fifty years ago the common conscience of the country held Sunday a sacred day in a very special sense, while all other days were secular. It was thought positively wicked to do on Sunday many things which were perfectly right on Monday. We draw a distinction still. Many of us think it a mistake to carry the ordinary work of the week into the Sunday hours—I myself think it a most grave mistake with consequences to health and happiness irreparable; many of us think it a mistake for those who have plenty of opportunity for tennis or golf in the week to devote Sunday thereto as well. Many, indeed—conscientious and responsible people—do not appear to think these things even a mistake. But my point is that whereas fifty years ago almost every religious man would have thought such practices essentially immoral and profane, probably no one in this church to-day, though he might regret and deprecate them as inexpedient, would pronounce them contrary to the law of God and an essential sin upon the soul.

In like manner, fifty years ago most Christian people looked upon ministers of religion as so essentially a special and sacred class that they thought many things positively wrong for them which were perfectly right for lawyers, or merchants, or artisans. Billiards, card-playing, smoking—some men think those wrong to-day, others think them in moderation innocent enough. But I do not suppose there is one of you in this church this morning who would say to me, or even think to himself, that they are wicked for me, but perfectly right for you.

These may seem trivial instances; but I have instanced them because I want the younger among you specially to understand what kind of thing it is that I mean when I say that the great change in religious ideas that has been carried through in the past half-century has been the breaking down all along the line of the dividing wall between the sacred and the secular. One day is not sacred and the rest secular; nor one profession sacred and the rest secular. All days and all professions are secular inasmuch as they subserve the necessities of our physical life. All days and all professions are sacred inasmuch as they offer opportunity for righteous living, for honourable service, and for the drawing of the soul towards God.

Now there has been a vast amount of scientific and critical literature poured out upon the world this last half-century which has strengthened and stimulated this great and momentous thought-movement; and England has had no small part therein. In science the splendid work of Lyell and of Darwin, and the enunciation of the law of the conservation of energy and others, have told with tremendous force in the direction I have indicated. In the borderland between science and letters Max Müller has exercised a potent influence. In criticism the famous "Essays and Reviews," Colenso's examination of the Pentateuch, Matthew Arnold's Essays, and Rénan's "Life of Jesus" have penetrated into the common thinking of tens of thousands of Englishmen, to say nothing of the great German and Dutch scholars whom most Englishmen have only known at second hand.

The result may be taken up and looked at in three great departments of human thought.

In the first place, fifty years ago the average man looked upon the ordinary laws of nature as purely secular. He did not see in them the immediate and ever active hand of God. But he saw God's hand in any sudden and startling interruption in nature's course. It was God's hand that originally called the earth and the stars into being. It is God's hand that caused the earthquake and the tornado. There we might read His mighty will. But He did not speak directly to these men in the spring shower or the gentle summer sunshine. But that way of thinking we have now put away. Some recognise God more, some less; some are impressed with His holy presence in every time and place, others have no eyes or ears for the trailing of the garments of God through the areas of space. But at least we make no distinctions. The birth-dawn of creation was under the same laws that nightly rule the heavens now. The rain and the sunshine of common days are movements of the same energies that preside in the most tremendous convulsions of nature. God is everywhere or nowhere. All is sacred or all is secular. In fact all is both. Nature still sings the morning-song of creation. According to our temperaments we see everywhere the natural play of element on element or the breathing of God through the chambers of the worlds. If we are wise, and mind and soul awake, we behold both in perfect blending.

* A sermon preached in Hope-street Church, Liverpool, on Sunday morning, Oct. 22.

* "Rationale of Religious Inquiry," p. 133.

To pass on to another department: Fifty years ago the Bible stood absolutely alone in literature. It was the Holy Bible, it was sacred Scripture. All other crystallised thought of man in the books of all the ages and all the nations was secular, if not profane. The story of Jonah was holier than the noblest episodes of classic legend or Scandinavian myth. Neither Plato nor Virgil, neither Shakespeare nor Milton, was of the same order as King Solomon with his proverbs or the author of the Epistle of Jude. In the one case literature was the secular work of man, in the other it was sanctified by the inspiration of God. But now men understand that no such distinction can be drawn. Some delight to show how secular is the Bible, others how sacred the works of genius of all the centuries and of all the lands. We see the human ignorances and limitations, sometimes the human passions, betrayed even in the Hebrew and Christian Scriptures; we recognise the divine leading in many a faithful history and noble poem that had its birth far away from the Bible lands and times. There are those whose delight seems mainly in showing how secular the sacred, others whose joy is to show how sacred the vast field we had counted secular. But the hard line of distinction between them is gone; the dividing wall has been overthrown.

And to take a third and perhaps the most significant of all examples. Fifty years ago no man was held to have any claim to the Christian name unless he saw in Jesus Christ a being unique, not only in the degree of his inspiration, but in the very nature of his relation to Almighty God. A man might be Trinitarian or Unitarian. He might believe Christ to be God and a Person in the Godhead, or he might believe Christ to be, not God, but man. But unless he thought this Man Jesus to stand in a wholly unique relation to God such as no other ever had attained or could attain, he was held to be altogether outside the Christian pale. It was after this last half-century had well begun that Theodore Parker was thrust out of communion with the Unitarian ministers of Massachusetts for this very thing. But now even men enjoying the savour of orthodoxy speak of the incarnation of God as realised in its degree, not in Jesus Christ alone, but in every good and devout man the whole world over. On the one hand it is shown that Jesus was purely human, that he shared the limitations of our common humanity. On the other hand it is recognised that God breathes his spirit into poet and prophet, into philanthropist and reformer, into sage and saint, in multitudes of lands and in every age, even in the same manner, less though it be in degree, as into the holy Nazarene who gave the world so mighty a propulsion on the line of spiritual and ethical development. The delight of some is in showing that Jesus had no other path to God than that which is open to all mankind. The delight of others is in showing that the same path to God lies open to us as was open to Jesus Christ. But more and more we are coming to see that Jesus and God's whole human family are not of one flesh alone, but of one spirit too, and that in whatever sense Jesus called God Father, we are to call God Father in the very same sense as well.

Thus, then, in these three great areas of human thought have the streams of the sacred and the secular mingled, and ancient distinctions, once held fundamental, been done away. We no longer recognise a miraculous touch of God in Nature apart from the way the creative and preserving energy works at every moment and in every spot. We no longer hold one literature apart as alone inspired by the breath of God. We no longer separate Jesus from mankind as standing in a different order of sonship to the universal Father.

And I say that in this great and sweeping change, in this breaking down, all along the line, of the wall of separation between the sacred and the secular, I see the most momentous change that has come over religious thought in the last half-century, and the chief index to the progress we have made.

But I can well understand that there may be those—as, indeed, we well know there are—to whom this great revolution will seem no progress, but a deterioration; not the building up but the breaking up of religious thought. If God was no more in the six days' creation than He is in these falling October leaves, if God is no more in the Bible than in Dante or in Wordsworth, if God above all was only in Jesus Christ in the same fashion, though in more transcendent degree, as He was in Augustine or Wesley or Gladstone, then, I hear them say, are we of all men most miserable, orphaned of God and bereft of the faith delivered to the saints.

And since religious thought is chiefly of value as it leads to religious life, I ask you finally to consider for a few moments with me, whether this has indeed been a progress or a back-sliding, a strengthening or a weakening of the spiritual forces acting on society.

It all depends—does it not?—on whether this great change of conception acts on a mind and heart essentially secular or essentially religious. The message of the day comes to men of the lower type, and it seems to say, "Creation's morning hour was no more divine than the foggy November days in the mire of the city; the Bible is no more charged with a burden for your soul than the run of literature which crowds the railway book-stall; Jesus is no more a son of God than your next-door neighbour or the merchant across the way." And the man who loves best the secular and wishes for no solemn sanction upon life, no lights from God illumining his way, is well-pleased and relieved of an uneasy burden; for he thinks the preachers are disarmed, and the dim sense of a higher life refuted, since all that the world held sacred is shown to be secular after all. And I entertain no doubt that there be tens of thousands whose religious life has deteriorated under this great change, awe and reverence and holy fear being in them undone.

But how comes the message to the men of the higher type? Surely with accent glorious and inspiration most uplifting.

"God is as much in every drop of rain that falls in the city street, in every breath of the sunny summer air, as He was in the calling of the stars to order and the setting of the sun upon his majestic way. God's inspiration is as ready for the student in his chamber, for the preacher of to-day, for the leader-writer on the Press, if his conscience be consecrated to what is good and true, as it was for Moses when he led his people forth or for Paul upon Mars' Hill. God's fatherhood is as sure over you and your wife and your children and the men and women in the street as it was over Jesus when he sought a desert place to pray or in the moonlit glen of Gethsemane itself." And the man who yearns for the higher life and longs to see the light of love and goodness and pure religion in all the homes of men, has a sense of the very present God and of moving in a divine world which is a strength and glory to him for ever more. For has not all the secular been made sacred, and shines not the face of God in every place?

And so to all of you—and most earnestly of all to those who are to be the strong men and gracious, helpful women of the coming years, who are to take our places when we elders lay down our tasks—I say on this Jubilee Sunday, "Take to yourselves the great and splendid lesson of the new thought and the new knowledge. Habituate yourselves to see everywhere the sacred and to consecrate every step and phase and business of your life. See God in the green grass and the flowers, in the skies that look down on our restless city, and the great river that sweeps past our docks. See God in every word of sweetness or of noble strength, of truth or goodness that falls from the teeming Press of our age. See God in the face of every little child; try to see Him in the faces of busy men and weary women. Find God everywhere and always. Let for you the secular be swallowed up in the sacred." The wall of partition is gone. But that does not mean that God is dead and that duty is no more; but that God lives in you and all men, and that life itself is a trumpet-call to consecration and to service!

God hides some ideal in every human soul. At some time in our life we feel a trembling, fearful longing to do some good thing. Life finds its noblest spring of excellence in this hidden impulse to do our best.—Robert Collyer.

WHEN duty is severe, we must be more reverently dutiful; if love brings sorrow, we must love more and better; when thought chills us with doubt and fear, we must think again with fuller soul and deeper trust.—James Martineau.

THE one thing needful is to look up, to revere something above us, to desire something better, to hunger for a higher good. He who loves the highest, truest, and best is, in his heart and soul, a lover of God.—J. Freeman Clarke.

EPPS'S	C	COCOA.	The most nutritious.
EPPS'S	C	COCOA.	Grateful and comforting.
EPPS'S	C	COCOA	For breakfast and supper.
EPPS'S	C	COCOA.	With natural flavour only.
EPPS'S	C	COCOA.	From the finest brands.

THE JUBILEE OF HOPE-STREET CHURCH, LIVERPOOL.

THE celebration of the Jubilee of Hope-street Church was continued on Thursday, Oct. 19, when a soiree was held in St. George's Hall. The guests, who numbered about a thousand, were received by Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Bowring and the Rev. R. A. Armstrong.

The first part of the evening was spent in social intercourse, and in the inspection of a number of exhibits kindly lent by Dr. Nelson, Professor R. Kerr, the Rev. T. Robinson, and members of the Liverpool Microscopical Society. Both before and after the speaking selections on the great organ were given by Dr. Peace.

At 8.30 the chair was taken by Mr. W. B. Bowring, who was supported on the platform by the Revs. R. A. Armstrong, L. de Beaumont Klein, Charles Hargrove, C. H. Wellbeloved, W. J. Jupp, T. Lloyd Jones, W. H. Drummond, H. W. Hawkes, J. M. Lloyd Thomas, H. D. Roberts, J. M. Whiteman, J. C. Hirst, J. L. Haigh, J. Morley Mills, and V. D. Davis; Messrs. Charles W. Jones, T. Cook, B. P. Burroughs, and Lawrence Hall. Among those present in the body of the hall were the Hon. Mrs. Klein, Mrs. Bowring, Mrs. George Holt, Miss Holt, Mrs. Mulleneux, Miss Bowring, Mrs. Evans, Mrs. J. P. Brunner, Mrs. E. C. Hall, Mrs. Burroughs, Mrs. Sonnenschein, Mrs. Wellbeloved, Mrs. Drummond, Miss Cooke, Miss Frances E. Cooke, Miss Higginson, Mrs. Washington Rawlins, Miss Darbishire, the Misses McConnell, Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Holt, Major Evans, Major Biggs, Messrs. Henry Jevons, Walter Holland, F. C. Bowring, R. R. Meade-King, Richard Robinson, Richard D. Holt, C. S. Jones, Roland New, I. C. Thompson, H. Coventry, A. W. Hall, and F. Robinson.

In addition to the message from Dr. Martineau in Miss Martineau's letter to Mr. Armstrong, Mr. Lawrence Hall reported at the opening of the proceedings letters of regret for absence from Lady O'Hagan, the Revs. S. A. Steinthal, J. Edwin Odgers, P. M. Higginson, J. Harwood, H. S. Solly, T. W. Freckleton, C. B. Upton, H. Gow, E. L. H. Thomas, P. Prime, J. E. Stronge, Felix Taylor, J. Crossley, and W. L. Tucker (all of whom had been at one time or another connected with Liverpool); Messrs. William Rathbone, Alfred Holt, James R. Beard, and F. Monks.

Mr. W. B. BOWRING, in taking the chair, expressed the pleasure of the Committee in seeing so great a gathering of friends, and said that while that was a social rather than a business meeting, there were yet several addresses to be given, and he felt that on such an occasion he must himself say something of their congregational history. The congregation which was celebrating the Jubilee of its church that week could trace its spiritual ancestry without a break to the year 1707. In that year a number of Presbyterians from Scotland, and some from the North of Ireland, joined some worshippers from the Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, and opened a meeting house in Key-street, in Liverpool, on ground now covered by the Exchange station. It was an interesting historical fact that the communion plate now used in Hope street Church bore the inscription: "The gift of Mrs. M. Clough to the Key-street congregation," with the date 1762. No name was more honoured among old Liverpool worthies, in the fields of education, philanthropy and social reform, than that of Yates. Mr. Richard Vaughan Yates left his name a memorial to Liverpool, in that he laid out the beautiful Princes Park. The founder of the family was the Rev. John Yates, whose ministry lasted nearly half a century in the Key-street and Paradise-street Chapels. He was one of the brave men in those days who dared to defy Liverpool interests and speak and agitate against what they all now felt to have been an iniquitous thing—the slave trade. Under his ministry the congregation flourished, and in 1791 they opened a larger chapel in Paradise-street, and there they further showed the breadth of their views in those days, for they opened a free school for boys and girls, absolutely undenominational. In 1823 the Rev. John Grundy was appointed minister—a man of great taste and learning, and of great eloquence. In the year 1832—and that year marked an important epoch in the history of the congregation now worshipping in Hope-street Church—their spiritual needs were ministered to by a young man, not yet thirty years of age, whose profound scholarship, eloquence, and piety commanded the admiration of the cultured classes of the town. He referred to James Martineau, who was with them still, bearing the burden of nearly ninety-five years of strenuous labour, and who held a name honoured all over the world for his literary ability and for his brilliant championship of a spiritual philosophy against the materialism of modern thought. Under his guidance the congregation continued to flourish, and numbered among its regular worshippers men well known in the history of Liverpool for public spirit, for philanthropy and for generosity. The present beautiful Gothic church was built during the ministry of the Rev. James Martineau, and was called by Sir James Picton, in his "Records of Liverpool," a cathedral in miniature. It was opened Oct. 18, 1849; and one of the first sermons preached within its walls was by the Rev. Charles Wicksteed, who afterwards was minister of the congregation in conjunction with the Rev. Alexander Gordon. The personality of Dr. Martineau impressed itself deeply upon the congregation, and deeply upon the religious community of the world; and when he ceased his twenty-five years' ministry, he was called to take up important professional duties in London. He left behind him a high standard of ministerial duty, which his successors had striven worthily to maintain. For half a century Hope-street Church had stood for the freest theological teaching unfettered by any fixed creed or dogma. Neither minister nor pew-renters were asked by the Trustees to subscribe to any particular form of dogma. The pulpit had been opened to religious teachers of many different faiths; they had listened to Hindoos, to members of the Armenian, the Baptist, the Congregational Churches, and of the Society of Friends; they were ready and anxious to learn from such teachers all they could, of what was true and right. Free thinking and free speaking in matters of religion was their motto. He would now call upon their respected and revered minister, whom they were all glad to see back again in good health.

The Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG said that one letter he had withheld from Mr. Hall that he might himself have the privilege of reading to them two or three sentences of its contents. It was not, indeed, a letter from Dr. Martineau, but it was a letter from his daughter, containing a message from Dr. Martineau. She wrote:—

He begs me to give his hearty sympathy and good wishes to you and to your congregation, on the occasion of the Jubilee of the church, and to say that he is grateful for being remembered in connection with this event, and sorry that his benediction must be given in such poor coin, but that he gives it heartily.

And Miss Martineau added:

I take this expression "in such poor coin," to mean in so few words, only in the form of a message, which I think he felt to be a very poor and inadequate expression of his real thought and feeling towards the minister and people who count themselves as his spiritual children.

They might well believe that he felt it, as any man would feel it, a great burden of honour to stand in the succession of the Hope-street ministry as a follower of James Martineau. One might well be weighed down by the thought of the marvellous power, the beauty, the persuasiveness of those great sermons which were preached from their pulpit when those stones were new; but if ministers who had succeeded him were unable to vie with his eloquence, his learning, and his power, they could at least be faithful to the great principles which he laid down and exemplified so nobly. One might at least strive to make the pulpit a place from which a message should be delivered that should do something towards increasing the force and the endeavour after the Christian life. That was the first and foremost principle and purpose, the characteristic of their Church as of every Christian Church in the land; and they could not but feel a great joy to think of the mass of Christian endeavour, the great measure of faithfulness, the noble service, which had issued from the Hope-street Church since that great day on which it was opened fifty years ago.

In the second place, they were in Hope-street Church faithful to that wonderful, fruitful principle, which was more specially characteristic of their group of churches—that absolute theological and religious freedom, which they believed at least to be a divine condition of progress in the search for religious truth. The preservation of that freedom rested more with the people than the preacher, and it was their honour, and not the honour of successive ministers of Hope-street Church, that that freedom had been maintained absolutely unimpaired for half a century. But in response to the splendid gift of that absolute liberty of speech and thought their ministers were bound to give the best they could give—namely, unflinching utterance of conviction on all the problems with which they dealt. If any minister should hold back any part of what seemed to him to be the living Word of God, he would be unworthy to minister in a pulpit on which the people conferred so generous a freedom. It was the duty of the minister, whose high privilege it was to stand in that historic pulpit, to utter himself freely on the great problems that lay between man and God. He might speak with faltering tongue, because of the dimness of his mind, but at least he was bound to speak the thing which he held true. This he was bound to do not only concerning those problems lying between God and man, which they summed up intellectually as theology—he was bound to do so in those still more urgent problems, as they sometimes seemed, which lay between man and his fellow-men. It was part of the function of the Hope-street pulpit to have the best word to say on the great social problems of the day, and not to be afraid to utter what he who stood there believed to be an urgent word concerning those great problems of poverty and suffering and sin, which for ever met them in the battle of their life. On that historic occasion he thanked them from the bottom of his heart for the wonderful liberty they had accorded to him.

It was not a popular position, that of absolute freedom; it was still less a popular position when that freedom led to the profession of a theology which was scouted by the Christian Church at large; but he maintained that it was a position of incomparable dignity. When he stood in that pulpit, he felt that he occupied a position which no bishop in the land occupied—that he was there before free men, to utter his word of freedom; and he believed they also felt it was good for them to have to listen to a man, who, they knew, was speaking the thing he believed, without thought of creed or articles or dogmas.

They appealed to that great company, whether members of Hope-street Church or not, for sympathy, fellowship and co-operation, as they entered on the second half-century of their Hope-street life. They asked for aid and sympathy in all their efforts, that new life might spring up amongst them from that beautiful hall which the Chairman had presented to them. He asked for help to adorn that hall. He asked for pictures worthy of the architecture of the building—not pictures which they did not think good enough to put up in their own houses, but such pictures as they would themselves like to have. They asked for help in the bazaar they were about to hold. He had never believed in bazaars until the last two months, but since he had seen the wonderful way in which they brought people together, and the work they did, he believed at any rate in that particular bazaar with all his heart. They asked them also to fill their church with fellow-worshippers. He appealed to all their members to come to Hope-street Church as they came to St. George's Hall, and to others who through the shifting of things had been left homeless, to come and accept their hospitality, and see whether they could not give them a spiritual home. He thought they were too backward sometimes in saying how glad they were to see folks. He would only say further that with the help of God they would do what they could at Hope-street Church, and whether his own health were strong or feeble, he would do whatever God enabled him to do. He had at that time a helper who was a comfort to him every day and hour, and he trusted they would be able to pull along. They would go on humbly, steadfastly, rejoicingly in that new half-century of life, that they might leave to those who came after them a church with fame undimmed and tradition enriched, he hoped, by fresh stores of faithful service and heartfelt worship of their heavenly Father.

The Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE congratulated the young people who were present on the great future which lay before them, on which they might look back when, perhaps, they celebrated the centenary of their church. They had not only all the accumulated treasures which men of his own generation had inherited, but all the added riches, the poetry, art, and science, the experience and researches of the past fifty years. They were growing up to take possession of that future, to use it and to take heed that being but trustees and not owners of that treasure, they should hand it down, not intact alone, but increased, to those who should come after them. He had thought of saying a good deal of what Mr. Armstrong had said, and there would be no harm in some repetition, to impress upon those who were gathered there as members of the congregation of Hope-street and allied churches in Liverpool, what it was they stood for and what was committed to their trust in those churches. There were two things. The first was religion. In an age when there was much profession and very little faith, they stood for faith—faith that man was not a foundingling discovered on that planet revolving round the sun, but was related to the universe and to the one great Power that filled it: that man was the child of God. That was the first principle for which they stood, that religion, with its reality of heaven and the present Spirit of God, God with man and hearing his cry, was not a delusion and a lie, but a fact, a fact as real as any other human experience. And secondly, inasmuch as all the Churches stood for that, and he thanked God for it, they stood for the further principle, that in the interpretation of that fact, in the definition of religion and what their relations to that Power were—they were Unitarians? No, not Unitarians. They were all Unitarians, whether they avowed it or not, and they ought all the more boldly to avow it because the name was to to a great extent a reproach—but they did not stand for Unitarianism. Unitarianism was the medium through which they discerned at their best what that Power was. Unitarianism was the best to which they could attain in their present state of knowledge, but it was not an eternal truth. What they stood for was liberty—absolute freedom to seek after God, if haply, nay, if surely they might find Him. They bound neither themselves nor their descendants nor their buildings down to a Unitarian creed; they bound themselves only to seek the truth; they bound themselves to freedom—freedom from a book, freedom from the interpretation of that book, freedom from the authority of a Church and from the traditions of the past, and freedom even from the obligation of their present convictions. They sought for truth in religion, as all men sought for truth in all other matters—not binding themselves in astronomy, or chemistry, or any other science, or in literature to certain foregone conclusions, but seeking from generation to generation, trusting in each generation to see more clearly, more certainly. It was worth while to stand up for those great things, for man's relation to God, and man's freedom from all control of his fellow-men, past or present, so that with sincerity and a deep sense of responsibility he might seek after God with all his heart.

Mr. CHARLES W. JONES said that if they wanted speakers who would refer to the past they had selected in himself a very unsuitable person for the purpose. He was not at all fond of the good old times in the past, he much preferred the present. Mr. Hargrove had said in his sermon on the previous evening that there were no Martineaus or Beards or Thoms nowadays. But were they sure there were Martineaus and Beards and Thoms fifty years ago? They said "Yes"; but were they sure that their grandfathers knew them? He would tell them two little stories. Looking over the papers of his uncle, the late Charles Darbishire, who lived at Rivington, he had found in one of his diaries an entry which showed that he had been made very unhappy by a sermon preached by Mr. Martineau. He went over to Gateacre to consult Mr. Noah Jones about it, who said that the views expressed in the sermon were certainly extreme, but he did not think that the congregation would take any objection to them. Mr. Darbishire mentioned also that he had spoken to several of the elder members of the congregation, and they did not like the sermon at all. Evidently there was no Martineau in those days in the sense that there was now. And he happened to know a little story about Mr. Thom. Shortly after he came to Liverpool a lady wrote to him, saying that he would never do any good as a preacher unless he changed his style entirely, and she sent him a volume of Belsham's sermons, saying that if he modelled his discourses on that he would do very much better. What he specially honoured Dr. Martineau for was that he had never gone back on any of his opinions. Charles Darbishire and his brother were men of the same sort, the older they got the greater Radicals they became. That was what was wanted. He could not bear the man who, when he got a little comfortable himself, was content to leave the rest of the world as uncomfortable as it was before. With regard to their move to Ullet-road, he should like to say that he thought it would be a great advantage to both congregations. He was not going to find fault with Hope-street Church, but he could never understand how they came to pitch their church so near to Renshaw-street Chapel. They never liked it, but they waited fifty years before they remedied it. Now they would have different spheres; Hope-street would be the town church, and they of Ullet-road would be, at any rate, nearer to the country. He hoped they would continue to work together in perfect harmony as in the past, and that the time would never come when they would be separated in any way. It had been suggested that it might be better if one of their churches took charge of the South-end mission, and the other of the North-end, but he should be sorry if anything of the sort were done. He wanted the two congregations to work together in sympathy, and to work hard. In conclusion, he wished to say a word of encouragement to the young people. The experience of his life was that to-day was better than yesterday, and that to-morrow would be better than to-day.

The Rev. Dr. KLEIN, as minister of a sister church, expressed the feelings of Liverpool friends towards the Hope-street Church and congregation—feelings of common rejoicing, of earnest fellowship, and of sincere Christian goodwill. On that occasion it was pleasant and easy to fulfil the apostolic injunction to rejoice with them that rejoice, to rejoice in the prosperity of the work entrusted to their care, and in the fact that after half a century they found themselves where their forefathers stood, having borne the brunt of the day, but never dismayed, and stronger than ever in their grand foundation principle of freedom. That Jubilee had a special significance, because it brought them face to face with a very striking contrast, in the attitude towards Unitarianism, towards the people who worshipped in such a place as Hope-street Church fifty years ago, and the general attitude at present towards the same kind of people. They could well measure the difference by referring to the attitude of veneration, esteem, and profound respect universally professed to-day for the most distinguished predecessor of Mr. Armstrong, the Rev. James Martineau. Mr. Jones had made an amusing reference to Mr. Martineau as a young man. Although he was then already highly gifted, eloquent, and profoundly learned, they knew that the general spirit of the time did not permit such expressions of respect and admiration and veneration as had of late attended every one of his birthdays. He could not claim personal knowledge of how a minister of their Free Churches fared fifty years ago, but he had in his possession a copy of a book giving an account of the great controversy of the three against the thirteen in Liverpool in 1839, and from the polished vituperation to be found in those pages he gathered, that in 1849 things were still pretty lively. But above all, the one thing which made that celebration highly significant was the fact that what they stood for as religious people was now receiving a recognition not to be compared with the kind of recognition the same views received fifty years ago. Now, thanks to fifty years of human science, historical research, and Biblical scholarship, that which they stood for and which was generally known as Unitarian Christianity, had received a strength, had acquired an impulse, and had a power unparalleled in the history of religious thought. He did not mean that those principles for which they stood, which were now found to be borne out by the highest and clearest human knowledge, were fifty years ago confined to themselves; but the number of those who could afford to say what they thought, whether in the pulpit or the Press, or in any religious denomination, was not as large then as at the present time. And what he chiefly rejoiced at was not so much the ease they had thus obtained, and the respectability which had accrued to them, but that the amount of misunderstanding between themselves and other earnest people had diminished. For that he thanked God—that though many misunderstandings might still survive, nevertheless there were fewer misunderstandings separating them to-day from those generous souls in all the churches who loved freedom as they loved it, who appreciated truth as much as they did, and were no more blind than they were to the triumphs of human science and the results of Biblical scholarship. The final word must be that after fifty years of struggle and misunderstanding men were gradually coming to see that the views for which they stood, far from being subversive of religion and Christianity, were perhaps the views that were assuring for religion and Christianity in the future the strongest support in the hearts of men. They were discovering, if he might dare to paraphrase a sacred expression, that the stone that was rejected might become the rest and the foundation of the corner. They came to see that in standing for the divine in man they might have rendered the divine in Christ more acceptable to future generations than it was at present; that in standing for a view of revelation which did not exclude scientific truth they might be working still for the acceptance of a view of revelation as never closed and never stifled, but free and open and progressive as the Spirit of God in the minds and hearts of men. They came to see that their views were after all compatible with the highest ideals. That they had to admit when they looked at a man like Dr. Martineau, and should he be forgiven if he said, like the present minister of Hope-street Church?—men who had not had the ideal stifled in their heart and conscience by the views for which they stood; and if the tree was to be judged by its fruits, then they could not wonder that men had at last to admit that where such excellent results were found, where such admirable citizenship was possible, where such noble theology existed, it could not be denied that the Spirit of God was among them. He would conclude with the same word as Mr. Armstrong, who had spoken of the freedom which had made such congregations as theirs possible, and such men as Dr. Martineau and his successors, the freedom which was solving all the great problems of the world, not only in religion but in sociology and politics as well, a freedom which was indeed the greatest thing in the world, on condition that they rose to a sense of the responsibility entailed by that freedom. If it was true that freedom had done so much and had enabled men at last to reach that vision which they believed to be the vision of the future in respect of religion, then they must admit that there had been not only a sense of freedom but a sense of responsibility as well. In that freedom they wished once more to thank Him who had led them in the footsteps of His best beloved son, gradually from darkness towards the light wherein He dwells.

The speeches were followed by another interval of social intercourse, after which the Doxology was sung, and Mr. Armstrong pronounced the Benediction.

In continuance of the Jubilee celebrations, Mr. Armstrong preached on Sunday morning in Hope-street Church the sermon on "Half a Century's Religious Development," printed in our present issue. The sermon preached by Dr. Martineau on Sunday morning, Oct. 21, 1849, the first Sunday after the opening of the church, will be found in the fourth volume of his "Essays, Reviews, and Addresses," under the title, "The Watch-Night Lamps."

It is quite impossible to understand the character of a person from one action, however striking that action may be. . . . If you are obliged to judge from a single action, let it not be a striking one.—Sir A. Helps.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

TEMPERANCE SUNDAY, NOV. 26.

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me through your columns to call the attention of ministers and Sunday-school teachers to the above date, and to express the hope that in all our churches and Sunday-schools special addresses may be delivered urging total abstinence among the young. In view of the large number of children who are still outside the Band of Hope movement and in peril through the seductive influence of strong drink in the home and in social circles, it is hoped that the effort will commend itself to all who are interested in the welfare of the young, and I trust that the Unitarian Churches may not be behind other bodies in furthering this phase of social progress.

I shall be happy to supply printed information upon application.

JOHN BREDALL.

Hon. Sec., Essex Hall Temperance Association.

PROMOTING THE GOSPEL.

SIR,—Unitarians are never done reiterating the idea that in Church matters it is not the creed but the life that is of importance. I wish they really believed it. But I am sure they do not. By their fruits, I know it. Is it not clear that Mr. Roper is contradicting it when he speaks about the necessity of showing to those not in the fold what we stand for doctrinally? I respectfully submit he is. I believe in having a grand name by which to call ourselves and our churches, and a great and noble cry with which to go to the country; and so I respectfully suggest that our cry should be—the Religious Life, the fact that men may know God and enjoy communion with Him, and that these must be linked to a life that hungers and thirsts after righteousness. Let us put that in the forefront, Religion, the fact that God will give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him; and at the same time, let us make it as clear as we like, that theology, important as it is, is still of minor importance to religion, is changeable, not fixed, but progressive. Free Christian, or Liberal Christian, either of these, it seems to me, would be a grand name for us to adopt. But what we exist for is to kindle and stimulate the religious life of the people, while along with that we can show that this religious Christian life is perfectly compatible with noble and rational ideas of God's character and man's destiny. To my mind, we cannot get better moral and spiritual ideas—a better religion—than Christianity provides us with; let our preachers be sure that they themselves are possessed by it, and then let them go forth with the one aim of getting their hearers to possess it too. People are dying for, and will be infinitely grateful to preachers for bringing to them, the Christian religion. While preaching religion and trying to get people converted to God and the Christian life, ministers can at the same time show that this Christian life allows that God-given thing—perfect freedom—in theology, and that one's theological opinions may be of the sublimest and most rational character that can be conceived by the noble mind of man.

How are our ministers to possess this Christian religion? I feel that if all our ministers thoroughly (or well) understood Dr. Martineau's teaching and appreciated it, we should have within our midst a body of men who would set the country on fire with religious fervour. It is not money we need, but men. Give us men, and money will come pouring in and our churches will be filled—yes, filled with people glad to come, or willing to work, and spend and be spent, in the service of God and Humanity, in the spirit of Christ, by reason of the fact that God has given them of His Holy Spirit.

WILLIAM WILSON.

20, Glasgow-street, Hillhead, Glasgow,
Oct. 24.

TO BE NOTED.

SIR,—Will you help in an act of mercy by allowing me to ask attention to an advertisement in your columns respecting my altered address?

J. PAGE HOPPS.

Sanderstead Hill, South Croydon,
Oct. 21.

PROVINCIAL LETTER.

THE MIDLANDS.

Nothing is pleasanter to the young soldier than to sing the veteran's praise. There is one minister in the Midlands who has been at his present post just as long as the writer has been in the world. The Rev. Henry Eachus went to Coseley in 1865. He is there to-day. Of him I write a few lines. What prompts me is the centenary of the Coseley Sunday School, in the celebration of which not a few of his fellow-ministers took part. The services were held on Sunday, July 2, the preachers being the Revs. W. Copeland Bowie, and Henry Austin. There were large congregations and extremely good collections. On the following day the ministers' meeting was entertained to luncheon, and both there and at the public meeting in the evening his fellow-workers and friends bore witness and paid their tribute to Mr. Eachus' long quiet and noble labours. The spirit of his life is not inaptly expressed in lines taken from one of the hymns which he himself wrote for the occasion:—

Men need not doubt where work is done
To put down wrong, to build up right,
But feel assured each man has won
Who bears up bravely in the fight.

Our fathers did what we must do—
They showed the life, the truth, the way;
Their lives in Christ were formed anew;
They worked for God while it was day.

He is the twenty-first in an unbroken line of ministers from 1662. He has been behind none of them in consecration to the work; and in sacrifice on its behalf has proved himself a worthy successor of the best. There is a simple but eloquent story to which some of us listened, and which deserves to be told to a larger audience. When Mr. Eachus went to Coseley, the chapel, built in 1717, was much damaged through mining operations. A new home was a necessity to the congregation, and their minister entered into the scheme with enthusiasm. Permission was obtained from the Charity Commissioners to lease the mines under seven acres of land with which the chapel was endowed. The sale took place in 1874, and realised £4,000, the purchasers having also to pay £60 a year ground rent. With part of the proceeds, increased by subscriptions, the present church and school-room were built. Now comes the remarkable fact. Mr. Eachus, under no constraint save that of love for his people and the cause, with the consent of the trustees and the congregation, borrowed £1,000 from the Charity Commissioners for building purposes, undertaking out of his own income to repay that amount by twenty annual payments of £50 each. That he has done, and the church stands to-day as a memorial of his noble self-sacrifice. £1,000 out of a minister's own pocket! And let it not be thought he was a rich man. Far from it. He started with £95 a year, and lived for the twenty years a life of constant but cheerful self-denial. All honour to him.

He is still full of work. This winter, in addition to the demands made on his time and strength by the Sunday services and school, he has started and is conducting classes for young people during the week. Nor are his efforts confined to the church. He is known, trusted, and honoured by his fellow-townsmen. He is on the District Council, of which he has more than once been chairman, and the School Board. Although it is now eventide with him, may it be long ere the night shuts down on his useful and happy work.

From the personal to the general. The Midland Christian Union held its autumnal conference in Birmingham on Oct. 16. It was engaged with a recommendation from the Committee that there should be a change in the title of the Union to meet the wishes of those who feel aggrieved at the absence of the word "Unitarian." The proposal was to enlarge the title by the insertion of the words "Presbyterian, Unitarian, and other," so that it should run in full "The Midland Christian Union and Provincial Assembly of Presbyterian, Unitarian, and other Non-Subscribing Ministers and Congregations of Birmingham and Neighbouring Counties." There were not a few amendments proposed, and ultimately it was decided by a large majority to simplify the recommendation to read "The Midland Christian Union of Presbyterian, Unitarian, and other Non-Subscribing Churches." It seems curious that when the name was thus put into the melting-pot, the word "Christian" should have been strongly insisted on and retained. It is surely redundant. "Presbyterian" and "Unitarian" both involve Christianity as much as "Congregationalist" or "Baptist." It is rather a sign of weakness to take every opportunity of protesting our Christianity. Why not like others assume it, and leave the rest of the world to do the same? They would not? Nor will they. And what does it matter? The one thing needful is to have, to work in, and to leave the influence of the Christian spirit. And it is more than doubtful whether the Midland Christian, or any other Union or Denomination, orthodox or heterodox, is doing a hundredth part of what it might in that direction. We wrangle about names, about unessentials, about one another's weakness and error, to the loss of opportunity and the squandering of strength. Probably the greater number of Unitarians care more about being correctly labelled than they do for the conversion of mankind. There is an almost entire absence of the progressive spirit among us. Here in the Midlands there is practically no self-sacrifice at all for a cause which we please ourselves by belauding on public platforms. There is work to be done on every hand. But it goes by untouched. Why? For lack of money. If only something of the spirit of Mr. Eachus were in us all there would be a different tale to tell. When will there, will there ever be a general awakening?

Here is a case in point. The friends at Wolverhampton having sold their old property have bought a new site in a favourable neighbourhood, and put up their iron schoolroom. The problem now awaits solution as to what is to be done for them? What is wanted is, for the present, an iron church, and a settled minister who shall not be paid less than from £200 to £250 a year. An able man is essential. Only then can Wolverhampton be given its real chance. Shall we be able to do that? It is extremely unlikely. The Midland Christian Union has no income to spare, excites no enthusiasm, and looks almost helplessly at the situation. Its supporters are few, and not many of them generous. And no effort it makes meets with much response. Apathy on every hand.

In the early summer the Midland Sunday School Association held its annual meeting at Stourbridge. It is an insignificant Association whose existence is scarcely known beyond, and not always in the Midlands. Rarely are its proceedings reported. At this meeting, however, strong dissatisfaction was expressed, and some suggestions made, which are now under consideration, with a view to its justifying its existence. There is an unquestionable place for it, and some of us are full of hope that it will take that place.

There has been one movement started, which is full of life and promise, and to which it is a pleasure to turn. The Rev. C. J. Sueath, who is a Birmingham man, and was for fourteen years curate of St. Paul's, Balsale Heath, recently seceded, and is renting the Balsale Heath Institute, in which he is holding services. He is a man for whom the Church of England proved too narrow. A broad teacher for years within its borders, the position became intolerable. It is worth noticing as a sign of the esteem in which he was held, that when he left the church he was presented by his admirers and friends with a cheque for nearly £300. He calls the new movement "Our Father's Church," carefully avoiding the use of any dogmatic title, although he is unhesitating in his profession of personal Unitarianism. The result so far is altogether encouraging. The congregations in the evenings reach 150 or 200 persons, and there is every indication of permanence. It is another and splendid revelation of the need there is for us to bestir ourselves and seize the opportunities which are present to us on every hand.

ADDISON A. CHARLESWORTH.

WHAT IS A CHURCH?

On the second anniversary of the opening of the Kettering-road Church, Northampton, the Rev. John Byles preached on the subject of "The Church." It was a significant fact, he said, that Jesus seldom, if ever, made mention of a church. There were two places in which he was reported to have used the word, but it was more than doubtful whether even these were not interpolations of a later date. What Jesus was continually thinking of was not the church, but the Kingdom. His first utterance as he burst out upon the public was "Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." His earliest teaching contained a series of parables, in which he set forth the method in which the Kingdom was to be advanced. The prayer he gave to his followers was "Thy Kingdom come," and in the end, to sum up his work, he said that he came to establish the Kingdom of truth. Whence came the Church? What was its origin? Why its importance? The answer was that the Church was inevitable. It lay in the very order and nature of things. When men were charged with common convictions and enthusiasm, when they had common purposes, they must combine and form themselves into societies and associations. Life always seeks an organism in which it can express itself, and by which it can accomplish its functions. Hence it was inevitable and right that the first followers of Jesus should constitute themselves into societies. They met together to worship his memory and to stimulate in each their faith, and love, and hope, and later to arrange and organise methods for the carrying on of the work which he had entrusted to them. These organisms or ecclesias were in the first instance of the simplest sort. Their bond was the possession of a common faith, a common love, and a common hope; their ritual, if ritual it might be called, was the ritual of prayer, of praise, of mutual exhortation, and of the partaking together of a common meal. They had no elaborate creed, no property, and certainly no priest. But this simplicity, alas, was not maintained. With time came changes—changes which had their origin in the errors and weakness of human nature, and which were likely, therefore, to continually recur. Dr. Hatch, in his Hibbert lecture, described the various stages in which those alterations occurred. First the basis of the Church was altered from the possession of a common love and a common life to that of a common doctrine. Then the difference was established between Presbyters and Bishops, the Bishop ceasing to be primus inter pares, and becoming officially superior to his brethren. Next the Bishops of Metropolitan cities, such as Alexandria, Antioch, and Rome, claimed pre-eminence over other Bishops, and finally supremacy was asserted on behalf of the Bishop of Rome and the Church of Rome over all other Bishops and Churches, the dogma being taught of one universal or Catholic Church, outside of which there was no salvation. That dogma was the "Damnosa Hereditas" of the Church, and since had been the fruitful cause of intolerance, hatred, persecution, and strife. Getting back to a period anterior to those unhappy and disastrous developments they must ask again, "What is a Church?" Mr. Ruskin said, "That is a true Church wherever one hand meets helpfully another, and that is the only holy or mother Church which ever was or shall be established." Matthew Arnold said "A Church is a society for the promotion of goodness." Exactly that was the object of the early Church. It was a society for the promotion of goodness, or, to use the New Testament expression, for the "advancement of the Kingdom." Such was the distinct object and intention of those who were builders and founders of the Kettering-road Church. What they desired was the worship of God and the service of man; the constant assertion of the foundation truths of righteousness and fidelity to duty and conscience; the perfecting of character which rests, and must rest, on high religious consecration, and the attainment of trust in God so firm and abiding that no suffering, no sorrow, no calamity, can permanently shake it.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Bradford.—The bazaar held in connection with Chapel-lane Chapel on the 19th, 20th, 21st and 23rd inst. fully realised the expectations of the promoters. On Monday night it was found that the proceeds amounted to a little over the £520 asked for. On the first two days Bradford was enveloped in a dense fog, which prevented many friends of the cause from attending the sale. The proceedings throughout were of a most interesting and enthusiastic character. A fuller report we may be able to give next week.

Brighton (Farewell to the Rev. Alfred Hood).—A meeting of the members of the Free Christian Church and their friends was held in the Pavilion on Wednesday week, to bid farewell to the Rev. Alfred Hood and Mrs. Hood on the termination of thirteen years of ministry with them. Mr. Hood has been compelled by continued ill-health to withdraw from active work, and is leaving England for the South of France. Among those present at the meeting were Mr. Hugo Talbot, deputy Town Clerk, Messrs. F. Butler, C. F. Mellor, J. Johnson, G. J. Holyoake, Councillor F. T. Wilson, Miss Boys, Mrs. Brignall (of the Brighton Women's Liberal Association), Mr. Gilpin (Brighton Liberal Association), and the Rev. T. A. Gorton. Mr. W. Slatter presided, and expressed the great sorrow of the congregation at Mr. Hood's retirement. They hoped that it was, after all, only a farewell for a few months. He himself had been connected with the Free Christian Church at Brighton for fifty years, and even before Mr. Hood came to minister there he had been struck, on coming into contact with him, by the beautiful ideas of human life which he put before them. It had been Mr. Hood's effort to bring out the divineness in human nature. To try to benefit somebody else was the true joy of life, and Mr. Hood had been trying to do this for thirteen years. He had secured for himself a deep place in the hearts of all who knew him. Councillor Wilson announced that, among a number of sympathetic letters regretting enforced absence from the gathering, were communications from Sir Joseph Ewart, the Rev. R. J. Campbell, the Rev. A. Norris, and Mr. J. Brignall. The Brighton Women's Liberal Association, too, wrote thanking Mrs. Hood for her labours in the Liberal cause. Mr. G. J. Holyoake having spoken a few cordial words, and expressed his indebtedness to Unitarian teachers, Mrs. Brignall, Councillor Wilson, and the Rev. T. A. Gorton also spoke, bearing varied testimony to the value of the services rendered by both Mr. and Mrs. Hood. An address of warm appreciation and good wishes was then presented, together with a cheque for £263. Mr. Hood, in acknowledging the gift, said that it was a painful pleasure to meet so many kind friends, and to hear the kindly words they had spoken. The many letters, too, which he had received, he felt were more than he deserved. He reflected with satisfaction that though much remained to be done, they had seen during the years a growth in regard to the religious and social questions in which the Church had been interested, and so they felt that they had not been labouring in vain. Nineteen years ago he had left England, and his physician had then told him he would never return. That he had been able to return and do some work he was thankful, and he hoped yet to do more. He thanked his friends very heartily for their kindly thought and feeling and their pronounced sympathy. Mrs. Hood having also added a few words of acknowledgment, the meeting terminated. On Monday, Oct. 16, the teachers of the Sunday-school gave a farewell tea to Mr. and Mrs. Hood. There were present, in addition to teachers and friends, about eighty scholars. A parting gift, in the form of a handsome gold bracelet, was given, with an address, to Mrs. Hood, from the teachers, former teachers and scholars, as a token of their affection and esteem, and in appreciation of her kind and devoted work in the school during the thirteen years she and Mr. Hood have been in Brighton. Mr. and Mrs. Hood left Brighton on Tuesday for the Continent.

Chester.—Matthew Henry's Chapel was reopened for worship after restoration last Sunday. The new arrangement of the roof is admitted by all to be a great improvement. The Sunday services were conducted by the Rev. C. H. Wellbeloved, of Southport, formerly a worshipper in the chapel, who preached eloquent and convincing sermons on the Unitarian position and the Unitarian view of the life of Jesus. The service on Tuesday evening was taken by the Rev. Charles Hargrove, M.A., of Leeds, whose beautiful discourse on our relationship with our Presbyterian forefathers was listened to with deep attention. The collections at the three services amounted to £13. As nearly always happens in restoring an old building, the actual expenditure will exceed the original estimate. There is an unforeseen outlay owing to the discovery of dry rot in the vestry and gallery. Another urgent appeal is made to all generous friends and well-wishers. (See Advt.)

Guildford.—The congregational quarterly meeting was enlivened by excellent reports of the Provincial Assembly from Mr. Edwin Ellis, J.P., C.C., and Miss Taylor. A gentleman retired from the committee, and, faithful to the progressive spirit of the period, a lady was elected to the seat vacated. At the Ward-street Literary and Debating Society a goodly audience listened with the profoundest appreciation to a lecture from the Rev. George B. Stallworthy, the pastor of the Congregational church at Hindhead. Mr. George Taylor, J.P., presided. The society is now looking forward to lectures from Mr. Howell on "Machiavelli," from Mr. Hart, of Woking, upon "Ruskin," and one from an eminent lady doctor, Mrs. Fraser Nash, which is entitled "A Crusade against Tuberculosis."

Huddersfield.—The anniversary services were held on Sunday, Oct. 15, when the Rev. William Melor (minister) preached the sermons; and on the following Wednesday evening the annual congregational tea and meeting was held in the school-room. Mr. A. Whitworth, who presided, said that it was the duty of everyone connected with the church to promote its welfare. They had hard workers in Mr. and Mrs. Mellor, and he wished them every success. He trusted the congregation would give them all the encouragement they possibly could. The Rev. W. Mellor said that their church had always stood distinctly for religious worship, for the service of God in connection with religious worship, for service in the spirit of Christ, and for the service of man as an invariable part of the service of God in the spirit of self-sacrifice and self-surrender. Along with that they had perfect freedom. They would be glad if the results had been greater; but taking all the circumstances into consideration they had reason to thank God and take courage. Having spoken of the theological and ecclesiastical development of Unitarianism, he remarked that it blended liberty and religion—religion that had been free, freedom that had been religious. Addresses were also given by the Revs. J. H. Green, J. A. Pearson, and J. Taylor.

London: Islington.—Harvest festival services were held in Unity Church on Sunday, Oct. 8, and were largely attended. The Rev. Dr. Hicks preached at both services. In the evening Weber's "Jubilee Cantata" was sung by the choir. The church was very tastefully decorated, the fruit and flowers being afterwards sent to the North London Nursing Institution and to Winifred House Convalescent Home. On Thursday, Oct. 12, Dr. Hicks gave an "At Home" in the school-room to members and friends of the congregation, and a most enjoyable evening was spent. The Literary Society has again this year arranged a splendid course of lectures and entertainments for the coming session, which opened on Thursday, Oct. 19, with a concert, under the direction of Mr. H. W. Morgan. A capital programme had been drawn up, and the artistes were amply repaid by the large and enthusiastic audience present.

Malton.—The harvest festival was held on Sunday and Monday last, and was very successful. The chapel was well filled at both the Sunday services, which were greatly enjoyed. The collections exceeded those of last year. On Monday there was a public tea, followed by a lecture on "A Traveller in Utopia," by the Rev. E. L. H. Thomas, B.A. About 180 sat down to tea. The lecture was very beautiful and pathetic and much liked.

Manchester: Longsight.—The young men's class of the Free Christian Church Sunday-school, of which the Rev. Wilfrid Harris is the teacher, have issued a programme of subjects to be dealt with on Sunday afternoons from the beginning of the present month until April 1. October is engaged on "The Foundations of Religion." In November literature, history, and biography come in. Subsequently the morals of self-culture and citizenship are to be dealt with, and the session closes with seven weeks' study of Old Testament history. The name of an appointed speaker is added to the subject for each Sunday.

Moneyrea.—On the evening of the 17th inst. the Moneyrea School-room was crowded with an enthusiastic audience to hear an address from Mr. M. Lucas, of the Irish Temperance League, on "Lessons from a Kitchen Clock." The chair was occupied by the Rev. R. Lyttle, who spoke of the satisfactory progress the Temperance movement had made in the district, and the need of still greater exertions. Hitherto the cause had been prosecuted vigorously among the adult population. That night had started what he regarded as the most hopeful part of their work, an auxiliary branch among the children. Mr. Lucas's address was followed with great attention and frequently applauded by the large audience.

North-Cheshire Unitarian Sunday-school Union.—The annual meeting of this Union was held at Oltham on Saturday last. About 100 teachers and friends were present to tea. The chair was occupied by the retiring president, Rev. W. Harrison. The reports of the treasurer and secretary were read and adopted, and the officers elected as follows:—President, Mr. John Barrow; vice-president, Rev. T. R. Elliott; treasurer, Mr. Samuel Ashworth; hon. sec., Mr. Albert Slater. Mr. John W. Goodman read an interesting paper on "The Strong and Weak Points of our Sunday-school." A good discussion followed, taken part in by Miss Doman, and Messrs. W. Lawton, E. Walker, J. H. Elkin, E. Caton, T. Ashton, J. Wild, and J. Mircroft, &c. Songs, &c., were interspersed, and a pleasant meeting terminated by votes of thanks being moved by the Rev. W. C. Hall, M.A., seconded by Mr. W. Woolley, and responded to by Mr. Goodman and the Chairman. The discussion was prematurely closed owing to the inconveniences of the train service.

Preston (Appointment).—The Rev. Neander Anderton, B.A., has accepted the unanimous invitation of the Preston congregation to fill the pulpit vacant through the resignation, on account of ill-health, of the Rev. Jos. Harrison. Mr. Anderton will, however, not commence his work at Preston until after the termination of his engagement at Bank-street Chapel, Bolton.

Trowbridge.—There was a largely attended social gathering on Wednesday in the Congregational schoolroom to meet the Rev. J. Wain, of Bristol, who in the new year will take up the pastorate. Interesting addresses were varied with vocal and instrumental music, and refreshments were dispensed by ladies of the congregation.

York (Appointment).—The Rev. Henry Rawlings, M.A., recently of Little Portland-street Chapel, has been invited to become minister of the St. Saviour-gate Chapel, York.

Ah! light words from those whom we love and honour, what a power ye are! and how carelessly wielded by those who can use you! Surely for these things also God will ask an account.—Tom Hughes.

PROBABLY there is no such thing as an indifferent moment—a moment in which our characters are not being secretly shaped by the bias of our will, either for good or evil.—Goulburn.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, October 29.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Bermondsey, Fort-road, Upper Grange-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. HAROLD RYLETT.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. ALLEN.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. H. DRUMMOND, B.A.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS.
Deptford, Church-street, Re-opening Service, 6.30 P.M., Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A. No Morning Service.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M., Rev. G. DAWES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D., and 7 P.M., Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. WOODS PERRIS.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.
Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Revs. BROOKE HERFORD, D.D., and EDGAR DAPLYN. Minister's Class after Morning Service.
Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M., Rev. F. K. FREESTON, "The Cry of the City," and 7 P.M., Rev. G. DAWES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D., "The Problem of City Life."
Kentish Town, Free Christian Church, Clarence-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. A. FARQUHARSON. Morning. "The Shadow of the Almighty." Evening. "The City of God."
Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. STRONGE.
Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. C. POPE.
Little Portland-street Chapel, near Oxford-circus, 11 A.M., Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D., and 7 P.M., Rev. H. RAWLINGS, M.A.
Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, Citizen Sunday, 11 A.M., Rev. W. G. CADMAN, and 7 P.M., Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D.
Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. CARTER. Evening, Musical Service.
Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.
Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., and 3 P.M., Service for Children, Rev. S. FARRINGTON.
Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Mr. LUCKING TAVENER.
Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.
Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. E. M. EDWARDS.
Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. MUMBERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. F. W. STANLEY.
BEDFORD, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. ROWLAND HILL.
BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
BLACKPOOL, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. BINNS.
BLACKPOOL, Unitarian Lay Church, Masonic Hall, Waterloo-road, South Shore, 6.30 P.M.
BOOTLE, Free Church, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. W. HAWKES.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. COE.
BRIGHTON, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road, North-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. T. B. BROADBICK.
BUXTON, Hartington-road church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. GEORGE STREET.
CANTERBURY, Blackfriars, 11 A.M.
DEAL and WALMER Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. SHAKESPEARE.
DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. BURROWS.
EASTBOURNE, Lismore-road, Terminus-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. ST. CLAIR.
GUILDFORD, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Mr. E. S. LANG BUCKLAND.
HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. MARTEN.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.
LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M., Rev. A. COBDEN SMITH, and 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.
LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. J. JUPP.
LIVERPOOL, Ulet-road, Sefton Park, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. KLEIN. Evening, "The Search after Knowledge by Busy Men."
MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. FORREST.
MANCHESTER, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
MARGATE, Forester's Hall (Side Entrance), Union-crescent, 11 A.M., Mr. EDWARD C. SAPHIN.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. J. E. ODGERS, M.A.
PORTSMOUTH, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. THOMAS BONN.
PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. COSENS PRIOR.
RAMSGATE, Assembly Rooms, High-street, 6.30 P.M., Mr. EDWARD C. SAPHIN.
READING, Unitarian Free Church, London-road, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, B.A.
SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. WELLBELOVED.
SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Greer, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. E. C. DENDY. Sables in the grounds.
TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Mr. C. A. GINEVER.
YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. JOHN McDOWELL, of Leeds.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant Unitarian Church, Hout-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY,
STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN-SQUARE,
S.W.—Oct. 28th, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "Two Phases of Western Religious Thought: 2. The Worship of the Unknowable."

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. W. STODDART, B.A., is at LIBERTY to take occasional Sunday duty.—30, West Bank, Stamford-hill, London, N.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D. DAVIS, Fairfield High School, Liverpool.

BIRTHS.

MARSHALL.—On the 21st Oct., at Oak House, Huddersfield, the wife of William Lawrence Wright Marshall, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

FROST—LOFTUS.—On the 21st Oct., at Park street Church, Hull, by the Rev. E. W. Lummis, M.A., Alfred, eldest son of the late Alfred Frost, of Hull, to Annie Barbara, eldest daughter of Alfred Loftus, late of Hull.

REBSCH—BOULT.—On the 24th Oct., at Mossley-hill Church, Liverpool, by the Rev. Canon Spooner, Samuel Rebsch, of Bombay, to Lucy Edowes, daughter of the late Peter S. Boulton, of Mossley-hill.

DEATHS.

COURTAULD.—On the 20th Oct., at Bocking-place, Braintree, Sydney Courtauld, aged 59. No flowers by request.

GIBBS.—On the 24th Oct., Fanny, widow of the late David Aspland Gibbs, of Springfield Lodge, Upper Clapton, in her 79th year. Interment at Abney Park Cemetery on Saturday, 28th, at 12.30.

HIGGINSON.—On the 12th Sept., at Melbourne, Victoria, Sarah, wife of the late Rev. Henry Higginson, aged 75.

MARSDEN.—On the 19th Oct., suddenly, Ann, the beloved wife of William Marsden, of Padham, at the early age of 48.

Correspondents are requested to note that to be sure of insertion the same week, news must reach the Office by the first post on Thursday at latest, and the earlier in the week the better.

Schools, etc.CHANNING HOUSE, HIGHGATE,
HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, AND BOARDING SCHOOL.

For the daughters of Unitarian Ministers and others.

London Matriculation, English, Latin, French, German, Mathematics, Science, Elocution, Greek, Drawing, Class Singing, Dressmaking, Cookery, Calisthenics, Playground, Swings, Cricket, Garden, Outside Sanatorium, Laundry at home.

Outside Examiner.

Fees per Term:

Boarders, £10 13s. 6d. or with Music, £12 5s.
Extras: Violin, Solo Singing, Painting, £2 2s.
Shorthand, Dancing, 10s. 6d.

Day scholars, 3 to 5 guineas, with Music extra.
Kindergarten, 2 to 2½ guineas.

Manager—Miss MATILDA SHARPE.

HALF TERM begins MONDAY, Nov. 6.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
SOUTH MARINE TERRACE,
ABERYSTWTH.

PRINCIPAL ... MRS. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

HINDHEAD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

PRINCIPALS—Miss J. F. GRUNER (Certif. Student of Girton College), Moorcroft, Hindhead, Surrey.

Miss MACRAE MOIR (Cambridge Higher Local), Lingholt, Hindhead, Surrey.

The aim of the School is to combine the advantages of a good Boarding School with a thorough Education and healthy outdoor life. Girls may be prepared for College-entrance and other examinations.

The district of Hindhead is one of the healthiest parts of England, and much recommended by doctors for its bracing air and gravel soil.

Miss MOIR receives ten boarders in a thoroughly well-built modern house, with southern aspect. Great attention is paid to healthful conditions of life. References allowed to parents of present and past pupils.

Terms for Board and Education on application to the Principals.

THE WARREN, KNUTSFORD.

PRINCIPAL:
Mrs. W. CARRINGTON WHITELEGGE.

Excellent individual TUITION and Home Care for the daughters of cultivated parents who would appreciate unusual advantages for Music and Languages.

AN experienced GOVERNESS desires re-engagement (daily) after Christmas. Neighbourhood of Edgbaston preferred.—Address, A. B., INQUIRER Office.

WANTED, engagement as LADY COMPANION. Many years' experience and good references.—J., INQUIRER Office.

"THE INQUIRER" CALENDAR.

SUNDAY SERVICES are advertised at a charge of 10s. per year, prepaid, a space of two lines being given to each announcement; extra lines are charged 4d. each. Orders can be sent for a portion of the year, not less than thirteen weeks, at the same rate. Calendar Notices not prepaid £1 the year. Single Announcements 6d. per line. All information as to the change of preachers should reach the Office not later than Thursday.

Essex Hall, Strand, W.C.

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms moderate.—Mrs. ROBERT TURNER, 94, Grosvenor-road, S.W.

BOARD and RESIDENCE, South of England. Healthy neighbourhood. Home comforts. Seven miles from Brighton, near South Downs. Station Hassocks (on main line L.B.S.C.).—Miss ROWLAND, Gothic House, Hurstpierpoint.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Univalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. Pocock.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea; sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address, Miss CHALDECOTT, Stirling House, Manor-road.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecored. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

Proprietor,

FREDERIC SMITH.

This first-class Hotel, conducted on strictly Temperance principles, is commended by the Rev. C. Aked, Liverpool; Rev. Rowland Hill, Bedford; Rev. G. Vance Smith, D.D., Bowden, Cheshire; Rev. J. C. Street, Birmingham; Rev. Charles A. Berry, D.D., Wolverhampton; Rev. Charles Garrett, Liverpool; Rev. Canon Howell, Wrexham; Rev. A. B. Grosart, L.L.D., Blackburn; Dr. Norman Kerr, London, &c. Central, Quiet, Exceptionally Clean, Moderate in Charges. Spacious Coffee Rooms, Visitors' Drawing Rooms, Baths, &c. Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d. to 2s. Rooms, 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. Service, 9d. Printed Tariff on Application.

75, 77, 79, 97, 99, 101, 103, 105,

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, RUSSELL SQ., LONDON.

SUMMER EXCURSION SOIRÉE

(Central Postal Mission and Unitarian Workers' Union), ESSEX HALL, ESSEX-STREET, STRAND, W.C. FRIDAY EVENING, Nov. 3rd. 6.30 to 10 o'clock.

Tea at 7. Lantern (Swiss Views), W. H. SHRUBSOLE, F.G.S.

Members and friends should apply early for tickets, 1s. each, to Miss FLORENCE HILL, 13, Christchurch-road, Hampstead, N.W., and enclose stamped and directed envelope.

All belonging to the Pink Parties are asked to wear their bows.

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS

1, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

HOME FOR HEALTH CULTURE,
THE FIRS, BROMYARD, HEREFORDSHIRE

This Home provides a course of Systematic Daily Exercise, combined with regular outdoor life and occupation, for Ladies and Children who are not in normal health. The exercises are given in a Gymnasium fitted with Swedish apparatus, and consist of Ling's Swedish Movements. Special treatment is given for Spinal Curvature, Atonia Hysteria, Indigestion, Neuralgia, &c.

For further particulars, apply to The Principal Miss JESSIE BAKER (trained by Mine. Bergmon, Osterberg).

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.

Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21 Mincing-lane, E.C.

Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W. Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.

STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, 151, Brixton-road, S.W., and Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made Monthly repayment, including principal, premium and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years, 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.; 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK

SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

TWO AND A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS of minimum monthly balance, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift, the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows Interest Monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY,
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANAC, Post free on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

WANTED, in November, a useful MAID, not under 30, to wait upon a lady who is not very strong. Must be a good needlewoman and know something of dressmaking.—Apply, by letter, Mrs. CHARLES W. JONES, Field House, Wavertree, near Liverpool.

ZEBRA
GRATE POLISH.

DEPTFORD CHAPEL, Church Street.

RE-OPENING AFTER RESTORATION.

Divine Service will be held on SUNDAY EVENING NEXT, Oct. 29th. Preacher, Rev. VALENTINE D. DAVIS, B.A. Service at 6.30 P.M. Collection.

A PUBLIC MEETING

will be held on TUESDAY, Oct. 31st, under the Presidency of G. W. CHITTY, Esq., of Dover, supported by several well-known London Ministers and Laymen.

Tea and Coffee from 6 to 7. Chair taken at 7.15 P.M. Friends are cordially invited. Collection.

RESTORATION FUND.

	£	s.	d.
Amount previously acknowledged	211	19	6
Additional Contributions:
Mr. and Mrs. J. Bredall, London	1	0	0
W. J. Evelyn, Esq., J.P., Deptford	30	0	0
A. Wilson, Esq., London	2	2	0
D. Blair, Esq., Woolwich	1	1	0
J. Slade, Esq., London	0	5	0
Mrs. Squier, Stand	5	0	0

Amount still needed, £39

Contributions may be forwarded to G. W. CHITTY, Esq., "Mildura," Park-road, Dover, or to the Rev. A. J. MARCHANT, Clifton-road, Peckham, London, S.E.

NEWBURY PRESBYTERIAN CHAPEL RENOVATION FUND.

The Committee urgently appeal for further subscriptions towards the above fund and thankfully acknowledge the following:—

	£	s.	d.
Amount already advertised	86	15	7
Miss Durning Smith	5	0	0
Dr. Brooke Herford	1	1	0
Mr. Philip J. Worsley	10	0	0
Mr. David Martineau	0	10	0
Mr. W. Slatter, Brighton	1	0	0

The British and Foreign Unitarian Association, a promise of the last twenty pounds.

Subscriptions should be sent to Mr. T. H. STILLMAN, 133, Bartholomew-street, Newbury.

UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH, HORWICH.

A GRAND BAZAAR will be held in the MECHANICS' INSTITUTE on NOV. 8th, 9th, and 11th, 1899, for the purpose of raising £500, and as much more as possible towards a sum of £1,000, needful for the redemption of ground rents (nearly £30 a year), and the formation of an Independence Fund. Towards the amount required Mrs. Samuel Fielden, of Todmorden, has generously contributed £100.

All donations will be announced at the Bazaar, and will be printed in the Report, a copy of which will be sent to every subscriber.

The Bazaar will be opened respectively by Mrs. JOHN HARWOOD, Bolton; Sir JOHN BRUNNER, Bart., M.P., and W. H. LEVER, Esq., of Thornton Manor, Cheshire.

Contributions of Goods or Money will be thankfully received and acknowledged by any of the following:—

- Rev. R. C. MOORE, Horwich, Bolton.
Mr. C. J. P. FULLER, Bazaar Treasurer,
Mona House, Horwich, Bolton.
Mr. F. C. ASHTON, Bazaar Secretary,
Crown-lane, Horwich, Bolton.

BRADFORD BAZAAR.
OCT 19TH, 20TH, AND 21ST, 1899.

With sincere thanks the Committee desire to acknowledge the following additional subscriptions:

	£	s.	d.
Already acknowledged	113	5	6
Mr. G. W. Jackson	0	5	0
Mr. F. Heilborn	5	0	0
Mrs. Bronner	5	0	0
Rev. A. W. Fox, M.A.	0	10	6
Mrs. F. J. Kitson	5	0	0
Mr. Charles Wood	1	0	0
Mr. G. A. Steintal	1	1	0
Mr. S. Hall	0	5	0
Mr. M. S. Dawson	2	2	0

Rev. E. CEREDIG JONES,
13, Blenheim-road, Bradford (Minister).

THE NEW KINGDOM.

AN ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY.

ONE PENNY. Post Free, 1s. 6d. per Annum.

Contents for NOVEMBER:

Rev. George Knight, of Failsforth (with portrait).
The New Marriage Act. C. J. Street, M.A., LL.B.
The Recent Concert in the Memorial Hall, Manchester.—Letter to the Editor.

Special Announcements.

Horwich Unitarian Church (illustrated).

How the Loco-town Reserves went to the War.
R. S. Redfern.

In Syracuse. Ethel Heywood.

In the Field:—Ministerial: Elland, Dukinfield, Stockport.

London Bazaar, Home Harvest Collections, Forward Movements.

To be had from the Publishers, Messrs. WM. HOUGH AND SONS, Manchester; RAWSON AND CO., 16, New Brown-street, Manchester; ESSEX HALL, London; and all Newsagents.

BARTON-STREET CHAPEL, GLOUCESTER.

WALTER LLOYD, Minister.

BICENTENARY FUND and BAZAAR for the extinction of the Debt of £380.

Contributions in Money or Goods will be thankfully received by

Mrs. C. W. WASHBOURNE, Allandale, Weston-road;

Mrs. WALTER LLOYD, The Hollies, Brook-st.; or Mr. W. HORSLEY, Secretary, Weston-road, Gloucester.

The Treasurer begs to acknowledge the following contributions:—

	£	s.	d.
Amount previously acknowledged	141	5	0
Harry E. Thomas, Esq.	2	2	0
Miss Anna Swanwick	2	2	0
Rev. A. W. Worthington, B.A.	1	1	0
A Friend	1	0	0

MATTHEW HENRY'S CHAPEL, CHESTER.

RESTORATION FUND.

Owing to the discovery of dry rot in the Vestry and Gallery, the congregation still need £300 to pay for the necessary work.

	£	s.	d.
Amount already acknowledged	587	13	0
Collection at Re-Opening Services (Sunday and Tuesday last)	13	0	0

Further Donations will be gratefully received and acknowledged by the Rev. H. D. ROBERTS, Brook Lodge, or Mr. WM. ORRETT, Foregate-street, Chester.

LONGSIGHT FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, MANCHESTER.

RE-OPENING SERVICES AFTER DECORATION.

Tuesday, Oct. 31, 7.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. L. DE B. KLEIN. Special Music. Offertory.

Tea in Schools from 6 o'clock. 6.3.

Sunday, Nov. 5, 10.45, Rev. S. A. STEINTAL. 6.30, Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A. (Minister).

THE post of MISSIONARY at the Lewin's Mead Domestic Mission, Bristol, is now VACANT, through the resignation of the Rev. J. Wain.—Apply to the Rev. A. N. BLATCHFORD, Redland, Bristol.

NEW ADDRESS.

MR. J. PAGE HOPPS wishes to urge all correspondents to make a note of his new (and he hopes permanent) address:—SANDERSTEAD HILL, SOUTH CROYDON, SURREY.

WANTED, for a flat in Hampstead, a thoroughly competent COOK-GENERAL. Must be an early riser and good tempered; two in family; good wages.—Address, A., INQUIRER Office, Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand.

PLAYS FOR WINTER EVENINGS.

Written by Rev. H. W. HAWKES.

1. Robin Hood.
2. Dick Whittington.
3. Cinderella.
4. Babes in the Wood.
5. Beauty & the Beast.
6. Red Riding Hood.
7. William Tell.
8. King Amor, or the Beggar's Bride.

Price 3d. each net, by post 3½d. The seven post free for 2s.

"These are very taking little dramas on familiar stories. The 'Plays' are written in rhyme, and are of good tone without being too didactic. They are just the thing for our juvenile societies, Bands of Hope, &c."—INQUIRER.

"These are the first instalment of a series of plays for boys and girls. They are short and simple in character, being versions of the familiar old stories whose titles they bear, and can be commended to the notice of those who are on the look-out for suitable pieces of the nature for representation."—LITERARY WORLD.

BY "AUNT AMY."

The Prince's Triumph, or the Three Riddles. A Drama for Home Representation. Cloth, gilt edges, 1s.

Romance and Reality, or Sophy's Adventure. A Play for Six Girls. 3d.

London: B. C. HARE, 4, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Fcap. 8vo, 108 pp., cloth, 1s. net.

THE RELIGION OF TIME and the RELIGION OF ETERNITY. A Study of Certain Relations between Medieval and Modern Thought. By PHILIP H. WICKSTEED, M.A.

Fcap. 8vo, 100 pp., cloth, 1s. net.

BACK TO JESUS. An Appeal to Evangelical Christians. By RICHARD A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., Author of "God and the Soul," "Faith and Doubt in the Century's Poets," &c.

THE NEW WORLD.
Vol. 8. No. 31. SEPTEMBER, 1899.

Price 3s. net; by post, 3s. 3d.

CONTENTS.—Greek Religion, by George Santayana; Popular Education and Public Morality, by Charles W. Wendte; Jesus' Foreknowledge of his Sufferings and Death, by Otto Pfleiderer; Necessity and Limitations of Anthropomorphism, by George A. Coe; The Genesis of Faith, by Albert G. Hing; The Scientific and Christian View of Illness, by James T. Eixby; Substitution, a Stage in Theological Thought, by Henry T. Colestock; Progressive Judaism and Liberal Christianity, by Clinton Harby Levy; Unitarians and the Beginning of English Liberalism, by Edward Porritt; The Ethics of the Bhagavad-Gita, by Bipin Ch. Pal; Book Reviews, &c.

London: PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

JOHN PAGE HOPPS' MONTHLY.

THE COMING DAY.

ENLARGED. PRICE THREEPENCE.

Contents for NOVEMBER:

The Suffering Servant of God, as the Redeemer and Bearer of Another's Woe.

Diversity in Unity.

Unity and Variety in Religion.

A Glimpse of Hell.

The Conspiracy against the Transvaal.

Notes by the Way and Notes on Books.

Reincarnation.

London, Edinburgh, and Oxford:
WILLIAMS and NORGATE, and all Booksellers.

THE ETHICAL WORLD.

EDITED BY DR. STANTON COIT and
J. A. HOBSON, M.A.

Articles on Important Social Questions, Education &c. from a purely ethical standpoint
Children's Page.

TWOPENCE WEEKLY.

Office: 17, Johnson's-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

SCOTCH TWEEDS and SERGES at Mill Prices, Ladies' or Gents'; best quality only. Patterns post free; orders carriage paid.—GEO. McLEOD & SONS, Hawick, N.B.

Printed by WOODFALL & KINDER, 70 to 76, Long Acre, W.C. and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. City Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 29 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, October 28, 1899.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 2993.
NEW SERIES, No. 97.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1899.

[ONE PENNY.]

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	...	705
LITERATURE :—
The Failure of Paganism	...	707
Publications Received	...	708
ARTICLES :—
The Position of Women.—I....	...	708
The Inward Life	...	710
In War Time	...	713
Citizen Sunday	...	713
CORRESPONDENCE :—
Church Covenants	...	709
English Education Exhibition	...	709
OBITUARY :—
Mr. Sydney Courtauld	...	710
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN	...	711
LEADER :—
Of the Household of God	...	712
POETRY :—
My Dead	...	713
All Saints	...	713
MEETINGS :—
Bradford Bazaar	...	709
North Midland Presbyterian and Unitarian Association	...	714
Holywood Jubilee	...	715
PROVINCIAL LETTER :—
Belfast	...	716
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES	...	717
ADVERTISEMENTS	...	719

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

THE burden of the war in South Africa lies heavily upon us, and far more heavily upon our friends of both races in that unhappy country. The discussion of the failure of statesmanship which preceded the war, and aggravated misunderstanding and suspicion until the path of peace was irrevocably closed, is fruitless now, and it seems to us for the present better to bear the humiliation of this conflict in silence. We commend to the earnest attention of our readers the prayer which will be found in another column, under the heading, "In War Time."

At the celebration of the sixty-sixth anniversary of the death of the Rajah Ram Mohun Roy on Sept. 27 in the Hall of the City College, Calcutta, the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, as we recorded last week, presided. The spacious hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, among those present being representatives of various religious faiths. During the evening two Bengali hymns, composed by Ram Mohun Roy, were sung. The Chairman, in opening the proceedings, said it was a commendable practice to celebrate the memories of epoch-making men. It enriched the sentiment of gratitude. It reinforced the moral sense, and put before them lofty ideals of life and conduct. It reminded them that the great forces for the advancement of the world were not abstract ideas, but the forces of personality. The life and work—nay, what he believed to be the divine mission—of the Rajah Ram Mohun Roy was calculated to produce these results, and their eulogy of it would be but vain and empty words, if it did not work out in themselves some measure of these effects. The work of Ram Mohun Roy was far from being done. It was the sowing of seed the harvest of which was far from being reaped. It was the beginning—the formative, fructifying, and heroic beginning—of a movement the maturity of which was yet far ahead of them; and the best tribute they could pay to the memory of its brave initiator would be to carry it a few further steps forward towards completion.

SPEECHES were also delivered by Rai Yotindro Nath Chowdhari, Zamindar of Toki, and nephew and legal representative of the late revered Kali Nath Munshi, who was a disciple and valued co-adjutor of the illustrious deceased; Pandit Tarakumar Kabiratna, a Hindu Pandit; Babu Mohini Mohun Chatterji; Mr. Kassein (a Mahomedan); Mr. A. M. Bose, M.A.; Bhai Mohendro Nath Bose, of the New Dispensation Church, and editor of Unity and the Minister; and Babu Chandi Charan Bannerji. These gentlemen spoke mainly of the characteristics of the religion of Ram Mohun Roy, with the exception of Mr. A. M. Bose, who also dwelt on his many-sided activities, and described him as a great political, social, and religious reformer—an all-round man. The Chairman, in closing the proceedings, said that India took a just and legitimate pride in the memory of Ram Mohun Roy as a pure patriot and as a fearless social moral reformer, who crowned and glorified those qualities by a life of singular spiritual purity and beauty. His services to the freedom of the Press, to the spread of education, to the claims of Indian women to intellectual training and social liberty, and to the purification of religion, had enshrined him in the hearts of his countrymen. Englishmen who were acquainted with his career were no less proud of him. Indeed, he was dear to every friend of liberty and every lover of mankind. Mr. Williams also dwelt upon the services rendered by the Rajah, as the first to bring to Englishmen a true knowledge of the religions of India, thus paving the way for the great Oriental scholars of recent times.

THE course of six elementary lectures on the Philosophy of Kant, which the Rev. Dr. G. Daves Hicks, of Unity Church, Islington, announces to begin on Thursday evening, Nov. 16, offers an opportunity of exceptional value to earnest thinkers who, in the interest of a rational theology, may desire to gain some insight into the teaching of a philosopher, whose influence is so potent for the maintenance of spiritual truth. That Dr. Hicks will prove an admirable exponent of Kant we may confidently predict, remembering the masterly sketch of philosophical thought in this country which he contributed to the last edition of Ueberweg's great History of Philosophy. Particulars as to the course of lectures will be found advertised in another column.

THE memory of the late Russell Martineau will be perpetuated in Manchester College in a very fitting manner, by a prize to be offered annually to regular students in the College for proficiency in Hebrew and Old Testament studies, to be known as the "Russell Martineau Prize." Under the present scheme a candidate must not only reach a high standard in the ordinary College work, but must undergo a special examination in some book or part of a book in the Old Testament in the original language, and also generally in Hebrew or one of the cognate languages, and must present an essay embodying the result of his own study in some branch of Old Testament criticism, history or theology. If there is no candidate of sufficient merit the prize will be withheld; and if from this cause the fund should accumulate, the surplus may be used for the purchase of valuable books for the library, connected with Old Testament studies. The prize, which is to be of a value not exceeding £21, has been founded by Mrs. Russell Martineau, who has placed a sufficient sum of money in trust for that purpose, and has generously left to the College Committee a wide discretion in its administration.

DR. PATON, who was for thirty-five years Principal of the Nottingham Congregational Institute, and has rendered such eminent services in connection with the University Extension movement, the Recreative Schools Association, the National Home Reading Union, and many other branches of beneficent social work, has now retired, and his services "as a Christian minister and educationalist" were last week publicly recognised by the presentation of his portrait to the Nottingham Art Gallery, a replica being at the same time presented to Mrs. Paton. The Committee which raised the public subscription for this purpose was headed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the presentation on Thursday week was made by the Bishop of Hereford, who spoke in the warmest terms of his friendship for Dr. Paton, and the inspiration for good works received from him.

THE third report of the Committee of the Women's Armenian Relief Fund, just received, covers a period of two years, and is an interesting record of the work carried on in Van and its Vilayet, for the Committee, by Dr. and Mrs. Reynolds, the devoted American Missionaries. The plan followed by them was initiated immediately after the massacres by Dr. Grace Kimball, and has ever since been strictly adhered to. It consists in supplying work in spinning, weaving, knitting, &c., to the women and children, and in paying them wages by which they can live. In addition to the Industrial Bureau, orphanages holding 500 Armenian boys and girls have been established in Van, and are working admirably upon most economical and efficient lines. Besides giving the children a simple, yet thorough education, they are taught trades or agriculture, or trained in domestic work. During the severe winter of 1897-8 great stores of manufactured goods, amounting in value to some thousands of pounds, have been distributed to the starving and naked villagers, together with food, seed corn, agricultural implements, wood, &c., for erecting new dwellings. During the famine of last spring, occasioned by the bad harvest, the Committee co-operated with the various other agencies working for Armenia in raising money for keeping alive the unhappy agricultural and pastoral population of Van province. Since September, 1897, the Committee have been able to send out £2,855 for relief work, and £361 for the orphanage. Since the formation of the Committee in the spring of 1895 the fund has amounted altogether to £17,830. Subscriptions will be gratefully received by the hon. treasurer, Mrs. Cole, Danehurst, Putney, S.W.

At the autumnal meeting of the Liberation Society's Council, to be held on Monday next, Mr. W. S. Robson, M.P., is to preside, and Rev. Dr. Parker will deliver an address on "The Duty of Free Churchmen in Relation to the Present Crisis in the Church." The circular convening the meeting states that the occasion will afford an opportunity for reviewing the recent action of Parliament and Bishops in regard to the sacerdotalism and lawlessness prevalent in the Establishment, and for considering the attitude of Liberationists in view of prospective legislation. An influential attendance of the Council, subscribers, and others, is expected.

DR. J. M. WHITON sends to the Christian World the following notes on what he calls "a significant conference":—

The eighteenth (biennial) meeting of the National Conference of Unitarian and Other Christian Churches, held at Washington from Oct. 16 to 19, was in important respects significant. The note of recall from a one-sided interest in criticism and negation to interest in constructive theological and religious activity was repeatedly sounded. Particularly pronounced for this were the younger speakers—a class that used to be charged with a tendency to destructive radicalism. The general tone of the Conference was thoroughly positive. The great affirmations of Unitarians were strongly emphasised throughout—the Divine sonship of man, and God's immanence in the race; self-fulfilment, not self-surrender, the Divine requirement, and the spiritual leadership of Jesus in such self-fulfilment; the Divine possibilities of human nature, and faith in their realisation. The name of Jesus was also set above every other human name. A particularly significant indication of this rising temperature was in the earnest and spiritual tone of the Young People's Religious Union, a federation of local societies affiliated with the Conference. From the British point of view at least, too little attention was given to the social questions with which practical religion has to deal. Nor have American Unitarians yet appreciated the obligation to spread their gospel of humanity among non-Christian peoples. It is to their praise that they rally to their national assemblies more numerous in proportion to membership than any other body of Christians. The "Unitarian Movement," so-called in America, is far from the decline that has been predicted from local instances of decadence. The example set fifty years ago by the older branch of the Congregational body is at length being followed, and a vigorous propaganda is planned for extension over the whole country. The extreme individualism which characterises Unitarians is gradually organising under the leadership of the ablest minds, and a copious dissemination of their best literature prepares the way for the gathering of new congregations. If their serene optimism were blended with a desirable shade of pessimistic regard to "the old Adam" in the way, they would probably be more strenuous propagandists of views they hold as essential to true religion. It seems at present to be the effort of their leaders to arouse them to this, and as was said at the Conference, "to change indifference into difference." But in a measure, more or less, the same conditions appear in every church.

THE old General Baptist Chapel at Deptford, the re-opening of which, after renovation, is reported in our present issue, has many interesting historical associations connected with it. Although 1600, given in the Essex Hall Year Book as the date of the foundation, is doubtful, it would seem that the congregation must have been well established in the reign of Charles I., for Holles, one of the famous five members of Parliament whom the King failed to arrest, belonged to it, and his wife is buried in the chapel yard. Evelyn, in his diary, speaks of the chapel, at the time of James II.'s Indulgence, as being crowded, while the parish church was well-nigh deserted, and adds: "What this will end in God Almighty only knows." The present representative of the Evelyn family very kindly subscribed £30 towards the renovation fund. There is also a well-founded tradition that Disraeli and Milner Gibson, when boys at school at Blackheath, attended the chapel. The latter, as Miss Squier said, in her very interesting letter which was read at the opening meeting, was a ward of her grandfather's, the Rev. W. Moon, who, from 1804 to 1823 was minister of the chapel. We may add that the whole amount required for the renovation of the chapel has not yet been raised, and that the Rev. A. J. Marchant will be glad to receive donations to make up the last £30.

THE late Rev. William Gaskell, M.A., for fifty-nine years minister of Cross-street Chapel, Manchester, and the veritable "Bishop" of our churches in Lancashire and Cheshire, where he was in such great request for school anniversary sermons that he used to say if he accepted all invitations he might never be in his own pulpit, has had something like justice done to his winsome character and memory in this month's Young Days. The editor, who was one of Mr. Gaskell's students, evidently more than esteemed him. There is love, with the light which love only can give, in the sketch we refer to. Some capital College stories are told, which Mr. Gaskell's old students will certainly enjoy, and though written more especially with a view of making Mr. Gaskell known to younger readers, we believe the sketch, which has the approval of the family, will be very welcome to many older readers in our northern churches to whom Mr. Gaskell is a gracious memory.

In his sermon at the recent annual meeting of the East Cheshire Christian Union, the Rev. E. P. Barrow, taking as text Matthew xxviii. 19, "Go ye, and make disciples," pointed out that Christ did not say, "Go ye, and make proselytes." That was what the Pharisees did, and he condemned the Pharisees because theirs was a spirit of conquest. They wanted not so much to save souls as to capture them. They cared much more for changing a man's opinion than for changing his life. A proselyte was a man who came over; but a true convert never came over. It was as though Christ said, "Go ye and make learners first; converts after; proselytes never. Put the Gospel before them; do not ask too much; there is much that you may leave undisturbed. Ask them to repent; then to believe; and to believe—the Gospel. They must learn not this or that view, but how to be humble and find rest for their souls." Disciple, then, was Christ's word. They must beware of the proselytising spirit which tried to make a man "come over," to alter his views. To evangelise was to go to men rather than bid them come to you. If anything must be changed, change the hearts and lives rather than the minds. Nothing could be solved by argument and disputation alone. The causes of religious disquietude were more often moral than intellectual. A missionary society was very easily formed, but it was difficult to fill it with the missionary spirit—the spirit to go and teach by personal illustration the conditions of discipleship. The primary conditions of discipleship were perseverance, humility, and self-sacrifice. They were the things hardest to teach because they were the hardest to learn. It needed to be remembered that the Christian Union existed to spread, not a denomination, but the Kingdom of God—to teach, not by disseminating opinions, but by exemplifying character. The Church that would most teach the future was the Church which would best succeed in bursting the prison-house of its own thoughts about itself. The Church that preached itself was lost, for "it was true of Churches as of men: 'He that seeketh to save his life shall lose it.' Every God-fearing man must be a divine messenger, not by showing how God was God, but how man could be divine. Therein was their Heavenly Father glorified, not that they had more correct views of Him, but that they bore much fruit.

I ask no man to be contented with the amount of evil existing at any time, in any age or country. It is the nature of evil to prompt opposition to it. The more intelligence there is in man, the more vigorous and effectual the opposition it will prompt. The greatest of all calamities is the contentment that sits down at peace with a remediable evil.—William Smith.

LITERATURE.

THE FAILURE OF PAGANISM.*

It is always interesting to watch the disintegration of a great civilisation under the impact of new social and religious forces. The slow process of fusion between the new life and the old brings with it a feeling of sympathy for the ideals of the past which have become impossible. No great system of practice and belief, under which men have found the security of a settled life, can pass away without some sense of loss as well as of gain. At the moment of its dissolution men seem to realise with added clearness what a great part it has played on the stage of human affairs, and the magnitude of their own debt to it for what they hold most sacred in life. Even the conviction that its death is an apotheosis hardly alleviates the tragedy; for that is a conviction which only comes to philosophic thought when the fusion is complete. In the struggle between Hebrew and Greek thought which resulted in Hellenism, in the conflict between the higher Paganism and Christianity, in the passing away of the mediæval world in the intellectual and spiritual ferment of the Renaissance and the Reformation, in the slow emergence of a new world before our very eyes through antagonisms which go down to the very roots of life, it is not only the gladiators of hope who interest and attract us. The forces of convinced resistance also win our respect. The figures, so dignified and immobile, who stand with averted faces at the close of an epoch, cherishing their great dream of the past, refusing to yield to the light which seems so crude and glaring, without shelter or peace for the intellect or heart, they are lower than the order of the prophets, but their singular pietas wins for them a place, not without its own honour, among the souls who are made great by what they suffer.

As these great periods of upheaval and reconstruction are studied with the intelligence and care, which historical research is making possible for us, the influence of hasty generalisations and crude antitheses is sensibly weakened. It is no longer a struggle between truth and falsehood, light and darkness, faith and unbelief, the armies of God and the serried forces of reaction; for no historical process is capable of being reduced to such simple terms. The conflicts, which for the popular mind are often focussed in the fierce light of a few dramatic episodes, represent in reality the intellectual and religious development of generations; and we can only understand the points at issue, the reason of the long resistance, the obstinate clinging to forms of belief and social habit which already seem cold with the touch of death, and the partial nature of the final victory, when we throw ourselves back into the atmosphere of the time, and remember that we are dealing with men and with a state of society, the roots of whose religion and culture go deep into the soil of a great past. For the study of the wider problems of history there is accordingly nothing more necessary than the faithful and sympathetic retracing of the faded lines, which still represent the mental tendencies, the social ideals, the ingrained habits and tastes, the spiritual loyalties, of phases of civilisation in many ways most dissimilar to our own. Pater did this with the pen of imaginative genius in "Marius the Epicurean" for the earlier stages of the intellectual struggle between Paganism and Christianity. Mr. Dill has now performed a similar task for the later stages of the same struggle, not indeed in the form of a romance, but in a luminous and eloquent historical study.

Perhaps we owe Mr. Dill an apology for what may appear a somewhat tardy recognition of his work; but we confess to little sympathy with the modern habit of expressing in a few days a verdict upon a book, which represents many years of careful thought and research; and we are confident that the success of this particular book does not depend upon the praise which may be bestowed upon it within even a few months of its publication. With Friedländer's "Sittengeschichte Roms" and Gaston Boissier's "La Fin du Paganisme," it is indispensable to the cultivated reader, who would understand the forces which were engaged in the long conflict between the classical and the Christian ideal. How fascinating the history of that conflict becomes in Mr. Dill's pages, as we escape from the influence of the crude idea, once so prevalent, that it was simply a battle between Christian purity and virtue and Pagan sensuality and lust, and are made to feel the strength and reasonableness of much of the Pagan resistance. He brings vividly before us the Indian summer of classical civilisation during the fourth and fifth centuries in the lordly domains and spacious dwellings of Aquitaine, and the crowded universities of Bordeaux, Toulouse and Lyons. Owing to the Imperial edicts Christianity was gaining largely in nominal adherents, like Ausonius and Sidonius Apollinaris before he was raised to the episcopate, who did not take their religion very seriously, and rejoiced in the spaciousness and tolerance of the ancient culture. But the real brunt of the opposition was represented by men like Symmachus, in whose dislike of Christianity and loyalty to his cultivated tradition we may find an element of patriotic passion, while at the other extreme stood the representatives of the rising movement of Christian asceticism, Jerome and his disciples, St. Paulinus of Nola, St. Martin of Tours, and the great men of the monastery of Lerins. It was a conflict in which there was a large amount of political feeling. The accusation that "Rome has perished in the Christian times" was no empty taunt. It was a reasonable belief, held with tenacious conviction by many minds, for whom the ancient religion and the stability of the empire were inseparable, and it called forth the full intellectual strength of Augustine in the "De Civitate Dei," and the less finely disciplined power of Orosius in his history, for its refutation. But, after all, the final issue did not depend upon the brilliant combats of argument. There were deeper forces at work. We can understand why the victory was long delayed, but we can also see that victory was inevitable. The spiritual forces were not evenly matched. In these fascinating pictures of cultivated pagan life there is a touching pietas, a tender affection for the good things of their inheritance, a tenacious clinging to a patriotic tradition, but there is no faith, no sensitiveness to the problems of the present, no outlook into the future. "The real canker at the root of that society," says Mr. Dill, "was not gross vice, but class pride, want of public spirit, absorption in the vanities of a sterile culture, cultivated selfishness. It is difficult for a modern man to conceive the bounded view of society taken by people like Symmachus and Sidonius, the cold, stately self-content, the absence of sympathy for the masses lying outside the charmed circle of senatorial rank, the placid faith in the permanence of privilege and wealth, the apparent inability to conceive, even in the presence of tremendous forces of disruption, that society should ever cease to move along the ancient lines." This is finely perceived, and it helps us to understand not only the strength of the spiritual ardour which Christianity needed to fling itself against this entrenched conservatism, but also the growing attraction which the ascetic ideal exercised over thinking minds as an escape into the severities of a real world.

Before we bring this article to a close—and we have only touched briefly upon what, to us, is the central interest of Mr. Dill's book—we must refer, in a few words of genuine pleasure, to the literary art which has filled his narrative with passages of vivid description and brilliant portraiture. We may quote as an illustration of what we mean his character-sketch of the father of Ausonius:—

"For his father the poet had a profound reverence. Born to modest fortune, which gave him a place in the municipal councils of Bazas and Bordeaux, he practised as a physician for the greater part of his life, till on his son's advancement, he was suddenly raised to the prefecture of the Illyrian province. He was probably a philosophic pagan, a Stoic of the type of Marcus Aurelius, whom he resembles in many traits. Yet he had many virtues which we are accustomed to regard as peculiarly Christian. He attained the highest medical skill possible in those days, and gave his advice without fee or reward to the poor and afflicted. Careless of money, yet frugal without meanness, he neither added to nor impaired his moderate fortune. Like the sages whom he followed, he found the true wealth in regulation of the desires, but he added to this ideal a warmth of charity, and a certain serenity and sweetness, which softened his Stoicism. Holding aloof from scenes of strife and rivalry, and the treacherous friendships of the great, closing his ears to all spiteful rumour, leading a life of dignified contentment and quiet beneficence, he seems an almost flawless character, one of those saintly souls who reach a rare moral elevation without support or impulse from religious faith."

By the side of this most attractive portrait we may place the following glimpse into the interior life of one of the great houses of Gaul: "The cold calm dignity of those great houses, with endless calls to frivolous social duties, and a routine of busy idleness, must surely have made the nobler spirits sometimes long for the more strenuous and stormy life of their ancestors. As we turn the pages of Sidonius, we seem to feel the still, languid oppressiveness of a hot, vacant noon-tide in one of those villas of Aquitaine or Auvergne. The master may be looking after his wine and oil, or laying a fresh mosaic, or reading Terence or Menander in some shady grotto; his guests are playing tennis, or rattling the dice-box, or tracking the antiquarian lore of Virgil to its sources. The scene is one of tranquil content, or even gaiety. But over all, to our eyes, broods the shadow which haunts the life that is nourished only by memories, and to which the future sends no call and offers no promise."

* "Roman Society in the last Century of the Western Empire." By Samuel Dill, M.A. Macmillan and Co. 1898. Demy 8vo. 12s. net.

When pictures like this are passed rapidly before our eyes we realise, with a certain pathetic wonder, how much that was beautiful and well-ordered, the hard-won fruit of centuries of civilisation, went down in the storm. We do not regret the victory or grudge the stern price which men had to pay for it: for if anything has become clearer to us through reading Mr. Dill's pages, it is that in no other way than by this collapse of Paganism, this passing away of a whole type and order of civilisation, and its replacement by what was at first cruder, coarser, more elemental, could the renovation of society have been effected, and the divine purpose in Christianity brought nearer to its achievement. But it is no less with profound sympathy that we watch these shadowy figures as they rise before us like the dim ruins of the Campagna in the pale light of evening. How wistfully they seem to peer into the sad and vacant future! With a dignity which is still Roman they go to meet the doom of those who cling too long to the forms of the past, who fight against the great forces of time.

W. H. DRUMMOND.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

[TO PUBLISHERS.—All Books, &c., sent to THE INQUIRER will be acknowledged under this head, with name of publisher and price, if supplied. The necessities of our space, however, compel us to limit the number selected for critical notice and review.]

Encyclopædia Biblica. Vol. I. Edited by the Rev. T. K. Cheyne, M.A., D.D., and J. S. Black, M.A., LL.D. (A. and C. Black.)

The Last Boer War. By H. Rider Haggard. 1s. (Kegan Paul.)

The Origin of the Fourth Gospel. By P. C. Sense, M.A. 7s. 6d. (Williams and Norgate.)

Good Words. Volume for 1899. 7s. 6d. (Isbister.)

Sunday Magazine. Volume for 1899. 7s. 6d. (Isbister.)

Contemporary, Agnostic Annual, Nineteenth Century, Expositor, Scribner's, Tiny Tots.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c., received from the following:—D. A.; C. C. C.; E. F. L.; R. L.; A. B. M.; C. J. S.; J. J. S. (thanks); T. W. S.; H. V. W.; J. C. W.; W. W. We cannot publish letters that are not signed with the name of the writer.

THE POSITION OF WOMEN.—I.

I BELIEVE that, when the International Congress of Women met in London this summer, few preachers spoke of it from the pulpit. Certainly, there was little public evidence that religious teachers estimated at a high rate the moral significance of the movement which the Congress represented. Yet no intelligent person can doubt that this movement is at least as great a fact as the recent Peace Conference, which received universal notice in the Churches. And one naturally asks, Why did the Women's Congress receive such scant attention?

Perhaps some people would reply with the vague remark, expressing a feeling as vague, "The two subjects are so very different!" And, indeed, there is an obvious difference between a question touching international policy and a question which is in the highest degree "domestic." But this kind of difference, if relevant at all, gave the Women's Congress a special claim upon preachers; for a minister may rightly be cautious how he trenches upon the ground of the statesman, and especially upon foreign affairs; but matters of every-day home life are his undisputed province.

There is, however, another difference. And, if one pressed for distinctness of thought and language, it would come out that the women's movement is deemed to be too controversial a subject for the Church and the worship hour. But the answer to this is that the most fundamental questions which the women's movement is raising cannot be kept out of the Church and the worship hour. They are there already. They were brought in ages ago.

There are ancient opinions on these questions which the Church has stamped with its authority, which are taught by the Scriptures held sacred and read as divine revelation, and which are embodied in liturgies hardly less revered. This creates a difficult situation. A request to celebrate the Women's Congress could hardly be other than embarrassing to a preacher who sincerely follows the old standards. Even to freer minds the request might not be without awkwardness, on account of the authority which those standards have in the eyes of others. But religion, having once recognised the extreme importance of these questions, cannot now evade them. It cannot pass them by and keep silence about them, merely because it may have to contradict its own pronouncements. There is only one course worthy of it. It should seek and speak the truth. It should throw off the errors of the past, caring nothing for continuity of intellectual conceptions, except so far as this implies consistency of moral purpose. It should openly welcome and encourage and inspire every effort for the progress of humanity. They at least are without excuse who acknowledge as their highest authority the light within and the upward endeavour of their generation. They should be foremost in dealing reasonably and fearlessly with this great subject of women's position and responsibilities.

I will go at once to a point which most people regard as settled both by sacred authority and by practical expediency, and will show how my experience proves to me that it is not settled, or that it is settled in an opposite sense. Near the end of the 14th chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians, we read thus:—

Let the women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but let them be in subjection, as also saith the law. And if they would learn anything, let them ask their own husbands at home, for it is shameful for a woman to speak in church.

Shameful for a woman to speak in the church? Such language brings up in my mind a picture of the Quaker meeting where I used to sit as a boy and youth. Several men sat at the head of the meeting in the "ministers' gallery" facing us, but the impression made upon me by all their speaking is not to be compared with that produced by one woman who sat there also. The image of this little, white-haired lady, with round, cherubic face framed by her Quaker bonnet, is as vividly before me now as it was twenty-five or thirty years ago. She had a sweet, sympathetic voice, which won attention immediately. She spoke without the least art or attempt at effect; and a slight French accent (for she was French by birth), only seemed to add to the simplicity of her whole manner. But insight and tenderness were so beautifully combined in what she said, she had so much of the faculty of taking out the kernel of a religious doctrine and leaving the husk, and she spoke with a smile so kindly yet so serious, that she was, for me, by far the best preacher there. Could it be "shameful" for such a woman to speak in the church? If a thousand Pauls said so, I would not believe it. I will not read such words in a way which would imply belief. On the contrary, I will deny their truth, whenever I have occasion. I will do everything I can to gain for such women, liberty and opportunity to cultivate and use their gifts for the good of others.

Passing from this saying about preaching, I ask, what else does the Bible teach about women? And I remember such sayings as these:—

Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands as unto the Lord. For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the Church: and he is the saviour of the body. Therefore as the Church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything. (Ephes. v. 22-24.)

This kind of doctrine is repeated several times in the Epistles; and in the marriage service of the Church of England the principal passages in which it occurs are collected together and form the advice to the bride with which the service concludes. Again, I have to say that I can only refer to these passages in order to repudiate their teaching. This doctrine of subjection, and the legal regulations based upon it, have given countenance to innumerable injustices and cruelties. Husbands are indeed told in the next verse that they should love their wives, but such general precepts do not carry us far; to be of any real service they need to be applied in detail to the circumstances of life. There are many kinds of "love." Amongst others, there is the love which is awakened by superficial attractions only, which soon gets tired and lasts but for a few years or months, or even days; there is the love which regards woman as a mere ornament or plaything, and is without respect; there is the love which glories in possession but not in justice or spiritual fellowship; there is the love which has one eye, or

EPSS'S COCOA. The most nutritious.

EPSS'S COCOA. Grateful and comforting.

EPSS'S COCOA. For breakfast and supper.

EPSS'S COCOA. With natural flavour only.

EPSS'S COCOA. From the finest brands.

both, upon silver and gold. What if a woman is the victim of such love and becomes a wife? Is it enough to say that, whatever happens, she must submit to her husband in all things? What a weapon this puts into the hands of evil men! The wrongs which have resulted to women are something revolting to think of.

I turn again to the Bible to see whether there is not, after all, better and fuller and more explicit teaching there. So far all my references have been to the Epistles. Do the gospels contain nothing more inspired? Does not Jesus deal more adequately with the question? I do not find that we get further light even from him. The only passage in his history which the compilers of the marriage service could refer to was that which tells of his presence at the wedding at Cana in Galilee. They also adopted the fanciful notion of the Epistle to the Ephesians, and speak of marriage as though it were but a symbol of the "mystical union that is betwixt Christ and his Church." But these references are valueless, and we may pass them over. They do not shed a ray of light of the kind we need. Nor do the sayings of Jesus about adultery and divorce. Happily, we can say that he never proclaimed the doctrine of subjection, as Paul did. Moreover, all the accounts of his behaviour towards women show that he was most sympathetic and respectful towards them, and that he warmly appreciated their friendship. But beyond this, so far as we are informed, he did not go. Unmarried himself, he cannot be held up as an example to those who marry; and it is a strange and significant fact that the one example held up by the marriage service to show in a simple and human way what marriage should be is the remote and shadowy one of Isaac and Rebecca. We have no utterances of Jesus upon the general rights and duties of women in the state of marriage, nor upon their rights and duties in the unmarried state. Universal moral precepts which apply equally to men and women, do not carry us far in this matter. Where a wide distinction is made in practice, and some distinction is made by nature itself, moral teaching must deal with the difference explicitly. But the gospels say nothing explicit in this field, except when they deal with lust and divorce.

This is not said in a spirit of carping criticism, it is simply stated as an historical fact which ought to be frankly recognised; for it is a fact which has very important bearings. It shows the limitations even of the best parts of the Bible. It shows that a minister of religion who would faithfully do his duty in helping men and women of to-day to face the problems of to-day, must value and use the Bible for just what light it gives—no more and no less. It shows that he must often appeal to other sources.

But the fact that Jesus has left so little explicit teaching upon the rights and duties of women, shows something more. It shows why even in Christian countries some of their rights have been trampled on by men, and some of their duties neglected by themselves. For both men and women have, in failure of other guidance, acted on the principles of Paul. How far we have travelled from those principles was indicated by the International Congress of Women.

H. RAWLINGS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

ENGLISH EDUCATION EXHIBITION.

SIR,—The Sunday School Association have been invited to take part in the International Exhibition to be held in Paris next year, and as a first step to this to forward their exhibits to the Imperial Institute, where a preliminary English Education Exhibition is to be opened on Jan. 4 next.

It is, of course, impossible adequately to show results of Sunday-school labours, but something of the history of the institution—its means, methods, and aims—might be displayed, and the promoters of the Education Exhibition are strongly of opinion that in some way the Sunday-school work of England should find a place there, and be represented both in London and in Paris.

I am writing, now, to ask superintendents and school secretaries to help the Committee with any suggestions as to the showing of our work, and more especially to send me any forms, certificates, visitor's instructions, rules, reports, tickets and cards used in their schools, from which I may make a selection and display. It will add to the interest if the forms, &c., are filled in with names and particulars as when used, and should be sent to me in duplicate. They should reach me within the next ten days, and I should be obliged if my correspondents would mark their envelopes with the word "Exhibition."

ION PRITCHARD, Hon. Sec.,
Sunday School Association, Essex
Hall, Strand.

CHURCH COVENANTS.

SIR,—In his interesting speech at the stone-laying of Willaston School, the Rev. J. E. Odgers is reported as saying that in our Presbyterian churches "there was no such thing as a church covenant." No doubt that is so as a general rule, but our church at Poole furnishes a remarkable exception, for it possesses a series of covenants, drawn up in the years 1704, 1741, and 1753, each one being on the occasion of the appointment of a new minister. But these covenants are not of a dogmatic character, and embody no doctrine to which we could not assent.

OCT. 12. EDGAR SOLLY ANTHONY.

[Mr. Anthony enclosed, at the same time, a sermon of his, in which the three covenants are quoted in full. The earliest was drawn up in 1704 on the occasion of the ordination of the Rev. William Madgwick as pastor, and the erection of the first chapel on the site of the present building at Poole, and is as follows:—

Seeing it hath pleased God to call us by his grace into fellowship with himself and with his son Jesus Christ, through his Spirit: We do promise our hearty acceptance of the Lord for our God. And in faith of his receiving us for his people, do give up ourselves to him by solemn covenant, to observe all his commands revealed in his word, and to walk in all the holy ordinances of his worship all our days. And being persuaded by the light and power of his spirit in his word, that the disciples of Christ ought to join themselves together in the way and order of Church fellowship; we do give up ourselves, first to Jesus Christ as our King and Head; and to one another also according, to his appointment; engaging through his assistance to observe all those things which he hath commanded to the church of the New Testament to the utmost of our light and knowledge therein, and according as God shall give us opportunity so to do.—That we will submit one to another in the Lord, and to the exercise of that discipline amongst us which is required by the rule of the Gospel. That we will walk in that holy subjection to our Pastor (and other church officers when God shall favour us with them) which Christ commands us. That we will communicate of the gifts and graces which God bestoweth on us, to the edification of the body; and in love without dissimulation promote the good of this whole church; that God may be glorified in us, the kingdom of Christ advanced, and our souls saved in the day of Christ.

The covenant of 1741 is more than three times as long as the above, while that of 1753 simply adds some amplification of special points in the earlier covenant.—
ED. INQ.]

BRADFORD BAZAAR.

ON Thursday, Friday, Saturday, and Monday, Oct. 19, 20, 21, and 24, a bazaar was held in the new schools adjoining Chapel-lane Chapel, and the proceedings were marked by much enthusiasm. On the first day the promoters were much depressed by the dense fog which hung over the city; but when the time of opening arrived the Channing Hall was well filled. The right keynote was struck by the singing of Dean Alford's hymn, "Forward be our watchword," after which prayer was offered by the Rev. E. CEREDIG JONES, M.A.

The chair was occupied by Mr. C. H. ELLIS, who has taken a most active and generous part in the erection of the new schools. In a bright speech he offered a cordial welcome to Mr. C. W. Jones, J.P., president of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, who had been announced to perform the opening ceremony. Mr. Jones congratulated the congregation upon their possessing such fine premises for their various useful institutions, and expressed the pleasure it gave him to see so many of them actively engaged in good work connected with their church. He laid great stress on Sunday-school work as a most valuable training both for scholars and teachers for the duties of life. It should be the aim of teachers to give the scholars under their charge a sound moral education. Secular knowledge unless supplemented by moral training was a questionable boon.

On the motion of the Rev. E. CEREDIG JONES, seconded by Mr. BYRON BOOTH-ROYD, a hearty vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. Jones. A similar compliment was paid to the Chairman on the motion of Miss HUDSON, seconded by Mr. GATHORNE HARGREAVES.

On Friday a crowded assembly came to welcome the Right Hon. Lady O'Hagan. After the singing of the hymn "Praise to Thee, Thou great Creator," the Rev. ANDREW CHALMERS, president of the Yorkshire Unitarian Union, offered prayer. The Rev. E. CEREDIG JONES, who presided, in introducing Lady O'Hagan, said that since she had joined the Unitarian body, she had been a tower of strength to their churches. She had been in much demand for the opening of bazaars, and her wise words and kindly counsels had been most helpful to them. For her moral courage in joining their ranks as the result of patient and conscientious inquiry, they owed her a debt of gratitude. Lady O'Hagan, whose rising was the signal for much applause, gave a most touching address, in the course of which she dwelt upon the need of peace and goodwill among individual members of churches. It was vain to pray for peace between nations, unless those who professed to be followers of the Prince of Peace were prepared to live and work harmoniously together. War was but the collective expression of unworthy feelings which swayed the hearts of individuals.

Miss COLLINS proposed a vote of thanks to Lady O'Hagan, and presented her with a shower bouquet of chrysanthemums. The resolution was seconded by Mrs. EMPSALL, and a similar vote of thanks to the Chairman was also passed.

On Saturday, which was bright and sunny, a very large company assembled to meet Sir James Kitson, Bart., M.P. The proceedings began with the hymn "O worship the King," after which prayer was offered by the Rev. John Fox, of Hunslet.

Mr. BYRON BOOTHROYD, who presided, referred to the very satisfactory results of the first two days' sale, which he regarded as a favourable commentary on the zeal of their people. In introducing Sir James, he said that they were under a special debt of gratitude to him for coming down to Yorkshire from his Parliamentary duties to open their bazaar on the third day.

Sir JAMES KITSON, in declaring the bazaar open, spoke of the marked influence exerted by religious institutions upon society during the last half century. Having been closely in contact with great masses of labour, he could bear testimony to the great change which had taken place in the condition of the people in their character and habits since the days when he first entered upon an industrial career. There had also been witnessed during that period a greater freedom of thought on theological and religious questions, and the bazaar deserved support because it had been promoted by those who refused to be bound by a creed. He rejoiced that he was associated with a communion in which, at any rate, he was free to believe and think what he regarded as the truth.

Mr. J. G. SLATER, junior warden, moved a vote of thanks to Sir James for his kindly interest in their church. He referred to the father of the baronet, who was the first Mayor of Leeds to break through the old custom of taking the members of the corporation to the parish church. The motion was seconded by Mr. C. H. SIMONDS, and carried by acclamation.

The Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., moved a vote of thanks to the Chairman, and referred in appreciative terms to Mr. Boothroyd's valuable services to Chapel-lane Chapel. He was glad to be able to say that the cause in Bradford was now more prosperous than it had ever been during the twenty-five years he had known it. Mr. SPENCER seconded the motion, and it was carried.

The sale was continued on Monday, the 24th, and at the close of that day it was found that the proceeds amounted to a little over the £520, which the promoters had hoped to realise.

OBITUARY.

MR. SYDNEY COURTAULD.

At the comparatively early age of fifty-nine, Mr. Sydney Courtauld died at his residence, Bocking Place, Braintree, on Oct. 20. For some months it was known that he was far from well, but he continued to attend to his many duties, till within a fortnight of his death, and the end came very suddenly.

Mr. Sydney Courtauld was a member of the firm of Messrs. S. Courtauld and Co., manufacturers of crape, who employ several hundred workers at their factories at Braintree, Bocking, Halstead, and elsewhere. He was a Justice of the Peace for the county of Essex. In 1891 he became a member of the Braintree Urban District Council, and was elected Chairman forthwith—a position which he occupied until his death, and in which he gave general satisfaction by his business-like conduct of public affairs, and his never-failing courtesy to all with whom he came into contact. He was also the first representative of Braintree on the Essex County Council, but on the expiration of his first term of office he did not seek re-election.

He took a great interest in all good objects and work in and around Braintree. The Cottage Hospital, the Mechanic's Institute, the Library, the Manor-street schools, and other institutions found in him a generous friend. Those who have visited his hospitable home, and seen his beautiful gardens and flowers will not soon forget the courtesy and kindness which he showed his guests.

Mr. Courtauld had for a long time taken a great interest in the cultivation of orchids. He had nine orchid houses at Bocking Place, which contained some two thousand beautiful specimens. He rendered great service on the Orchid Committee of the Royal Horticultural Society, whose meetings he regularly attended; and he had been very successful as an orchid exhibitor. In 1896 he was awarded the bronze medal of the Society, for the best collection of orchid plants in bloom, and had previously received several first-class certificates for his exhibits.

Mr. Courtauld was by conviction a Unitarian; he belonged, however, to what is usually called the older or more conservative school, and he hardly appreciated some of the more recent developments of thought in our religious community. He was warmly interested in the establishment of the little Unitarian Chapel at Braintree, in succession to the High Garrett Chapel. He made a gift of the site on which the present iron building stands, and in other ways he supported the work of the Rev. R. H. Fuller. In politics he was a Liberal Unionist. On educational and on many social questions he held broad and generous views. He was always ready to take his share of public work, and he will be greatly missed in the district. His intelligence and worth were recognised by men of all creeds and parties.

Mr. Courtauld married Miss Sharpe, sister of Mr. William Arthur Sharpe, and he leaves his widow, four sons, and two daughters to mourn his loss. The silent sympathy of many of our readers will be with the bereaved family in their great sorrow. The funeral took place at the family burial place at Gosfield Churchyard. A large number of relatives and friends attended to pay their tribute of respect to Mr. Courtauld's memory. The Rev. R. H. Fuller, M.A., conducted the service at the grave.

THE INWARD LIFE.

From a letter on "Worship and Ministry" addressed by the recent London Yearly Meeting to congregations and members of the Society of Friends.

WE would earnestly encourage the minister to "give himself to his ministry," to consecrate to it his best powers of mind and body as well as of soul. There is among us a large and increasing number, whose inner conflict is with foes not only moral but intellectual, who need all the help that can be given by the wide vision and sympathetic insight of ministers who have thought deeply as well as felt deeply of the things of God.

We have room in our meetings for helpful ministry of all kinds, for the offerings of the man or woman whose stores of spiritual wisdom have been won in the hard school of life, as well as for the fruits of meditation and study that have been garnered by the more highly-trained mind. In all cases the minister will need a knowledge of the revelation of God and knowledge of men. Both require much patient and loving study; and for this, leisure should, where practicable, be found or made. Meetings should consider it a privilege to do their part by providing, where possible, well-furnished libraries of helpful and stimulating books. We are not, however, speaking merely of literary study, but, in the widest sense, of the preparation of heart and mind, which keep the minister in touch with God and humanity and enrich the gift he has received. Much added power may result from the cultivation of close social and personal fellowship with the members of the congregation. Their needs are part of the inspiration of the ministry.

It is an improvement in spiritual quality and sympathetic insight that we long for in our ministry. We hardly realise the wide difference in efficiency, in spiritual service, between the novice and the expert, between the raw recruit and the trained veteran, between the 'prentice hand and the master workman. The minister will not think to find in the meeting-house alone the consecration of heart, the discipline of character, the equipment of mind, the understanding of men, which should come to him through all the avenues of life. The meetings which are before him will be often on his mind, and he will give himself to a prayerful and reverent study of the Bible, seeking to learn therefrom the mind and will of God, as the Holy Spirit enlightens his understanding and unfolds to him the meaning of the inspired message. As he devotes every faculty to the service of Christ, his reading of the thoughts of the great teachers of every age, his contact with the passing events and vitalising ideas of the day, will become to him vocal with spiritual instruction, which he can use in ministry to others. Thus will he gain insight to speak with faithfulness and acceptance to the condition of men's hearts, and with fuller understanding of the Divine purposes of redemption and grace involved in the central theme of all effective ministry, "Jesus Christ and Him crucified."

These thoughts, however, have a wider application. Preparation of heart and the active worship of dedicated lives are the duties of all. It is these that make up the spiritual atmosphere of a meeting. We have all a ministry; for we are all members one of another, bound to rise or to fall together; and stronger even than the solidarity of the human race is the solidarity of the gathered Church. We need to say, "I dare not be weak, for my weakness is a spreading infirmity. I must be strong, for my strength is a spreading force. I cannot sit in self-contained isolation, for my brethren need the energy of my love."

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

A TALE OF TUSCULUM.

If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men.—Rom. xii. 18.

You have all of you heard of the city of Rome—one of the most famous, though not one of the oldest cities in the world. Surrounding this city are walls, as indeed there have been from the time when it was founded, though not of course always the same, for as the city grew so also did the walls. Beyond the walls, there begins at once a vast stretch of open country. As you look at it, at first, it seems to be level, but it is really rolling or undulating, like the great prairies of America. This open country is called the Campagna. In the olden days, up to the time of Christ, and after, this great reach of land was cultivated and populated. It was filled with pleasant homes and busy happy people. There were vineyards and orchards and olive gardens, and flocks of sheep and herds of cattle. The air, too, was sweet and fresh and invigorating, so that it was a healthy place in which to live. It was, in fact, a sort of Earthly Paradise. Now, alas! all this is changed. The land for many a long year has gone out of cultivation; there are few inhabitants; decaying vegetation covers the soil and at night, when the sun goes down, the air is heavy with fever and plague.

Yet still there is a charm about the place, and the traveller finds a beauty in it all its own. Its great vast open stretches, its lonely roads once so crowded and busy, its solemn lines of broken arches, over which, long centuries ago, the clear fresh water from the hills flowed into the great city, and over some of which, not broken, it is flowing still, all give to it a beauty and attraction. Beyond the plains are the mountains. The Alban Mountains, some of them are called; and high up on the top of these mountains are to be seen to-day the remains of a city older than Rome. It is about this city that I have now to tell you. Its name was Tusculum. It is the city of which Macaulay speaks in his "Lays of Ancient Rome" in the poem on the Battle of Regillus. Came the foe, he says—

From the white streets of Tusculum,
The proudest town of all.

It must have been a pleasant place in the olden days, resting there on its sunlit mountain, with the health-giving breezes from the sea beyond. At the highest point of the city stood the Castle, protecting the town below. And from this castle was the grandest of views of sea and mountain and lake, and far beneath, as I have said, of this rich Campagna, a billowy sea of gardens and orchards and vineyards. Lower down than the Castle was the Forum—the market-place where the people walked and talked, and bought and sold. And not far from that was the Theatre. You may see the well-preserved remains of it to-day. This theatre was open to the sky, and as you sit on its stone benches you can see far down across the plain the city of Rome. And many and many a time these people of Tusculum, sitting at some play, must have lifted up their eyes for a moment that they might gaze on the white marble of the temples and palaces and towers of Rome, as they glistened in the evening sunshine, far off in the plain beneath.

So these two cities, and the people who lived in them, were neighbours, and for the most part they were friends. But suddenly the Romans, who were a proud and somewhat overbearing people, took offence. They had been at war with another neighbouring people, called the Volscians; and after the war, the Romans said, they had found among their prisoners, soldiers of Tusculum. It looked, therefore, as if the people of Tusculum had not been faithful to their friends in Rome. Whether this was so or not we cannot tell; but this at least was the professed ground of the quarrel. Thereupon the Romans determined to fight and to lay siege to this town of Tusculum upon the hill. Camillus, one of the greatest of their generals, was intrusted with the task. And a brave, though a terrible sight it must have been to have seen Camillus and his soldiers march forth from the city gate—each man with his shield and his spear and his axe, and on his head that gleaming helmet at the sight of which the men of a thousand races had turned pale.

Across the great broad Campagna the troops took their way, until at length the foot of the mountains was reached. Then, more slowly, they began to climb. Higher and higher they rose, through pleasant lanes bright with flowers, past rich orchards hung with fruit, by many a peaceful villa and many a happy cottage. Nearer and still nearer to Tusculum they came. But to their surprise no one seemed to notice them. The men went on with their work, and the women stayed quiet in their homes.

But still this terrible host went on, higher and yet higher. At last the white walls of Tusculum appeared, and in a moment more, at the turn of the road, the city gate was seen. But now, still greater was their surprise for the gate was open. It was not only open, it was undefended; not a man was on guard, not a soldier was to be seen. Through the gate the soldiers entered, and down the long street they began to march. And greater yet was their surprise. The shops were open and those belonging to them all were at work—the coppersmith was hammering his vessel, exactly as in any city of Italy you may see him to-day; the baker was baking his bread, and the mercer selling his wares. And the houses were open—and there were the women, each one at her household task. The girls, too, were at the fountains drawing water, and the children in the schools—the soldiers, as they passed, could hear them reciting their lessons.

Was there ever such a sight, and what could it mean? Well, what it meant was this—that these good people of Tusculum were resolved not to fight with their friends and their neighbours from Rome. If there was to be any fighting the Romans must do it by themselves. And what was the result? Well, clearly, Camillus could not fight with a people who treated him like that. To try to do so was absurd. It would not be fighting at all. It would be only slaughter. It would be massacre. So Camillus sent for the ruler of the city, called the Dictator, that he might talk to him. And having talked to him he invited him to Rome. And there this Dictator of Tusculum met the Senate of Rome, and again they talked matters over. And, as the result, the people of Rome confirmed the ancient charters of the people of Tusculum, securing them their liberties. And later on they conferred upon them the highest honour in their power; they gave them the Roman franchise, thus making them citizens of Rome. All this occurred in the year 379 B. C.

Three hundred years before that, or rather more, in the mountain city of Jerusalem, a great prophet and statesman, called Isaiah, had tried to teach his people in a time of danger, not dissimilar, the very lesson which these people of Tusculum had so well learned and practised. "In returning and rest," he said, "shall ye be saved; in quietness and confidence shall be your strength."

There are many lessons which this story teaches, some of which you may be able, perhaps, to think of for yourselves, but there is one, especially, which I want you now to learn and always to remember. The lesson is this: it always takes two to make a quarrel. So it is that when we are doing right, acting in all things honestly and squarely, as conscience bids us, we shall commonly find that the safest and wisest way of overcoming anger and wrath and the wrong with which others threaten us, is to meet them with patience and gentleness and dignity, remembering that in "quietness and confidence" we shall certainly find "strength."

So, once more, I give you the words of our text: "If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men."

JOHN BYLES.

WORKERS' AID SOCIETY.—The Secretary begs to remind the members that their contributions and subscriptions should be sent to her before the end of November. She will be happy to give any information as to the object and scope of the Society. Address: Mrs. Goodwyn Barmby, Mount Pleasant, Sidmouth.

PREPARATION for another life! The idea is grand, none grander, if you have a high and large meaning for this preparation, if every beneficent activity, if every noble joy, if every exalted sentiment, is your preparation for eternity. The end of a thousand lives is just this, to live, under God, our highest life, to develop all our capacities for knowledge, happiness, goodness. Preparation for another world, in this sense, cannot be separated from progress or from happiness in this. It is identical with our highest enjoyment of life, with our noblest efforts to advance.—William Smith.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any News-agent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are:—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER ...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR ...	3	4
PER YEAR ...	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE ...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE ...	2	10	0
PER COLUMN ...	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN ...	0	3	6
BACK PAGE ...	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, &c. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 4, 1899.

OF THE HOUSEHOLD OF GOD.

WEDNESDAY last was All Saints' Day, a festival which for more than a thousand years has been kept in the Christian Church. It has this great advantage, that whatever we may think of certain names included in any special calendar of saints, this one commemoration gathers up all that is good and true, and leaves it for each thankful heart mindful of the day to count over his own roll of saints—those in whom he has seen the divinest vision of the heavenly life, who have been to him the best helpers and enlighteners, the loftiest, purest and noblest, the most inspiring as leaders, teachers and friends.

It is good to have such a festival, to call back our wandering and forgetful thoughts, and help us to realise with new vividness and gratitude, not only what we owe to those noblest of our race, but what they rightly demand of us, as belonging to their fellowship. Life is immeasurably richer for those who realise that they have such a place in the household of God. The conviction comes to us in the growing sense of spiritual reality in life, with the wakening of earnest purpose, the sense of obligation, the ideal of unselfish service in the Kingdom of God. In duty, in self-surrender, in allegiance to the highest good, we most surely know that we have with us the strength of the Eternal, and underneath are the Everlasting Arms. Then from the centre of our rest in God we receive all our blessings, the glory of His beautiful world, the fulness of life, the treasures of home and the mystery of love, the strength of friendship and all the wider interests of our humanity, poured upon us from that infinite

Source of all good. The Divine purpose of our life is clear, that we should grow up to be more perfectly servants of righteousness, and children of the Eternal Father.

And so comes in the thought that must complete the circle of our being. It is but a broken fragment, if in a few years it is all at an end, if we are suddenly cut off and cease to be. But can our worship and our aspiration, our strenuous service of the Eternal and our love, which at heart we know to be stronger than death, have such an end? The spirit within us bears witness of a better truth. There is a continuing purpose of good in our life. We are in the hands of God, working for His Kingdom here, entering into the knowledge of the unseen things which are eternal, because God cares, and intends the good of His children. And their good is found not in a succession of broken fragments of life here on earth, in which each succeeding generation can be nothing to the dead past, but in the progressive life of each living soul.

He cares for His children, and they remain themselves, with Him, as they pass into the Unseen, not destroyed in death, nor changed by a sinister fate into some other person, but inheriting a continuing, unfolding life, in which aspiration leads to fuller knowledge, more perfect love, in communion with the Eternal Father and in the doing of His will. This is the prophecy of the spirit that is in us, the spirit that we are. This is our undying hope. This is the conviction of our living faith. God is not mocked in His whole creation, and He does not mock His children with the hunger of their spirit and their reaching up to His eternal good.

There is Divine progress in the world, in the successive generations of our humanity here on earth, and in that greater household of God, into which are gathered all living souls. That is the meaning of the Communion of Saints, of which we are reminded with special force on All Saints' Day. Into the future, which is with God, both the good and the evil go upon their way. But they go upon a way of progress, directed by that mercy which endures for ever—the evil to be cleansed of their iniquity, even if by cleansing fires, by the sternest discipline in the terrors of unerring retribution, yet to be cleansed, to be made fit for their appointed place in the household of God; and the good to grow in grace, with a new power of service and a richer measure of love. Thus we rightly think of the departed, not as dead, but living unto Him. And in them God has given us not a memory alone, however quickening and helpful that might be, but a better knowledge, that these all who have been so much to us in the nobleness of their life, the beauty of their holiness, the tenderness of their love for us—the saints of the greater world, and those who in the nearest sense are our own—have still their place in the same household of God. Still they are our leaders and our friends, though separated from the present scene of our own life. They shall not return to us, but we shall go to them. There is the secret of our joy, which must at last overcome all sorrow and the fear of death. For when we go to them, it is not to death, not to the shadows of the past, and a cold oblivion, but to the richer, fuller life into which, by the mercy of God, they have entered.

Life is immeasurably richer in this faith. Our earthly years do not end in ultimate despair and the agony of disappointed faith and love. And thus life in these passing days has a deeper meaning, and we can give ourselves without fear to aspire and to love, to lay hold on righteousness and truth, to fill our hearts with the glory of the heavenly light, to drink at the fountains of the living waters, because this is our destiny, we are children of the living God. And here already, having our lowly place in the household of God, we share in that fellowship of the saints who have passed from our sight, and yet in the paths of our daily duty compass us about, if we will but think of it, as a glorious cloud of witnesses. These set before us the goal of our endeavour, not in any reward at the end of life, but in the glory of their manhood. As they have striven and conquered, so we must be true in our day, labour faithfully and patiently in our appointed place, and get the victory over all the evil that assails us or is in us.

God has given us this cloud of witnesses, this hidden companionship of faithful men. He has given us the prophets and the martyrs. He has given us JESUS CHRIST, and the great company of his disciples in every generation—the enlightenment of his example and the inspiration of his leadership. He also is our brother in the household of God, and surely it must give a new and deeper meaning to our discipleship when we remember that he is not dead, but that on some other shore, still circled by the infinite ocean of God, we may yet see his face, and hear his living word.

What the future shall be, it is not given us here to know. It is enough for us to know God, to have our rest in Him, there as here, and in the fellowship of living souls, souls that have grown, but are the same, who have been blessed by a continuing and progressive life in the household of God.

There is a wonderful gladness and quickening in this thought. How many lonely ones, with few congenial friends close at hand, or perhaps none at all, have felt the gracious touch of Jesus, and have learnt with him to trust in the Father's love. Then how infinite their gain in having such a friend, in finding that God has granted to them this most pure and inspiring human companionship. And so of others, the great teachers, the singers, the seers of beautiful visions, the soul-stirring patriots—these may be to us not names alone in the past, but friends to whom we may continue to be grateful, as to living benefactors, of whom we may think with all their goodness yet more glorified in the heavenly light. And with profoundest truth this may be said of those who are our own, in the nearer sense, of the one family on earth and in heaven, not really separated in the love which is never lost or wasted in the household of God. Often when they are taken from our sight we understand them best, and love them with a deeper, more abiding love; and their goodness, appearing to us in clearer light, searches our hearts, and bids us be rid of all that is false and evil, and be more worthy of their love.

Of all the words of faith, springing from the supreme faith in the living God, none is greater than this, "I believe in the Communion of Saints," and that in our Father's household those who are very far from being saints are yet permitted to feel the touch of their goodness and be roused to a new faithfulness by the appeal of their pure love. It cannot be in vain that we remember them, and that we thank God our Father for His unspeakable gift in that He has called us to be fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God.

MY DEAD.

I CANNOT think of them as dead
Who walk with me no more;
Along the path of life I tread
They have but gone before.

The Father's house is mansioned fair
Beyond my vision dim;
All souls are His, and here or there
Are living unto Him.

And still their silent ministry
Within my heart hath place,
As when on earth they walked with me
And met me face to face.

Their lives are made forever mine;
What they to me have been
Hath left henceforth its seal and sign Engraven deep within.

Mine are they by an ownership
Nor time nor death can free;
For God hath given to Love to keep
Its own eternally.

F. L. HOSMER.

ALL SAINTS.

ONE feast, of holy days the crest,
I, though no churchman, love to keep,
All Saints,—the unknown good that rest
In God's still memory folded deep.
The bravely dumb that did their deed,
And scorned to blot it with a name,
Men of the plain heroic breed,
That loved Heaven's silence more than fame.

Such lived not in the past alone,
But thread to-day the unheeding street,
And stairs to Sin and Famine known
Sing with the welcome of their feet;

The den they enter grows a shrine,
The grimy sash an oriel burns,
Their cup of water warms like wine,
Their speech is filled from heavenly urns.

About their brows to me appears
An aureole traced in tenderest light,
The rainbow-gleam of smiles through tears
In dying eyes, by them made bright,
Of souls that shivered on the edge
Of that chill ford repassed no more,
And in their mercy felt the pledge
And sweetness of the farther shore.

J. R. LOWELL.

IN WAR TIME.

A MINISTER writes to us: "I do not know whether it will be regarded as an unprecedented piece of presumption to suggest to my brethren the use, during this time of war, of a common form of prayer, such as the bishops have prescribed in their respective dioceses. But under the shelter of anonymity, lest otherwise I should seem to be assuming authority to advise those who are at least as wise and good as myself, I will offer to their consideration this form which I shall use myself until the termination of the war. I should like to think that others were joining with me and my people in the same words."

The Prayer.

O Thou Who art the One God and Father of all the children of men, Who hatest nothing Thou hast made but dost hear the cry of all that call upon Thee in trouble, humbly we commend to Thy Divine compassion our kinsmen and our fellow-countrymen now engaged in war one with another, that it may please Thee to speed the cause of true freedom and righteousness, to assuage the angry passions of sinful men, to bring to an end all tyranny, oppression, falsehood, and malice; finally, to establish the reign of peace and goodwill on earth, and relieve the miseries brought upon us by this unhappy strife. Specially we pray for the wounded and the dying, for those made widows and fatherless, and for all who are suffering anxiety on account of kinsfolk and friends, or are mourning their dead, that it may please Thee to shed the peace which passeth understanding upon troubled and doubting hearts. Moreover for us all who sit at home in peace we pray that Thou wouldst make us worthy ministers of Thy healing Providence, that we may be bearers of consolation to the afflicted and of help to those in need; and may we at last all attain together to that Eternal Life where is peace for evermore. Amen.

RELIGION is not served by exasperating, but by composing the minds of men.—Benjamin Whichcote.

A PROUD man hath no God: for he hath put God down, and set himself up. An unpeaceable man hath no neighbour, for he hath driven them all away. A distrustful man hath no friend, for he hath disobliged all: who would be friendly to him, who hath no good opinion of another? A discontented man hath not himself; he hath lost himself, because things are not as he would.—Benjamin Whichcote.

CITIZEN SUNDAY.

THE REV. S. A. BROOKE AT MANSFORD-STREET.

ON Sunday evening last the Rev. Stopford Brooke preached to a very large congregation at Mansford-street, Bethnal Green. The Rev. W. G. Cadman took the devotional service. It being Citizen Sunday, Mr. Brooke chose for his subject the two kingdoms—the kingdom of earth or the material kingdom, and the kingdom of heaven or the spiritual kingdom. These had frequently been set one against the other. Some spoke as though heaven were all and earth nothing, and others as though earth were all and heaven nothing. The idea that each was exclusive of the other was most injurious. The two kingdoms ought to be harmonised: the one should not exclude the other; but the two ought to exist side by side.

The kingdom of heaven of which Christ spoke was a kingdom of the soul, life ruled by justice, love one to another and contempt of selfish aims. To this kingdom of heaven all should belong, and in it all should dwell. Heaven was a state of the soul, and the kingdom of the earth should be harmonised with it. If persons did not have sufficient of the goods of the earth for their daily needs, how could they live happily and morally? They would find it extraordinarily difficult to become members of the kingdom of heaven. Starving men were not as a rule likely to be specially honest; homeless men, or those crowded into a filthy dwelling, were not likely to be eager after righteousness. Men should have enough to live justly, wisely, and happily, but the love of material things alone, with no love of righteousness and justice, and no faith in the powers of the world to come, and no sense of a citizen's duties would only send them into a hell of selfish luxury and materialism. Everyone, urged the preacher, should have enough for the necessary wants of the body, to secure health, and to do work with pleasure, to have rational enjoyment, and to train the intelligence, and that every human being who did a fair day's work ought to have that sufficiency. At present about half the human race did not have their sufficiency, while sometimes ten men had the property of ten thousand. After enlarging on these points, every State, said he, was suffering from the disease of an overwhelming number of persons whose life was a fierce struggle to avoid death—who had not enough of the things of this world. The first duty of all good citizens was to see that each had a proper supply of food, air, shelter, water, &c. Some had far too much, too many houses, too many clothes, too much of the means of production. Between these two classes was a class thoughtful for others, who were living a simple and loving life, and were sorely troubled at the state of society. Everyone should have enough, but the moment a man longed for more than enough for his full development he began to be materialised. Too often labour and poverty when lifted to power had ruined their cause by seizing too much, by crying, "We owe no duties to mankind." Unless another spirit than this animated the labour movement, it would add another failure to the list. And here came in the kingdom of heaven—the desire to do justly, to love one another, to forgive wrong, to cultivate peace and contentment.

All who lived and worked in the right spirit, by whatever name they were known—even though they were supposed, and supposed themselves to be without God—were of the heavenly kingdom. For God did not disown His children, even though they did not know Him.

NORTH MIDLAND PRESBYTERIAN AND UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

THE annual meeting of this Association was held at the High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham, on Tuesday, Oct. 24.

There was morning service, conducted by the Rev. A. N. Blatchford of Bristol, who preached from the text, 1 Cor. iii. 5, "Ministers, through whom we believe." He said that the central thought which he desired to convey to his hearers lay in the one word "minister." The description given by Paul could leave them in no uncertainty as to the position and the function of a minister of religion in those long-distant days. In an age when the possession of knowledge was confined to a very few, and, when the conveying of it from one man to another was simply by personal association, it was easy to trace the circle of peculiar reverence from the midst of which the Apostle or the teacher delivered his message to men of that time. Indeed, it was difficult to see how the Word of God could be preserved, or how their faith could be borne witness to save through this essentially personal agency. He would ask them to think for a moment of the awe and almost mysterious respect with which the simple Nazarenes would gaze upon and listen to the man who could say "Am not I an Apostle? Have I not seen the Lord?" And so he thought it needed no apology for him to state that there was a fitness and a beautiful naturalness in that reverence for the ministers through whom they had believed. Time's veil seemed to be a thickening one, the mists gathered, and the questions, "What did the Master really say? What is the actual kernel of the religion that He gave to us?" were being unceasingly asked by men as the ages rolled by. There began to be so many different voices in the world, and, as the Apostle had foretold, there was not one without its significance, until at last mere physical force became the factor of the propagation of theological truth and impressed upon those who were the fewer in number by the imposition of fine, the deprivation of liberty, and even of life, the particular dogma it was desired to promulgate. The world swung on in its busy way, its ever-appealing claim, now for pleasure, now for business, until it became left to a special class of men to preserve the traditions of a long-finished and now uncertain past, till the minister, the servant, the teacher, found himself superseded by the priest, who led captive the spirits of his brethren, and made the most of every opportunity for the extension of his subtle power. Civilised Europe was thus, according to the irrefutable testimony of history, plunged in Egyptian darkness. But when the hour was darkest the dawn was closest.

With the Reformation came the dawning of a glorious light which was developing into the full effulgence of that perfect day for which they longed and waited. Thus had been established a fulness of liberty which was growing even now. The teachers required to-day were men who laboured arduously in the service of the living God, which was alone the true significance of the reproachless title of "minister." Comparison with other eras of the history of religion showed that there had been times when the spirit of progress advanced at a slow pace, but not so now in an age when the wonderfully improved means of communication made possible so ready an interchange of thought between race and race, and between men of one faith and another. Referring to their own special religious community, as one of their own brotherhood of ministry and nothing more, he spoke to them of those small households of prayer scattered over the country side, perched here and there "like lonely lights on lonely hills." What was their first mental characteristic? Clearly it was independence of mind and of thought. They were not compelled to assemble together for the meditation of serious things. When these little companies of their faithful folk gathered themselves together, they came and brought with them their intellect and knowledge to the consideration of the most serious and most important which could appeal to the soul. He said this in all modesty and humility, but it was true, and they should bear witness to it. Did they for a moment think that this attitude left the minister unaffected and untouched? In the old times men looked to the minister as to a man through whom they believed. In this strongly pulsing world did not any congregation, be it large or small, virtually say to him: Interpret for us our thoughts, answer our questions. You are men, they said, of like passions with us, no more, no less. And as to the trials and temptations we have to face, have you no word of courage and cheer for us? Passing on to the arduous duties and aims of a minister, the speaker continued: The demands were high, and he voiced his brother ministers' thoughts when he said, "Thank God they are high." For the greatness of the man's task was the inspiration of the man to achieve it. Those men of whom they were proud had risen to the height of realising their duty. They had, like proud soldiers, unquestionably followed her imperial call. It became them not to complain or abandon themselves to despair for one moment. They had the way of their duty plainly before them. Where in any church was more work left to the individual ministers than their own households of faith? In what ministry would they find a finer or truer or more dogged devotion to the task before them? But had the people the mind to work? Did they give themselves to the claims of their religious life? For only when pulpit and pew vied with one another in provoking one another to work should the cause of love be advanced to the success that was worthy of the name and principles they worked to serve.

THE BUSINESS MEETING.

In the afternoon the business meeting was held in the school-room. Mr. J. C. Warren, the president of the Association, occupied the chair, and there were also present: The Rev. H. Gow, B.A., secretary (Leicester), Mr. B. Dowson (treasurer), the Revs. J. Birks, F.G.S. (Derby), A. Bennett, M.A. (Chesterfield), A. N. Blatchford, B.A. (Bristol), J. Freeston (Nottingham), E. R. Hodges (Newark), H. E. Haycock (Loughborough), W. Lindsay (Christ Church), E. A. Maley (Ilkeston), H. S. Perris, M.A. (Mansfield), W. G. Price (Hinckley), J. Kertain Smith (Belper), W. Whitaker, B.A. (Leicester), Messrs. R. Enfield, F. Winsor, J.P., J. Warren, H. A. Dowson, W. Goddard, G. Bryan Briggs, W. Ellis, S. Gittins, W. Evans (Leicester), Ald. Birks, J. White, W. Godfrey (Mansfield), Smythem (Ilkeston), Ald. Saunders (Newark), W. F. Price, C. H. Roberts (Hinckley), Misses Guilford (Nottingham), Gittins (Leicester), and many other ladies and gentlemen.

The CHAIRMAN said it was his very pleasant duty, as senior warden of High Pavement, to welcome them to Nottingham, and it gave him even greater pleasure to be occupying the double office of representative of the chapel and president of the North Midland Presbyterian and Unitarian Association. It seemed peculiarly appropriate for the meetings of that organisation to be held in Nottingham. The earliest Presbyterian movement in that district was founded by their original ministers, Whitlock and Reynolds. As most of them were aware, one of the few Presbyterian classes in the country was in the Nottingham district. They owed very much to those old workers in the chapels, the original founders of the classes in places like Mansfield and Leicester, by whose efforts they had been enabled to reach the present state of spiritual and religious freedom which they enjoyed in their churches now. They ought to use their strongest endeavours in behalf of the cause in order that they might show their gratitude to their predecessors. Feeling this as he did, and impressed as he was by the conviction that no sacrifice or no work was too great for their common cause, it had afforded him the greatest possible pleasure to act as their president, and do what little lay in his power to strengthen the cause in that district. He must not encroach upon the report which would shortly be read, but he might be permitted to say that they had had a very successful year among their churches. Some of the churches, which at one time were not prominently successful, such as Ilkeston and Christ Church, had taken, under their present ministers, a new lease of life. Their friends at Newark, who had had to contend a good deal against certain influences in that old town, had made progress quite recently, and were, he believed, looking hopefully and joyfully to the future. They were hoping to re-open very shortly in Boston an old and historic chapel. This was the chapel in which their old minister, the Rev. P. W. Clayden, made his first entry, he believed, into the ministry. They were starting a campaign in Burton, where their work appeared likely to be attended with great success. He felt that if they only took heart of grace and carried their work outside, they would be able to extend their operations materially. If they were true to their principles and to their mission he believed that a great future lay before them. He was not satisfied with merely allowing their influence to permeate other churches, but advocated active work with the object of furthering their cause.

Mr. B. Dowson read the financial statement, from which it appeared that £31 11s. 5d. was in the hands of the treasurer at the end of the last financial year. The subscription amounted to £121 2s. 3d., which showed a slight falling off, but only to the extent of £2 or £3. The collections reached the sum of £48 14s. 10d., this being a slight increase which practically nullified the decrease in the subscriptions, so that the income was about the same. The balance in the treasurer's hands was £21 7s. 11d., and they had overspent their income this year by a little over £10.

The Rev. H. Gow presented the reports which had been received from the various churches affiliated to the Association, and subsequently introduced the report of the Committee.

The report stated that in addition to carrying on the ordinary business of the Association, the Committee had given special attention to the resolution passed at the last annual meeting at Leicester, declaring that it was desirable to raise a centenary fund, with a view to a forward movement in the district. The Committee had decided that it would be wisest first to find the work and enter on it, before attempting to raise a fund. With this object, after considering several possible openings, they had entered on a new effort at Burton-on-Trent. Four Sunday afternoon services were held between Easter and Whitsuntide, with an average attendance of forty, the first service being conducted by the Rev. J. Birks. After the summer vacation, services were resumed with encouraging results, and £20 had been granted by the Association for their continuance up to Christmas. A local committee had been formed, and met all local expenses. The chapel at Boston was to be re-opened, the services being provided for up to Christmas. Afterwards the Committee would have to consider the continuance of the work. A cordial welcome was offered to the Rev. W. Lindsay at Christ Church, Nottingham, and new signs of life there and at Ilkeston and Newark were noted. The congregation of the Free Christian Church, Leicester, were engaged in removal to the west side of the town, and had themselves raised a considerable sum towards the £3,500 required.

The removal of the Rev. W. E. Addis to Oxford was referred to with great regret, and an acknowledgment of the deep debt of gratitude the Association owed to his gracious kindness and his deep spiritual influence. Reference was also made to the meeting of the National Conference at Leicester next year, with the hope that it might prove an occasion for the strengthening of the life of the churches throughout the district.

Mr. RICHARD ENFIELD, in moving the option of the report, said there appeared to him to be a general feeling of earnestness and a desire to do everything possible for all their congregations. Some of them had very great difficulties to contend against, even more than was mentioned in the report, but there seemed to be the right spirit at work. Referring to the departure of the Rev. W. E. Addis from High Pavement Chapel, Mr. Enfield paid a high tribute to the ability and kindness of their late minister, and said that he hoped the time would soon come when the chapel would be restored to the benefit of a resident minister.

The Rev. A. BENNETT (Chesterfield) seconded, and the report was adopted.

On the proposition of Mr. J. H. WHITE, the following officers were elected:—President, Mr. F. Winsor, J.P.; treasurer, Mr. B. Dowson; auditor, Dr. J. F. Blurton; hon. secretary, the Rev. H. Gow, B.A.

Votes of thanks were awarded to the Rev. A. N. Blatchford and the Rev. W. Lindsay for their services during the day, and to Mr. J. C. Warren for his work in the presidential chair during the past three years.

At the evening meeting Mr. F. WINSOR, J.P., the new president of the Association, occupied the chair, and took the opportunity of thanking those who had placed him in that position for the ensuing year.

Miss EDITH GITTINS read a paper on "The Decay of Dogmas," which we hope shortly to publish in full.

Discussion followed, and the meeting closed with the usual votes of thanks.

HOLYWOOD JUBILEE.

THE congregation of the first Presbyterian (Non-subscribing) Church, Holywood, co. Down, celebrated on Sunday and Monday, Oct. 22 and 23, the fiftieth anniversary of the dedication of the building in which they now worship.

The Rev. S. A. STEINTHAL, of Manchester, was the preacher on Sunday. His two able and indeed moving discourses were listened to with great attention by large congregations; and as the choir provided special music, and the church was most tastefully decorated, the services were both beautiful and impressive.

On Monday evening a soiree was held in the school-room. After an interval of social intercourse, Mr. A. M. MUNSTER took the chair. There were present the Revs. Douglas Walmsley, and E. I. Frigg, of Belfast; T. Dunkerley, of Comber; J. A. Kelly, of Dunmurry; R. Lyttle, of Moneyrea; W. E. Mellone, of Warrenpoint; S. A. Steintal, of Manchester; and Dr. S. H. Mellone, minister of the church. There were also a number of friends from Belfast and Comber, beside most of the members of the congregation, and the Presbyterian and Methodist ministers of Holywood accepted invitations. The Chairman said that his first duty was to offer on behalf of the congregation a cordial welcome to the ministers and other friends who were present, and especially to welcome Mr. Steintal, and thank him on their behalf for the beautiful services which he had conducted in their church the previous day. He then proceeded to refer to the past history of the congregation, and especially to the long and never-to-be-forgotten ministry of the Rev. C. J. McAlester, commenting on the remarkable fact that, as regards the ministers who formerly had charge of the congregation, Mr. Beattie and Mr. McAlester had each a ministry of fifty-seven years. Mr. McAlester's jubilee as minister of the church was held in August, 1884, when an enthusiastic meeting took place in the Town Hall, attended by ministers of all denominations and all the leading inhabitants, and a striking tribute was paid to his exemplary life and to the work he had accomplished during fifty years of zealous ministerial labour. "Among the ministers who have preached in this church as visitors are many whose names stand high in the records of the Unitarian Church. But for Dr. Montgomery we might not now be in possession of our churches. It was mainly due to his exertions in bringing our difficulties before Parliament, when an attempt was made to oust us from possession of our churches and properties, that the Dissenters' Chapels Act was passed, which left us in full possession of our rights. Irish Unitarians should never forget this great achievement. We have also often heard in this church the voice of the Rev. John Scott Porter, of the Rev. William Bruce, and of the Rev. Classon Porter." Mr. Munster then read parts of a historical sketch written by Mr. McAlester. The congregation traced its origin to the Rev. Robert Cunningham, who was the first Presbyterian minister who settled in the county of Down; he ministered for some years in the parish of Holywood, but was at length compelled by the prelatial party to abandon his charge; he died in Scotland in 1637. In 1726 the majority of the congregation, with their minister, the Rev. Michael Bruce, abandoned subscription to the Westminster Confession. After Mr. Bruce came the Revs. M. Beattie, J. C. Wightman, S. H. Sloan, J. A. Johnston, C. J. McAlester, and Clement Pike. Last year Dr. S. H. Mellone became the minister.

Mr. RICHARD PATTERSON, J.P., read an extract from the Belfast Northern Whig, of Sept. 27, 1849, giving an account of the dedication of the church and the services conducted by Dr. Montgomery on that occasion. Part of the report ran as follows:—

The Rev. Dr. Montgomery delivered an eloquent and interesting discourse from Jude i. 3. In the course of his sermon he animadverted in a striking manner on the tendencies to infidelity which have latterly appeared in Great Britain and on the Continent; and gave a lucid statement of the essential principles and great precepts of Christianity as held by all the Churches. The discourse, admirable in many respects, was especially distinguished by the spirit of genuine charity by which it was pervaded. While he did not shrink from maintaining his own views as a non-subscribing Presbyterian and a Unitarian Christian, he said nothing that could give reasonable offence to any of his large auditory, composed as it was of Roman Catholics and Protestants, Calvinists and Wesleyans. At the close of the sermon, he dedicated the church in an impressive manner to the worship of the one God the Father, the honour and glory of the Lord Jesus Christ, the advocacy of truth and freedom, of holiness and charity.

The Rev. S. A. STEINTHAL expressed his thanks for the kind hospitality shown to him in Holywood, of which he had pleasant remembrances connected with earlier visits. It was a real joy to meet old friends again, and to be reminded of those who had gone to a higher and nobler life. It had been most interesting to hear the story of their congregation told, and he could heartily congratulate them in their jubilee on having such a history to look back upon. It was a rare thing to be able to speak of the ministry of two men covering a hundred and fourteen years; and it spoke well, not only of the ministers, but of the congregations as well. One of those men it had been his privilege to know, and honour. He had known Mr. McAlester for more than fifty years, and was not surprised to find his memory so revered and loved as it was among them still. It was very encouraging to see in an address which had been presented to Mr. McAlester on accomplishing thirty years of service, that the members of the congregation had not been able to confine the presentation to themselves, but that his self-denying Christian work made many outside wish to join in the expression of respect and affection. It showed how amid the differences of opinion which necessarily must exist among men, there was an underlying ground of spiritual unity, on which all who strove to love God and follow Jesus in spirit could meet and be at one. More and more did he hope that spirit would prevail among men, until the Universal Church of God embraced them all in loving service. He expressed his pleasure in seeing more men of his own College (Manchester College) occupying pulpits in Ireland, and welcomed the fact that so many of the Home Missionary College students were settled there. He wished that more Irishmen would enter Manchester College, to make the union of the congregations here and in England closer; and he was glad to know that in various ways the Oxford College was becoming an influence for good on both sides of the channel. He congratulated Dr. Mellone on his position. The earnest and large congregations he had seen on Sunday, and the cordial gathering met there that evening, was richly promising of good; and he hoped that when fifty years more had passed away, some of the young folks present that evening might have to tell as blessed a story as they had heard, and might congratulate their minister on being likely to add a third to the chronicles of long ministry in the Holywood Church.

The Rev. W. E. MELLONE, the Rev. T. DUNKERLEY, and the Rev. A. GILCHRIST (Presbyterian minister), also spoke pleasant words appropriate to the occasion; and during the evening an excellent programme of music was gone through by the choir of the church and some of the friends.

A comprehensive vote of thanks was moved by Dr. MELLONE, and carried by acclamation.

The proceedings then terminated.

PROVINCIAL LETTER.

BELFAST.

OUR people at Holywood have just been celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of the building of their church, and they have had the pleasure and profit of the presence with them of an honoured guest, the Rev. S. A. Steinthal, of Manchester. As you come on deck, in the chilly freshness of the early morning, entering Belfast Lough and well in sight of land, the coast-line of County Antrim to the right runs up to some of the finest coast scenery in all the Kingdom. To the left you have the lower-lying and well-wooded shores of Down. You pass Bangor, the Blackpool or Margate of the Irish North; Helen's Tower, "dominant o'er sea and land," overtopping the green hills of Lord Dufferin's park, peers at you from afar; and as you prepare to slow down, before you brave the river mist and the myriad hammerings of the ship-yards right and left, the quiet little town by the water side on the left is Holywood.

Between here and Belfast there used to be four or five miles of country road; but year by year the great city encroaches upon the fields and woods around it, and thatch and whitewash give place to red bricks and blue slates. You have watched an amceba crawling across the field of your microscope, making a stomach of itself whenever it meets with anything that will do to eat. So Belfast advances, and ere many years go by will have overtaken and overwhelmed and incorporated this peaceful and unsuspecting Holywood.

As yet, however, it is a welcome change from city life to walk the long wide street of gardened villas, cottages, churches, schools, and feel that there are oases still in the wilderness of the world's noise. People come here, not to work, but to live. Work is in the city, here is home.

Once upon a time, however, Holywood must have thought better of itself than to serve as a residential suburb of Belfast, and doubtless looked down upon its upstart neighbour at the river mouth. Our Holywood congregation dates back to 1615; our oldest Belfast church to 1642 only. The first Presbyterian minister of Belfast came here as chaplain to the soldiers of the Earl of Argyle's regiment, and very possibly had a pretty rough time of it. The Holywood people of the day were civilians and, as the times went, of more settled ways. If any reader of THE INQUIRER cares to know more of the moral and social state of Down near three centuries ago, and of the difficulties and the work and the worth of Robert Cunningham, our first minister at Holywood, I should like to ask his attention to the admirable lecture on Cunningham written by the last minister of the Holywood church, the Rev. Clement Pike, and published by Mayne and Boyd, Belfast.

Holywood seems to have had, like many others of our churches, three church buildings. There is the present church; there was the "old" church; and there was the "old chapel of all." There was a gloom over the assembly that gathered in the schoolroom a few nights ago. Sickness—a sickness that was unto death—prevented the attendance of an honoured and loved member of the congregation who, from his long knowledge of the church and its history, might have spoken of the building that was taken down half a century ago. It seemed rather a pity that no one had a good word to give it, although there were those at the meeting who could recall the opening of the present church; but it was better to note the warm and loving interest taken in the welfare of the church to-day, which was on all hands manifested, than it would have been to find a people full of pious recollections and not much else. One of the pleasantest things in all the meeting was to see the young people there, full of life, full of interest in what was going on. Evidently there is a living church at Holywood; there are large opportunities of usefulness, and promise of a bright future.

Outwardly, too, the church is better and brighter looking than too many others of our places of worship that were set up fifty or seventy years ago. The Natural History of Nonconformist Architecture would be an interesting study, had one time to go into it. But just as our people were coming to understand the merits of Gothic, and while such churches as those of Hope-street, Mill Hill, Gee Cross and Bury were educating us to a better thought of the beautiful and fitting in the builder's art, there were those among our people, it would seem, who did not like the new notions, and preferred to keep to the old Greek or Italian style of thing. The Holywood Church is of this order; but it has fared better in the architect's hands than other churches I could name. Why did those old church builders of fifty to a hundred years ago try so hard to make our churches not sober merely but deadly dull, not impressive but oppressive, not reposeful but funereal? So many of them look like large tombs—Doric or Ionic, done in stucco, and then painted, with a pillar this side and a pillar that, and a sarcophagus or an isosceles triangle or something of that nature on top. There are churches of ours which already, by the very brightness and cheeriness of their style and plan, give promise of the hopefulness and helpfulness of the services which are held within. And there are other churches that strike a chill through you even as you look at them, where any uplift of heart and will were hardly to be expected, and where one might wear one's self out in desperate attempts to bear up amid the encircling gloom. And as for the inside of our churches: no one wants a lot of tasteless decoration; there is an abuse, as well as a use, of paint; and if we must make mistakes, it is always best to err upon the sober side. But surely we do well to remind ourselves that our churches are for living people to worship God in, and there is a limit to our right to turn them into mausoleums. I have been in churches where I could not help feeling that such limit had been greatly overpassed. It is right, and few will question it, to store in our churches the memorials of men who were leaders in the life of their time, and who worked well for truth and good. Such memorials are a help and not a hindrance to the generations that follow. But all the same, there is a very needful watch to be kept over the matter. "We love the venerable house." Yes! That is good. So is the "dim religious light." But if you make the light too dim, you may even seem to forget that we want it to see by, and "religious" and "venerable" will not quite express all we feel about it. There is a good deal to be said for Robert Collyer's wish to make our church our "common home," and "warm and bright and good to all." One of my strongest Holywood impressions was of homeliness and brightness.

And another impression that I gathered was of faithfulness to and trust in the principle of religious liberty. We call it "non-subscription" in the north of Ireland, for our controversies largely turned upon the question whether we should be required to subscribe the Confession of Faith of the Westminster Assembly of Divines; and our churches are "non-subscribing Presbyterian" because they withstood the demand, and declared for the Sufficiency of Scripture and the old freedom of thought. So far back as 1726, our congregations here had to pay the penalty of the liberty they claimed. They were gathered into one Presbytery—all such as would not "subscribe"—and by vote of the Synod of Ulster declared to be "outside its ecclesiastical jurisdiction." Holywood was, and still is, a member of this old "free" Presbytery of Antrim, along with the First Church Belfast, York-street, Larne, and other churches—we are ten altogether—in Antrim and Down. If there are those to whom "non-subscription" does not mean very much, and to whom it seems a poor negative sort of thing to unite upon—call it "Religious Freedom"—it's the same thing—and you will find that as a cause we are willing to work for it, and as a principle we shall guard it safely.

DOUGLAS WALMSLEY.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Bedfield and Framlingham.—Anniversary services and meetings were held at Bedfield and Framlingham on Oct. 29, 30, and 31. The occasion was one of especial interest to Framlingham, as the Old Meeting House had been renovated and the organ improved and rebuilt. The Rev. G. Lansdown preached on Sunday morning on "The Value of Music in Religious Worship," in the evening the service was conducted by the Rev. H. J. Lawson, who had come over from Diss to show his sympathy with the movement. Mr. Lansdown gave an address on "The Truths of Unitarianism," a good many strangers were present, the congregation numbering fifty-four. At Bedfield the services were conducted afternoon and evening by the Rev. G. Lansdown, the Rev. H. J. Lawson, and the Rev. A. Amey. The little chapel was well filled, and the children sang very heartily. On Monday a tea was held at Framlingham, followed by a meeting, which was presided over by Mr. Youngman. Letters regretting absence were read from the Rev. W. Jellie and Mr. Epps, and a special message was sent from Miss Tagart to the same effect. Addresses were given by Mr. Lansdown, Mr. Fenner, of Ipswich, Mr. Dowsing, and the Chairman, who all congratulated the members on the improved appearance of the chapel. The evening was enlivened with songs and music, and a drilling display by the children. At the conclusion of the meeting a resolution was passed regretting the loss to East Anglia of Mr. Jellie, but wishing him every success in the new work he is about to undertake in New Zealand. On Tuesday evening a tea-meeting was held at Bedfield, when Lady Wilson took the chair. An interesting account of the growth of the work was given by the Rev. A. Amey. There was large attendance, and the general feeling was one of confidence and hopefulness for the future. Two of the former members, who had removed to Felixstowe came over to be present at the anniversary, and brought their baby to be christened by their former pastor.

Boston.—The chapel in Spain-lane, which has been closed for several years (services having been conducted for the last four years in the schoolroom, chiefly by one devoted lady), was re-opened on Sunday last, the service being conducted by the Rev. P. W. Clayden, who many years ago was minister of the chapel. The re-opening has been effected by the energy of the Central Postal Mission Committee, who are arranging to supply the pulpit until the end of the present year. There was a large congregation on Sunday; at a special meeting in the afternoon, at which Miss Tagart was present, a committee of the congregation was formed, and the outlook is reported as decidedly hopeful.

Bradford.—On Saturday evening the Young People's Guild at Chapel-lane Chapel held their first meeting of the coming winter session. In the absence of the president, Mr. Byron Boothroyd took the chair. In the course of a few opening remarks, he said that as a result of the bazaar of the previous week the school premises, including the Channing Hall, in which the meetings are held, were now free from debt and encumbrance of every kind. A very enjoyable evening was spent by all present, and the society started another year under most favourable conditions.

Bristol.—The Rev. A. N. Blatchford is holding Thursday evening services in the congregational lecture-hall at Lewin's Mead, with a series of addresses on "New Testament Times and Teaching."

Bury: Lancashire.—In response to the strong resolution passed by the Sunday-school teachers at their summer meeting at Oxford with regard to the necessity of bridging over the gulf existing in so many places between school and congregation, it was determined to try the experiment of a week-night service in the school premises, to which teachers and elder scholars were especially, but not exclusively, invited. The first of such meetings was held in the lecture-room on Wednesday evening, Oct. 25. In spite of wet weather, more than sixty persons, including many young people, were present, and hearty interest was shown in this new departure. The Rev. J. C. Odgers conducted the service. Such an informal devotional service in the midst of homely surroundings, with appropriate music and direct address, appeals to some minds more powerfully than the more formal and stately worship within a Gothic church. When the minister descends from his pulpit and seeks the co-operation of the laity in the simple offices of prayer and praise, a new feeling of fellowship is aroused; all are brought nearer together. The movement is one which answers to a felt need, and is destined to grow.

Chorlton cum Hardy.—Towards raising the sum of £600 still required in order that the building scheme may be carried into effect, a bazaar was held in the Masonic Hall, Chorlton, on Oct. 27 and 28. At the opening ceremony on the first day, the chair was occupied by the Rev. J. Ruddle, and Mr. Alderman Harry Rawson in declaring the bazaar open said: "To establish in the midst of this large and growing community a new centre of religious life and educational influence is, I believe, to confer upon it a priceless boon. This church will receive into its fraternal embrace all who may seek association with it. They will find here an open door. They will be subjected to no test. They will not be asked to subscribe to any creed. They will find that differences of intellectual view on doctrinal or speculative subjects will be perfectly compatible with the culture of the devout affections and the advantages and pleasures of social worship. But it will also be your desire to manifest your faith by your works. You will not seek a selfish appropriation of the privileges your membership may confer. By sharing our blessings with others we multiply them for ourselves. It is possible that your labours may not be immediately so fruitful in results as you reasonably anticipate and hope for. But if you remain united, if only harmonious counsels prevail, if you never allow your confidence to falter or your courage to fail, you will undoubtedly attain the goal of your aspirations—a church with a vigorous spiritual vitality within, and the exercise of an enlightening, beneficent, and invaluable influence on your neighbours and friends. I heartily commend your present effort to sympathy and support. You have the indefeasible claim of those who, whilst seeking help from others, have also helped themselves. The sacrifices you have already made and those which may yet await you constitute a strong recommendation to the pecuniary assistance of all who have favoured us with their presence. There is a time for all things—a time to rest and a time to work. This, my friends, is your time to buy and to sell. I have entire faith in the liberality of the buyers and the diligence of the sellers at this bazaar, which I now declare to be open." On the second day Miss Dendy declared the bazaar open, and the Rev. Denby Agate occupied the chair. The proceeds of the two days amounted, we understand, to about £120.

Devonport.—The Rev. Edward Sharp, in undertaking the ministry at Christ Church, has addressed a letter to the congregation, which contains the following passage:—"I am not unaware of the difficulties which we must encounter. We shall all need to exercise much patience and forbearance. But I feel sure that, as it will be my aim to be helpful to you, and to advance the cause of true religion to the best of my ability, so I may rely with confidence upon your encouragement, support, and co-operation. I cannot, I think, better convey to you my conception of the responsible position to which you have called me, than by concluding with these words taken from the Ordinal of the Church of England—"and now again we exhort you, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that you have in remembrance into how high a dignity, and to how weighty an office and charge ye are called: that is to say, to be messengers, watchmen, and stewards of the Lord; to teach and admonish, to feed and provide for the Lord's family; to seek for Christ's sheep that are dispersed abroad, and for his children who are in the midst of this naughty world, that they may be saved through Christ for ever." Mr. Sharp announces a course of Sunday evening sermons on the Church as "The Army of God," "The Building of God," and "The Family of God."

Horwich.—At the bazaar to be held next Wednesday, Thursday, and Saturday, there will be a Bolton stall, kindly provided by and under the management of the ladies of Bank-street Chapel. The opening ceremony will be at twelve o'clock on the first day, and at 3 P.M. on the second and third days. The congregation is largely composed of Unitarians who have gathered together from places wide asunder, from Manchester and Bury, and several towns in Cheshire; from the Midlands, the Eastern counties, and from London. Great enthusiasm prevails, and there cannot be much doubt as to the result of the bazaar.

Hull.—The Park-street Literary and Social Union commenced its winter session on Wednesday evening, Oct. 25, when the President and Mrs. Lummis were "at home" to members of the Society, and others. A large company assembled and spent a very happy evening, the capital programme provided being much appreciated by the guests. At the second meeting on Wednesday, Nov. 1, Councillor Hanger opened a discussion on "Sunday Observance," and on the following evening Dr. Waters began a course of lectures on "First Aid to the Injured," under the auspices of the Union. The Rev. E. W. Lummis is now delivering on Sunday evenings a course of lectures under the general title of "Choose your Religion." The first of the series, delivered last Sunday evening, had for its subject: "What is a Religion?" and attracted a considerable number of strangers to the church.

Kingswood, nr. Birmingham.—Last Sunday, Oct. 29, being Hospital Sunday, special sermons were preached by the Rev. J. Hardings Matthews. The collections were in aid of the Queen's Hospital, Birmingham, and amounted to £5 15s. 1½d.

Leicester: Free Christian Church.—The anniversary services of this church were held on Sunday, Oct. 22, conducted by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, who preached to good congregations, morning and evening. Anthems "Send out thy light" (Gounod) and "Lead, kindly Light (Stainer)" were rendered by the choir; Miss Florence Pratt taking the solo in the latter. This being the occasion of the last anniversary services to be held in this building, in consequence of the "forward" movement, in which the congregation is at present engaged in removing to one of the suburbs, which will take place at the end of the present year, a social gathering was held in the church on Monday evening, Oct. 23. Mr. W. Evans presided over the meeting, and was supported by the Revs. W. Copeland Bowie, A. N. Blatchford, B.A. (of Bristol), H. Gow, B.A., W. Whitaker, B.A., and Messrs. T. Fielding Johnson and F. T. Mott, and a large number of friends and members of the cause. Stirring addresses were delivered bearing upon the new movement, and signalling a successful future for the church. During the evening selections of music were rendered by Mrs. and Miss Weston and the Misses Pratt.

London: Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, S.E.—The third "Pleasant Saturday Evening" of the present session, on Saturday last, took the form of a popular temperance meeting. A good audience assembled, and the programme was heartily appreciated. Music was provided by the Misses Bredall, Miss M. Ore, and Mr. A. A. Tayler, and the Band of Hope Choir sang three of their melodies. The address was given by Mr. Edward Welsh, of the National Temperance League, whose subject, "Human Documents and the Tales they Tell," proved a striking record of some of his experiences of the evils wrought by drink, gained during his tenure of office as Missionary at the Southwark Police-court. The Rev. Frederic Allen, who presided, called attention to the various activities of the Church and Mission, all now in full winter working, and announced that at the next Saturday Temperance meeting, on Nov. 18, Mr. J. Martin Skinner will speak on "How to live Long."

London: Deptford.—The old chapel, after undergoing thorough renovation, was re-opened on Sunday evening, the service being conducted by the Rev. V. D. Davis. On Tuesday evening a meeting was held to celebrate the event. After tea the chair was taken by Mr. G. W. Chitty, of Dover, who has acted as treasurer of the renovation fund, and there were also present the Revs. A. J. Marchant (minister of the chapel), W. Copeland Bowie, W. G. Tarrant, Harvey Smith, H. W. Perrie, T. E. M. Edwards, F. Alles, H. Rylett, and V. D. Davis. There was a good attendance of members of the congregation and other friends. A letter was read from Mr. J. G. King, secretary of the congregation, regretting his inability, on account of ill-health, to be present, saying that the meeting would mark not only the re-opening of the chapel, but the completion of eight years' service of their minister, and speaking warmly of the happy relations existing between minister and people. The Chairman, in his opening address, announced that over £250 had been received, and that about £30 more was needed to complete the work of renovation. He concluded by reading a most interesting letter of historical reminiscence from Miss Squier, of Dover, a daughter and granddaughter of former ministers of the chapel. The Rev. A. J. Marchant described what had been done in renewing the roof of the chapel, and building a new room at the back, in place of two old vestries, which had fallen into decay, and also in cleaning the interior of the chapel. The estimated cost of the work had been £240, but other expenses, including new gas fittings, and rent of hall while the work was going on, had brought the expenses to close on £280, and they still needed about £30. Many holy memories, he said, attached to that old chapel, and it had still a work to do among the poor people of the district. Although he did not succeed in filling the chapel, some new friends had been gathered in, and there were some old members faithfully devoted to it. He found work to do also in the cause of education and temperance, and for the social uplifting of that neighbourhood. The Rev. W. C. Bowie spoke of the great work that might be done by such chapels in the poorest quarters of the City, where they were face to face with the people and the battle of life was keenest; such places of worship should be made parish churches in the truest sense of the term, in touch with the real life and thought of the people. They must not be content to leave things as they are, with all the social evils of the time, but must make experiment after experiment, until they succeeded in finding remedies for them. The Rev. W. G. Tarrant followed with an earnest speech, after which a collection was made, which amounted to £4 6s. 11d. The Rev. Harvey Smith spoke as representative of the General Baptist Assembly, and was followed by the Revs. H. W. Perris, H. Rylett, and T. E. M. Edwards. A vote of thanks to the Chairman brought the meeting to a close.

London: Essex Church.—The third series of educational lantern lectures arranged for the working classes is now being given in the school-room. The Rev. R. H. Bloor has lectured on "Australia and Tasmania," giving an illustrated account of the exploration of the Continent. On Tuesday last Miss A. J. Lawrence lectured on "The Yellowstone Park." There was an audience of 120 persons, who intently followed the description of its natural wonders, and continually applauded the artistic slides which had been specially brought over from Minnesota. The Rev. Frank K. Freeston will lecture next Tuesday on "The Saints and Churches of Italy," and on the Tuesday following the Rev. Edgar Daplyn will lecture on "Old Norwich." An illustrated syllabus of the whole course may be had at the church.

London: Little Portland Street.—A soirée was held in the Portland Schools on Wednesday, Oct. 25, arranged by the Congregational Society as a farewell to the Rev. H. and Mrs. Rawlings, on their resignation after nearly eight years and a half of connection with the chapel. There was a good gathering of members of the congregation, and in the middle of the evening, after the business connected with the society was finished, Miss H. Busk, on behalf of the congregation, in a few words expressed the great regret that was felt that Mr. and Mrs. Rawlings had determined to sever their connection with the chapel, while wishing them every success in any new work they might undertake. She also presented them with a silver mounted purse, containing £110, and accompanied by a letter embodying these sentiments which had been engrossed and signed by about eighty-five contributors, and handsomely bound in dark red morocco by Mr. E. J. Hains, a member of the congregation. In his reply, Mr. Rawlings thanked the congregation, and at the same time announced that, though he had not given up his intention of writing a book, to gain time for which he had resigned his pulpit, he felt he must say that he had received an invitation to York. He would carry with him many pleasant memories, and he hoped friendships amongst this congregation. The rest of the evening was spent in social intercourse with some songs and music provided by the choir and members. On Sunday afternoon, Oct. 29, one of the elder boys and one of the youngest girls of the Sunday-school presented to Mr. Rawlings, as a parting gift from the scholars, two volumes of the Polychrome Bible; and at the evening service that day, he preached his farewell sermon to a good congregation. Various ministers will conduct the services till the end of the year, amongst whom will be the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter, Mr. Herbert Rix, the Rev. C. H. Wellbeloved, the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, and the Rev. H. Gow.

Manchester: Bradford.—The foundation-stone of the new church in Mill-street is to be laid on Saturday, Nov. 11, by Mr. John Dendy. Particulars as to the meeting will be found in our advertisement columns.

Manchester: Oldham road.—An interesting gathering was held in the school-room, Valley-street, on Saturday, Oct. 28, when Mr. James Burgess (so long closely connected with this congregation) invited the scholars, teachers, and officers of the school to a tea-party and social evening, in celebration of his diamond jubilee. There was a large gathering, and after tea the chair was taken by Mr. Edwin Jones, one of the superintendents of the school. A very hearty vote of thanks and of congratulations was accorded to Mr. Burgess, on the motion of the Chairman, and seconded by the Rev. W. Reynolds, B.A. Mr. Burgess, in replying, referred to his long connection with the church and school, and earnestly advised the scholars to keep up their attendance at these institutions both now and in after life. Mr. Robert Fielding also spoke, Games, recitations, music, and the distribution of sweets and apples filled up an evening of evident enjoyment. A few dances were indulged in after the younger scholars had departed, and "Auld Lang Syne" was sung at parting.

Manchester Unitarian Sunday School Union.

—The annual meeting and soirée were held on Saturday, Oct. 28, in the Memorial Hall. After tea the President, Mr. Woodhead, took the chair, and in the course of his address, spoke of the Teachers' meeting at Oxford last summer. It had generated a sense of comradeship and an enthusiasm which sent all back to their work with increased resolve to do all they could. He hoped it was possible to make that Union of greater value and service to the teachers, by promoting greater friendship and cordiality amongst all connected with the schools, and make them feel they were parts of one great whole, and that they were engaged in a great and noble cause. Next year the jubilee of the Union is to be celebrated. Mr. Woodhead hoped there would be a meeting for reminiscences, when the workers of to-day might be told how the workers of fifty years ago conducted their affairs. He hoped the Whit-Sunday Festival would be a very special one, and also that there would be a grand field day somewhere for all the scholars in the Union. The Rev. J. J. Wright also delivered an address, which is to be printed and circulated through the schools. He said that Sunday-school work was never more difficult, never more needed, and, on the whole, never did more real good than to-day. It had become more difficult since the passing of the Education Act of 1870, because it has had to move up to higher ground and has grown more complex. Previously the Sunday-school had to work in the lower and middle storeys of a lad's nature. Its main work now is to teach the art of life, the noblest of all the arts—the most difficult to learn and the most difficult to teach; yet that or nothing is the raison d'être of Sunday-school work. That work, in other words, is religious. It was never more needed. Think of the men and women you know who give way to foolishness or knavery, in whom there is a moral screw loose; they have never learnt the most needful art of all—namely, the art of life. Take it all in all, the Sunday-school was never doing more good, was never more alive to the necessity of training the young. The teacher's lesson ought always to have some bearing upon life. Applied Religion is taught more to-day than ever before. Yet many have not yet risen to the recognition that that is the one object of their work. They too often forget that all books and lessons are only means and not ends in themselves; the end is the art of life, which involves the sense of God and His good laws, the joy of duty, the loveliness of goodness, the charm of Christlike life. It is to secure and keep up health and strength that we eat; so with lessons, books, &c., in the Sunday-school—they are only means to an end. He did not plead for less machinery in the school; but they must wake to the fact that it is machinery and that only. It required a mind to develop a mind, and a heart to develop a heart. They should ask concerning every lesson—Does this, and how does it, bear upon life and character? Otherwise, it may be good, but it can only be second best. During the evening part songs and vocal solos were rendered by members of the Moss Side Choir; recitations were given by Miss M. Hutton, and violin solos by Mr. O. L. Taylor. An enjoyable evening was brought to a close by the president pronouncing the benediction. Mr. Woodhead has been elected president for the third consecutive year; Mr. Mellor and Mr. F. Golland have been re-elected treasurer and secretary respectively.

Mossley.—The chapel anniversary sermons were preached on Sunday last by the Rev. C. Peach. In the afternoon a cantata was given by the choir. The collections amounted to £32 10s. Within the last month another £32 has been collected for the purchase of a banner for the Sunday-school processions, &c.

Newchurch.—A week-night service of a purely devotional character has recently been started on Wednesday evenings. The meeting takes place in the schoolroom, and lasts not more than an hour. An attendance of between forty and fifty has been already secured. It is very encouraging to find members of the church willing to assist in conducting the service, and also to have the support of our esteemed organist, Mr. R. Holt. There is no reason why the degree of sympathy and zeal already manifested should not be maintained, and even better success achieved.

Notlage.—A successful tea-meeting was held at the General Baptist Chapel, on Tuesday last, the proceeds of which are to be devoted to the church funds. An entertainment was held in the school-room in the evening, when our own young friends, who were kindly assisted by a few others not connected with the chapel, gave a very interesting programme, and a most enjoyable evening was spent.

Padiham.—The sudden death of Mrs. William Marsden, which we recorded last week, removes a devoted member of Nazareth Chapel. She was an earnest Unitarian, and always longed that others should share her own beautiful faith. But her broad Christian spirit of "goodwill toward men" made her the constant visitor and attendant at the sick bed or afflicted home of neighbours of other persuasions as well as her own. She was both a zealous worker and a true peacemaker. Her genial and equitable temper was rarely disturbed, but on one occasion after administering a sharp rebuke to a friend for unfriendly talk about neighbours, when some one said, "You'll never be friends again after that," she replied, "Yes we shall, because I love her." Mrs. Marsden's warm-hearted kindness will be missed far beyond the circle of her own home. She was indeed "faithful unto death," being suddenly called away just as she had returned home from one of her visits to a sick friend.

Southern Unitarian Association.—The quarterly meeting of this Association was held at Poole on Oct. 25. The Committee met at three, and after tea a public meeting was held, with the president, Mr. J. Cogan Conway, in the chair. The Chairman urged the duty of bearing undaunted testimony to the truth as we conceive it; the Rev. C. C. Coe dwelt on the value of united expression of the religious sentiment; the Rev. E. C. Bennett advocated positive religious teaching; the Rev. Clement Pike spoke of the importance of combined effort, by great and small alike, in support of our cause; and the Rev. E. S. Anthony insisted on our right to religious equality. A vote of thanks to the Chairman, proposed by Mr. William Carter, and seconded by Mr. Belben, concluded the proceedings, which were interspersed with music by the choir.

York (Appointment).—The Rev. H. Rawlings, M.A., has accepted the invitation to become minister of the St. Saviour's Chapel, York, and commences his duties next Sunday.

Yorkshire Unitarian Sunday-school Union.—The thirty-third Teachers' Conference took place on Saturday last, in the Priestley Hall, Leeds. There was a moderate attendance. After tea a conference was held, the newly-elected president (Mr. Fred. Clayton, of Leeds) presiding; the Revs. C. Hargrove, M.A., and John Fox being also present. A cordial welcome to Leeds having been extended to the delegates by the President, Miss Brown, of Bardon Grange, read a paper entitled "Gleanings from the Oxford Conference." As one of the delegates of Mill Hill School, Miss Brown had taken copious notes of the proceedings at Oxford, and she was thus enabled to include in her essay the principal features of many of the papers read thereat, among them being those absolute essentials—suitable lessons, and how to prepare, and how to give such lessons. Many other important and useful features were embraced in the paper, which was an interesting, instructive, and exhaustive one, and the desire was general that Miss Brown would allow it to be printed and circulated among the schools in the Union. Mr. C. S. tainer (Leeds), Mr. H. Dyson (Halifax), and Mr. W. Heeley (Lydgate), who were also delegates, emphasised the importance and value of the Oxford Conference. An exceedingly interesting discussion was evoked by the paper, the president, the Rev. C. Hargrove, the Rev. J. Fox, Mr. W. F. Ferro, Mr. W. Holgate, and others taking part therein. Miss Brown having been cordially thanked for her paper, on the motion of Mr. Terry, seconded by Miss Overbury (Wakefield), the meeting concluded with singing and prayer.

BIRTHS.

HOLT—On the 27th Oct., at 11, Devonshire road, Liverpool, Mrs. Richard Durning Holt, of a daughter.

NAIDU—At Hyderabad, on the 26th Sept, Sarojini, the wife of Dr. Naidu, of a son—Jaya Sunya.

MARRIAGES.

SMITH—MORRIS—On the 31st Oct., at Bank-street Unitarian Chapel, Blackpool, by the Rev. W. Bions, Edmund, youngest son of James Smith, of Crumpsall, to Edith, elder daughter of the late George Morris, of Nottingham.

DEATHS.

BRUCE—On the 27th Oct., at Tunbridge Wells, after a short illness, Emily, eldest surviving daughter of the late Henry Bruce, and of Mrs. Bruce, of 28, Hyde Park-square.

Correspondents are requested to note that to be sure of insertion the same week, news must reach the Office by the first post on Thursday at latest, and the earlier in the week the better.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, November 5.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Bermondsey, Fort-road, Upper Grange-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. HAROLD RYLETT.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. ALLEN.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. E. D. PRIESTLEY EVANS.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS.
Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. WOODS PERRIS.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.
Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Revs. BROOKE HERFORD, D.D., and EDGAR DAPLYN. Minister's Class after Morning Service.
Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. ELLIS.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. DAWES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D.
Kentish Town, Free Christian Church, Clarence-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. A. FARQUHARSON.
Morning, "All Saints and All Souls." Evening, "Love your Enemies' versus War."
Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. STRONGE.
Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. C. POPE.
Little Portland-street Chapel, near Oxford-circus, 11 A.M., Rev. STOPPARD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D., and 7 P.M., Rev. F. H. JONES.
Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7 P.M., Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE, "The Unitarian Message."
Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. CARTER.
Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.
Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., and 3 P.M., Service for Children, Rev. S. FARRINGTON.
Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Mr. LUCKING TAVENER.
Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.
Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M., Rev. J. TOYE, and 6.30 P.M., Mr. E. CAPLETON.
Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. F. W. STANLEY.
BEDFORD, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. ROWLAND HILL.
BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
BLACKPOOL, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. BINNS.
BLACKPOOL, Unitarian Lay Church, Masonic Hall, Waterloo-road, South Shore, 6.30 P.M.
BOOTLE, Free Church, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. W. HAWKES.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. COX.
BRIGHTON, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road, North-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. T. B. BROADRICK.
BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. GEORGE STREET.
CANTERBURY, Blackfriars, 11 A.M.
DEAL and WALMER Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. SHAKESPEARE.
DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. BURROWS.
EASTBOURNE, Lismore-road, Terminus-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. ST. CLAIR.
GUILDFORD, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Mr. E. S. LANG BUCKLAND.
HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. MARTEN.
LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.
ISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M., Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. COBDEN SMITH.
LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. J. JUPE.
LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton Park, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. KLEIN.
MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. FORREST.
MANCHESTER, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
MARGATE, Forester's Hall (Side Entrance), Union-crescent, 11 A.M., Rev. VERNON HERFORD, B.A.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. Dr. DRUMMOND.
PORTSMOUTH, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. THOMAS BOND.
PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. COSENS PRIOR.
RAMSGATE, Assembly Rooms, High-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. VERNON HERFORD, B.A.
READING, Unitarian Free Church, London-road, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. A. VOYSSEY, B.A.
SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. WELLBELOVED.
SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. R. C. DENDY. Sales in the grounds.
TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Mr. W. LEE.
YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant Unitarian Church, Hout-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY,
STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN-SQUARE, S.W.—Nov. 5th, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "The Sacrament of Judas." The Ethical Ideal in a recent Drama.

POSTAL MISSION RELIGIOUS CONFERENCE NEXT SUNDAY AFTERNOON at COLLEGE CHAPEL, STEPNEY-GREEN, at Five o'clock. "Christ's Words on Peace." Mr. H. G. CHANCELLOR. Tea at Six o'clock. All welcome.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. W. STODDART, B.A., is at LIBERTY to take occasional Sunday duty.—30, West Bank, Stamford-hill, London, N.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D. DAVIS, Fairfield High School, Liverpool.

UNITY CHURCH, UPPER STREET, ISLINGTON.

A LECTURE in connection with the Literary Society will be given on THURSDAY EVENING, November 9th, on "THE EARLY CHRISTIAN CEMETERIES OF ROME" (illustrated by a set of Lantern Slides), by the Rev. J. EDWIN ODGERS, M.A. (of Manchester College, Oxford). Chair to be taken at 8 o'clock. Friends invited.

NEW ADDRESS.

MR. J. PAGE HOPPS wishes to urge all correspondents to make a note of his new (and he hopes permanent) address:—SANDERSTEAD HILL, SOUTH CROYDON, SURREY.

WANTED, for a flat in Hampstead, a thoroughly competent COOK-GENERAL. Must be an early riser and good tempered; two in family; good wages.—Address, A., INQUIRER Office, Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand.

WANTED, in November, a useful MAID, about 30, to wait upon a lady who is not strong. Must be a good needlewoman and know something of dressmaking.—Apply by letter to Mrs. CHARLES W. JONES, Field House, Waver-tree, near Liverpool.

WANTED, engagement as LADY COMPANION. Many years' experience and good references.—J., INQUIRER Office.

WHAT TO EAT, AND HOW TO COOK IT.—Send wrapper stamped and addressed, and I will send you free a Book containing 60 Receipts for Vegetarian Cooking, with a Hint on Healthy Diet.—ANDREW GLENDINNING, 34, London Wall, London.

BARTON-STREET CHAPEL, GLOUCESTER.

WALTER LLOYD, Minister.

BICENTENARY FUND and BAZAAR for the extinction of the Debt of £350.

Contributions in Money or Goods will be thankfully received by

Mrs. C. W. WASHBOURNE, Allandale, Weston-road;

Mrs. WALTER LLOYD, The Hollies, Brook-st.; or Mr. W. HORSLEY, Secretary, Weston-road, Gloucester.

The Treasurer begs to acknowledge the following contributions:—

	£	s.	d.
Amount previously acknowledged	147	10	0
Mrs. E. J. Nettlefold	2 0 0
Miss L. K. Garrett	2 2 0
H. W. Gair, Esq.	2 2 0
John Harrison, Esq.	2 2 0
Dr. G. Vance Smith	2 2 0
G. W. Chitty	1 0 0

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms moderate.—Mrs. ROBERT TURNER, 94, Grosvenor-road, S.W.

BOARD and RESIDENCE, South of England. Healthy neighbourhood. Home comforts. Seven miles from Brighton, near South Downs. Station Hassocks (on main line L.B.S.C.).—Miss ROWLAND, Gothic House, Hurstpierpoint.

BOARDING HOUSE.—THE FELL, TROUTBECK, WINDERMERE, is situated 550 feet above sea level, and about 2½ miles from the station at Windermere. Every home comfort. Moderate terms.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. Pocock.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea; sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address, Miss CHALDECOTT, Stirling House, Manor-road.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

Proprietor,

FREDERIC SMITH.

This first-class Hotel, conducted on strictly Temperance principles, is commended by the Rev. C. Aked, Liverpool; Rev. Rowland Hill, Bedford; Rev. G. Vance Smith, D.D., Bowden, Cheshire; Rev. J. C. Street, Birmingham; Rev. Charles A. Berry, D.D., Wolverhampton; Rev. Charles Garrett, Liverpool; Rev. Canon Howell, Wrexham; Rev. A. B. Grosart, LL.D., Blackburn; Dr. Norman Kerr, London, &c. Central, Quiet, Exceptionally Clean, Moderate in Charges. Spacious Coffee Rooms, Visitors' Drawing Rooms, Baths, &c. Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d. to 2s. Rooms, 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. Service, 9d. Printed Tariff on Application.

75, 77, 79, 97, 99, 101, 103, 105,

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, RUSSELL SQ., LONDON.

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS

4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

SCOTCH TWEEDS and SERGES at Mill Prices, Ladies' or Gents'; best quality only. Patterns post free; orders carriage paid.—Geo. McLeod & Sons, Hawick, N.B.

UNITY CHURCH, UPPER STREET, ISLINGTON.

A Course of SIX ELEMENTARY LECTURES on "THE PHILOSOPHY OF KANT" (intended for Beginners) will be given in the School-room of the above Church by Dr. G. DAWES HICKS, commencing on THURSDAY, November 16th, and to be continued on Nov. 30, Dec. 14, Jan. 4 and 25, and Feb. 8.

To commence each Evening at 8 o'clock. Fee for whole course, 2s. 6d. (to defray expenses). Syllabus to be obtained at the door.

BLACKFRIARS MISSION AND STAMFORD-STREET CHAPEL.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY.

On NOVEMBER 12th, 1899, SERMONS will be preached by the Rev. WILLIAM JELLIE, B.A., Minister-elect for the new Unitarian Church, New Zealand.

Services commence at 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.

Collections will be in aid of the Funds.

R. WATERALL, Esq., Treasurer, Waddon.

Manchester District Association of Presbyterian and Unitarian Churches.

FORWARD MOVEMENT.

The FOUNDATION STONE of the New Church, situated in Mill-street, Bradford, Manchester, will be LAID, SATURDAY, Nov. 11th, 1899, at 3.30 P.M., by Mr. JOHN DENDY.

TEA in the Bradford Public Hall, Ashton New-road, at 5 o'clock, at a charge of One Shilling.

A PUBLIC MEETING will be held in the Bradford Public Hall, at 6.30 P.M., in which the following, amongst others, will take part:—The Revs. G. Knight (President), A. Gordon, M.A., D. Agate, B.A., C. Roper, B.A., W. E. Atack; Messrs. J. Dendy, G. H. Leigh, and Councillor A. H. Scott.

Donations from friends who cannot be present at the ceremony will be gratefully received and acknowledged by the Rev. W. E. ATACK, North-road, Clayton, Manchester.

UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH, HORWICH.

A GRAND BAZAAR will be held in the MECHANICS' INSTITUTE on NOV. 8th, 9th, and 11th, 1899, for the purpose of raising £500, and as much more as possible towards a sum of £1,000, needful for the redemption of ground rents (nearly £30 a year), and the formation of an Independence Fund. Towards the amount required Mrs. Samuel Fielden, of Todmorden, has generously contributed £100.

All donations will be announced at the Bazaar, and will be printed in the Report, a copy of which will be sent to every subscriber.

The Bazaar will be opened respectively by Mrs. JOHN HARWOOD, Bolton; Sir JOHN BRUNNER, Bart., M.P., and W. H. LEVER, Esq., of Thornton Manor, Cheshire.

Contributions of Goods or Money will be thankfully received and acknowledged by any of the following:—

Rev. R. C. MOORE, Horwich, Bolton.

Mr. C. J. P. FULLER, Bazaar Treasurer,
Mona House, Horwich, Bolton.

Mr. F. C. ASHTON, Bazaar Secretary,
Crown-lane, Horwich, Bolton.

MATTHEW HENRY'S CHAPEL, CHESTER.

RESTORATION FUND.

Owing to the discovery of dry rot in the Vestry and Gallery, the congregation still need £300 to pay for the necessary work.

Amount already acknowledged...	£	s.	d.
Collection at Re-Opening Services	587	13	0
(Sunday and Tuesday last)	13	0	0

Further Donations will be gratefully received and acknowledged by the Rev. H. D. ROBERTS, Brook Lodge, or Mr. WM. ORRETT, Foregate-street, Chester.

BIBLE READINGS WITH MY CHILDREN.

By Mrs. PHILIP COHEN.

In two parts. Price 2s. each, or 2s. 3d. Post Free.

"Written in a style highly attractive to children."—The Very Rev. the CHIEF RABBI.
"Continues to be regarded in our private families as a most welcome friend."—Rev. G. EMANUEL, B.A.
"The charm of style is so attractive in its simplicity; will ensure a large and affectionate circle of readers."—The late Rev. A. L. GREEN.

Published by WERTHEIMER, LEA, and Co., Circus-place, London Wall, E.C.

Schools, etc.

CHANNING HOUSE, HIGHGATE, HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, AND BOARDING SCHOOL.

For the daughters of Unitarian Ministers and others.

London Matriculation, English, Latin, French, German, Mathematics, Science, Elocution, Greek, Drawing, Class Singing, Dressmaking, Cookery, Calisthenics, Playground, Swings, Cricket, Garden, Outside Sanatorium, Laundry at home, Outside Examiner.

Fees per Term:

Boarders, £10 13s. 6d. or with Music, £12 5s.

Extras: Violin, Solo Singing, Painting, £2 2s.

Shorthand, Dancing, 10s. 6d.

Day scholars, 3 to 5 guineas, with Music extra.

Kindergarten, 2 to 2½ guineas.

Manager—Miss MATILDA SHARPE.

HALF TERM begins MONDAY, Nov. 6.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, SOUTH MARINE TERRACE, ABERYSTWITH.

PRINCIPAL ... MRS. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

SCHOOL FOR GIRLS AND LITTLE BOYS.—CONAMUR, SANDGATE, KENT.

PRINCIPALS:—Miss JARVIS and Miss CLARA BERRY.

Good House, close to the sea; south aspect.

Reference kindly permitted to T. GROSVENOR LEE, Esq., Clent, near Stourbridge; JOHN HEYWOOD, Esq., The Pike, Bolton, &c.

THE WARREN, KNUTSFORD.

PRINCIPAL:

MRS. W. CARRINGTON WHITELEGGE.

Excellent individual TUITION and Home Care for the daughters of cultivated parents who would appreciate unusual advantages for Music and Languages.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK

SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

TWO AND A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS of minimum monthly balance, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift, the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows Interest Monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY, HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANAC, Post free on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

HOUSEMAID (thorough). Could take charge of house: London or suburbs; good references; age 38.—C. M., Tonge House, York-road, West Norwood, S.E.

Will make a SUITABLE CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

(Ready towards end of the month).

A NIGHT WITH JESUS. A DREAM STORY.

By J. L. HAIGH.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

(Special terms to all engaged in Domestic Mission Work).

LIVERPOOL BOOKSELLERS' COMPANY, LIMITED,
70, Lord-street, Liverpool.

THE MILL HILL PULPIT.

A Monthly Sermon by

Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., Leeds.

November Number.—"THE NOVEMBER METEORS."

Price 1d. Annual subscription, 1s. 6d. post free.

Apply, Essex Hall, or CHAS. STAINER, 82, Ravenswood-terrace, Hyde Park, Leeds.

THE ETHICAL WORLD.

EDITED BY DR. ST'ANTON COIT and

J. A. HOBSON, M.A.

Articles on Important Social Questions, Education &c. from a purely ethical standpoint
Children's Page.

TWOPENCE WEEKLY.

Office: 17, Johnson's-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C

HOME FOR HEALTH CULTURE, THE FIRS, BROMYARD, HEREFORDSHIRE

This Home provides a course of Systematic Daily Exercise, combined with regular outdoor life and occupation, for Ladies and Children who are not in normal health. The exercises are given in a Gymnasium fitted with Swedish apparatus, and consist of Ling's Swedish Movements. Special treatment is given for Spinal Curvature, Anæmia, Hysteria, Indigestion, Neuralgia, &c.

For further particulars, apply to The Principal Miss JESSIE BAKER (trained by Mme. Bergmon, Osterberg).

19th CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.

Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21

Mincing-lane, E.C.

Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A.

7, Pall Mall, S.W.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.

Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.

STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, 151, Brixton-road, S.W.,

and Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made Monthly repayment, including principal, premium and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years, 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.; 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

Printed by WOODFALL & KINDER, 70 to 76, Long Acre, W.C. and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. City Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 29 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD Deansgate.—Saturday, November 4, 1899.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 2994.
NEW SERIES, No. 98.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1899.

[ONE PENNY.]

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	721
ARTICLES :—
The Coming Star-Shower	722
The Position of Women.—II.	723
Coleridge at Clevedon	724
The Inward Life	726
Notes from Calcutta	731
London Unitarian Bazaar	732
LITERATURE :—
Back to Jesus	725
CORRESPONDENCE :—
Deptford and the Hollis Family	725
The Making of Proselytes	726
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN	727
LEADER :—
From the Shadows into Light	728
OBITUARY :—
Anna Swanwick	723
Thomas Hoyle Hope	729
John Shackleton Mathers	730
John Mahler	731
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES	732
ADVERTISEMENTS	734

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

THE autumnal meetings of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association at Bristol on Tuesday and Wednesday, Nov. 21 and 22, promise to be very interesting and successful. The congregations at Lewins Mead and Oakfield-road are doing everything in their power to give a hearty welcome to the representatives of the Association, and to ministers and delegates from congregations and societies in the West of England and in South Wales. The religious service on Tuesday afternoon, Nov. 21, will be at Oakfield-road Church, Clifton, when the Rev. Jeffery Worthington, B.A., will take the devotional service; and the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter, M.A., will preach the sermon. At the public meeting in the evening, Mr. P. J. Worsley will take the chair; addresses will be delivered by Mr. Charles W. Jones (President) on "The Work of the Association and its Claims to Support," Lady O'Hagan on "Our Message to the Present Age," the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter on "What Modern Criticism has done for Religion," the Rev. Tudor Jones on "From Orthodoxy to Unitarianism," the Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A., on "Our Devotional Literature and the Use we should make of It," the Rev. F. W. Stanley on "The Work of our Church to-day"; also short addresses by Mr. Oswald Nettlefold (treasurer), and the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie (secretary). On Wednesday morning, Nov. 22, there will be a conference on "Unitarian Missionary Needs, Opportunities, and Methods," when papers will be read by the Rev. H. S. Solly, M.A., and the Rev. W. Griffiths, Ph.D., B.D., followed by discussion. There will be a luncheon at one o'clock, at which Mr. Charles Thomas, J.P., will preside. The Rev. T. J. Jenkins, of Trebanos, will represent the South Wales Unitarian Association, and Mr. Lewis N. Williams, of Aberdare, the South-East Wales Society. The congregations at Bath, Bridport, Bridgwater, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cirencester, Crewkerne, Devonport, Gloucester, Merthyr, Moreton Hampstead, Pontypridd, Shepton Mallet, Sidmouth, Swansea, Taunton, Tavistock, and Torquay, have already intimated that their ministers and other representatives will be present.

A PUBLIC MEETING is to be held in the Queen's Hall, Langham-place, London, on Tuesday, Nov. 21, at 7 P.M., at which the Right Hon. Viscount Peel has kindly consented to preside. This meeting is to inaugurate the work of the Central Temperance Legislation Board, an association formed by the leading Temperance societies of the country to unite all sections of Temperance effort in an endeavour to secure legislation on the lines of the Minority Report of the Royal Commission on the Licensing Laws, which was signed by the Chairman, Lord Peel, by the Archbishop of Canterbury, Sir William Houldsworth, Sir Charles Cameron, Dean Dickinson, Mr. William Allen, Mr. W. S. Caine, Mr. Herbert Roberts, and Mr. T. P. Whittaker. Readers of THE INQUIRER will be interested to know that the Earl of Carlisle is a Vice-President of this Central Temperance Legislation Board. Reserved tickets for the meeting, price 1s., or tickets for free admission, may be had from Mr. A. F. Harvey, 4, The Sanctuary, Westminster, S.W.

THE city of Hull has recently taken a step which will, we hope, be quickly followed by other large towns. Last week the Chairman of the Burial Committee, Mr. Solomon Cohen, laid the foundation-stone of the first municipal crematorium in England. A large company was invited to the ceremony, and among those who attended there were almost as many clergymen as doctors. Prayer was offered by the Rural Dean, and the Mayor's chaplain read a passage of Scripture. (It may have been an impulse of humour which led him to select 2 Peter iii., plainly for the sake of the tenth and twelfth verses.) The "religious difficulty" was referred to by several speakers as a thing of the past, and certainly it has found no exponent on this occasion, either in the pulpit or the press. We sincerely trust that the prejudice, on grounds of dogma, against a way of disposing of the dead which sanitary and economic science both approve has indeed lost its strength; and we suggest to Unitarians in public life the propriety of working towards an object which combines reverence for the departed with care for the health of the living.

THE value of the lectures delivered by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams at the City College, Calcutta, has been acknowledged in the following terms, in a letter addressed to Mr. Williams, on the eve of the Poojah holidays in October, by Mr. Umes Chandra Datta, B.A., Principal of the College:—"I beg to convey to you the hearty thanks of the authorities of the City College for the very valuable services you have so kindly rendered to the institution for a period of more than seven months. The students have been much benefited by your lectures, both theological and literary, and we earnestly hope you will not deny them the advantage of your instruction when opportunity for the same offers again."

As the Christmas season comes round again, and people are beginning to open their hearts and purses in the cause of charity, the Noel Society makes its appeal for the little ones. This Society was started in 1892 by a few friends, with the object of bringing some happiness into the lives of poor ill-fed children, to whom the Christmas season means, as a rule, nothing more than bitter cold and extra hunger. By distributing toys at children's homes on Christmas-eve, the members of the Noel Society have managed with little cost and trouble to give a large amount of pleasure. The Society has grown in the seven years from half-a-dozen members to over a hundred. Yet the demand for toys is still greater than the supply, and there is abundant scope for new members and more donations. Members contribute either toys or donations, and no toy may cost more than fivepence. Last Christmas 1,240 toys were sent for distribution, and nearly 1,000 of them were given away at six centres in London. There was also a distribution in Manchester. Information and copies of the report may be had from the secretary, Miss K. M. Robinson, Winscot, Merton Park, S.W., and contributions may be sent to the treasurer, Miss D. Nettlefold, Streatham-grove, Norwood, S.E. There is a large branch of the Society in Birmingham, with Mrs. Archibald Kenrick as treasurer, and Mrs. Cecil Crosskey as secretary.

PREACHING in the Free Protestant Church at Capetown, on the Sunday following the outbreak of war, the Rev. R. Balmforth made an earnest appeal to his congregation, which is composed of members of both British and Dutch race. The following are passages from the sermon, as reported in the South African News of Oct. 16 :—

It would ill become me at this juncture, and would but accentuate differences and embitter feeling, were I to go, even briefly, into the many and complex causes which have led to this great calamity. I believe there has been grave misunderstanding, undue suspicion, imputation of motives, unskilful statesmanship on both sides, but as to war itself—you know my opinion, an opinion which I expressed and justified here many weeks ago, an opinion which in its general principle I know to be supported by some of the best and wisest men in England. That is a principle which contains within it the germs of a world-wide unity and fraternity, that the time will come, and should be now, when the States or nations which go to war without first submitting their differences to arbitration will receive the condemnation of the civilised world.

* * * * *

In a little while foolish and thoughtless people on both sides will be eagerly looking for accounts of brilliant victories, and reading such accounts with a kind of depraved excitement—an excitement which comes with the temporary survival of barbaric instincts. Let our attitude be rather one of profound sorrow—sorrow at the thought of fair fields desolated by scenes of human carnage, sorrow for the mothers in Great Britain as well as in South Africa, who will mourn for lost sons; for wives bereft of husbands; for children who will call for fathers, whom they will never see again on earth; sorrow at the thought that such things can be after nineteen centuries of so-called Christian teaching. And let this sorrow steel our hearts and minds to a stronger, a deeper, a fiercer hatred of this terrible fiend of war.

For the rest, let us remember and take comfort in the thought that we are in the hands of a higher and a better Power than human vengeance and human will; that, for whatever wrong is or may be done, God will bring his inevitable retribution, and when the tide of human passion has had its way, and every man surrenders to the Great Account, both high and low alike—each according to the measure of his guilt—shall be answerable to that great Divine law. May quiet fortitude and patience be with us all in the trying times which are to come, preserving in us a just, an honourable, and a law-abiding spirit.

THE report of the proceedings at the jubilee celebrations at Hope-street Church, Liverpool, which recently appeared in these columns, is now reprinted as a three-penny pamphlet, and may be had from the Liverpool Booksellers' Co., 70, Lord-street, or at Essex Hall. In the reprint are included the sermons preached by the Rev. Charles Hargrove on Oct. 18, and by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong on the following Sunday morning.

THE Sunday School Association has just published a booklet of Readings for use with the lantern slides, illustrating Dr. Brooke Herford's "Story of Religion in England" (chapters 17-29). The selections, which cover the Reformation times, are made by the Rev. F. K. Freeston, and are clearly printed with good headings referring to the 45 slides. Particulars as to the hiring of the slides are printed on the back of the title-page. (S.S.A., Essex Hall. 3d.)

THE Entertainments Committee in connection with the London Bazaar have not been idly basking in the success achieved by them with the performance of Comus last July. They have been busy arranging for a matinée to take place at the Prince of Wales' Theatre, on Jan. 16, when the Midsummer Night's Dream will be played under the direction of Mr. J. H. Leigh and Mr. Herbert Lawford. Some of the leading parts will be in the hands of well-known Shakespearian actors and actresses, and others will be rendered by the talented amateurs who made the performance of Milton's Masque so brilliantly successful. Mr. Herbert Lawford will lead the Athenian clowns as Nick Bottom, and Mr. J. H. Leigh, whose wife is taking part in the performance, is giving the use of the theatre, and himself paying many of the incidental expenses. The play (apart from the personal interest of the occasion) is one that should be highly attractive to young folks and others home for the holidays, and it is hoped that the date may be kept clear for "supporting the cause." Fuller particulars are to be announced shortly, but we may now add that the ordinary theatre prices will be charged.

THE COMING STAR-SHOWER.

If the sky be clear on Tuesday night—or rather the early hours of Wednesday morning—we may hope to witness one of the finest sights of a life-time. The shooting-stars, always to be expected near the middle of November, come in their thousands three times in a century, and the brilliant display is due to arrive this year. Lances of light, emanating from one centre in the East, and thrown in all directions, will rain fire as though there were war in heaven.

In 1799 the brilliant spectacle was seen almost exclusively in America; but there it was visible from Greenland to the Equator. Humboldt says: The most extraordinary luminous meteors were seen towards the East. Thousands of bolides and falling-stars succeeded each other during four hours. From the beginning of the phenomenon there was not a space of the firmament equal in extent to three diameters of the moon that was not filled every instant with bolides and falling-stars. All these meteors left luminous traces, five to ten degrees in length, as often happen in the equinoctial regions. The phosphorescence of these lasted seven or eight seconds. In Labrador and Greenland the spectacle threw the Esquimaux into a state of utter amazement. Under the Equator, and further South, the fall of meteors was everywhere observed by the missionaries, and in some cases recorded in the church books.

The display of 1833 was also seen well in America: the stars fell like flakes of snow, and it was calculated that at least 240,000 had fallen during a period of nine hours. Seldom had a scene of greater or more awful sublimity been exhibited than at the Falls of Niagara, on this memorable occasion. The awful roar of the cataract heightened the sense of sublimity when its waters were lightened up by the glare of the meteoric torrent in the sky. In many parts of the country the people were terror-struck, imagining that the end of the world was come, whilst those whose education and vigour of mind enabled them to remain calm, were nevertheless vividly reminded of the grand description in the Apocalypse:—"The stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as the fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind."

As these great showers—of 1799-1800, and 1832-1833—were about thirty-three years apart, the shower of 1866 was predicted, and did not disappoint expectations. Only, some people, after watching till midnight, grew tired and went to bed—just before the celestial fireworks began.

The cometary origin of meteor swarms had already been suspected: and the observations made in 1866 enabled astronomers to settle the theory pretty accurately.

The November meteors are a shoal of "stones," following in the path of Tempel's comet, which goes out beyond the planet Uranus, and returns to the vicinity of the sun in 33½ years. They are not the tail of the comet, for that does not move in the comet's orbit; but they follow the head, and are not seen by us excepting when they enter the earth's atmosphere and take fire by the friction. They move fifty times faster than a rifle bullet, and any of them, large enough to reach the ground, without burning entirely away to gas and dust, are taken up hot and scorched. They seem to be scattered all round the comet's orbit, so that we encounter a few of them every year, when we cross their tract on Nov. 13 or 14, but they are thicker in one part, and that is the part which we are to cross next Tuesday night.

The connection between meteors and comets has been called the most striking astronomical discovery of our time; and perhaps it is so, if we follow it out in thought. Those faint and distant clouds of light called nebulae, seem to be vast aggregations of meteors, and when a moving shoal passes through them, with inconceivable velocity, the collisions strike up fire and we see a new star! Kepler saw such a star, and speculated ingeniously about it; and several such new stars have been seen within the last few years. Perhaps the Star of the Nativity had its origin thus. It may be that the fires of our sun are partly maintained in this way, from shoals of meteors pouring down upon it like hail. The earth itself grows larger by the stones and dust that fall, and which have been falling for millions of years past. Meteors of the atmosphere are not mere whiffs of gas, escaped from the earth: they are solid matter, coming from outer space, to tell us that the stars are composed of the same materials as the earth, and that the universe is one.

This awakens thought—even profound spiritual thought—for, as Humboldt remarks: He who is penetrated with a sense of this mysterious connection, and whose mind is open to deep impressions of Nature, will feel himself moved by the deepest and most solemn emotion at the sight of every star that shoots across the vault of heaven.

G. ST. CLAIRE.

THE yoke, the burden that Jesus bore—what was it? It was sacrifice of self to others so unreserved that it became most joyful. It was a love so fervid and self-forgetting that the barrier between saint and sinner, between man and God, between this world and the life to come, was melted away in its glow.—G. S. Merriam.

EPPS'S	C	COCOA.	The most nutritious.
EPPS'S	C	COCOA.	Grateful and comforting.
EPPS'S	C	COCOA	For breakfast and supper.
EPPS'S	C	COCOA.	With natural flavour only.
EPPS'S	C	COCOA.	From the finest brands.

THE POSITION OF WOMEN.—II.

To enable us to view with hope rather than fear the prospect which the present movement opens out, there is one aid more potent than any other—it is to take long views, wide views; to place changes, which by themselves may seem ominous, in their large historical setting; to see their relation not only to the life of our own day and country, but to the life of the human race. He who does this will acquire a balanced judgment; he will probably be less disposed to expect great changes to take place quickly; but he will also be less disposed to say that any change which seems to be in accord with ideal justice, is impossible. A deep plunge into history always reveals many ugly, slimy things; but when the swimmer comes to the surface again, and surveys the world in which he actually lives, he feels new vigour. History is a great teacher of hope. Let us face the past of woman's history for the sake of her present and her future—and for the sake of man's present and future also.

"Man's present and future also," I say. For, to quote Mr. H. Spencer, "In no way is the moral progress of mankind more clearly shown than by contrasting the position of women among savages with their position among the most advanced of the civilised."* If this be true (and historians and thinkers of all kinds endorse it), the study of the contrast alluded to has the widest bearings. In proportion as we understand it, we understand also in what moral progress in general consists. In proportion as we ascertain its causes, we ascertain also how the condition not alone of women but of men too may be raised. We have at the one extreme (as Mr. Spencer goes on to say) "a treatment of women cruel to the utmost degree bearable; and at the other extreme a treatment which, in certain directions, gives them precedence over men." The transition from the one kind of treatment to the other implies a thorough change in the whole moral code—a change such as must profoundly modify the relations of all the social units, apart from any question of sex. That is why the elevation of one sex is bound up with the elevation of the other. And this is a truth which is not only evident to the reason; it is also abundantly proved and illustrated by the habits and customs of the various races of mankind.

What is the chief characteristic of savage life? What is the most striking and most pervading mark which distinguishes it from civilised life? It is the sway of force, the worship of physical strength. The two chief employments of the lowest tribes are war and the chase; and in these pursuits, when as yet the arts are undeveloped, it is mere animal vigour and power which succeeds and wins honour. Hence the strong acquire all authority, the weak become completely subject. And as the same tendency runs through the whole social body, men, as the stronger sex, assume the position of masters and women become their slaves. The husband or father exercises the same arbitrary rule over the members of the family that the chief does over his people. That women should hold a degraded position in the lower stages of civilisation is, therefore, not surprising; but the oppression and cruelty which they suffer are not on that account less painful to contemplate. They become wives by capture or by sale. Their labour is that of the merest drudge, and no matter how much it may tax their strength, they must do it at the bidding of their lords. If a man finds himself encumbered by those dependent upon him, he holds of least account the lives of members of the weaker sex, and women and female children are sent to death whenever he may wish to make life easier for himself. Amongst the Fijians before the introduction of Christianity, there was, perhaps, summed together all that is most horrible in the savage treatment of women. To describe all their brutality would be too revolting. It is enough to mention that women were little better than beasts of burden; they might be sold at pleasure; a wife might be killed and eaten by her husband if he chose. How significant that this went along with despotic rule, an elaborate military organisation and a free indulgence of the fighting spirit. The slavery of women is a sure accompaniment of the reign of force. How true this is shown not only by the hundreds of savage races, whose barbarity we regard as a thing to be expected, it is shown also by the history of nations which have in time reached a high pitch of civilisation. Here, for example, are a few points from Gibbon's account of the position of a wife among the Romans.* The marriage union "was on the side of the woman rigorous and unequal." She was bought from her parents, and in the house of her husband took the position of a child, over whom, as over the rest of the family, he had almost absolute power.

By his judgment or caprice, her behaviour was approved, or censured, or chastised; he exercised the jurisdiction of life and death. . . . She acquired and inherited for the sole profit of her lord; and so clearly was woman defined not as a person, but as a thing, that, if the original title were deficient, she might be claimed like other movables by use and possession of an entire year.

This was in the days when Rome had still its conquests to make, and was only beginning to extend its power. In later days, when the arts of peace had advanced, the Romans gave women a position superior to that which they held in Christendom for many hundred years.†

At this point the question is suggested—how was it that Christianity for so long seemed to fail in this matter? It was a religion of peace and gentleness, and one might have supposed that the more peaceful and gentle sex would have received its due. It was a religion which professed to disclaim all artificial distinctions of class or condition on the ground that they could be of no account in the sight of God; and one would have expected it to put men and women on a perfect equality. How happened it that the result was far otherwise? Alas! it is seldom that the sublimest principles are carried completely into practice, and in this case there were two reasons why the natural claims of women were ignored. I have quoted passages in which Paul speaks of woman as an essentially inferior being.

* "Decline and Fall, &c." C. xliv.

† See Lecky's "History of European Morals," ii. 304, 338 (7th edition). I may here acknowledge my indebtedness to the closing chapter of Mr. Lecky's history, which is a mine of information on the subject.

But in doing this Paul was only speaking in the manner which was habitual with the Jews. Even to this day women are fenced off from men by wire netting in the synagogue; and, remembering that, one is not surprised to find in the Old Testament and other Jewish writings little but low ideas of women. Remember that in the Old Testament a woman is represented as the origin of all human ills; that polygamy and the capture of women in war were authorised by the law supposed to be divine; remember, too, the dearth of noble female characters in the Old Testament, and you will get some idea, and also some explanation, of the position of inferiority occupied by Jewish women. Some of Paul's sayings can, indeed, be more than matched from the Rabbinical writings, as, for example, by such passages as these:—"The voice of a woman is an obscenity." "When men sing assisted by women it is impudence, and when women sing assisted by men, it is as fire applied to tow." How strange such notions sound to our ears! Yet they help us to account for much in early Christianity; for Christianity was, after all, an outcome of Judaism, and it is only natural that it should preserve some traces of its parentage. None but those who trace it to a purely superhuman origin would expect anything else.

But there was a second source of the early Christian's ideas regarding woman—viz., asceticism. One of the chief characteristics of the first Christians was their stern protest against sensual indulgence. The world was in dire need of the protest; but, like everything else, it could be carried too far, and the Christians committed this error. Paul discouraged marriage and spoke of it in a manner which is utterly offensive to modern feeling. The same line was soon followed with still greater strictness by the Fathers of the Church. They were, of course, compelled to admit that both men and women were necessary for the continuance of the race, but they did so with great reluctance and even vexation. And, with the grossest unfairness, they cast the whole blame of irregularity in the relations of the sexes upon poor woman. In the strongest language, which would be only ludicrous were it not instructive as illustrating the prejudicial effect of constant dominance, they denounced woman as the chief source of temptation to man. She was the mother of all human ills. She should be ashamed at the very thought of her sex. Every personal charm was but a source of guilt and sorrow. Beautiful women should hide themselves. Holy men should hide from them. All this and much more was uttered constantly and with the utmost seriousness, and naturally when Christianity came to power, the laws were shaped by the Church's teaching. It soon became impossible for women to succeed to any considerable amount of property, and they were reduced to the alternative of marriage or a nunnery. In every way they were put at a disadvantage compared with men, and no considerable attempt was made to modify this cruel inequality until the close of the last century.

Thus strange and repellent are many of the ideas and customs which have ruled the fate of women. But the long and wide view which embraces all this depressing ugliness, reveals something more. It reveals the fact that great changes have taken place; that there is no theory or doctrine regarding women's position which is fixed and infallible, and that in some countries enormous advances have been made towards a true solution of the problem. And hence springs hope for the future.

* "Principles of Sociology" p. 716.

Where the sway of force has abated, women can do much for themselves in some matters. But in the most fundamental points men must be appealed to, and the appeal comes most fitly from men.

It is a matter of supreme importance that the relations between men and women should be under the moderating and subduing influence of a high ideal of purity; but it is a gross injustice to heap upon woman all the responsibility for the maintenance of such an ideal, and to shower upon her all the punishment of failure. We have seen how shamefully unfair the early Christian Fathers were in this matter; but men of to-day are shamefully unfair, too. As long as public opinion casts all the shame of dishonour upon the unhappy woman, men and women will not stand in right relations. Men will enjoy freedom; women will be confined to occupations where privacy and seclusion will be a protection. We all know the cry that it is immodest for women to enter upon this or that pursuit. How often is this plea based, more or less honestly, upon false estimates of the respective obligations between men and women.

The true means of maintaining right relations between men and women is a full recognition by each sex of the real dignity of the other. But to men women's dignity will never appear what it is, until all the arbitrary assumptions that have been made regarding women's characteristics and calling are surrendered. These assumptions have hitherto prevented most women from being as worthy of respect as they might have been.

H. RAWLINGS.

COLERIDGE AT CLEVEDON.

THERE are few places in England which are not immortalised by the fact that some man of genius was born there or once sojourned there for a time. I was never more struck by this than during a recent visit to Clevedon, in Somersetshire. This is now a fashionable watering-place, but happily much smaller, retired, and reposeful than most. It is of recent growth, and a hundred years ago was an insignificant village by what was called Severn Sea. It is now most widely known as the resting place of Henry Arthur Hallam, who was buried in the old church situated in a hollow of the hills close by the water side, and separated from the modern town by some fields and Church Hill. The scene is described by Tennyson in In Memoriam in the stanza beginning—

The Danube to the Severn gave
The darken'd heart that beat no more;
They laid him by the pleasant shore,
And in the hearing of the wave.

I paid a visit to the church at the earliest opportunity to see the memorial to Hallam and to read the long and touching inscription. One Sunday morning we attended worship in the church, and the seat allotted me, being at the corner of the chancel, commanded a view of the memorial tablet upon which my eyes frequently rested during the service, and Tennyson's lines mingled with the Psalms for the day, and came still more vividly to mind as the preacher discoursed on the raising of the Widow's son—

When on my bed the moonlight falls,
I know thee in thy place of rest
By that broad water of the West,
There comes a glory on the walls:
Thy marble bright in dark appears,
As slowly steals the silver flame
Along the letters of thy name,
And o'er the number of thy years.

The "marble" is now photographed on my memory.

As you walk from Clevedon railway station to the church along the Old Church-road you come across a still more substantial memorial of another of the great poets of the century. It is the little wayside cottage to which Samuel Taylor Coleridge took his bride, Sara Fricker, immediately after his marriage in Bristol in 1795.

Before his marriage Coleridge was full of enthusiasm in the cause of freedom and with the idea of the regeneration of mankind, and his aspirations were shared by his friends, Robert Southey and Robert Lovell. These three youths proposed to regenerate the world and found a new republic on the banks of the Mississippi or Susquehanna. Finding the old world would not be reformed after their mode, they determined to found a new one in which all was to be liberty and happiness. "The deep woods of America were to be the site of this paradise. There all the evils of European society were to be remedied, property was to be in common and every man a legislator. Unborn ages of human happiness presented themselves to the three philosophers while they dreamt of human perfectibility."

In the midst of these plans of vast import, and while waiting at Bristol till they could find means to carry them out, they fell in love with three sisters, and "all their visions of immortal freedom faded into thin air." Whether this was due to the ladies, who all appear to have possessed great good sense, or whether it was due to want of funds, is immaterial; the scheme was given up, and Coleridge took his bride to this humble abode, the rent of which was only £5 a year. But Coleridge was a poet, and that, perhaps, was one reason why he could be happy with so little, and he believed that all men might be as happy if they had no more—nor less.

Sweet abode!

Ah! had none greater! And that all had such!

The scene of the poem in which this line occurs is generally understood to be Clevedon, but I am not certain whether it does not refer to Nether Stowey to which Coleridge afterwards removed. Still, with a little allowance it will serve for Clevedon.

Low was our pretty cot; our tallest rose
Peep'd at the chamber window. We could hear
At silent noon, and eve, and early morn,
The sea's faint murmur. In the open air
Our myrtles blossom'd; and across the porch
Thick jasmines twined; the little landscape round
Was green and woody, and refresh'd the eye.

It was a spot which you might aptly call
The Valley of Seclusion! Once I saw (Hallowing his Sabbath-day by quietness)
A wealthy son of commerce saunter by,

Bristow's citizen; methought it calm'd
His thirst of idle gold, and made him muse
With wiser feelings: for he paused, and look'd
With a pleased sadness, and gazed all around,
Then eyed our cottage, and gazed round again,
And sigh'd, and said, it was a blessed place.
And we were blessed.

Happy poet to be so easily contented, but then he was only three-and-twenty and newly married!

And yet he was not contented to pass his life in pleasant idleness and the selfish enjoyment of love and Nature.

Ah! quiet dell; dear cot and mount sublime!

I was constrained to quit you. Was it right

While my unnumber'd brethren toil'd and bled,

That I should dream away the entrusted hours

On rose-leaf beds, pampering the coward heart

With feelings all too delicate for use?

I therefore go, and join head, heart, and hand,

Active and firm, to fight the bloodless fight
Of Science, Freedom, and the Truth in Christ.

In another poem "The Eolian Harp," written at Clevedon, Coleridge gives expression to religious thoughts somewhat akin to those in Wordsworth's well-known lines written on the banks of the Wye:

O the one life within us and abroad,
Which meets all motion and becomes its soul,

A light in sound, a sound-like power in light,

Rhythm in all thought, and joyance everywhere—

Methinks, it should have been impossible
Not to love all things in a world so filled;
Where the breeze warbles, and the mute still air

Is Music slumbering on her instrument.

And what if all of animated nature
Be but organic harps diversely framed,
That tremble into thought, as o'er them sweeps,
Plastic and vast, one intellectual breeze,
At once the soul of each, and God of All!

If the poem had ended there we might have looked upon Coleridge as an exponent of the "Higher Pantheism" which Tennyson delineated more than half a century later. But Coleridge was of a vacillating disposition and varied as sentiment or reason happened to predominate; though he explained it at one time by saying that his head was with Spinoza, but his heart was with Paul and John—to complete the sentence he should have added, "and Sara"—for in this Clevedon poem he descends from the heights of transcendental speculation because his young wife discourages such impious vagaries:

But thy more serious eye a mild reproof
Darts, O beloved woman! Nor such thoughts

Dim and unhallowed dost thou not reject,
And biddest me walk humbly with my God.
Meek daughter in the family of Christ!

Well hast thou said and holily despraised
These shapings of the unregenerate mind;
Bubbles that glitter as they rise and break
On vain Philosophy's aye-babbling spring.

Coleridge was evidently from the first not of the stuff out of which prophets and martyrs are made—no, nor even philosophers—but as the author of the “Rime of the Ancient Mariner,” he is secure of a fame which most philosophers might envy. This poem was first conceived, if not completed, when Coleridge lived at Nether Stowey, and Wordsworth at Alfoxden, about five-and-twenty miles from Clevedon. WALTER LLOYD.

LITERATURE.

“BACK TO JESUS.”*

Two years ago Mr. Armstrong took as the subject of his Essex Hall Lecture “The Significance of the Teaching of Jesus,” and affirmed his conviction that the sum and substance of that teaching was the Fatherhood of God. “I believe,” he said, “that the source of the spiritual life and teaching of Jesus lay in his vivid sense of the Divine Fatherhood as an ever present fact, and that his aim was not to impose on any man belief in this fact as a doctrine based on his own authority, but to waken in all men their own slumbering sense of its reality.” In his most recent essay “Back to Jesus,” which is addressed as an appeal to Evangelical Christians, Mr. Armstrong re-affirms this same conviction, and shows how it is confirmed by a careful study of the Gospels. He begins by welcoming the movement in the more liberal of what are known as Evangelical circles, which is not content to rest in the statements of the creeds nor even in the Scripture record, but aims at finding in Jesus himself, the living Christ, the central inspiration of religion and an assured starting point for all thought of God and human destiny; but then he pushes home the inquiry as to the real Jesus, and urges that the result of such an appeal to his authority as to the ultimate truths of the religious life is very different from that of the popular re-interpretation of the old orthodoxy.

The first part of the essay indicates by what method in the study of the Gospels the truth as to the personality and the teaching of Jesus is to be arrived at. There is a description of the process by which the Gospels grew, and by which elements current in the popular thought of the time may very naturally have coloured the picture, so that there is need for discrimination of the essential spiritual teaching of the Master from other elements due to exaggeration or misconception on the part of the reporters. The sound rule of guidance is laid down, that teaching which belongs evidently to the master mind, far above the level of popular religious conceptions at the time, may be confidently attributed to Jesus, while whatever clouds or distorts the clear shining of that truth is more likely to belong to the medium of tradition through which the teaching has passed and in which it is embodied in the Gospels. And it is further shown why the first three Gospels are felt to bring us nearer to the actual teaching of Jesus than the fourth. As a result of the application of this principle, the conclusion is drawn that the great central truth which Jesus taught was that of the Fatherhood of God, with its dependent doctrine of the Brotherhood of Man; and three very interesting chapters follow, in which the actual words of Jesus concerning the Fatherhood, as contained in the first three Gospels, are examined in detail.

What Jesus meant by the doctrine Mr. Armstrong describes in the following passages:—

It seems to me, then, that the central and initial conviction which Jesus wished to impress on his disciples was this: that the symbol most truly expressing the relation of God to men is the relation of an ideal father to his children, that fatherhood was to him the type of an individual and personal love and care, protective at every moment, of perfect wisdom in foreseeing and providing, and encouraging the full and free utterance of the emotions and aspirations of the child in the listening ear of the parent. Jesus taught in perfect simplicity, and without the admixture of any suggestion of other persons in the Godhead besides the Father, that the love of the Father for each individual child of man was a personal love of infinite tenderness, and that the individual man might at all times and places speak, without mediation of any kind, direct to the heart of the All-Father and receive the answer that he needed.

And again in a later chapter:—

Amid all the controversies of the Churches, amid all the doubts and difficulties of theological speculation, amid the clanging battle of all the orthodoxies and all the scepticisms, amid the agonised struggles of the human mind to discover and to realise the relation which God sustains to men—amid the wistful questionings, whether any divine care watches over us, whether any ear really hears our secret prayer, whether there is any unseen love embracing and leading each one of us on his laborious way—there comes the answer, clear and unhesitating, from the fields of Galilee and the borders of the Lake and the dusty highways about Jerusalem, the answer of Jesus, whom all Christendom calls Lord and Master: “Yes, God is your Heavenly Father—yours, O man, weary with toil of brain or hand; yours, O woman, weeping with the sorrow of your womanhood; yours, too, O little child, laughing at your play. He is your Father, of an infinite wisdom and tenderness. You can breathe no prayer, but it reaches his paternal heart. You can suffer no sorrow and no pain, but his compassion compasses you behind and before. You can have no joy, but there is gladness with you in your Father’s spirit.

The great need of Christendom, Mr. Armstrong urges, is really to get back to Jesus, and to share with him the completeness and power with which he realised that supreme truth of the Fatherhood of God; for that is all-sufficient. What Evangelical Christians have found in God the Son and in God the Holy Ghost, Jesus found and would have us find in the Father, the ever-present, the sustaining and quickening Spirit of our life; and what we ought to find in Jesus himself is not God in another form, or another Person of the Godhead, but the one Brother who, of all others, most surely leads us to the Father, and makes us understand what it means to be a child of God.

Mr. Armstrong goes through the chief doctrines of the Evangelical Creed, and shows how they may, indeed, answer to human needs, but how those needs are more truly met by the great doctrine of the Fatherhood, as Jesus taught it. The religion of the Fatherhood, he affirms, is essential Christianity, which if fully realised, would change the complexion of the religious world, and even reverse the classification of men as “believers” and “unbelievers” so common on the lips of many Christians.

For it would seem that they who so heartily accept the teaching of Jesus with regard to the gracious love which the Heavenly Father bears his children that they do not feel the need of the specific doctrines characteristic of what is called Evangelical Christianity are the “believers”; while they who lay all the stress on those specific doctrines of Evangelical Christianity because they cannot be satisfied with faith in the Heavenly Father, are in their degree the “unbelievers.” It would seem that much which passes as the very substance of Christianity does in fact derive its strength from a profound and deplorable scepticism—a scepticism concerning those basal spiritual facts which formed the substance of the teaching of Jesus Christ. It would seem that if we are to talk about “orthodoxy” and “heresy” at all—and the less we talk about them the better—we shall have to acknowledge that those are the “orthodox” whom we took for “heretics,” and those are the “heretics” whom we took for “orthodox.”

To one who speaks as Jesus does supreme truths of the spiritual life, appealing not to any external authority, but to the inward witness in his hearers’ hearts, a sentiment of loyalty in those who learn of him, and of veneration and grateful love, is natural and right. And that is the great strength of our Christian discipleship. Mr. Armstrong utters a warning that sentiment may dip into sentimentality, where not the teaching but the person of Jesus is held to be primary. But it appears to us that this warning may be liable to misunderstanding, and that a distinction may be fairly drawn. It is with Jesus that we learn the fulness of that great truth of the Fatherhood of God, and its marvellous significance in the discipline of human life and the moulding of the child-like spirit. We do not set the person of the teacher above the truth he taught, but we see the truth most clearly mirrored in his soul. Thus he is with us in the holy places of our religious life, and it is no sentimentality, but the reverent acceptance of a priceless gift of God, with which in lowly discipleship we seek to follow him. That sentiment may degenerate into sentimentality is no doubt true; but that is not the case where even the utmost loyalty and reverence are given to a human teacher and friend, who teaches not only by his word, but by his life and character; his disciples do not set his person above the truth he teaches, but they recognise in him its best interpreter.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER’S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

DEPTFORD AND THE HOLLIS FAMILY.

SIR,—In your historical note on the re-opening of the old chapel at Deptford, you state as a proof of the early date of the congregation, that Holles, the famous member of Parliament under Charles I., belonged to it, and that his wife is buried in the chapel yard. I very much doubt this statement, which I think arises from a confusion between two different persons. The member of Parliament was Denzil, Lord Holles, son of the Earl of Clare (1597-1681). So far as I am aware, there is no ground for asserting that he was ever connected with Deptford, or that his wife is buried there. There is, however, a tombstone in the chapel yard to the memory of Sarah, wife of Nathaniel Hollis, who died in 1703, but this is an entirely different family. Nathaniel Hollis (1663-1738) was one of the three sons of Thomas Hollis (1634-1718). The family originally belonged to Rotherham. Thomas Hollis, after serving his apprenticeship in Sheffield, came to London in 1654 and joined the Church worshipping in Pinner's Hall. He was a member of this society for over sixty years, and on his death a funeral sermon was preached by the pastor at that time, the Rev. Jeremiah Hunt. His eldest son, Thomas Hollis (1659-1731), was also a member of that society. The second son, Nathaniel, seems to have been connected with Deptford, as his wife was buried there, but possibly the connection was on the side of his wife. The family were certainly Baptists in principle; they are best known as benefactors of Sheffield and of Harvard College. The last descendant of Nathaniel Hollis was a grandson, Thomas Hollis, F.R.S., who died a bachelor in 1774, and by whom the existing tomb at Deptford, to the memory of his grandmother, was erected in 1755.

* “Back to Jesus”: An appeal to Evangelical Christians by Richard A. Armstrong, B.A. Philip Green, 5, Essex-street, Strand, W.C. 1s. ret.

He was sometimes supposed to be connected with Denzil, Lord Holles, but he himself corrected the mistake. He says in a letter that the rudest speech he ever made in his life was to an Irish colonel, whose acquaintance he made abroad. The colonel, who was a Jacobite, received him very hospitably, and said to him in the course of conversation: "There was a great man of your name on the Parliament side in the civil wars; are you of his family?" Thomas Hollis instantly replied: "No, Sir, but I am full of his spirit."

John Hollis, the youngest brother of Nathaniel, had a large family. About two hundred of his descendants are living at the present time, among whom is

EDGAR SOLLY ANTHONY.

THE MAKING OF PROSELYTES.

SIR,—It would have been of much interest and advantage if you had been able to give us in full the Rev. E. P. Barrow's sermon before the East Cheshire Christian Union. Mr. Barrow's utterances are always thoughtful and instinct with the Christian spirit, and if one does not always feel that they carry persuasion with them, that makes one only the more desire to have them in their completeness. This sermon would seem to have touched very suggestively a difference that seems to be scored somewhat deeply amongst us; and, with your indulgence, I should like briefly to state wherein lies my difficulty in following its argument.

Let us first clear away what appears to me to be an unfortunate, as it is certainly a common, interpretation of one of the pregnant sayings ascribed to Jesus. Mr. Barrow does not, indeed, directly commit himself to that interpretation; but he implies it and will not, I think, repudiate it. In Matthew xxiii. 15, in the course of a terrible catena of invective, Jesus is represented to have cried, "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte; and when he is become so, ye make him twofold more a son of hell than yourselves." (R.V.) Now the common interpretation makes this a condemnation of proselytism, and a stigma attaches to the word on account of this saying, and this saying alone. Yet surely it contains no censure of proselytism as such; but only of proselytism by men suitably described as sons of hell, and so affecting their proselytes as to make them twice as much so as themselves. But none of us, I think, will be quite prepared to describe a conscientious and ardent Ritualist or Evangelical or Unitarian as a "son of hell," or to suggest that any person whom he may win over to his opinions or even persuade to join his ecclesiastical organisation is thereby rendered a double-dyed son of hell. On the contrary, it may sometimes even be the first step in the proselyte's spiritual awakening. So far as I am aware, Jesus nowhere condemns proselytism—the persuading of a man to join a particular religious organisation; and its praiseworthiness or blameworthiness depends on the spirit and motive of the proselytiser and the spirit and temper it induces in the proselyte.

But the main burden of Mr. Barrow's earnest plea seems to be that it is harmful to try to bring other men to your own religious "opinions" or "views." Now, "opinions" and "views" are words suggesting a somewhat cold and superficial intellectuality untouched by spiritual emotion. But suppose we substitute the word "convictions." "Conviction" is still primarily intellectual; but we all feel, I think, that a man's "convictions" may be deeply suffused with emotion, that they may be all aglow with spiritual fervour; and, in fact, that a spiritual fervour which is to be a moving power in the world must have its roots deep plunged in convictions clearly apprehended by the mind and passionately loved by the heart.

Now there are many among us whom one supreme conviction moves with unparalleled force, the conviction, namely, of the Fatherhood of God in its full and wide-reaching significance, barring out, as it seems to us to do, many commonly received orthodox doctrines which appear to be unconscious contrivances for mending and patching up a religion in which that Fatherhood is imperfectly apprehended and appreciated. Of course, you may call this great conviction of ours "an opinion," "a view," and so it is, though it has a moving force not commonly associated with those terms. Now, what I respectfully desire to know from Mr. Barrow, and those who hold similar language to his, is whether they condemn, and think that Jesus would condemn, the earnest and sustained effort of those who hold and cherish the conviction I have described, to infuse it into other minds, and bring over our fellow-countrymen to it and to fellowship in societies in which it prevails. The conviction I have referred to may or may not best be named "Unitarianism." That is a secondary matter. But is it or is it not a wrong thing, unworthy of a religious society and condemned by Jesus Christ, to strive by appeals alike to reason and to the spiritual witness of God to bring men to this "conviction," "opinion," or "view"? RICHARD A. ARMSTRONG.

Liverpool, Nov. 7.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c., received from the following:—R. B. Capetown (thanks); H. D., Bulgaria; W. H. D.; H. G.; G. D. H.; A. J. M.; S. H. M.; W. M.; C. E. P.; M. P., Sydney; E. R. (certainly not); T. S.

THE INWARD LIFE.

From Miss Anna Swanwick's "Evolution and the Religion of the Future."

THE fundamental truth of religion, embodied in the utterance of Jesus, "Be ye perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect," appears to be this:—That it is given to man not only to apprehend the existence of God, as an objective reality, but also, through the combined action of reason and conscience, seeing that God is immanent in the human soul, to discern His character and will. Accordingly, while with the progress of science, man's knowledge of the external universe expands, and his conceptions of the Most High gain consequently in grandeur and sublimity, he will, through the growth of his moral nature, more especially on the lines of human sympathy, be enabled to appreciate man and more fully the infinite love of the universal Father. The Supreme Being becomes thus the proper object of our religious affections, conscious harmony with whom constitutes man's highest well-being. Or, to quote the words of our venerable prophet of the nineteenth century: "The universe is not dead, but Godlike and our Father's." A firm hold upon this fundamental truth appears to me to be the one thing needful to calm the unrestfulness of the age; to curb its materialistic tendencies; to impart nobleness and dignity to life; and to stimulate the efforts of the wise and good to build up humanity into a holy temple, in which God may dwell by His Spirit.

"But in what words speak even afar off of the unspeakable?" I shall not attempt it, but shall simply call attention to the grand Hebrew utterance which constitutes now, as of old, the fundamental law of life, upon the fulfilment of which depends the highest well-being alike of individuals and of communities; an utterance which called forth from Jesus the emphatic words, "This do and thou shalt live." "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind, and thy neighbour as thyself."

In conclusion, I would emphasise the importance attached by Jesus to his conception of establishing on earth the kingdom of heaven, as the supreme object of human endeavour; the prominence given in his model prayer to the words, "Thy kingdom come," reveals the ideal towards the realisation of which we are invited to be fellow-workers with God Himself; nor must we forget his solemn utterance, "The kingdom of heaven is within you," a statement implying allegiance, on the part of the individual soul to the invisible king, with loyal obedience to His holy will, inspiring the effort to extend, in the surrounding world, the reign of righteousness and love. The establishment and maintenance of God's kingdom involve, however, the knowledge and observance of the laws which He has implanted in the constitution of the universe, alike in the domains of nature and of life. In the light of this grand ideal the whole range of human activity would be glorified, and the service of God be transmuted into the service of man. The scientific discoverer, the sociologist, the statesman, the philanthropist, each in his sphere, would feel that he was striving to enter into the counsels of the Eternal, and to propound His laws for the guidance of humanity; even the humblest effort of duty would be irradiated by the consciousness of the Divine approval and sympathy, and thus all our aspirations and endeavours would tend to the realisation of the grand ideal embodied in the poet's words:—

Come, kingdom of our God!
And make the broad earth thine;
Stretch o'er her land and isles the rod
That flowers with grace divine.
Soon may all lands be blest
With fruit from life's glad tree;
And in its shade like brothers rest,
Sons of one family.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

ALONG the railway, a mile or two out of Glasgow, a number of navvies were one day hard at work mending the line. An express train was nearly due; and the men left the rails and stood back on the bank. A whistle, and then a dull, thundering sound foretold its approach. Far away it could be seen, every moment growing clearer and clearer, as it rushed onwards bearing its burden of passengers towards the great city in which the homes of many of the travellers lay.

A boy, who had been working on the line, stood among the men. He was not old enough for heavy work, but he was of use in running errands and handing tools. He happened to look down at the railway line and saw that a sleeper had started out of its place. The train might be wrecked if it were not put right, and in less time than it takes to tell it the boy had signed to his uncle, who stood near him, and man and boy sprang down upon the line. The train thundered by in safety, but the two who had saved it lay crushed and dead upon its track.

In a day or two, great numbers of those working men followed a little funeral procession up a hill side to the grave in which their fellow-workers were laid, and as they climbed they spoke in hushed voices of the young lad who had so unexpectedly proved himself a hero.

Here is another story which tells us of the heroism of some boys and girls two hundred years ago or more, in the city of Bristol. It was during the reign of Charles II. when people were forbidden to worship anywhere except in the parish churches, and brave men and women went to prison cheerfully for conscience sake. Among others, the "Friends" suffered cruelly. Because they persisted in meeting together for their silent worship, they were dragged before the magistrates, and still it was always their brave cry that the King might as well think to hinder the sun from rising and the tide from flowing as to hinder the Lord's people from meeting to wait upon Him while two of them were left together.

So, happy homes were broken up, and husbands and fathers were thrown into loathsome, crowded prisons; and then, because the wives and mothers thought it their duty still to keep up their meetings for worship, they, too, were sent to prison, and in the desolate homes only the children were left.

And now what do you think these boys and girls did? They followed the example of their parents, and with wonderful courage, resolving to do what was right, and not what was safe and prudent, they went to their meeting-house to worship God as they had been brought up to do, and young brothers and sisters passed fearlessly on their way through rough people who sometimes laughed at them and sometimes threatened them. These Quaker children were, some of them, put in the stocks; the constables warned others that they would be beaten; still they were unmoved, and many of them were imprisoned, until there was no more room in the gaols of Bristol.

People sometimes have strange ideas about heroes and heroism. They forget that the nature of men, and of children too, are gradually formed, and that it is by training every day in little ways of unselfishness and duty that we get ready to be brave and true when the great need comes. That Scotch boy who saved the express train must have been used to caring for other people more than for himself. If he had been self-indulgent and cowardly, he would never have jumped down on to the railway line that day, and shown himself a hero. Those children in Bristol would have hidden themselves timidly in their homes instead of following the brave example of their parents, if they had not been used to thinking first of all what was right to do and then doing it.

And so from this we come to think about that common, well-known word—habit. While we are young, habits are easily made. We form our good or bad habits by the thoughts and deeds of every day, and our characters are made by the habits we grow into. In the American forests among the luxuriant undergrowth is sometimes to be found a curious creeping plant that wraps its strong, twining branches round any object that comes in its way. You can break away from this vegetable octopus when it is young, if you are on your guard; but it is said that a careless traveller may find himself a prisoner unawares, bound in the grasp of the plant as by strong ropes. Two boys, in light-hearted, thoughtless mood, went out one holiday to spend it in exploring the outskirts of one of those mighty forests in America which lie near the clearings that settlers have made for their homes and farm land. They were warned to beware of this dangerous plant, but they gave little heed to the warning; and, suddenly, as he pushed his way through the thick brushwood one of the boys felt himself seized and wrapped round by the stems of a mysterious plant. He called for help and his companion came to release him, but, as he tore at the twisted rope-like fastenings, the second boy was caught in like manner, and most earnestly did they wish that they had never come within reach of the imprisoning tendrils. So with our bad habits. If we are not on the watch they gain the mastery over us and make us their prisoners.

Few of us are called upon to do great deeds of heroism, but we are all called to build up within ourselves beautiful characters and to lead loving, useful, daily lives, and this we cannot do if we give way to the selfish wish, to outbursts of passionate temper, or to temptations to be cowardly or untrue. We do not always bear in mind what power we really have over ourselves, how it is in our power to become in character what we wish to become. We make resolutions again and again, and again and again we break them because we do not really mean them and do not act upon them straightway. Good resolutions are worthless without good deeds to follow them. Here is a beautiful saying for you, as true as it is beautiful:—

"There is no time better than to-day to begin the triumph over temptations. The change needed is only in ourselves. Do but say 'In God's strength I will,' and the victory is sure." FRANCES E. COOKE.

"THE November Meteors" is the subject of the Rev. C. Hargrove's Sermon in this month's Mill Hill Pulpit. Taking for text Jeremiah x. 2, the sermon shows how, contrary to the prophet's exhortation, Christians of many generations have been dismayed at the signs of the heavens. Thus Luther declared in an Advent sermon:—"The heathen write that comets may arise from natural causes, but God creates not one that does not foretoken a sure calamity," and again he said, "Whatever moves in the heaven in an unusual way is certainly a sign of God's wrath."

Cranmer and Latimer were of the same mind, and John Knox, the great Scotch Reformer, saw in the signs of heaven "a warning to the king to extirpate the Papists from his realm." Our own Ralph Thoresby, as we read in his Diary, was terrified at the comet of 1682, and records his prayer, "Lord, fit us for whatever changes it may portend; for though I am not ignorant that such meteors proceed from natural causes, yet are they frequently also the presages of imminent calamities." "God is not bound," writes another theologian, "to his creation and the ordinary course of nature, but must often, especially in these last days, resort to irregular means to show forth his anger at human guilt."

In contrast to this view, Mr. Hargrove pictures the divine order of the heavens, even in what might seem a chance shower of meteors, and describes the marvellous orbit of that host of meteors, which brings to us every 33 years the glorious display to be looked for on the night of Nov. 13-14. (On page 21 the day seems to be wrongly given.) In the midst of the inconceivable immensity of space, crowded with stars, our little lives might seem to be utterly lost; and yet, while every atom that consumes itself on a November night is in God's care, and moves only as He wills, a living soul is of more value than a whole system of stars. And with this lesson the sermon concludes:—

When I contemplate this mighty river, whose drops falling to earth become our meteor showers, river whose breadth is 100,000 miles, and whose course extends 2,000 million miles away from the sun—when I remind myself that of the countless myriad atoms which compose it no one is lone, lost, unguided—that the course of the main body and of every tiny straggler is subject to inviolable law—when I add that this is but one of innumerable meteoric tracks of like kind—then I take good heart for myself and my fellow men, all who have been and shall be, and doubt not that this great river of human life flows on subject to law, that each individual is guided to its destiny by an Infallible and Omnipotent Hand, and that the mighty host of Humanity moves, not according to its wayward wills, but to the fulfilment of the sure purpose of the Creator.

No longer therefore do they dismay us these "signs of heaven," but now bring us message of assurance even from the depths of space. Yes, Law is over these, creating, controlling, guiding, transforming—and it is over me too, my birth a coming into new being at God's call, my life an orbit subject to God's ordering, my death a change to some other state which I need not be curious to know of now; and All is well!

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any News-agent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are:—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER ...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR ...	3	4
PER YEAR ...	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE ...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE ...	2	10	0
PER COLUMN ...	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN ...	0	3	8
BACK PAGE ...	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, &c. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 11, 1899.

FROM THE SHADOWS INTO LIGHT.

It is our sorrowful duty to record this week the departure from our midst of several friends widely known and honoured, whose lives have been to us of lasting benefit and leave us now rich in grateful memories, and not in memories alone.

In the stillness, which is of God, while we share for a season very intimately that Divine benediction which we see to rest upon them, as a release perhaps from grievous sufferings, or as the calmness at the close of a long and beautiful even-tide, we enter, as perhaps at no other time, into the reality of life. With reverent and wondering thought we follow the liberated spirit, new-born into the greater joy, and rejoice as the glory of the heavenly light falls upon our hearts. We know that the weary are at rest, the agony is at an end, and though we do not know where or how the mysterious gates are opened, and the soul is borne away on the hands of tender ministrants, yet the great conviction of home and heaven in the FATHER'S care comes with a deep and satisfying sense of rest and of fulfilment. With exultant faith we think of the new and richer life, the fresh opportunities of service, the opening vision, the more perfect fellowship of spirit. Our grief in their departure is not forbidden, and yet there is something deeper and beyond the power of words. We know that it is well with them, and with a love that overcomes all sorrow we are content that for them and for ourselves the FATHER'S will is done.

So out of the great silence we return with a stronger faith in life, with a more joyful energy to do the work of our day, and enriched with a new and deeper fellowship with the Unseen. We have now a better understanding of our friends, and know what they have given us, and how they will continually help us toward the better life.

To what is said in the memorial notices of Miss ANNA SWANWICK, Mr. J. S. MATHERS, Mr. THOMAS HOPE, and Mr. MAHLER, there will be grateful response in many hearts. We do not propose here to add any further personal words, but are glad to be allowed to reproduce the following passages from Dr. BROOKE HERFORD'S address at the funeral service for Miss SWANWICK at Rosslyn-hill Chapel:—

The "Valley of the shadow of death" is not all darkness and gloom; nor are the "rod and staff" of the invisible Presence the only comfort for the heart of man. Every sweet good life lights it up with a tender radiance, and here and there are some whose words of strong and happy faith echo along it like the songs of angels. It is such an one the loving memory of whom gathers us here to-day. It is more than a private loss we feel; though in the modesty and simplicity of her character, those who knew her in the home are apt to think of her chiefly in the charm of that bright converse of friend with friend, which those who have shared it will never forget. But in reality Anna Swanwick was one of the foremost women of this century, not so much in the front as at the heart of its eager onward movement. "What an interesting world it is," was one of her favourite sayings, and that vivid interest was in her from the beginning and lasted to the end.

She had no fear of that which we call death, although she had such a happy enjoyment of life and friendship and all the beauty and interest of the world. Death, as we call it, was no death to her. She had explored that thought with so many others. All the doubt and perplexity which came with this intense concentration of modern study in the wonders of material Nature never shook her paramount faith in the spiritual. One of her latest books was her answer to all that, in that little book, "Evolution and the Religion of the Future." She had no shrinking from such questionings, and would be quite content whatever might be the great Father's will. Only the last time that I was privileged to see her, a few weeks ago, she was speaking of this, and quoting George Eliot's lines about "the Choir Invisible"; but, in reality, her heart was just as confident of the Future as of the Present—and she most of all loved and often quoted Mrs. Barbauld's lines:—

Life, we've been long together,
Through pleasant and through cloudy weather;
'Tis hard to part, when friends are dear,
Perhaps 'twill cost a sigh, a tear;
Then steal away—give little warning—
Choose thine own time!
Say not "Good-night"—but in some brighter clime
Bid me "Good-morning!"

These our friends, with many others whom we thankfully remember, have passed from the shadows of our mortality into the light of a new day;

and their word to us is, that we shall not be downcast, or ever mourn as those who have no hope, but with a good courage and the upward look set our hands to the work to which we are called. That it may be worthily done, they have shown us, and that it is worth while so to be faithful to the Highest. Through them, by the grace of God, we have a firmer hold upon the unseen things which are eternal.

OBITUARY.

ANNA SWANWICK.

No attempt can here be made to give an adequate or balanced estimate of the many-sided genius and the lofty and inspiring character which have given Miss Anna Swanwick so conspicuous a place in the lives of many hundreds of her contemporaries. Only a few scattered impressions and reminiscences, and a bare outline of the external framework of her life, are possible.

She was born in 1813, at Liverpool, the third and youngest daughter of John Swanwick. After studies at school and home, she went to Berlin, where she worked at Hebrew as well as at the German and Greek literatures, which were subsequently to bring her so much distinction. On returning to England (her family now residing in London), she added to her philological accomplishments some knowledge of the higher mathematics, which she studied under Professor Newman, whose limpid sincerity of intellect and of character deeply impressed her. The basis was thus laid of a friendship between teacher and pupil that lasted unbroken through more than fifty years, and which was equally valued by both.

In 1843 she published a volume of selections from Goethe and Schiller, and continued to work the same mine until, in 1850, her translation of the first part of "Faust" appeared. Subsequently she was strongly urged by Baron Bunsen to attempt a translation of some of the Greek dramas, and in 1865 she issued a translation of the "Trilogy of Æschylus."

In 1873 she completed her translation of Æschylus. It has achieved an assured position, and is now in the fourth edition. When the "Agamemnon" was acted in Greek, by students of the University at Oxford, she was much gratified by the selection of her version for printing with the text for the convenience of the audience. In 1878 she returned to "Faust," and completed her work by translating the Second Part. She had never belonged to the most enthusiastic band of admirers of "Faust," and she confessed to finding the Second Part relatively uninteresting; but her general powers, and specifically her command of metrical form, had so matured in the nearly thirty years since the appearance of her earlier work, that her translation of the Second Part may safely be regarded as the more brilliant performance, and even has the appearance of greater inspiration. Amongst her other works may be mentioned a general survey of literature, entitled "Poets, the Interpreters of their Age," published in 1892, as the expansion of a paper which she read to the Congregational Society of Little Portland-street Chapel. This is a remarkable instance of the characteristic magnanimity with which she proportioned her efforts rather to the grandeur of her subject than to the character of the occasion that called forth her work. A glance at this book will show how very much wider was the range of her literary admirations than would be indicated by an isolated consideration of her specific work as an interpreter of the German and Greek dramatists. She often spoke of Dante's "Paradiso" as the book that had changed her conception of life more than any other, and she could probably rejoice in equal familiarity with all of the supreme master-minds "who give us nobler joys and nobler cares." She once reported a conversation she had had with Mr. Gladstone, in which they both agreed that all persons who had risen to a certain mental level must be at one as to the poems which occupy the absolutely first rank. Characteristic differences come in, when we compare the poems which we rank just short of the highest. If this be so, there should certainly be some significance in Miss Swanwick's intense and enduring delight in Milton's "Comus." It occupied a prominent place in the lecture which has just been spoken of, and the present writer once had the privilege of listening to a conversation between Miss Swanwick and Professor Newman, which ranged over many topics, till that of "Comus" was struck. Professor Newman pointed out what he thought was a drawback to the moral efficacy of the poem. Miss Swanwick's eye flashed, and she assumed the air of one defending the impeached honour of a dear friend. Passage after passage from "Comus" rushed to her lips, and a defiant challenge was thrown in from time to time, till her hearers were fairly carried away in the sweep and torrent of her vindication.

Her last publication was an expansion of an article contributed to the Contemporary Review, entitled "Evolution and the Religion of the Future," which appeared in 1894.

The above enumeration, which is far from complete, will serve to show that Miss Swanwick was a considerable, though not a voluminous writer. At least two of her translations ("Faust" and the "Plays of Æschylus") take rank as classics, and all her publications have done their work of enlightenment and stimulus in their day. But Miss Swanwick's literary work only represents a small part of her many-sided and intense vitality. She was early interested in the education of women, and took a prominent part in the establishment of ladies' Colleges, particularly Bedford College. She took a keen interest in all attempts to open higher intellectual and social opportunities to the working-classes, and was one of the first to join in establishing the Working Men's Club movement. Her social tact and genial hospitality made her house in Cumberland-terrace a centre of intellectual life and enjoyment, through a length of years which seems to cover a whole epoch of the life of London.

An air of exalted joyousness and confidence in all good influences made her society a mental and spiritual tonic, and many an one, known and unknown, would have felt that his year had not been properly inaugurated if he had not attended her New Year's gathering. Her public and social activities did not exhaust her amazing energy.

Though her bodily frame was feeble and for long periods of her life she was subject to severe illness, though she lay awake through many a weary night and paid in nervous exhaustion the price of her life-giving activities, yet the spirit seemed to triumph over all weakness and to draw life direct from its purest sources independently of the medium of the body. She was able, in addition to all that has been enumerated, to give herself without stint, year after year, to the lowliest work in Sunday-school or week-day class, and to deal out overflowing measure of affectionate and thoughtful kindness to the wide circle of her family connection and the still wider circle of her personal friends. No claim, material or spiritual, ever seemed to surprise her with an empty hand or an irresponsible heart. She never forgot a friend and was never forgotten by one. Indeed, this constant, detailed, tender, personal thought for friends in every rank of society and every condition of life, perhaps remains upon the mind as the most striking characteristic of this wonderful and beautiful life. Such scope and such intensity of affection are rare indeed, and the high quality infused into them by sustained and ardent faith and habitual communion with "the noble living and the noble dead" made her love a veritable well of life, finding "in every nook a lip that it might cheer." Clever, good, and generous she seemed to all who came into even slightest contact with her, but beyond this an impression of greatness deepened upon those who knew her best. If no man is a hero to his valet de chambre, here at least was a woman who seemed heroic to those about her, just in proportion to their intimacy with her intimate life. To a vast circle of acquaintances she was a marvel of intellectual versatility, philanthropic activity, and social tact. The inner circle of those around her (including old dependents and servants, loved and loving) felt something akin to awe, as though in the presence of majestic power and (as one of them has said) of "the sweetest soul that ever looked through mortal eyes." In truth, those eyes, and the features in which they were set, were the despair of artists, and must be the despair still more of him who would paint in words. Her figure and her features alike bore the impress of strain, and her voice, though flexible, had little natural melodiousness of tone, but through all the living spirit so breathed that voice, face and figure became the transparent garb, or rather the visible setting forth of soul. Tenderness and grace spoke through the whole range of the gamut in them; but when moral principles must be vindicated they were capable of assuming an impressive sternness which spoke of the strength that underlay her tenderness. An expression as of Luther's "demonic" eye might from time to time be caught; for though she had a strong deference for assured position, whether in the intellectual or the social world, yet where fundamental spiritual and moral principle was at stake she would follow no master, bow to no authority, and respect no position. Never was there a more infallible power than hers of discriminating between the humility that acknowledges superior information and power, and the moral and spiritual pusillanimity that allows principles to be warped or thrust aside by personal authority. Hence, while she opened her mind with perfect catholicity to all spiritual influences and was humble in her estimate of her powers, while she fearlessly faced philosophical doubt and questioning, not as a foe to be fought, but as a depth to be explored, yet where fundamental, spiritual and moral principle was concerned she stood immovable. She had "burned her way through the world to this," and no one could make her call right wrong, rob her of the treasure of her faith, or induce her to turn back upon her religious traditions of freedom, progress, and truth. In all the later part of her life she felt the inspiration of Dr. Martineau's teaching, and enjoyed his friendship, which she prized as one of the choicest privileges of her life. Her social and political aspirations, however, were too deeply based in her own nature to need the sanction or even the support of any guide, and hence to the end she was as keen and hopeful as she had ever been in her youth. Her confidence in the spiritual realities and in the triumph of moral principles had not grown by the breath of popular applause, and did not sink in seasons of reaction or flagging faith around her. The bright and joyous spirit which triumphed over pain and trial was with her to the last. She "lived by admiration, hope, and love."

P. H. W.

THOMAS HOYLE HOPE.

WE deeply regret to announce the death of Mr. T. H. Hope, of Chowbent. He passed away peacefully about 6.30 on Tuesday morning last at his residence, The Laburnums, Atherton, in the sixty-sixth year of his age. For four years past Mr. Hope had been in failing health. During the last three months his illness took a more acute form, and for some time he suffered greatly. Fortunately he was at length relieved of all his pain, which he had endured with wonderful patience, and for several days before his happy death he was, in mind and spirit, the Mr. Hope whom those have known who have known him in life at his best. He leaves a widow, three daughters, and three sons, two of the latter succeeding him in his legal profession, in the firm of Messrs. Hope and Garstang, of Atherton, Leigh, and Wigan. Born in 1834, of an old Chowbent stock, Mr. Hope was a typical Chowbenter, and few if any citizens of the township of Atherton did more in their life-time than he for the good government, the education, the sanitation, and the general advancement of the district. He was at one time an active member of the Board of Guardians, and a very active member of the Local Board until he became its solicitor. He was the President of the Liberal Association for the Leigh Parliamentary Division, which includes Atherton, and was a well-known speaker on many platforms, his speeches being all characterised by the high principles which governed all his thought and life.

But it was the Religious Faith we stand for that Mr. Hope most loved to help and serve. To this he was utterly devoted. His attachment to the old Chowbent Chapel (1722) was warm enough to kindle into enthusiasm almost the coldest and most indifferent man who came into contact with him. His knowledge of its history and of the older chapel (1645) was something remarkable. So thoroughly had he made himself acquainted, through books and documents of all kinds, with the personages of the past, who had been in any way connected with the chapel, that he could speak of them almost as if he had actually lived with them. Standing before the dark oak "three-decker" pulpit in the chapel, it was his delight to tell of the eminent men who had occupied it since "General" Wood's ministry in it (1722-1759), including such men as Dr. Priestley, Thomas Belsham, and John Taylor. With a stranger on a visit, or a party of young people from the Sunday-school, Mr. Hope would gladly go from tablet to tablet in the chapel, or from grave to grave in the chapel yard, and tell out of his ample stores of information, what he felt to be well worth knowing. He was accustomed to say that none of our chapels known to him was richer in historical associations than the Chowbent Chapel. For years, indeed, Mr. Hope had been accumulating material for a complete history of Chowbent, including its relations to our other chapels.

Mr. Hope, while health lasted, was a regular attender, morning and evening, every Sunday, at public worship. He was an extremely hard-working man, doing in ten years what ought to have taken him twenty, and yet he would often, even in later years, come also to the Sunday-school, and would take any class or give an address. He had great faith in our Sunday-school work. He was senior secretary of the chapel, and took a real interest in all the connected institutions. Recently he was Chairman of the Bolton District Sunday School Union, and was a member till his death of the Home Missionary College Committee. In our Lancashire churches, especially, Mr. Hope was well known. The characteristic speech he delivered at Monton, at the annual meeting of the Provincial Assembly of Lancashire and Cheshire, will not soon be forgotten by those who heard it. He was unanimously elected President a few years later, and though his health was failing then, his presidential address at Rochdale was a notable one. But Mr. Hope's best work for the Unitarian body, next to his regular work at Chowbent, was done as Chairman of the North and East Lancashire Unitarian Mission within the last two or three years. Those who best know the critical circumstances through which he strongly and wisely steered the Mission, will not forget his real nobility. Even those who at first did not agree with him, in that crisis learned to trust him, to esteem him, to own him right, and, as their letters, which were a great solace to him, testify, they learned to love him too.

Strong in his own faith and in his own intellectual conclusions, he was a man of great sympathy, and of the uttermost catholicity of spirit. Month by month, by request, he contributed a page of Notes on Ecclesiastical History to the Atherton Parish Church Magazine; and it was quite a common thing for him to go and read Services of Song at the various Non-conformist Churches in Atherton. He delighted in this unity of spirit.

His work is done. His work was good. He leaves a heritage of character to his family, and an example to all Unitarian laymen. His nature was deeply religious, truly Christian. Towards men he might seem independent, towards God he was at a little child.

J. J. W.

JOHN SHACKLETON MATHERS.

A STRENUOUS life of great public usefulness and of earnest service in our religious community was brought to a close at daybreak on Friday, Nov. 3, by the death of Mr. John Shackleton Mathers, of Leeds. For some years his health had been uncertain, and latterly he suffered from an internal malady which rendered a severe operation necessary. With characteristic cheerfulness and courage Mr. Mathers set his house in order, arranging papers connected with the various trusteeships he held, and with his public work, and after the operation, for twelve days hopefully waited within sight of death for life, for life was sweet to him. "I am going to pull through," he said. "The Father has yet more work for me to do." Surely he was right—more work, but in some other sphere.

Mr. Mathers was born at Leeds on Oct. 24, 1844. His father was a member of the Society of Friends; by heredity and early association the quiet ways and inwardness of that people left their influences with him. He loved quietude, and kept a reverent ear for the voices within. Quite early in his life he became a scholar in Sion School, a large undenominational Sunday and day school, in which Unitarians were well represented. When an attempt was made to seize the school by the evangelical section of its management, his uncle, Joseph Shackleton, with others, one Sunday morning, the schools having been closed against the Unitarians, had the lock broken and the doors forced open. Ever since the school has kept on the even tenor of its way, though unable in changed times to maintain its former position of great numerical success and of municipal and political influence.

A little later Mr. Mathers became a teacher, then superintendent, in the Holbeck Domestic Mission Sunday-school, and a regular worshipper at the services. What he did he did wisely, thoroughly, earnestly. It is not, therefore, to be wondered at that he exercised great power and influence among the youth of the Mission at that time. He taught, he entertained at his home, he led in country walks, games, dramatic performances, himself painting the scenery, and gave himself and his belongings in sympathy and brotherliness to the young life that gathered about him, and who so readily responded to his call and lead. How cherished and sweet such memories are to the men and women who are to-day the mainstays of Holbeck Chapel is told again and again just now with heavy hearts and tearful eyes. The congregation will keep his memory green for many years to come, for they cannot forget how he laboured to perfect the plans of their handsome new chapel and commodious schools, how unweariedly he worked to secure the necessary funds, how generous his own giving was, how well he advised in the negotiations resulting in the independence of the congregation, and how he has filled, and with what conspicuous ability, every office in connection with the congregation's life and activity. He seldom missed service at Mill Hill Chapel in the morning, and was a member of the Chapel Committee at his death, but his work was done at Holbeck.

His interest and work were concentrated on, not confined to, one congregation. A man of such fine business powers, good judgment, experience of affairs, rare methodical habits in all he undertook, quick sympathy and warm-heartedness, was sure to be much sought after by the surrounding congregations, and by our various associations, and so his name is found on many trusts and committees. He was a trustee of the chapels at Holbeck, Malton, and Whitby. Having family connections with Malton, he has always taken a deep interest in the congregation there, and a few years ago he, at his own expense, re-pewed and decorated the chapel. Up to the time almost of his death, he was very actively engaged on matters of business, arising out of the Whitby Chapel Trust. He was a faithful member of the Executive of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, at the meetings of which his intimate knowledge of the Yorkshire group of churches served them in good stead: though then weak and suffering he went up to London to attend the last meeting preliminary to the Council. He had a seat on the Committee of the National Conference, and will be sorely missed by the surviving members, who relied much on his experience and business capacity. When the Conference held its meetings in Leeds twelve years ago, the success of the arrangements was due to his remarkable organising powers more than to the work of any other single person.

The Yorkshire Unitarian Union will suffer a great loss by his going. He was for two years its President, and a member of its Committee for many years. His knowledge of the outlying churches was remarkable, giving great weight to his advice in matters of business as between them and the Union. In former years the Yorkshire Sunday School Union enlisted his interest, and he was for some time its Secretary. He was particularly fond of attending the annual meetings of these various associations, and of taking with him some members of his family. Few men are so well known amongst the Yorkshire congregations as he was. He was some years ago President of the Home Missionary Board, at the time when by designation the Board became a College.

In his wanderings up and down the country for health or holiday he never failed to be present at the service of the Unitarian Chapel if there happened to be one near; and if it was a lonely post, he always made a point of having a friendly chat with the minister, and in earlier days would often occupy a pulpit himself in case of need. Many a minister, and many a friend, too, will recall the warm welcome—the kindly hospitality of his home.

Mr. Mathers commenced his business career in the office of the Leeds Provincial Building Society, in Albion-street, and when still a young man was appointed manager, in succession to Mr. John Kershaw, the founder of the society. From this position he retired in 1893.

For a lengthened period Mr. Mathers took a prominent part in the public life of Leeds. He was first elected a member of the Corporation by the burgesses of Holbeck Ward in November, 1869, and served for various terms as councillor and alderman. As chairman of the Free Public Library Committee he rendered valuable service in organising that institution. As a member of the Waterworks Committee, he devoted much time and thought to the development of the scheme which has given Leeds one of the best water supplies in the country. Always a vigorous politician, Mr. Mathers was for twenty years one of the secretaries of the Leeds Liberal Association, and in more recent years he was a hard-working member of the General Council of the National Liberal Federation. With Sir James Kitson and Sir Wemyss Reid, he took a leading part in the organisation of Mr. Gladstone's famous victory in 1880, when the great statesman was returned for Leeds by an overwhelming majority.

As a magistrate, Mr. Mathers was assiduous in the discharge of his duties. He took great interest in the affairs of New Wortley, which he represented for several years on the Bramley Board of Guardians, and since 1869 he has occupied the post of chairman of the New Wortley Burial Board. Mr. Mathers was a Fellow of the Society of Arts, and also a Fellow of the Statistical Society.

This friend of so many people and causes was a man of strong, clear brain; his heart was warm and tender; he had strongly the emotion of religion, which exalted and illumined his ideals, making him strong in life, brave and serene in death.

The funeral at the New Wortley Cemetery on Monday was a marvellous demonstration of public regard and sympathy. There were present the Lord Mayor of Leeds, Sir James Kitson, Bart., M.P., Mr. T. R. Leuty, M.P., the magistrates of the city, many deputations from public bodies and a great concourse of friends. The service was conducted by the Rev. Charles Hargrove, who delivered an impressive address on the character and work of the deceased. If a man's worth may be measured by the sense of pain and loss at his departure, then Mr. Mathers' life was worthy indeed.

JOHN MAHLER.

MANY friends in Liverpool and in a wider circle will have heard with sorrow of the death of Mr. John Mahler, at Sudworth, New Brighton. With great courage and patience he had for months suffered from a very painful illness, and with a marvellous tenacity of hope his eager spirit fought through the bitter fight. When on Sunday morning the end came, there could only be great thankfulness for him in his release.

A native of Switzerland, Mr. Mahler was born in 1833 at Zürich. Before coming to this country he spent some little time in Italy, but in 1855 settled in Liverpool, and as an iron merchant established the business firm which bears his name. Coming as a stranger to the town, he asked one Sunday morning to be directed to a Presbyterian chapel, and was meant to find his way to the Scottish church in the neighbourhood of Renshaw-street. But a happy fortune led him into another Renshaw-street chapel, where at that time the Rev. W. H. Channing was preaching, and there he found what he felt at once to be very much better. From that time until his death Mr. Mahler remained a faithful member of the Renshaw-street congregation, coming thus under the influence not only of Mr. Channing, but of the Rev. J. H. Thom during the second period of his ministry, and of the Rev. Charles Beard. When Mr. Mahler, a good many years ago, went to live across the river at New Brighton, he and his family became connected also with the Liscard Congregational Church, and enjoyed the intimate friendship of the Rev. J. H. Gwyther, the minister of that church. It was in keeping with the broad sympathies and the earnest Christian spirit which ruled in Mr. Mahler's life, that Mr. Gwyther and Dr. Klein should take part together in the memorial service on Tuesday at the Anfield Crematorium.

A life uneventful in quiet diligence, in the grace of a genuine modesty and sympathy with all noble ends, does not demand an elaborate record, and these words are written chiefly in grateful memory of a generous, affectionate, and blameless life, of which the influence has been none the less beneficent and quickening, because unobserved of the world. How true was Mr. Mahler's generosity, and how deep his sympathy with the poor and suffering, is best known to those who were nearest to him; one instance ought to be recorded, in his provision ten years ago for the establishment and maintenance of a Home for orphan girls, which he gave into the charge of his eldest daughter. This he gave, and provided that the good work should be continued, both for the sake of the hapless little ones, and for those who should be the better for that trust put into their hands. An unobtrusive helper of many good causes, of public charities, of education and social amelioration, Mr. Mahler has left the most precious memories to those who were admitted to the intimacy of his own home. There they best learnt to know not only his warm-hearted friendliness, the many interests of a cultivated taste, his delight in all beautiful things, and his love of music, but the strength of his loyalty to all that is good and true, to the hope of progress for mankind, and the ideal of a pure and noble life which he quietly cherished and earnestly followed. Through the deep waters his brave and tender spirit has now passed, to where beyond these voices there is peace. His friends are the better for having known him.

NOTES FROM CALCUTTA.

Calcutta, Oct. 12, 1899.

CALCUTTA is now emerging from seven or eight weeks' experience of being damped and stewed in a sort of combination of steam-laundry and heated oven. The Government of India, unable to use its brains under the intensely close, moist, oppressive heat—compared with which the "dog-days" in England may be said to present several degrees of cold—still remains at Simla. It will return to Calcutta in November or December, and by March or April next year its powers will again have become exhausted, and it will migrate to the hills. It would seem that eight months in Simla are required to enable it to undergo four months' work in the plains of Bengal. Those brain-workers who are not highly-placed Government officials have to gird up their loins as best they can under the burden of Calcutta's summer sultriness. The Professors and students at the local Colleges must often feel faint and weary. I know some little of it; but those who are teaching and studying day by day in a bath of moist heat, with not a breath of air stirring, not so much as the leaf of a tree being moved, are endowed with a devotion to duty which contrasts with the "necessity" of the Government in escaping to Simla. But, at last, relief has come even to them; and with the advent of a great national festival in October the Colleges are closed for five weeks. The thirst for education grows. It is said that the student community in Calcutta is larger than ever this year, and numbers probably fifteen or sixteen thousand of young fellows from all parts of Bengal and other provinces.

During the second half of the year Brahmoism has lost several representative men. Some of these were venerable men who came to their grave like as a shock of corn cometh in its season. Others were younger men of marked promise. Of the former, Rajnarayan Bose was the most influential. He was the venerable President of the Adi Brahmo Somaj, and is described as "a great and saintly man," whose name has been a household word in Brahmo circles for upwards of forty years. All the Brahmo papers speak of him in terms of reverent appreciation, as an English scholar and powerful writer, as one who imparted to the Brahmo movement warmth of love and fervour of devotion, as the head and centre of many liberal and reformatory movements at Midnapur, as a charming personality whose company was sought by Brahmos, orthodox Hindus, Christians, Mahomedans, Agnostics, and indeed by all classes. The Lahore Tribune gives this estimate of him:—

He was one of His servants, sent to our help by the Lord, in this age of transition, to show us the way, in our bewildered wanderings in search after standards. He was a scholar, thinker, author, and reformer, but above all he was a saint. His beautiful life was one divine sermon.

Among the younger active Brahmos who are now no more may be named Babu Balendranath Tagore, grandson of Maharshi Debendranath Tagore. He has been removed from earthly scenes and companionships by an untimely death, perhaps because, as Tennyson came to feel of his friend, Arthur Hallam, God has need of his powers of usefulness in other spheres.

So many worlds, so much to do,
So little done, such things to be,
How know I what had need of thee?
For thou wert strong as thou wert true.

It is the universal testimony that Balendranath Tagore's spirit was of ethereal mould, and that he breathed forth airs of heaven wherever he went. Latterly he had thrown himself with great ardour into a laudable attempt to affect a union between the Adi and the Arya Samajes. He has been called away to "where beyond these voices there is peace" before his well-intentioned effort has had time to take root. Of the other Brahmos of mark who have recently passed beyond the veil I need not speak. Each of them was a power for good: some of them have stamped their image on the community in which they lived.

Some of my Brahmo friends here are in a pessimistic mood, and ask, Where are the successors of these men to come from? I reply, Where they came from. I do not share the apprehensions of the fearful of heart. If Brahmoism be of God, He will not fail to raise up witnesses to it. Ram Mohan Roy appeared at a time when no one was looking for such a captain of salvation. Keshub Chunder Sen was raised up unexpectedly, and with scarcely any other equipment than the supreme equipment of the direct vision of God, the prophet's soul of fire. Who knows what spirits the future may bring forth touched with the hallowed fire of God's altar? My Brahmo friends, be not faithless, but believing! But why look for men of almost superhuman powers of heart and mind? If they come, there will be ample room for them; but if they do not come, will the wheels of progress be stayed? It is the duty of every individual Brahmo, instead of waiting for a leader to show him the way, to be faithful to the uttermost in his own limited sphere. It may be that in the future of Brahmoism, as in the early history of Christianity, not many mighty, not many noble, will be called, but that God will choose the weak things of the world to confound the mighty. Speak to the children of Brahmoism that they go forward! Above all, that they go forward to revive the lofty and deep tone of spirituality, the radiant purity of life, the harmony of conduct and profession, the unity of spirit, which gave to Brahmoism its original power, and which won for it respect even where it did not gain adhesion.

The celebration of the sixty-sixth anniversary of the death of Raja Ram Mohan Roy drew together a crowded audience in the large hall of the City College on September 27. Your correspondent had the honour—and he regarded it as a great honour—of presiding over this immense gathering. The gratifying feature of it was its widely representative character. I do not know whether any orthodox Christians were present; but there were representatives of Hinduism, Judaism, Mahomedanism, and of the several forms of Brahmoism. The speakers dwelt mainly on the virtues which characterised the Raja's life, and emphatically on the essence of his religious teaching, in which he inculcated the fundamental and permanent unities under all types of religious belief. It was claimed for him that he was the first religious teacher of India to enunciate in clear terms the essential unity of all religions, in spite of the differences in their origin, growth, and ceremonial parts. Mr. A. M. Bose took a wider range; spoke of the Raja as a versatile genius who had not his equal in ancient or modern India, and described him as the completest man who was ever born in India, who in every field of work, literary, social, political, or religious, stood as a towering figure not approached by anybody else. But, as I have said, the notable characteristic of the meeting was the union of Hindus, Jews, and Mahomedans to their tribute of reverence to one whose life and teaching were an illustration and embodiment of the ministry of reconciliation. As the Indian Messenger says:—"It was a beautiful sight to see the descendants of those who were the greatest opponents of the Raja during his lifetime assembled to pay homage to the greatest man that modern India has produced." Ah! if only the same spirit were manifested towards the living advocates of religious and social reforms in India as is now manifested towards the life, character, and work of Ram Mohan Roy, what might not be achieved in this country! But it is the way of mankind everywhere and in all ages—it requires the touch of death to quench all dissonances in meeting harmonies, and the perspective of time to see prophets and reformers in their true proportions.

Professor Max Müller has recently addressed to the Rev. P. C. Mozoomdar a letter which has been reproduced in nearly all the leading journals of India. The Indian Witness, a Calcutta orthodox paper, describes it as "perhaps the most remarkable appeal ever issued to the people of India." The organs of Brahmoism praise its generous and liberal spirit, coming from one who is a true friend of India, and who has done more than any other to spread among Englishmen a knowledge of the sacred literature of India. But they do not hesitate to reject its author's counsel. Professor Max Müller, taking the term Christ as the designation of a spirit as well as the name of a historic person, affirms that, in his view, Brahmos are already Christianised; and, aware that some of them, like Mr. Mozoomdar, call themselves disciples of Christ, he appeals to all Brahmos to declare themselves definitely on the side of Christianity, and to do this by joining the Church of England! For Brahmos to adopt this latter course would be to turn their backs upon their past, to stultify themselves, to lose their individuality, and to give the support of their adhesion to an institution whose Creeds and Articles run counter to their deepest and most characteristic convictions. What affinity is there between Brahmoism and the Nicene Creed, the Athanasian Creed, and the orthodox doctrines of the Thirty-Nine Articles? Not only no affinity but such antagonism that in the Athanasian Creed the Church of England pronounces that those noble Theists, Nanak and Chaitanyo, those seers of Brahmoism, Ram Mohan Roy and Keshub Chunder Sen, and all departed Brahmos, have been condemned to perish everlastingly. Professor Max Müller is perfectly conscious of the incongruity; but he is significantly silent on the Creeds and Articles of the Church of which he describes himself "a devoted member." He refers, however, to the "scapegoat" doctrine of the Atonement, concerning which he says that, with many other honest Christians, he feels exactly as Brahmos feel; but as this is "the view of certain theologians but not of the Gospels," there is nothing in it which should prevent Brahmos from uniting with the Church of England "as lay members." The answer to this from Brahmos here is, naturally—first, convert your own Church, its ministers and missionaries, to your own conceptions; free it from the Creeds which still bind it, and which would be a yoke and a burden to us; reform its services into line with your own broad, liberal Christianity, and then you may appeal more consistently and logically to us to affiliate with it! For myself, God forbid that I should judge the conscience of any man; but for many of us who are Unitarians, to follow the example of Professor Max Müller and join the Church of England, with its unreformed, distinctly Trinitarian, and sacerdotal Prayer Book, would be an act of disloyalty to our most cherished convictions. Brahmos here, if not for identical for equally fundamental reasons, feel the same; and hence Professor Max Müller pleads with them in vain. Above all things, even above liberal religion, they say, intellectual veracity! To which every Unitarian will respond, Amen and Amen!

S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.

A TRUE friend is one who makes us do what we can,—Phelps.

LONDON UNITARIAN BAZAAR.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee held on Wednesday evening, Nov. 1, it was evident that the determination to make the forthcoming Bazaar a success had lost nothing, but had rather gained in strength by the holiday season of rest from active effort. The members of the Committee, gathered in council under their leader, Dr. W. Blake Odgers, were full of enthusiasm, as well as of suggestions, as to the best methods for securing the largest amount of co-operation from our various churches. The King's Hall Rooms at the Holborn Restaurant have been secured for the bazaar, and already the ladies are making the necessary arrangements as to various stalls. The Entertainments' Committee have been busy at work, and their efforts have been productive of substantial financial results. The performance of Comus, in July last, was in every way a great success, about £38 being realised after all expenses were paid. The weather was ideal; and the grounds of Upper Heath, Hampstead, kindly lent for the occasion, were admirably adapted. A very hearty and unanimous resolution was passed by the Committee to Mr. and the Misses Lister for allowing the garden to be used for the performance, and for their extreme kindness and hospitality towards the performers and helpers.

And now arrangements are being made for the performance of Midsummer Night's Dream at a matinée on Tuesday, Jan. 16, at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, which has been generously placed at our disposal, free of all charge, by the proprietor, Mr. J. H. Leigh.

An interesting letter was read from the Secretary of the London Unitarian Welsh Services, showing that the Principality of Wales is not going to allow the opportunity to pass without doing what it can to contribute not only money, but articles of Welsh industry, &c. A lecture on "Welsh Proverbs" is to be delivered on the evening of Dec. 7, in Essex Hall, on behalf of the Bazaar Fund.

The interest felt in this effort to raise £12,000 is becoming somewhat "imperial," for an intimation has reached the Committee that India is anxious to contribute towards the Bazaar, and its practical sympathy will be welcomed very warmly.

In order that the poorer members of our congregations may have an opportunity of visiting the Bazaar, it has been decided to issue sale cards for 1d., 3d., 6d. and 1s., which will be supplied to the churches for sale, and to be exchanged for goods at the Bazaar.

The treasurer's report showed that about £3,200 had been promised. A full list of contributors is published in this week's INQUIRER.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Accrington.—On Sunday week anniversary services were held. In the morning there was a special service for young people, conducted by the Rev. W. H. Burgess, at which part of the service given at the close of "Hymns and Choral Songs" was used. The minister gave an address on "True Greatness," basing his remarks on Jeremiah v. 5, "I will get me unto the great men, and will speak unto them, for they know the way of the Lord and the judgment of their God." The subject was illustrated and enforced by a reference to the life and character of Alfred the Great, the thousandth anniversary of whose death (Oct. 25) had been reached the previous Wednesday. The afternoon and evening services were conducted by the Rev. A. Gordon, Manchester. In the afternoon the text was from Isaiah i., "Cease to do evil, learn to do well," and the plan which was followed by Christ of teaching those about him by force of example rather than by precept, was shown to be the only effective method whereby virtue could either be taught or learned. In the evening sermon on Revelation ii. 13, "Antipas my faithful martyr, who was slain among you," the lesson of fidelity to religious conviction was brought home by the recital of the story of Edward Wightman, the last of those who suffered death by burning for their religious opinions in England, his chief heresy being unsoundness on the doctrine of the Trinity. Special music was rendered by the choir at each service.

Birmingham: Small Heath.—Harvest thanksgiving services were held in October, and also the first anniversary services of the Waverley-road Church. The minister, the Rev. H. H. Johnson, recently published a sermon on "The Moral of the Dreyfus Case," and would be glad to publish a series of weekly sermons in the interests of liberal religion, if he were assured of sufficient support. The Church now prints a monthly Calendar, embodying the Seed-Sower.

Boston.—The second of the re-opening services in the Unitarian Chapel, Spain-lane, was held last Sunday evening, Nov. 5, when the Rev. W. C. Pope, of Lewisham, preached a sermon on "Religion and a Correct Life." Upwards of eighty persons were present. In the afternoon Mr. Pope also gave an address to the men's P.S.A. Society, on "Faithfulness," which was much appreciated by the 300 members present.

Braintree.—On Sunday week the Rev. R. H. Fuller preached in the Free Christian Church a sermon in memory of the late Sydney Courtauld, J.P. The text was Acts x. 23, "A just man and one that feared God," and in the course of his sermon Mr. Fuller spoke of Mr. Courtauld as one who was marked by a conspicuous love of fairness, a transparent justice of intention and prompt and courageous expression of it. He was thorough in all he did, as a business man, as a horticulturist, a musician, a magistrate, a Councillor; and in all these things he was at the service of others. He was just to the opinions of others, while staunch in holding his own. His generosity had been abundant, but never careless.

Central Postal Mission and Unitarian Workers' Union.—A very successful summer excursion soirée was held at Essex Hall on the evening of Friday, Nov. 3, when a large number of those who had joined the delightful Pink parties at Grindelwald during the summer were welcomed by Miss Tagart, Mrs. H. Rutt, Miss Florence Hill, and other helpers. During the evening a large number of Swiss views, many of them of great beauty, and some humorous reminiscences of the holiday, were shown with a lantern by Mr. Shrubsole, Mr. Cosens Prior, Mr. C. Fenton, and others. An address was also given by Miss Tagart, who mentioned that many letters had been received expressing great delight at the holiday. One letter had been from Mr. J. P. Schmidt, of Southend, whose recent death was a great trouble to them, and would be a great loss to the Southend congregation. Those summer excursions were planned, not merely to afford a pleasant holiday, which could be got through other agencies, but to bring people together from different congregations, to help them, and especially the young people, to realise what their common faith ought to be to them, to awaken fresh interest and to take counsel as to work in different parts of the country. In the previous year they had made a profit of over £70, part of which had been set aside as a reserve fund and the rest used for missionary work. In the present year they had reduced the charge, and had heavier expenses, so that there was a small deficit, met from the reserve fund. The collections at the last four services amounted to £6 3s, a good part of which had been used for the re-opening of Boston Chapel. There had been 146 persons in the three parties, and over £1,000 had passed through the managers' hands, so that the work had been laborious. But it had been very willingly done.

Chowbent, Astley, and Leigh, Lancashire.—A united congregational party consisting of members of the three Unitarian congregations named above, was held at Leigh on Saturday, Nov. 4. Tea was served in the school-room at 4.30, and at 6.30 a meeting was held in the church. The object of the party was to encourage good feeling and sympathy among the members of these different congregations, which are near enough together to help each other in their common work. At the meeting held in the church the chair was taken by Mr. Thos. Harwood, of Bolton, and addresses were delivered by the Chairman, the Revs. J. J. Wright, P. Holt, and A. H. Dolphin, the ministers of the three churches represented. A good programme of music and song had been provided by Mr. Frank Eckersley and the members of his choir, and one and all felt that the meeting, which is one of a series, had been a very helpful one, and had accomplished much in the direction the promoters had in view in organising the party.

Devonport.—On Wednesday, Nov. 1, an induction service was held on the occasion of the Rev. E. Sharp, recently a curate of the Church of England, entering on his duties as minister at Christ Church. The Rev. Philip H. Wicksteed, M.A., who was assisted by the Rev. J. Barron, of Tavistock, conducted the service, and delivered an impressive and eloquent charge to the minister, whom he formally welcomed to the Unitarian ranks. Mr. Wicksteed's address will not soon be forgotten by those who were privileged to hear it. Mr. Barron, in conclusion, addressed the congregation, dwelling upon the ideal relationship between church and pastor. The attendance was good, among those present being several friends from Plymouth. A social evening to welcome Mr. Sharp to Devonport will be held on Nov. 29.

Dowlais.—Harvest festival services were held here on Sunday, Oct. 29, when the pulpit was occupied by the Rev. T. J. Jenkins, Gellionen, morning and evening, and the Rev. J. Hathren Davies, Cefr, in the afternoon. The church was very prettily decorated for the occasion, and in spite of the unpropitious weather large congregations were present throughout the day. The annual tea-party in connection with the church took place on Thursday afternoon, Oct. 19, and was as largely attended as in former years.

Eastbourne.—The largest gathering we have had in our room, assembled on Monday night, to hear the Rev. Geo. St. Clair's illustrated lecture on the "Coming Star-shower." The lecture was purely scientific, and attracted some leading residents from different churches. The admission was by ticket, price sixpence. The good attendance was the more remarkable, as Eastbourne was keeping carnival in continental fashion, and many ladies were afraid to pass through the streets. The chair was taken by the Rev. John Taylor, of Enys-road, who expressed his gratification with this astronomical lecture, and his hope that Mr. St. Clair would remain long enough in the town to favour them with geological lectures also. The previous week the newspapers gave some prominence to Mr. St. Clair's sermon on "Social Reform."

Godalming.—On Nov. 1 and 2 a conversation and bazaar were held in the Meadow School-room, to raise funds, among other things, for the much-needed renovation of the schools. The stalls were attractively decorated, and short entertainments were given at intervals, comprising conjuring, by Mr. Sidney O'dridge, of London; songs by the Masters Hardy, of Guildford; and selections by the School String Band. Including donations, the sum realised will, it is hoped, amount to over £25. An illustrated souvenir was published for the occasion, a few copies of which may still be had on application to the secretary, Mr. S. R. Verstage, price 6d. each. The Committee wish to sincerely thank all those who so generously came to their assistance in this effort on behalf of the school.

Leeds.—Collections were made last Sunday at Mill Hill on behalf of the Red Cross Society. The morning congregation contributed £130 2s. 6d., the Sunday-school at the afternoon service £1 11s. 2d., and the evening congregation 46 17s. 1d., a total of £138 10s. 9d. The Rev. C. Hargrove was the preacher.

Liverpool: The Unitarian Institute.—The annual meeting was held in the Lecture-hall of the Institute, 3, Sandon-terrace, on Thursday, Nov. 2, the President, Mr. W. B. Browning, in the chair. There was only a small attendance of members, and after the usual business the following resolution was moved by the President:—"That as the new buildings in connection with the Hope-street and Uilest-road Churches will serve the purposes for which the Unitarian Institute has been chiefly used, it is the opinion of the members that the Institute should be closed next summer by the trustees, in accordance with clause 7 of the constitution." Some discussion followed, Miss E. Cooke and other members speaking of the great help the Institute had been in carrying on work connected with the local churches during the last ten years, and as a bond of union for the various congregations. Mr. L. Hall proposed that a room should be engaged somewhere and kept up as a library and reading-room; this was generally approved by those present, and the President having promised that the suggestion should be carefully considered, the original resolution was carried nem. con. Mr. Bowring was re-elected president, Mr. C. Sydney Jones treasurer, and Mr. A. W. Hall secretary.

London: Mansford-street Church and Mission.—On Wednesday, 1st inst., about 110 past and present teachers and scholars gathered in the school-room to renew old acquaintances. The room had been daintily decorated with coloured foliage, kindly sent by Miss Smith, of Ascot; and by cut flowers provided by the kindness of Mrs. Squire and Miss E. J. Garrett. At 8.15 the Rev. W. G. Cadman offered the visitors a hearty welcome on behalf of the present teachers, and conveyed a greeting from our dear old friend, the Rev. C. L. Cokran. After the secretary had read a letter from Mrs. C. H. Waid, and had made an appeal on behalf of the "Poor's Purse" (with an unusually poor result), the company adjourned for refreshments. A musical programme followed, and the thirty-second annual gathering was brought to a close by the singing of the customary hymn and the Benediction.

Manchester: Bradford.—On Monday, Oct. 29, the Sunday-school anniversary services were held in the Public Hall. In the afternoon a lantern service was held, conducted by the Rev. J. J. Wright, who also preached in the evening. These will probably be the last anniversary services to be held in the old place, as the new church is nearing completion and will be ready for occupation, it is hoped, before Easter. The Sunday-school has grown rapidly, and is now one of the finest in the district, and the work generally is progressing very favourably in the hands of the resident minister, the Rev. W. E. Atack, with the hearty co-operation of the officers and congregation of the church and school.

Manchester: Oldham-road.—At the annual communion service last Sunday evening, the minister the Rev. W. Reynolds, B.A., preached on "The Communion Service, Ritualistic and Rational."

Newbury (Appointment).—The Rev. Ephraim Turland has accepted an invitation to the pulpit of the Presbyterian Chapel.

Shrewsbury.—On Sunday week special services were held in the High-street Chapel in celebration of the 203rd anniversary of the congregation and for harvest thanksgiving. The Rev. J. C. Street was the preacher morning and evening, and in the afternoon addressed the children of the Sunday-school. At the morning service he spoke of the history of the congregation, going back to 1662, as the oldest Nonconformist Church in Shrewsbury, representing the spirit of the two thousand who came out into the wilderness for the sake of the church of righteousness. Special hymns and an anthem were sung. The collection was on behalf of the choir fund. There were good congregations.

Stalybridge.—The annual sermons were held on Sunday, Oct. 22, the Rev. H. E. Dowson being the preacher morning and evening, and the Rev. Charles Oliver in the afternoon, special hymns being sung by the scholars, under the direction of Mr. Evan Greenwood. The church was crowded at each service, and the collections were the largest taken for several years. The annual party of parents and teachers was held on Oct. 23, when 200 sat down to tea. Mr. W. Thompson, one of the directors of the Sunday-school, presided over the meeting. During the proceedings the Rev. W. Harrison gave an address and distributed the certificates to the successful students of the examinations, conducted by the Manchester District Sunday-school Associations. He congratulated the school on holding the first place in the examinations, a position which they had held for many years. Eighty had sat and seventy-five had been successful. The examinations were not everything, but they represented "something accomplished, something done." He should have been content with a lower position, but now that they had won the first he hoped they would maintain it. The Rev. W. C. Hall also addressed the meeting. On Sunday morning, Nov. 5, the Rev. W. Harrison preached a sermon in commemoration of the completion of eleven years' ministry, and the longest ministry of the church, from the text, "Days should speak, and years should teach wisdom." He reminded the congregation of the changes which had taken place since his settlement among them, and impressed upon them the duty of leaving to those who came after them a noble example of worship and service. Mr. Harrison is at present delivering evening discourses on "The Land where Jesus lived," giving his impressions of Palestine during his visit in the spring of the present year.

Styal and Dean Row.—We regret to learn that the Rev. John Felstead has felt himself obliged, in consequence of ill-health, to resign the pastorate of the combined congregations of Norcliffe Chapel, Styal, and Dean-row, Cheshire. His resignation will take effect at the end of the present year.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, November 12.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Bermondsey, Fort-road, Upper Grange-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. HAROLD RYLETT.
 Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, Sunday-school Anniversary, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. JELLIE, B.A., Minister-elect of New Zealand.
 Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE.
 Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS.
 Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.
 Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
 Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. WOODS PERRIS.
 Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A., and 7 P.M.
 Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Revs. BROOKE HERFORD, D.D., and EDGAR DAPLYN. Minister's Class after Morning Service.
 Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.
 Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. DAVES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D.
 Kentish Town, Free Christian Church, Clarence-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. A. FARQUHARSON. Morning, "A Living Sacrifice." Evening, "The Value of Words."
 Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. STRONGE.
 Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. C. POPE.
 Little Portland-street Chapel, near Oxford-circus, 11 A.M., Rev. STOPPORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D., and 7 P.M., Rev. F. H. JONES.
 Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, M.A., "The Kingdom of Heaven."
 Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. CARTER. Musical Evening.
 Plumstead, Common road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.
 Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., and 3 P.M., Service for Children, Rev. S. FARRINGTON.
 Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M., Mr. LUCKING TAVENER, and 7 P.M., Mr. T. ELLIOT, "What Unitarians believe about Christ."
 Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.
 Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M., Mr. A. B. MIDLANE, and 6.30 P.M., Mr. L. TAVENER.
 Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
 Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. S. ANTHONY, M.A., B.D.
 BEDFORD, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. ROWLAND HILL.
 BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
 BLACKPOOL, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. BINNS.
 BLACKPOOL, Unitarian Lay Church, Masonic Hall, Waterloo-road, South Shore, 6.30 P.M.
 BOOTLE, Free Church, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. W. HAWKES.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. COE.
 BRIGHTON, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road, North-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. H. S. PERRIS, M.A.
 BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. GEORGE STREET.
 CANTERBURY, Blackfriars, 11 A.M.
 DEAL and WALMER Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. SHAKESPEARE.
 DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 1 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, B.A.
 EASTBOURNE, Lismore-road, Terminus-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. ST. CLAIR.
 GUILDFORD, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. S. LANG BUCKLAND.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. MARTEN.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.
 LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M., Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. COBLEN SMITH.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. J. JUPP.
 LIVERPOOL, Uilet-road, Sefton Park, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. KLIN. Evening, "The Relation of Unitarian Christianity to the Bible; with some Reference to other Sacred Books."
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. FORREST.
 MANCHESTER, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
 MARGATE, Forester's Hall (Side Entrance), Union-crescent, 11 A.M., Rev. E. A. HILLIER.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. W. E. ADDIS, M.A.
 PORTSMOUTH, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. THOMAS BOND.
 PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. COSENS PRIOR.
 RAMSGATE, Assembly Rooms, High-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. A. HILLIER.
 READING, Unitarian Free Church, London-road, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. BURROWS, of Dover.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. WELBELOVED.
 SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. R. C. DENDY. Stables in the grounds.
 TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. E. M. EDWARDS.
 YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. RAWLINGS, M.A.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant Unitarian Church, Hout-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY,
 STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN-SQUARE, S.W.—Nov. 12th, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "The Revolt of English Liberal Catholics against the Roman Policy in the Dreyfus Case."

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. W. STODDART, B.A., is at LIBERTY to take occasional Sunday duty.—30, West Bank, Stamford-hill, London, N.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D. DAVIS, Fairfield High School, Liverpool.

DEATHS.

HINGSTON—On the 6th Nov., at "Parkfield," Park Hill-rise, Croydon, Charles Levi Hingston, aged 72. No flowers, by request.
 MATHERS—On Friday morning, the 3rd Nov., at Hanover House, Leeds, John Shackleton Mather, aged 55 years.
 SWANWICK—On the 2nd Nov., at Tunbridge Wells, after a very short illness, Anna Swanwick, LL.D., of 23, Cumberland-terrace, Regent's Park.
 WRAGG—On the 19th Oct., at Stonegraves, Chesterfield, Charles Wragg, aged 66 years.

Schools, etc.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
SOUTH MARINE TERRACE,
ABERYSTWITH.

PRINCIPAL ... MRS. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

HINDHEAD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

PRINCIPALS—Miss J. F. GRUNER (Certif. Student of Girton College), Moorcroft, Hindhead, Surrey.

Miss MACRAE MOIR (Cambridge Higher Local), Lingholt, Hindhead, Surrey.

The aim of the School is to combine the advantages of a good Boarding School with a thorough Education and healthy outdoor life. Girls may be prepared for College-entrance and other examinations.

The district of Hindhead is one of the healthiest parts of England, and much recommended by doctors for its bracing air and gravel soil.

Miss MOIR receives ten boarders in a thoroughly well-built modern house, with southern aspect. Great attention is paid to healthful conditions of life. References allowed to parents of present and past pupils.

Terms for Board and Education on application to the Principals.

THE WARREN, KNUTSFORD.

PRINCIPAL:

Mrs. W. CARRINGTON WHITELEGGE.

Excellent individual TUITION and Home Care for the daughters of cultivated parents who would appreciate unusual advantages for Music and Languages.

HOUSEMAID (thorough). Could take charge of house: London or suburbs; good references; age 38.—C. M., Tonge House, York-road, West Norwood, S.E.

WANTED, by a young GENTLEMAN, age 20, a situation as SECRETARY, CLERK, or AMANUENSIS, or any capacity in which he could be usefully employed and reserve some time for study. Small salary only, with board and lodging or its equivalent. References. Address—"HELP," 2, Gloucester-row, Weymouth.

COMPANIONSHIP TO LADY.—WANTED, by young lady; 25; music; reads well; some hospital practice. Apply—Rev. W. JELLIE, Ipswich.

SCOTCH TWEEDS and SERGES at Mill Prices, Ladies' or Gents'; best quality only. Patterns post free; orders carriage paid.—Geo. McLeod & Sons, Hawick, N.B.

Correspondents are requested to note that to be sure of insertion the same week, news must reach the Office by the first post on Thursday at latest, and the earlier in the week the better.

IT IS NOT
Reckitt's
PARIS Blue
 UNLESS RECKITT'S NAME IS ON THE WRAPPER.

PRELIMINARY ANNOUNCEMENT.

BRITISH & FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

The AUTUMNAL MEETING will be held at BRISTOL on TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY, Nov. 21 and 22.

Preacher, Rev. Professor CARPENTER, M.A., of Oxford; Supporter, Rev. JEFFERY WORTHINGTON, B.A., of Taunton.

Detailed arrangements in next week's issue.

UNITY CHURCH, UPPER STREET, ISLINGTON.

A Course of SIX ELEMENTARY LECTURES on "THE PHILOSOPHY OF KANT" (intended for Beginners) will be given in the School-room of the above Church by Dr. G. DAWES HICKS, commencing on THURSDAY, November 16th, and to be continued on Nov. 30, Dec. 14, Jan. 4 and 25, and Feb. 8.

To commence each Evening at 8 o'clock. Fee for whole course, 2s. 6d. (to defray expenses). Syllabus to be obtained at the door.

BLACKFRIARS MISSION AND STAMFORD-STREET CHAPEL.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY.

On NOVEMBER 12th, 1899, SERMONS will be preached by the Rev. WILLIAM JELLIE, B.A., Minister-elect for the new Unitarian Church, New Zealand.

Services commence at 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.

Collections will be in aid of the Funds.

R. WATERALE, Esq., Treasurer, Waddon.

NEWBURY PRESBYTERIAN CHAPEL RENOVATION FUND.

The Committee earnestly appeal for further subscriptions towards the above fund, and thankfully acknowledge the following:—

	£	s.	d.
Amount already advertised	103	6	7
Mr. W. Slatter, Brighton	1	0	0
Miss Travers, Bridport	0	10	0
The Provincial Assembly	15	0	0

Subscriptions should be sent to Mr. T. H. STILLMAN, 133, Bartholomew-street, Newbury.

BARTON-STREET CHAPEL, GLOUCESTER.

WALTER LLOYD, Minister.

A BAZAAR will be held in the Unitarian School-room, GLOUCESTER, in aid of the BICENTENARY FUND for the extinction of the Debt of £380, on WEDNESDAY and THURSDAY, Nov. 22nd and 23rd.

The Bazaar will be opened on the first day at 3 o'clock by CHARLES W. JONES, Esq., President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and on the second day by Mrs. ASHBE.

Contributions in Money or Goods will be thankfully received by

Mrs. WASHBOURNE, 40, Weston-road;
Mrs. WALTER LLOYD, The Hollies, Brook-st.;
or Mr. W. HORSLEY, Secretary, Weston-road, Gloucester.

The Treasurer begs to acknowledge the following contributions:—

	£	s.	d.
Amount previously acknowledged	158	18	0
R. N.	2	2	0
P. J. Worsley, Esq.	5	0	0
S. T. Gooden, Esq.	1	1	0

THE OLDHAM-ROAD UNITARIAN CONGREGATION, MANCHESTER. invite contributions of superfluous Clothing, &c., for their JUMBLE SALE, to be held NOV. 25th.

Address Parcels to Mrs. HAZLEWOOD, 299, Oldham-road, Manchester.

FREDK. LONG & SON, AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS
4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms moderate.—Mrs. ROBERT TURNER, 94, Grosvenor-road, S.W.

BOARD and RESIDENCE, South of England. Healthy neighbourhood. Home comforts. Seven miles from Brighton, near South Downs. Station Hassocks (on main line L.B.S.C.).—Miss ROWLAND, Gothic House, Hurstpierpoint.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Univalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea; sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address, Miss CHALDECOTT, Stirling House, Manor-road.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL

Proprietor,
FREDERIC SMITH.

This first-class Hotel, conducted on strictly Temperance principles, is commended by the Rev. C. Aked, Liverpool; Rev. Rowland Hill, Bedford; Rev. G. Vanco Smith, D.D., Bowden, Cheshire; Rev. J. C. Street, Birmingham; Rev. Charles A. Berry, D.D., Wolverhampton; Rev. Charles Garrett, Liverpool; Rev. Canon Howell, Wrexham; Rev. A. B. Grosart, LL.D., Blackburn; Dr. Norman Kerr, London, &c. Central, Quiet, Exceptionally Clean, Moderate in Charges. Spacious Coffee Rooms, Visitors' Drawing Rooms, Baths, &c. Breakfast or Tea, 1s. 3d. to 2s. Rooms, 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. Service, 9d. Printed Tariff on Application.

75, 77, 79, 97, 99, 101, 103, 105,
SOUTHAMPTON ROW, RUSSELL SQ., LONDON.

HOME FOR HEALTH CULTURE,
THE FIRS, BROMYARD, HEREFORDSHIRE

This Home provides a course of Systematic Daily Exercise, combined with regular outdoor life and occupation, for Ladies and Children who are not in normal health. The exercises are given in a Gymnasium fitted with Swedish apparatus, and consist of Ling's Swedish Movements. Special treatment is given for Spinal Curvature, Anæmia, Hysteria, Indigestion, Neuralgia, &c.

For further particulars, apply to The Principal Miss JESSIE BAKER, (trained by Mme. Berguon, Osterberg).

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.

Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21 Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W.

F. H. A. HARCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.
Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, 151, Brixton-road, S.W., and Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made Monthly repayment, including principal, premium and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years, 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.; 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

Will make a SUITABLE CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

(Ready towards end of the month).

A NIGHT WITH JESUS.

A DREAM STORY.

By J. L. HAIGH.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

(Special terms to all engaged in Domestic Mission Work).

LIVERPOOL BOOKSELLERS' COMPANY, LIMITED,
70, Lord-street, Liverpool.

HOPE-STREET CHURCH JUBILEE.

A FULL REPORT of the PROCEEDINGS, including the SERMONS preached by the Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., and the Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A.,

Reprinted from "The Inquirer,"

Can be obtained from the Liverpool Booksellers' Co., Ltd., 70, Lord-street, Liverpool.

Price 3½d. post free.

THE MILL HILL PULPIT.

A Monthly Sermon by

Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., Leeds.

November Number.—"THE NOVEMBER METEORS." Price 1d. Annual subscription, 1s. 6d. post free.

Apply, Essex Hall, or CHAS. STAINER, 82, Ravenswood-terrace, Hyde Park, Leeds.

THE ETHICAL WORLD.

EDITED BY DR. STANTON COIT and

J. A. HOBSON, M.A.

Articles on Important Social Questions, Education &c. from a purely ethical standpoint Children's Page.

TWOPENCE WEEKLY.

Office: 17, Johnson's-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

New and Revised Edition of

Prayers for the Use of Christian Families

By JOHN SCOTT PORTER.

Limp cloth, 6d.; boards, 9d.

May be obtained at Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, London, and at the Depository, 35, Rosemary-street, Belfast.

Also New and Revised Edition of

THE CHILD'S GUIDE TO CHRIST

(A Scripture Catechism for Young People).

6d. per dozen, from 35, Rosemary-street, Belfast.

The fact that a New Edition of each of the above works has been called for speaks for itself.

HYMNS for CHRISTIAN CHURCH and HOME. The Evesham congregation having adopted Leeds edition of Berwick Hymnal, has copies of H. for C. C. and H. to dispose of. Three sizes. Half and quarter price, according to condition.—Apply, Rev. R. DAVIS, Hopefield, Evesham.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK

SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

TWO AND A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS of minimum monthly balance, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift, the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest Monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY,
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANAC, Post free on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

London Permanent Chapel Building Fund

An Appeal to Unitarians to assist in raising at least £12,000 for the support and spread of Liberal Christianity in the Metropolitan Area.

President—Sir JOHN T. BRUNNER, Bart., M.P.

Chairman of Committee—W. BLAKE ODGERS, Q.C., LL.D.

Treasurers—FREDERICK NETTLEFOLD, Esq., and FRANK PRESTON, Esq.

(1.) A portion of the Fund, not exceeding one-third of the net amount raised, shall be devoted to paying off debts or charges on, or purchasing the freehold of, some of our chapels and halls in or near London. The particular congregations to receive this assistance, and the amount of the assistance to be given to each such congregation, shall be settled by the Committee of the London District Unitarian Society, regard being had to the efforts made by each congregation to help itself.

(2.) The remainder of the Fund, not less than two-thirds of the whole, will be formed into a Permanent Chapel Building Fund for granting loans towards the purchase of sites and the erection of buildings with OPEN TRUSTS. This Fund shall be vested in a body of twelve Trustees, who shall be nominated in the first instance by the Council of Ministers and Delegates and the Subscribers to the Special Fund. The Trustees shall have a voice in the selection of the site, and shall themselves decide what amount they will advance towards the cost of its purchase and of the erection of the building.

(3.) The sum so advanced shall be a charge on the land and building, and shall be repaid in such manner and subject to such conditions as the Trustees shall in each case deem proper. The Trustees in their discretion may remit payment of interest. The income of such portion of the Fund as is not out on loan, and the interest on any loans, shall either be paid to the Treasurer of the London District Unitarian Society, or added to the capital of the Fund, as the Trustees may in each case determine.

THE FOLLOWING CONTRIBUTIONS HAVE ALREADY BEEN PROMISED:—

£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
Sir John T. Brunner, Bart., M.P.	1,000	0	0	Mr. Alfred J. Boulton	10	10	0	Mr. Charles Gresswell	1	1	0
Sir Edwin Durning-Lawrence, Bt., M.P.	1,000	0	0	Rev. W. Copeland Bowie	10	0	0	Mrs. Hadfield, Altrincham	1	1	0
Mr. Frederick Nettlefold	1,000	0	0	Mrs. H. C. Briggs, Ambleside	10	0	0	Mr. W. J. Hands, Scarborough	1	1	0
Miss J. Durning Smith	500	0	0	Mr. G. W. Chitty, Dover	10	0	0	Mr. J. Jackson, Blackpool	1	1	0
Mrs. Alfred Lawrence	200	0	0	Mrs. T. Colfox, Bridport	10	0	0	The Misses Lewis	1	1	0
Mrs. Nettlefold, Birmingham	200	0	0	Mrs. Dobson, Tunbridge Wells	10	0	0	Miss Maginnis	1	1	0
Dr. and Mrs. W. Blake Odgers	200	0	0	Miss Dunn	10	0	0	Mrs. Charles Morton, Exmouth	1	1	0
The President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association	100	0	0	Mr. Henry Lupton, Leeds	10	0	0	Mr. W. Reynolds	1	1	0
Mrs. L. M. Aspland	100	0	0	Miss A. V. Mallet	10	0	0	Mrs. Schultz, Rickmansworth	1	1	0
Mr. Walter Baily	100	0	0	Mr. P. M. Martineau, Esher	10	0	0	Mr. Lewis W. Williams, Aberdare	1	1	0
Mr. G. L. Bristow	100	0	0	Mr. J. S. Nettlefold, Birmingham	10	0	0	Mr. R. W. Wright	1	1	0
Mr. G. W. Brown	100	0	0	Mrs. Shannon	10	0	0	Mr. J. Adeane	1	0	0
Mr. H. Doughty Browne	100	0	0	Lt.-Colonel W. R. Trevelyan, Penzance	10	0	0	Mr. W. T. Hadfield, Canterbury	1	0	0
Mr. T. Chatfield Clarke, Mr. Howard Chatfield Clarke, and Mr. Edgar Chatfield Clarke	100	0	0	Mr. F. D. Bowles	5	5	0	Miss M. Hall	1	0	0
Mr. E. C'ephau, Leicester	100	0	0	Mr. H. J. Morton, Scarboro'	5	5	0	Miss Mary Jones, Windermere	1	0	0
Mr. Henry W. Gair, Liverpool	100	0	0	Mrs. Henry Rutt	5	5	0	Mrs. R. Moore	1	0	0
Mr. John Harrison	100	0	0	Miss Stainbank, Boston	5	5	0	Mr. and Mrs. H. Rawlings	1	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Percival Hart	100	0	0	Mrs. Taylor, Bolton	5	5	0	Miss Squier, Dover	1	0	0
Mr. W. R. Lake	100	0	0	Mr. H. Woolley, Manchester	5	5	0	Mr. R. Bertram	0	10	6
Mr. F. W. Lawrence	100	0	0	Mr. A. W. Worthington, Stourbridge	5	5	0	Mr. John Francis	0	10	6
Mr. I. S. Lister and the Misses Lister	100	0	0	Mr. Hugh Atkins, Hinckley	5	0	0	A. B., Leeds	0	10	0
Mr. D. Martineau	100	0	0	Mr. Thomas Atkins, Hinckley	5	0	0	Miss Harriet Baker	0	10	0
Mr. Oswald Nettlefold	100	0	0	Mr. J. Howard Brooks, Wilmslow	5	0	0	A Friend, Sheffield	0	10	0
Miss Preston	100	0	0	Mrs. Cash	5	0	0	Mr. John Quintrell, Chertsey	0	10	0
Lady O'Hagan	100	0	0	Mrs. Digges	5	0	0	Mr. Thomas Cocker, Rotherham	0	5	0
Mr. F. S. Schwann	100	0	0	Rev. T. E. M. Edwards	5	0	0	Newington Green Chapel, 1st List:—
Mr. William Spiller	100	0	0	Mrs. Enfield	5	0	0	Mr. Ion Pritchard	20	0	0
Mr. S. S. Taylor	100	0	0	Mr. W. Haslam, Bolton	5	0	0	Mr. F. W. Turner	20	0	0
Mr. Harold Wade	100	0	0	Mr. C. T. Mitchell	5	0	0	Mr. and Mrs. T. Pallister	15	15	0
Mrs. Webb	100	0	0	Mr. J. J. Rawlings	5	0	0	Young	15	0	0
Mrs. Edward Berry	50	0	0	Mrs. Robinson, Salisbury	5	0	0	Mr. and Mrs. Howard Young	15	0	0
Mrs. Bruce	50	0	0	Mrs. Steer, Clifton	5	0	0	Mrs. Pritchard	10	0	0
Mrs. Alfred Collier and family	50	0	0	Miss Thornely	5	0	0		80	15	0
Mr. H. W. Hill	50	0	0	Mr. P. E. Vizard	5	0	0	Unity Church, Islington, 1st List:—
Miss Ellen M. Lawrence	50	0	0	Miss Worsley	5	0	0	Mr. Alfred Wilson	25	0	0
Miss C. A. Lawrence	50	0	0	Mr. and Mrs. T. Worthington, Alderley Edge	5	0	0	Mr. Hugh Martineau	21	0	0
Miss Mary Martineau	50	0	0	Mr. G. Andrews	4	0	0	Mr. C. P. R. berts	19	10	0
The Family and Representatives of the late Francis Morton, Esq.	50	0	0	Mr. J. Glover	2	10	0	Miss Scott	3	3	0
Mr. C. F. Pearson	50	0	0	Mr. C. Woolnough	2	10	0	Mr. John Spiller	3	3	0
Mrs. C. F. Pearson	50	0	0	Mrs. C. Woolnough	2	10	0	Mr. Pickford	3	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Potter	50	0	0	Mr. A. Fleck, Gateshead	2	2	0	Mr. Herbert Chamberlain	1	1	0
Mr. Russell Scott	50	0	0	Mr. H. J. Bakewell	2	2	0	Mr. Finch	1	1	0
Miss Anna Swanwick	50	0	0	Mr. S. Charlesworth	2	2	0	Mr. F. L. Sargent	1	1	0
Mr. William Thornely	50	0	0	Mr. J. E. Darbishire	2	2	0	Mrs. Strohmenger	1	1	0
Miss S. Scholes Wrigley, Windermere	50	0	0	Mr. F. Garrett	2	2	0	Mr. J. Waters	1	1	0
The Misses White	30	0	0	Mrs. James Hill	2	2	0	Mr. Kemshead	0	10	6
Miss Barber, Preston	25	0	0	Mr. F. J. Hyte	2	2	0		71	11	6
Mr. Thomas B. Bowring	25	0	0	Mrs. Stanley Jevons	2	2	0	Wood Green Unitarian Society, 1st List:—
Mr. W. Wallace Bruce, L.C.C.	25	0	0	Mr. James Laycock, Scarboro'	2	2	0	Mr. Richards	10	0	0
Mr. E. K. Blyth	25	0	0	Rev. J. Martineau, D.D.	2	2	0	Mr. Sudbery	10	0	0
Mrs. George Buckton, Oxford	25	0	0	Mr. G. A. Morgan	2	2	0	Mr. King	5	5	0
Mr. Stanley Chatfield Clarke	25	0	0	Mrs. Oram	2	2	0	Miss Aspden	5	0	0
Mr. John Harwood, Bolton	25	0	0	Mr. Henry Payton, Birmingham	2	2	0	Literary and Dramatic Club	4	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. E. Handfield Morton	25	0	0	Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Ravenstein	2	2	0	Mr. Jolly	3	3	0
Mr. J. T. Preston	25	0	0	Mr. Edwin Rowland	2	2	0	Mrs. Wrigley	3	3	0
Mr. Frank Preston	25	0	0	Mr. Thos. Rowlands, Liverpool	2	2	0	Mrs. Bolton	3	0	0
Dr. and Mrs. Vance Smith, Bowdon	25	0	0	Mrs. Buller, Kendal	2	0	0	Mr. J. Mummery	2	2	0
Mr. James Walton	25	0	0	Mr. John W. Crompton, Chorley	2	0	0	Miss Wheman	2	2	0
Mrs. Wrigley, Windermere	25	0	0	Lt.-Colonel J. G. Cockburn Curtis, Dover	2	0	0	Dr. Mummery	2	0	0
Mr. S. R. Kearne	20	0	0	Mrs. Ellen B. Pearsall	2	0	0	Mr. Child	1	1	0
Mr. Richard S. Osler	20	0	0	Miss L. Toulmin Smith, Oxford	1	10	0	Mr. and Mrs. Cowlin	1	1	0
Dr. and Mrs. H. Rayner	20	0	0	Mr. H. J. Adams	1	1	0	Mr. Ryley	1	1	0
Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Thompson	20	0	0	Mrs. Allen	1	1	0	Mr. Bobby	0	10	0
Rev. James Harwood	15	0	0	Mr. E. Bridger Athawes	1	1	0	Mr. Marshall	0	10	0
				Mr. H. Blessley, Portsmouth	1	1	0		53	18	0
				Mr. Alfred Clarke	1	1	0	Total	£8,136	4	6
				Miss Everet	1	1	0

Promises of further Contributions, which may be paid at any time up to May 1st, 1900, will be gladly received by the Treasurers. They should be sent to, and will be acknowledged by,

FRANK PRESTON, 6, Derwent Villas, Whetstone, N.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 2995.
NEW SERIES, No. 99.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1899.

[ONE PENNY.]

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	737
LITERATURE :—
The Religion of Time and of Eternity	739
Philosophy in India	740
Articles in the Reviews	741
Publications Received	742
OBITUARY :—
H. R. W. Lemann	742
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN	743
LEADER :—
The Atonement Once More	744
ARTICLES :—
The Inward Life	742
Prayer to be used during War	745
The Inspirations of Science	745
Truth and Men	747
CORRESPONDENCE :—
Proselytes and Disciples	747
MEETINGS :—
Bradford, Manchester : Stone-laying	748
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES	749
ADVERTISEMENTS	750

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

MR. OSWALD NETTLEFOLD, the Treasurer of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, desires us to remind our readers that Sunday next, Nov. 19, is "Association Sunday," and he hopes that the friends and supporters of the Association will respond generously to the appeals which will be made to them on behalf of its funds. Anyone who is unable to be present at the Sunday services of a chapel, or who resides too far away to attend any place of worship, can send a contribution direct to Essex Hall, and it will be added to the amount received on Association Sunday.

THE statue of Oliver Cromwell, by Hamo Thornycroft, which looked so enormous in the Academy, has now been placed in the open space between the road and the outer wall of Westminster Hall, facing St. Margaret's Church and the Abbey, and was unveiled on Tuesday. The site is magnificent, and the noble statue, on a massive pedestal of Portland stone, with a bronze lion crouching at the foot, is thoroughly worthy of it. It is a triumph of art to have produced such a memorial of one of the greatest of Englishmen. At a crowded meeting in the Queen's Hall the same evening, Lord Rosebery was the chief speaker and pronounced an eloquent eulogy on Cromwell. One of the most interesting passages of the speech was that in which he spoke of Cromwell as "a practical mystic, the most formidable and terrible of all combinations, the man who combines the inspiration, apparently derived, and in my judgment, really derived, from close communion with the supernatural and the celestial, with the energy of a mighty man of action. Such a man lives in communion on a Sinai of his own, and he appears to come down to this world below armed with no less than the terrors and the decrees of the Almighty Himself." Answering the question whether Cromwell was a hypocrite, Lord Rosebery said that those who thought so could never have read his letters to his children. They were the genuine outpourings of a sincere soul. Nor could a hypocrite have exercised the tremendous and sustained influence he did over the men who followed him.

THE Whitefield Memorial Church, which has taken the place of the old Tabernacle in Tottenham Court-road, built for the great Revivalist preacher in 1756, was opened on Tuesday, the first sermon being preached by Dr. Parker. The cost of the building has been more than £14,000, and the minister, the Rev. G. A. Suttle, announced that there still remained £7,500 to be raised. Towards this £930 was given or promised during the day. Luncheon was held in the Top-lady Hall, in the basement beneath the church, in which there is a tablet to the memory of the author of "Rock of Ages," near the spot where he was buried. Among those who took part in the subsequent proceedings of the day were the Revs. Dr. Horton and Hugh Price Hughes. The Archbishop of Canterbury and Lord Nelson have contributed to the building fund, and a lady has presented the minister with the original lease of the Tabernacle site made out to George Whitefield.

A CONFERENCE organised by the Christian Social Union was held in St. Martin's Town Hall, on Tuesday afternoon, to consider the subject of overcrowding and the housing of the poor. Mr. H. Asquith, M.P., presided, and pointed out that under the present law there was power to remedy the worst evils, if the local authorities could be made to act, but it was notorious how difficult it was to get at the owners of the worst slum property. A resolution was passed, urging that local authorities should fuse to the utmost their powers under Part III. of the Housing Act, by which they have power to build on vacant land, without the great cost of clearing away insanitary property, and asking also for further legislation. On the previous day Lord Rosebery, in opening some new municipal dwellings built by the vestry in Shore-ditch, had made a speech in the same sense, and urged that the county of London ought to have power to take up vacant land beyond its borders, for building purposes, and then by improved cheap transit by tram and train the pressure of overcrowding would be enormously relieved.

WE called attention last week to the public meeting to be held in the Queen's Hall on Tuesday evening, to inaugurate the work of the Central Temperance Legislative Board, the object of which is to unite all sections of Temperance effort in an endeavour to secure legislation on the lines of Lord Peel's Minority Report. Admission is by free tickets (or reserved seats 1s.), to be obtained from the chief Temperance Societies, or from the office of the Board, 4, The Sanctuary, Westminster. Lord Peel is to take the chair, and Sir W. H. Houldsworth, Bart., M.P., Mr. P. T. Whittaker, M.P., Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., and Mr. A. F. Hills, J.P., are the announced speakers. Another interesting Temperance meeting next week is the Conference to be held on Thursday at the Unitarian Church, East-hill, Wandsworth, under the auspices of the Essex Hall Temperance Association, when a discussion will be opened by the Rev. W. Chynoweth Pope, of Lewisham, on "How to Preserve our Children as Abstainers." The chair will be taken at 7.30 by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, and there will be music during the evening.

THE first volume of the "Encyclopædia Biblica," edited by Professor Cheyne and Dr. J. Sutherland Black, is now published, and the work is to be completed in four volumes within two years. The Encyclopædia was originally projected by the late Professor Robertson Smith, on the completion of the Encyclopædia Britannica, of which he was the editor; but failure of health obliged him to leave the new work in the hands of his assistant-editor, Dr. Black, and Professor Cheyne. The object of the new Encyclopædia is to give "a survey of the contents of the Bible as illuminated by criticism, a criticism which identifies the cause of religion with that of historical truth." Among the contributors to the first volume are the Rev. W. E. Addis, of Manchester College, Oxford; Professor W. H. Bennett, of Hackney; Professor Karl Budde, of Strasburg; Professor R. H. Charles, of Dublin; Canon Driver, Canon Armitage Robinson, Professor Sanday, Professor G. A. Smith, of Glasgow; Professor Tiele, of Leyden; and other distinguished scholars, British, American, and Continental. At no very distant date we hope to publish a full notice of this valuable work, and our special object in this note is to draw the attention of our readers to an offer of the publishers, Messrs. Adam and Charles Black, which holds good until the end of the present month. The Encyclopædia is published at the price of £4 net, for the four volumes, or £5 in half leather. During the present month the work may be secured for £3 net, or £3 15s. in half-leather. This is a good opportunity for adding a very valuable work to chapel libraries; it should be added, however, that is hardly a popular dictionary of the Bible, but essentially a book for scholars, and we would venture to suggest to generous friends that to many ministers, who have not such means at their disposal, the gift of the "Encyclopædia Biblica," would be of the very greatest service.

THE opening of the session, 1899-1900, of the Faculty of Protestant Theology in Paris, took place on Friday, Nov. 10. There was a large gathering of ministers, laymen, and ladies representing all the Protestant churches of Paris. In accordance with time-honoured traditions, after the reading of a lesson from the Bible, and a prayer on this occasion by Professor Vaucher, Professor Sabatier, the Dean of the Faculty, presented his report of the work of the past session, 1898-1899, in that clear and interesting way of which he is such a master. This was followed by his stirring address to the students—"de viriles paroles sur la nécessité du travail personnel"—delivered in a lofty yet friendly spirit, for M. Sabatier is pre-eminently "ami des étudiants"; nor was the address lacking in inspiration also for the larger audience present. The Temps gives a short, but, of course, inadequate, extract from this address, as follows:—

What is the aim of University studies? Is it to fill a young man's mind with a certain quantity of information, notions and formulas? Surely not. The essential point must be to awake and develop in him personal activity of thought, to create a living mind, so that he may unfold that gift of God, his own originality. A mind unstimulated by study, a mind left inert and barren by knowledge however extensive, cannot really be said to exist; it is a waste, a loss, a bad debt, so to speak, in the realm of minds.

The following items of statistics from the annual report may not be without interest. The number of regular students at the College was 78 (70 French and 8 Foreign), as against 74 for the preceding year; and other regular attendants 14 (7 French and 7 Foreign). The College Library, under the vigilant care of Professor S. Berger, continues to prosper. It numbers at present 13,191 volumes, being an increase on the past year of 948 volumes. This increase is largely due to the generosity of Mme. Lichtenberger, the widow of the late lamented Dean, who gave permission to the Librarian to make a selection from her husband's books of any and all that might enrich the valuable Library of the Faculty. The College in consequence now possesses the richest collection of works on Religious Thought in Germany in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries.

THE Christian Register of Oct. 26 and Nov. 2 contain a very full report of the eighteenth meeting of the American National Conference of Unitarian and other Christian Churches, held at Washington, D.C., Oct. 16-19, of which we have already given some brief notes. The striking addresses by the Rev. T. R. Slicer on the subject, "Is God yet Personal and Immediate?" and by Professor C. M. Tyler, on "Recent Tendencies towards Anthropomorphism in Religious Thought," are given in full in the Register of Oct. 26.

The Hon. George F. Hoar, who was re-elected President of the Conference, spoke in his opening address of the great services rendered by Unitarians to America, of the emphasis they laid on Hope, and their faith in Freedom. He was thankful that Unitarianism could not be defined, as none of the great things of the Universe, neither the human soul, nor eternity, nor God, could be defined. They were thankful also, not so much for the things which separated them from the great body of Christians and believers in God and righteousness, but for the things which united them. He expressed, in conclusion, his faith that the world is growing better, that to-day is better than yesterday, and to-morrow will be better than to-day.

THE report of the Council was presented to the Conference by Dr. Edward Everett Hale, in the unavoidable absence of Dr. M. J. Savage. Having referred to the founding of the Conference in 1864, and the energy and foresight of Dr. Bellows in making it a truly national institution, the report dealt with various aspects of missionary work, and quoted a saying of Dr. Hedge's, that the Conference, though not an executive body, had "revealed the Unitarian Church to itself." When after serious consideration in that Conference they were agreed upon any measure, it was sure to be carried out, and the American Unitarian Association was a strong executive arm. Thus the New World had been established as a high-class theological and ethical Quarterly, and the Christian Register had been endowed, and was now issued in its present acceptable form, as a thoroughly representative paper in their body. In the first year of the Conference, through the enthusiastic initiative of the late Rev. Eli Fay, an endowment had been provided for the re-establishment of Antioch College, which up to the present time had sent reports to the Conference; but it had now been arranged that the College should be entirely independent, electing its own trustees.

WE have received from Mr. H. Kissor Singh a report of the sixth anniversary of the Jowai Unitarian Church, in the Khasi Hills, India. The anniversary was celebrated during the week ending Sunday, Sept. 17, daily home prayer meetings being held in the houses of members. On Saturday, Sept. 16, the sixth anniversary of the Jowai Free School was celebrated, many friends and sympathisers being present. Mr. Kissor Singh, the manager, read the annual report. The four pupils who had been sent up for the L.P. Scholarship examination all passed, one standing first in the Khasi Hills district, and obtaining a Government Scholarship and Mrs. Rita's prize. Needle-work for the girls had been introduced as a new feature into the school, as suggested last year by Mr. S. E. Rita, the sub-divisional officer of Jowai; also simple sewing for the boys, as suggested by Mr. S. F. Williams; and in music the tonic-sol-fa system had been adopted, introduced into the district by the Rev. R. Evans of the Welsh Mission. There were fifty-three pupils on the roll at the beginning of the month, mostly children of Unitarian families. After the reading of the report, prizes were distributed, including two given by Mrs. Rita. Copies of Every other Sunday, sent by Mrs.

Kate Gannett Wells, were given to children who had no prizes. Before the meeting closed, the National Anthem and other songs were sung.

ON the evening of the same day the annual meeting of the church was held, when the accounts were read. During the year there had been a marked increase in membership. On every day of the week there had been some meeting. On Monday evenings workers' classes were held, on Tuesday afternoons the children's weekly service, at which elder boys were taught to take part, on Wednesday evenings the members' meeting, and on Thursday afternoons the women's meeting. On Friday evenings the home prayer meeting was held at members' houses in rotation, on Saturday evenings a service preparatory for Sunday, on Sunday morning school for adults and children at 10.30, and sermon at 2 P.M. On the anniversary Sunday two well-attended meetings were held, addresses being given by three laymen and Mr. Már Singh. In the evening a general committee meeting of the Union was held. The workers in the Khasi Hills are few, but they are of good courage, and confident of the ultimate triumph of true religion.

WE are glad to note the effort that is being made to consolidate the Sunday-school work of our churches in Scotland. Under the auspices of the S.S.A., assisted by the McQuaker trustees, a meeting of delegates, teachers and other friends of Sunday-school work is to be held on Saturday, Nov. 25, in the Unitarian Hall, Constitution-road, Dundee. The chair is to be taken by Mr. James Graham, President of the Scottish Unitarian Association, and a resolution will be submitted recommending the formation of a Scottish Sunday-school Union. Papers on various aspects of the work will then be read by Mr. Ion Pritchard and the Revs. A. Webster and H. Williamson, to be followed by discussion.

ON Thursday next (23rd) Miss Rose Kingsley will give an illustrated lecture on "French Painters," at five o'clock, in Bedford College, York-place, Baker-street, W. The lecture will be the first of the series of free and open occasional lectures for the session 1899-1900, and invitation tickets may be had on application to the secretary. Miss Rose Kingsley is probably our first authority on the subject she has chosen, her mastery of French art having earned for her the title of "Officier de l'instruction publique."

WHEN evil is returned for evil, the first offender thinks himself excused, because the other is as faulty as he; on the other side, he that by courtesy and forgiveness makes an enemy become a friend, makes a lasting friend.—Benjamin Whichcote.

EPPS'S COCOA.	The most nutritious.
EPPS'S COCOA.	Grateful and comforting.
EPPS'S COCOA.	For breakfast and supper.
EPPS'S COCOA.	With natural flavour only.
EPPS'S COCOA.	From the finest brands.

LITERATURE.

THE RELIGION OF TIME AND OF ETERNITY.*

MR. WICKSTEED'S Essex Hall Lecture is an extremely valuable and suggestive contribution to theological literature. Small though it is in compass, it has succeeded in making plain and intelligible a problem which, sooner or later, must force itself upon the religious consciousness—a problem which has, in point of fact, been set for it by the whole trend of current scientific and speculative thought. And to have this problem clearly and emphatically formulated is no small gain. Especially in matters pertaining to the spiritual life is it true that he who knows how to ask the right question is already half way towards obtaining the answer.

The author approaches his subject through the avenue of mediæval conceptions. He draws attention to the changed attitude of the modern mind in regard to the Middle Ages, noting, more in detail, as some of its features, the recovered sense for the greatness of mediæval architecture and painting, and the revived interest in Francis of Assisi, in Aquinas, and in Dante. To account for this changed attitude, Mr. Wicksteed carries our thoughts back to the period of the Renaissance, in order to bring out the fact that, whilst the Humanist and Reforming ideals of life were really opposed to each other in principle, they were allied, each from its own point of view, in antipathy to the ideals of the Middle Ages. And their combined movement was successful in imposing its theory of history upon posterity. There is more to be said, indeed, than probably Mr. Wicksteed would admit, in defence of Hegel traversing the ages in question with seven-league boots,† but, in any case, it is certain that Hegel, with his fine historic sense, would have been among the first to endorse the protest against the shallow prejudice with respect to the long stretch of time from the fall of the Western Empire to the period of Luther. If history is to be regarded as an intelligible development, there can be no blanks, such as the popular view would imply, and Mr. Wicksteed is perfectly justified in adducing, by way of evidence, the large substratum of belief unconsciously absorbed from mediævalism by the reformers and their followers. The reassertion in our day of the potency of mediæval ideals is, then, no capricious phenomenon: it is due to our gradually becoming aware of the source whence these "deeper beliefs" emanate, and to the way neglected aspects of the truth have of avenging themselves upon those who overlook and depreciate them by laying undue and exclusive stress upon other aspects. We shall best disarm the reactionary attempts of modern ecclesiasticism in so far as we rightly appreciate the elements of permanent value contained in the system of thought upon which it is based.

* "The Religion of Time and the Religion of Eternity" (The Essex Hall Lecture, 1899). By Philip H. Wicksteed, M.A. Philip Green, 5, Essex-street, W.C. 1s. net.

† Hegel's Lectures were intended as a Geschichte der Philosophie, not as a Culturgeschichte. The period of the Middle Ages does occupy over 150 pages, whilst the whole of modern philosophy from Bacon to Fichte is disposed of in less than 400. It must be remembered, moreover, that the text has been put together from students' notes.

As a contribution towards such appreciation, Mr. Wicksteed directs attention to one aspect of mediæval theology, through which it stands in favourable contrast with much current representation of the nature of Deity. He selects, namely, for consideration the group of religious ideas which gather round the notions of Eternity and Fruition. The mediæval thinker, trained in conceptions elaborated in the schools of Greece, did not conceive of the divine consciousness as subject to the conditions of temporal sequence. For him, Eternity did not mean endless succession, in the midst of which, of course, God himself would never attain complete perfection, but a state of being in which time was transcended, and all the parts of the whole held together in one absolute experience, for which there could be no before and no after. And consistently therewith, he did not surrender even the finite soul to a ceaseless process of becoming, of which the goal could never be reached, but only striven after. The fruit of knowledge and of divine communion were not only worth the winning, but worth the having, and could be had, if not supremely in the absolute sense, yet supremely in the relative sense, that is to say, under those limitations which are the conditions of finitude. A consciousness of things sub specie aeternitatis was a reality for the mediæval saint. If, as Malebranche expressed it, God is the place of spirits, then the consciousness of a spirit that it was in that place was the realisation for it of the life eternal—a life "worthy to be lived not for what it leads to, but for what it is." And for such a state of fruition, to see things in God was to see things as God sees them, not as in their fragmentary incompleteness they appear to be, but as they actually are.

This religion of Eternity has largely dropped out of the modern consciousness, and very interesting is the way in which Mr. Wicksteed shows how. The dualism of mediæval thought was constituted, not by its ascribing an independent existence to time, but by its assigning a permanent position to evil. Time was a creation, tending towards a speedy finale, and the human history it rendered possible was a history, not of progress, but of degeneracy and corruption. We have changed all that. The revival of learning, by opening up the treasures of ancient speculation, suggested also the possibilities of future intellectual achievement; scientific reflection, by throwing back the walls of the material universe, has come to regard them as sufficiently wide to admit of a reign of law, practically boundless in extent and duration. These characteristics of modern thought, together with alluring prospects of mechanical and social improvements, have all tended to fix our gaze upon the future, and to awaken a sense of the unknown developments the world holds in store for mankind. "This earth became the centre of human interest at the very time when it ceased to be physically the centre of the universe." The abandoned doctrine of an eternal hell has been replaced by the belief in an endless progression.

"Endless progress to what?" In the absence of any intelligible reply to that question, the changed attitude of mind just indicated does not represent an unmixed gain. It involves, in fact, a loss. And the loss appertains chiefly to the higher spiritual life. Not only does the idea of endless progress give a certain vagueness to the higher spiritual life, it reduces it also to a kind of self-contradiction. If, namely, it is not so much truth as the search for truth we value, then we are seeking not with the hope of finding, but on the express understanding it is better not to find; if moral effort and self-sacrifice are themselves the noblest things ethically, then a Kingdom of Heaven, in which evil should be overcome and the occasion, therefore, of moral effort and self-sacrifice withdrawn, would be a condition in which the life most worth living could be lived no more. "Progress has a meaning if there is a goal," if there be, that is, a truth which is "worth enjoying as well as worth seeking," and "a life that is worth living as well as worth gaining"; but if "progress to perfection turns out to be only another expression for the endless deferring of perfection, which indeed is only perfect so long as we do not enjoy it," then we have forfeited the right to use the term "progress" at all. "Clouds of stagnation and ennui" would settle down upon our heaven, and, as Professor James tersely puts it, we had "better lose than win the battle, or at all events better ring down the curtain before the last act of the play, so that a business that began so importantly may be saved from so singularly flat a winding-up."

With the main contention thus imperfectly sketched, the present writer is in complete accord; it may not be out of place, however, to add a few reflections partly supplementing, partly criticising, Mr. Wicksteed's treatment of it in detail.

The objection to the anthropomorphic conception of God, as a "being who lives the life of Time," and "watches to see what Time shall bring forth," is forcibly and convincingly stated:—

If we so conceive of God, he indeed is not eternal; but Eternity itself is not so easily exorcised. If we banish it from our conception of God, it takes its awful stand behind him, God himself we have entangled in the flux and succession of time, but above him now stands an iron fate which holds both him and us in its grip, dictating the conditions under which he shall strive to gain his ends, holding him to laws and to necessities, which are not modes of his being nor forms of his self-utterance, but necessities to which he must submit. And this awful background of fate, not God, is then the Eternal.

Yes, this is true; but, even then, the Nemesis here depicted would only be the Eternal in virtue of its embracing and including God and all things within itself, not as standing over against them and imposing its decrees from without. The proviso is important, for it enables us to see that time and eternity are not to be regarded as irreconcilable opposites. Mr. Wicksteed insists more than once that we "cannot think time away." Happily there is no need of our undertaking any so hopeless an enterprise. Time has its own reality; the question is whether it is a reality of such a kind as to be co-extensive with existence generally. If it is not, then we should expect to find portions of our experience unconditioned by it. And that, I conceive, is precisely what we do find, and to a much larger extent than Mr. Wicksteed, if I have understood him rightly, would acknowledge. Every universal truth is, for example, an instance in point. We infer that "the individual A will die" from premisses which assert that "all men are mortal," and that "A is a man." But if the relation between the premisses and the conclusion were a time relation, our inference would be logically invalid. We could not know that all men were mortal before A and the whole of his brethren, present and to come, had actually given up the ghost. In other words, no universal truth could ever be assured, if it were entangled in the infinite series which temporal conditions would impose upon it. No doubt, in the order of our experiencing, the premisses do come before the conclusion, just as, in the case cited by Mr. Wicksteed, the vibrations corresponding to the first bar of the piece of music affected Mozart's auditory nerves before those corresponding to the second; but in the order of truth or fact, of what is by us experienced, it is as absurd in the one case as in the other to discern a succession among elements which have only meaning as constituting a whole.

Even in those departments of experience where the time element is admittedly important, it is worth while to note that it often becomes increasingly less so with the advance of intelligence. The historian differs from the mere chronicler by representing human development, not so much in the form of a bare chronology, as in that of a systematic unity, linking its principles together by virtue of their logical and ethical significance rather than by virtue of the successive occurrences, through which they are exemplified. A great constructive history operates mainly to minimise the importance attached to the merely temporal order of events, and to emphasise the spirit of which they are the expression.

Considerations such as these may serve, at least, to bring into clearer prominence the essential truth, that a life such as ours, subject to temporal limitations, is separated nevertheless by no impassable barrier from the life eternal. They may warn us also not to expect a solution of the problem by the simple expedient of looking for a cessation of the time experience in the future, as though Eternity were something outside of and after Time. That would be to encumber ourselves with the old difficulties over again. We require not the power of thinking time away, but the power of thinking through time to the deeper reality of which it is the partial manifestation.

With this result Mr. Wicksteed will concur—it was to show the reasonableness of the mediæval ideal of seeing things as God sees them that he went forth to the "combat" (p. 3). But I am not sure whether the sharp antithesis he seems to draw between progress—"man's distinctive mark alone"—and attainment, between what is "useful," for the sake of what it leads to, and what is "enjoyable," for the sake of what it is, would not thwart the object he has in view. That the distinction is a valuable one I entertain no doubt, but, like most distinctions, it ought not to be worked too hard. Surely, it is not impossible that what is in itself intrinsically worthy may also be "useful," as leading to something else intrinsically worthy, and vice versa. Indeed, in a universe where each part is what it is through its relation to every other part, this is inevitable. The moral life, for example, is emphatically a progressive life, and for it to be otherwise the moral agent would not only require to share the life of God, but to be God. It is a familiar ethical maxim that the ideal never can be reached, because it, even as the individual whose ideal it is, is perpetually advancing. But this does not mean that the moral agent is for ever in pursuit of his shadow. Goodness is none the less goodness because there is a better which it opens out and is a means to. In every good act, as such, the ideal is realised, the intrinsically worthy life is being lived; each stage acquired through the effort towards moral perfection is, as such, morally perfect, and differs only in degree but not in kind from complete perfection. Similarly with regard to intellectual progress. I imagine most readers of his lecture will feel that Mr. Wicksteed has dealt somewhat unjustly with Lessing. It is true the celebrated "motto" is expressed ambiguously, and, if we take the passage as quoted by Mr. Wicksteed (p. 102) literally, there certainly does seem ground for the interpretation put upon it. Yet it is scarcely conceivable that the author of the "Education of the Human Race" could really have meant the choice to lie between "truth," on the one hand, and "the eternal search for truth, coupled with eternal error," on the other. What he had in mind, surely, was a choice between the whole truth, revealed without any effort on his part, and the gradual realisation of truth, coupled with error to the extent in which, at each stage, the former exceeded the latter. Whether the choice recommended would be commendable even then is another matter; but, at least, it would be relieved of all suspicion of "insincerity," or want of "honesty." Where Lessing went wrong, I take it, was in supposing that a quantitative comparison was applicable, and that the difference between absolute and partial truth was capable of being expressed (by an omniscient mind, of course) in numerical units. But when we get rid of the fatal dualism latent in this view, it ought to become clear that truth, however partial, is truth, so far as it goes, and, as such, is of infinite worth.

"Weakness never needs be falseness: truth is truth in each degree."

I have nearly run my clepsydra dry with drier argumentation, but I reserve the driest for the end. Is there not a worse objection than vagueness to such a phrase as an "eternal now"—namely, that it is self-contradictory? I am aware, of course, how much we are at the mercy of metaphors in these matters, and fellow-feeling makes one wondrous kind. But we cannot have our cake and eat it, and, if a timeless eternity is what we want, we must be prepared to transcend present time as well as past and future. Nor does the term "co-existence" (p. 23) avail better to express what we mean, for it simply transforms an endless length into an endless breadth. If we must have a metaphor, probably inter-dependence is the nearest we can get, but the philosophical course is to dispense with such picture-painting altogether, and to make the effort to realize in thought how the universal is related to the particular. For, after all, a visual picture is a thing of space and time, and it ought not to surprise us that eternity does not lend itself to that mode of delineation.

G. DAWES HICKS.

Correspondents are requested to note that to be sure of insertion the same week, news must reach the Office by the first post on Thursday at latest, and the earlier in the week the better.

PHILOSOPHY IN INDIA.

THE veteran scholar, the Right Hon. Professor Max Müller, still continues to set to all his juniors a splendid example of untiring toil. In his latest work, "The Six Systems of Indian Philosophy,"* he gathers up what he modestly entitles "some of the notes" which have accumulated in his note-books during a long and laborious life. Forty-seven years ago he published his first contributions to this subject: now at seventy-six he can produce a substantial treatise of more than six hundred pages. The abundance of material is bewildering: in the brief notice which is alone possible here, no adequate idea of its variety can be conveyed.

At the outset, however, the uninitiated reader may stumble at the title. Why "the Six Systems"? No one would attach a number to the schools of ancient Greece or modern Germany. But the conditions of India are different. There the student is confronted with one prime fact. Almost the whole of its surviving literature reaches us under the sovereignty of Brahmanism. In the long process of religious and philosophical evolution only those schools held their own which in some way recognised the authority of the Veda. The position is somewhat analogous to the relation of the scholastic philosophy and the Roman Church, though there was no great outside power like that of Aristotle which had to be reconciled with orthodox belief. But just as the acknowledgment of the supremacy of the Faith permitted a large variety of speculation on matters which the Church had not defined, so the thinkers of India enjoyed an almost boundless liberty under a restraint which (within limits to be named directly) was all but nominal. This freedom displays itself at the outset in the searching questions of some of the later hymns of the Rig-Veda; it animates the inquirers in the forest debates described in the Upanishads; it appears again and again in the discussions in the great epics; and it survives in the boldness with which the deepest ontological problems are handled by the expositors of the "darsanas" or "theories" or "views" which finally established their place as orthodox. "Whence are we born?" asks an inquirer at the beginning of the Svetâsvatara-Upanishad, "whereby do we live, and whither do we go? O ye who know Brahman, (tell us) at whose command we abide here, whether in pain or in pleasure? Should time, or nature, or necessity, or chance, or the elements, be considered as the cause, or He who is called Purusha, the Man, that is the Supreme Spirit?"

It follows from this fundamental condition that the six systems are largely concerned with similar themes, and start from certain common presuppositions. Thus at the outset "almost the first question which everyone of the Hindu systems of philosophy tries to settle is, How do we know?" Professor Max Müller sees in this recognition of "Noëtics" as having the first claim to attention, an element of superiority in the thought of the East compared with the West. The answer, however, does not run along the lines of modern "epistemology." It is contained in the doctrine of the three Pramânas or

* Longmans, Green and Co., London, 1899. 18s.

"measures,"* according to which the channels of knowledge are classed under the heads of perception, inference, and authority. Different accounts of these are given in different schools, and varying values are assigned to them; but they form substantially a common basis for all. Again, they all accept the principle of Karma, and the phenomenal reality of the world of transmigration. There are many indications, however, of protest against this great doctrine. It was already denied 500 B.C. by one of the contemporaries of the Buddha. There is a curious figure under the name of Brihaspati who appears in the pre-Buddhist literature as a teacher of demons, and whose name was attached to verses still current in much later centuries which plumply rejected all the hopes of the popular religion, "There is no paradise, no deliverance (from transmigration), and certainly no Self in another world." In fixing his attention on the Six Systems, Professor Max Müller by no means ignores what lies outside them—witness his account of the Brihaspati-philosophy (p. 123 ff.)—but the reader sometimes wishes for more light on what was going on in other fields where the paramountcy of Brahmanism was disowned. This, however, is only to say that the book before us deals with a specific line of philosophical development. By its title it does not aim to do more. It is only when Professor Max Müller hints in his Preface at the point of view suggested by Professor Knight, the intimate connection—namely, between the philosophy of a people and its national characteristics—that larger expectations are raised. But even a scholar with so immense a range of learning may well shrink from attempting to penetrate the jungle which envelopes the metaphysics of later Buddhism.

The form in which the doctrines of the six schools have come down to us is that of Sūtras, collections of aphorisms in an extremely abbreviated condensed style, in which the principles of the system are set forth. Just as mediæval scholasticism occupied itself with commentaries on the "Sentences" of Peter the Master, so in the Indian schools the great commentators developed the teachings of the Sūtras. It becomes, then, of the first importance to determine if possible historically the chronological succession of these works. But this is a task of enormous difficulty. With bewildering complexity they often seem to quote each other! Nothing can exceed the patience with which again and again Professor Max Müller sets himself to unravel the tangled threads, or the frankness with which he states the uncertainty of the results. What would not the student give for a clear historic series like that from Thales to Aristotle! It is known, for instance, from the Chinese Buddhist pilgrim, Hiouentsang (629–648 A.D.), that the Six Systems were then formulated in literary products, but the existing Sūtras of the Sāṃkhya school have been recently shown to belong to the year 1380 A.D. And yet, on the other hand, its ideas and terminology pervade some of the Uparishads, and in the view of Professor Garbe, for example, were among the intellectual antecedents of Buddhism. The general conclusion which Professor Max Müller reaches, places the formative period for the Six Systems between the origin of Buddhism and the reign of Asoka, about 500–250 B.C. The speculative tendencies which they consolidated, existed, however, long before, at least in the case of the Vedānta, the Sāṃkhya, and the Yoga: they represent, not the particular ideas of the traditional authors of the Sūtras in which they are embodied, but the general results of generations and centuries of patient thought. Their prime object was to show man the way out of the cycle of transmigration in which he was involved by what was known as "moral causation," the necessity by which all that he thought, and said, and did, produced its inevitable effect of weal or woe. The only rescue lay in knowledge or philosophy.

In order to achieve this deliverance from all suffering, from all limitation, from all the bondage of the world, man must learn what he really is. He must learn that he is not the body, for the body decays and dies, and with it all bodily sufferings might seem to end. But this is again denied, because through an invisible agency a new Ego would spring up, liable to suffer for its former acts just as it was in this life. A man must learn, therefore, that he is not even what is meant by the Ego, for the Ego also has been formed by surroundings or circumstances, and will vanish again like everything else. Then what remains? There remains behind the body, and behind the Ego, or the individual person, what is called the Purusha, or the Atman, the Self, and that Self is to be recognised either as identical with what was in earlier times conceived and called the Divine, the Eternal, the Unconditioned, namely Brahman, or as Purusha, perfect, independent, and absolute in itself, blissful in its independence and in the complete aloofness from everything else. The former was the view of the Vedānta, the latter is the view of the Sāṃkhya philosophy. . . . Whatever we may think of these two solutions of the world's great riddle, we cannot but admire their originality and their daring, particularly if we compare them with the solutions proposed by other philosophers, whether of ancient or modern times. . . . Such views cannot be criticised as we criticise ordinary systems of religion or morality. They are visions, if you like, but they are visions which to have seen is like having been admitted to the vision of another world; of a world that must exist, however different in its eternal silence from what we and from what the ancient seers of India imagined it to be—pp. 363-5.

In expounding the successive systems Professor Max Müller bases himself again and again on some important text, from which long translations or abstracts are supplied. This method brings the student face to face with valuable material, but the ordinary reader will find it somewhat hard. It involves frequent repetitions; there are long excursions and digressions; the effect is sometimes to obscure the wood by the trees; the mass of detail overpowers the general view. But the unwearied spirit of his teacher ought to carry the student on. The freshness of the author's interest never flags: convinced of the significance of the great story which he has to tell, he labours undaunted to the end. There are valuable bibliographical lists, and a copious though not exhaustive index at the close. The book is admirably printed; a misprint may be detected here and there, such as bānte for bhante (p. 21), satkāryavada for satkāryavāda (p. 481), but among thousands of Indian words they are extraordinarily rare. On p. 261, line 22, the Pūrva and the Uttara-Mīmāṃsā have changed places; St. Mark was not an apostle (p. 271); and the remark (p. 306) that "Kapila squashes the whole argument" may be suitable to the jottings of a note-book, but hardly to the philosophic page. Trifles are these indeed. No such attempt as this has yet been made to put before the English reader the chief conceptions of Indian wisdom on the philosophy of religion and the meaning of the world. Professor Max Müller is to be congratulated on still possessing the energy and patience as well as the wide and penetrating knowledge to render so great a service. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER.

ARTICLES IN THE REVIEWS.

THE reviews of this month have naturally been intent on South Africa, though with events moving so fast, some of the matter has read rather strangely. Mr. Edward Dicey's strongly Imperialist article in the Nineteenth Century is followed by an article on "Native Unrest in South Africa," by Mr. E. M. Green, showing that when the troubles between the British and Dutch elements are appeased, there will be another very serious problem to be faced. "The Kaffirs are no longer untutored savages; they have begun to realise their grievances, and to desire their rights, which unless we give them they may take for themselves in a manner that can be little anticipated." The Contemporary has three South African articles, of which Sir Charles Warren's on British power must be considered side by side with Mr. Percy Molteno's on "The Cause of the War," which contains a strong indictment of Sir Alfred Milner's conduct of the negotiations. In the same review, Canon Knox-Little deals with the Lambeth "Opinion," which he holds to be a mistake, and pleads for tolerance of the clerical lovers of incense. Sir Edward Fry writes on "Commercial Corruption"; and there is also Professor Auguste Sabatier's paper on "Christian Dogma and the Christian Life," which was read at the recent meeting of the Christian Conference, and to which we referred at the time. Of other articles in the Nineteenth Century, Canon Barnett's on "Charity versus Outdoor Relief" should be noted, and Mr. Mallock writes in characteristic vein on "The Intellectual Future of Catholicism." There is also an article by Professor Max Müller on "Literature before Letters."

MR. HENRY FROWDE, of the Oxford University Press Warehouse, will issue in January an edition of the "Hexateuch," in two quarto volumes, the first containing a full introduction and elaborate tabular appendices, and the second giving the text of the Revised Version, displayed in a novel manner, so as to distinguish at a glance the constituent documents, and furnished with copious references and carefully written footnotes. The editors are the Revs. J. Estlin Carpenter, of Oxford, and G. Harford-Battersby, vicar of Mossley Hill, Liverpool, who have been assisted by other scholars. The first draft of the analysis now printed in full was made by a committee of the Society of Historical Theology, the Oxford successor to the Taylerian Society.

WHEN your own burden is heaviest, you can always lighten a little some other burden.—G. S. Merriam.

* The word survives in the modern Persian Fermān, an authoritative order—p. 188.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

TO PUBLISHERS.—All Books, &c., sent to THE INQUIRER will be acknowledged under this head, with name of publisher and price, if supplied. The necessities of our space, however, compel us to limit the number selected for critical notice and review.]

The Apostle Paul's Reply to Lord Halifax. By the Rev. W. Wynn. (Elliot Stock.)

Present Immortality. By A. H. Currer. 6d. (Watts and Co.)

Papers and Addresses from the Friend's Summer School. 2s. and 3s. (Morland and Henson, 170, Edmund-street, Birmingham.)

The Doctrine of the Real Presence. By T. B. Strong, B.D. 3s. (Longmans.)

Shakespeare's Sonnets. Arranged by S. Butler. 10s. 6d. (Longmans.)

A Book of Bachelors. By A. W. Fox, M.A. 16s. (Constable.)

The Christian Use of the Psalms. By the Rev. T. K. Cheyne, M.A., D.D. 5s. (Isbister.)

The Touchstone. By Helen Shipton. 3s. 6d. (Isbister.)

The Fundamental Ideas of Christianity. By John Caird, D.D., LL.D. With Memoir by Edward Caird, D.C.L., LL.D. Two vols. 12s. (MacLehose.)

The British Empire and Alliances. By T. E. S. Scholes, M.D. 8s. 6d. (Elliot Stock.)

Charles Wavendon and Others. By Caryl J. Blunt. 6s. (Elliot Stock.)

Two New Women and Other Stories. By Mary Beaumont. 6s. (Clarke and Co.)

God's Greater Britain. By John Clifford, M.A., D.D. 3s. 6d. (Clarke and Co.)

The Cat and the Mouse. By Alice B. Woodward. 1s. (Blackie and Son.)

In Doors and Out. 2s. 6d. (Blackie and Sons.)

Protestant Dissent and English Unitarianism. By Walter Lloyd. 2s. 6d. (Philip Green.)

Bookman, Educational Review.

LONDON FORWARD MOVEMENT.—Arrangements have been made for holding a series of Sunday evening services in the Public Hall, Kirkdale, Sydenham, commencing on the 26th inst., at seven o'clock. The Revs. W. Copeland Bowie, W. G. Tarrant, B.A., J. E. Stronge, and T. E. M. Edwards, will deliver the addresses, which will deal with some of the distinctive teachings of Unitarianism. The co-operation of friends living in that neighbourhood, and within easy access, is most earnestly sought. Too often Forward Movement efforts receive but little practical sympathy from "the Household of Faith," and the work of welcoming those who come to the services, the conduct of the singing, and all other arrangements connected with the Mission devolve upon one or two. If our own friends would rally around us, we should make a very different impression upon strangers. The great need always is, musical helpers, those who can play or sing, to lead the choral part of the service. It is hoped that those who are willing to render help will communicate with the Rev. T. E. M. Edwards, Knollys-road, Streatham, who has charge of the movement. The hall is midway between Forest-hill and Sydenham, and is about six minutes' walk from the Sydenham Station on the London, Brighton and South Coast Railway.

OBITUARY.

H. R. W. LEMANN.

THE Bath congregation has once more to lament the loss of a valued member in the death of Henry Rodolph Walker Lemann, who passed away, after a brief illness, on Nov. 9, at his residence, Home Lodge, Bathampton, at the age of eighty-seven years.

Mr. Lemann was born in London in 1812, and was the youngest son of a physician, Dr. Francis Lemann. He was educated at the school of the now famous Pestalozzi, at Yverdon, in Switzerland, afterwards at private schools, and at Eton. He then studied farming in Norfolk, and in 1840 emigrated to Australia, where he had a cattle farm on the Government Survey of Port Fairy, about 200 miles from Melbourne. His near neighbours and intimate friends were still earlier settlers, Mr. and Mrs. Selby. He came home in 1848 with letters of introduction to Mrs. Selby's family, and soon after married her sister, Mary Earles, a member of Mr. Aspland's congregation at the Gravel Pit Chapel, Hackney, returning to Australia with his wife in 1849. The discovery of gold in Victoria in 1851-2 caused for a time great disorder in the colony, and the death of his father occurring about this time, he resolved to sell his land and return home. Though he afterwards visited Australia more than once, his home and family were always henceforward in England.

For some years he farmed his own land in Sussex, and then removed to Bathampton, where he resided for thirty-three years, during the whole of which time he was a member of the Trim-street Congregation. It was in his seventh year that he was sent to the famous school of the venerable Pestalozzi; and it would seem that this early experience left a most enduring impression upon a character that was ever afterwards marked by a certain Republican simplicity, a disregard of all artificial distinctions, a strong Liberalism in political and religious thought, and a love of freedom and of the open air. His father's family belonged to the Church of England, but he read and thought for himself, and in religion, as well as in the choice of the free colonial life rather than a more conventional professional career, he showed the effect of a happy and natural childhood. He sympathised intensely with all Liberal movements, most of all, perhaps, with the great struggle which ended in the liberation of the slaves in the United States, and was well known among his village neighbours as a constant friend of reform.

But it was not only as the advocate of progress that his sympathy and help will be missed. Blessed with unusual vigour to the end of his career, he was constantly found among his friends in the city of Bath, to whom his bright and cheery presence was ever welcome. Few men could be more beloved, for his kindness never varied, and his sincere goodwill was at all times assured. He lived to a ripe age, and was happily spared lengthened suffering; but those who knew him will keenly regret that they can look upon his face no more, and will extend their heartfelt sympathy to Mrs. Lemann and her three daughters in their irreparable loss.

He was buried at the Abbey Cemetery on Monday, Nov. 13, the service being conducted by the Rev. F. W. Stanley.

THE INWARD LIFE.

From the Rev. J. H. Thom's "Christ the Revealer."

It may be doubted whether from a long ancestry we have not inherited too much—from habit now, rather than from any existing preference—of the Puritan predominance of preaching—whether this is not too much the central interest of our public services—whether worship, and the calm deep influences of praise and prayer, are what we most supply, the restoratives of the soul that chiefly we find here. Yet the spirit of a Church must be derived, not so much from instruction, weighty as that may be, as from its frames of prayer, its media of devotional sensibility, its hymns and utterances of aspiration, its modes of approach to the heavenly Grace, the influences that descend upon it from God—nor can anything be more painfully unsatisfying, draining away all the deeper life, the holier atmosphere of the soul in any Church which it characterises, than when worship is made subordinate that the human orator may stand forth. What we should bring to the House of God is a seeking spirit: what we should desire to take away is a frame of heart steeped in the sense of unseen things, fresh and tender with the cool dews of heavenly grace, braced for goodness by the nearer presence of the All-Good, taken for a time from care, and care, and transient fetters, into the open eternity of the Father's Love.

Our religious atmosphere seems charged with restlessness, and we are largely engaged in the least edifying of all employments—self-criticism, spoken in public (in 1859, and again in 1879). Now I deem that there is high wisdom and religion in being content even with our deficiencies, if they seem to come out of our providential lot and position, and not of voluntary fault or any uncongeniality of heart. Let us rest—not abide, but rest—in what we are, if what we are is only genuine and dutiful—let us wait and work patiently within the sphere that is clear to us until God elects us to something better, and not corrupt our hearts by the aimless motions of a blind discontent. There is much of lamentation that seems to me utterly unhealthy; it may ground itself on many discouraging facts, but it is not wise in its issues, nor refreshing in its own spirit. It may be that we are not the Church, nor the men, that the times require, but not the less we are what we are by the grace of God. There may be multitudes waiting for a word to be spoken to them with power, but if we keep back no word that is given to us, then they must wait till God sends the servants who are inspired to speak the word they want. Meanwhile, what is our duty? Is it to be blind to these things? Is it to be satisfied with ourselves? Is it to fall into any languid fatalisms? No—but to be faithful and true, and ever hopeful, because God knows where and how He wants us; and if, without any known unfaithfulness of ours, we are weak and small, then let us be content to be weak and small, and make no swollen efforts at greatness.

For my own part I am contented to see a great work waiting to be done, and to know that not yet are we equal to the doing of it, if that, though no doubt it is humanly depressing, is yet the discipline that God has provided for us. But if I am contented to wait God's time, though I see as it were the coming glory, and know that others will gather it—that at a day, perhaps not far distant, some Man sent of God will speak the word that will then seem so clear and simple that a child might have uttered it, and we shall all wonder how we missed it—a word before which our sects shall disappear and roll together like drops of water—there yet is one thing with which I will never be content, and that is, to hold back one word of the testimony that is given to us in the measure of utterance that God affords—nor to suffer others to hold it back without planting in their conscience the broken barbs of all those arrows of light which their faithlessness has quenched.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

"ICH DIEN."

Whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; and whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant: even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.—Matthew xx. 26, 27.

You have all of you seen, I suppose, a picture or a model of what are called the Prince of Wales's feathers; but, perhaps, you are not so familiar with the motto underneath. Possibly you have never noticed it at all. Below the feathers are two words—not English, not even Latin, but German; the two words are "Ich Dien," which, being translated, mean, "I Serve." Now, how does it come to pass that the Prince of Wales has these three feathers for his sign, and these two words, in German, for his motto?

The reason is this: 550 years ago, or rather more, a great battle was fought between the English and the French. It was fought, as, happily for us, has been the case with so many of our battles, not on English but on foreign soil. It was fought in France, and is known in history as the Battle of Crecy. On the English side there were three leaders. First there was the King, Edward III.; he, of course, commanded the whole; but he was not himself actually in the battle; for, before the battle began, he retired to the top of a hill above the field on which it was about to be fought, and there from a windmill he watched the progress of the fight. The second leader was the Earl of Northampton, an ancestor of the present Marquis. To him the King committed the command of the left division of the army. The third leader was the Boy-Prince of Wales; for at the time of the battle he was only sixteen. And it was because his father, the King, was anxious that his boy should have the honour that day of conquering the French, or as the King put it, of "winning his spurs," that he himself retired to the windmill, and left the young prince to fight his part of the battle alone. And the boy did win his spurs, and a wonderful victory was gained.

The Duke of Wellington used to say there was nothing so dreadful as a victory, excepting a defeat. And I think the young prince and his father must have had some feeling like that as they walked over the battlefield that evening after the battle was ended; for there, it was said, lay dead 1,200 knights, English and French, besides 30,000 footmen. A terrible sight it must have been for that young lad. But of all the sad sights that day, there was one that seemed even sadder than the rest. For there, fallen from his horse, was lying an old man, dead. His hair was white and encircling it was a King's crown. And the old man, plainly, had been blind. It was the blind old King of Bohemia, who had been fighting on the side of the French. And when during the battle the old man saw that the day was going against his friends—for there is a sense, you know, in which even blind men can see—he said to two of his followers: "Lead me right into the middle of the fight that I may strike one good blow with my sword to-day." So two of his friends led the old man into the thick of the fight. And when the boy and his father, after the battle, came up to the place, all three lay dead. But this was not all: in the old King's hand was his standard, and on the standard were pictured our three feathers, and underneath the feathers were inscribed the two words of which I have been speaking—"Ich Dien" ("I serve"). And when King Edward saw it, he said to his son: "Take it my son, there is no nobler motto for a young man to have."

So the Prince took the standard with its motto, and from that day to this the three feathers have been the sign of our Princes of Wales, and the two German words their motto. And "none nobler" could they have!

"I Serve"—this was the motto of Jesus, the motto by which he lived himself. "I am among you," he said, "as one that serves"—the motto which he commended to his followers, and in obedience to which hundreds, and even thousands, of those followers themselves have lived.

Fifteen years ago there was living in England a good and noble man, known as Lord Shaftesbury. His motto—the motto which he inherited, and the motto by which he lived—was almost the same as that of the Prince of Wales: the motto was, "Love and Serve." And when the costermongers of London, whom Lord Shaftesbury had often served and helped, showed their appreciation and their gratitude by presenting him with a coster's cart and a beautiful white donkey to draw it, they had painted on the cart the motto, in this case—as true, as it was noble—"Love and Serve."

So what I would say to you boys and girls, to-day, is what King Edward said to his son on the field of Crecy—"Take it, my children, take this motto; for there is none nobler for a boy or girl to have." Resolve, now, that you will serve your day and generation according to the will of God, and that you will do something, at least, to make the world a happier and a better place.

But there are two things I must ask you to remember, the first that no service is too small to be of value. Even the cup of cold water, rightly given, is sure of its reward. William Wordsworth, the great poet, was once asked by a young girl to write in her album, and what he wrote was this:—

Small service is true service whilst it lasts,
Of humblest friends, bright Creature,
scorn not one;
The daisy, by the shadow that it casts,
Protects the lingering dewdrop from the sun.

No service is too small or insignificant to be of value; and possibly if we possessed the power by which to reckon all things up, we should discover that the sum total of the world's happiness depends far more on countless little services than it does on a few that are very great. Little deeds of kindness, little words of hope and cheer repeated every day and every hour in home, and school, and street, and places of business and of pleasure—these are the things that gladden life. And these are things we all of us can show.

The second thing I have to ask you to remember is this: "true service," as Wordsworth calls it, is commonly the nearest service. Not the noisiest or the biggest or the service most likely to be reported in the papers, but the nearest. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, whatever is nearest to thee, do it."

I read, not long since, the story of a boy who did this literally. This boy was in India forty years ago, at the time of the great Mutiny. He was a clerk in the telegraph office at Delhi, where the Mutiny broke out. The native troops at Delhi had seized the arsenal and were killing all the Europeans they could find. The office was deserted; the clerks—save this boy—had fled: he was alone. In a moment more, as he knew, the natives would arrive. And there, within reach of his hand, was his instrument. Stretching to it, he signalled "Lahore"—another station—and receiving the answer that Lahore was listening, he clicked out this message: "Native troops in open rebellion; murdering all Europeans; all arms in their possession." It was the boy's last act; an instant more, and dusky faces darkened the door, and in another, the cruel foe had cut him down. The boy was "faithful unto death": what his hand found to do, he did—did with his might—did AT ONCE. And when in after days the Colonel who had been stationed at Lahore repeated the story, he always added: "That boy saved India."

Now there are duties near us all; little deeds of helpfulness and kindness which all of us may show; not one of you who may not, every day, do something to make other people happy. Your mother, who is tired, perhaps, with her long day's work; your younger brother who is troubled with his lessons; some old woman down the street, who would be glad to have an errand run or some few sticks brought home to help to light her fire—all these are near, and to help them, even in what seem small ways, is true, real service. By-and-by, greater service—or what seems greater—will be offered to you.

Have, then, the three feathers, or not, as you like—but at least take the motto—the motto that fell from the dead hand of the blind old King of Bohemia, "Ich Dien" ("I Serve").

And remember what Jesus said: "He that would be greatest among you, let him be your minister; and he that would be chief among you, let him be your servant."

JOHN BYLES.

EXACTNESS in little duties is a wonderful source of cheerfulness.—F. W. Faber.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any News-agent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are:—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER ...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR ...	3	4
PER YEAR ...	6	8

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE ...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE ...	2	10	0
PER COLUMN ...	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN ...	0	3	8
BACK PAGE ...	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 18, 1899.

THE ATONEMENT ONCE MORE.

THE address which made most impression at the recent International Congregational Council at Boston seems to have been that by the Rev. P. T. FORSYTH, D.D., of Cambridge, on "The Evangelical Principle of Authority." That address, if we are not mistaken, or the substance of it in a more elaborate form, appeared in the October number of the Contemporary Review, under the title, "The Cross as the Final Seat of Authority." We gather from an article contributed to the Christian World, of Nov. 2, by Dr. WASHINGTON GLADDEN, on "The Doctrine of Expiation," that the address, eloquent and impressive as it was, did not command the unqualified assent of the audience to which it was delivered; and to the searchings of heart thus occasioned we perhaps owe the series of articles on "The Atonement in Modern Religious Thought," begun in last week's Christian World by the Rev. R. J. CAMPBELL, of Brighton, and continued this week by Dean FARRAR—a series in which we are promised contributions from Professor HARNACK, Dean FREMANTLE, Dr. MARCUS DODS, and others, and which promises to be of the greatest interest.

Dr. FORSYTH's plea is for what he regards as the true evangelical faith, the very essence of religion. Nothing else, in his view, can stand against the claims of the Church to supreme authority, of which the logical conclusion is Papal Infallibility, and nothing else can remedy the moral ruin of which mankind is the victim. That true evangelical faith he finds in the acceptance of CHRIST, the crucified Redeemer, as the supreme authority. Not the Bible, but the Gospel, he declares, is the religion of Protestants. "The final authority is the Gospel in the Bible, which is JESUS CHRIST and Him as crucified." "Only a deep and expiatory view of Atonement invests CHRIST with this final moral claim, or the Cross with its ultimate authority."

Of late years, and especially on the part of Anglican Catholic writers, we have been accustomed to hear it more and more earnestly argued that in the Incarnation is the supreme truth of Christianity; but here a different line is taken, and we are told by Dr. FORSYTH that the chief stress ought to be laid on Atonement, as the central spiritual fact of the universe, and the most vital truth of religious life. How far his eloquent appeal may succeed in the re-instatement of a doctrine, which in certain quarters reputed evangelical has confessedly fallen into some neglect, it will be interesting to see.

There is no compromise in Dr. FORSYTH's statement. CHRIST, not as spiritual teacher or moral ideal, but as Redeemer, is to be accepted as the absolute person of history and of the universe, having in Himself the final authority, which is beyond question, of the supreme moral Being. Christian truth, which centres in Him, is to be accepted as miraculously given. The whole meaning of Christianity, which came not by evolution but revolution into the world, is in Him and His atoning death; and it is a miracle worked in every human soul when the Redeemer is accepted, and the new life, the only true life, is thus begun. To substantiate this stupendous claim for the Cross as the final seat of authority, Dr. FORSYTH has to accept the doctrine of a ruined human nature, and an inherited "sinful conscience," which is helpless before the Divine law of righteousness; and he draws a distinction between natural and supernatural affection, and between the natural development of moral life and what comes by supernatural grace to a converted Christian, which to us, remembering the teaching of JESUS during his ministry on earth, seems at once to condemn the whole theory of religious life, of which it is a part.

To love your enemy and forgive your revilers is a totally new and supernatural affection. It is not a natural affection educated, cultured, and refined. Our note is neither culture nor is it character as the result of culture—even of religious culture. It is the change made by grace as an act of forgiveness, and not as a system of consecration. . . . We must insist on the New Testament idea of the miraculous nature of the Christian life, whether we entered on it by a sudden breach with our past or not. Its nature is a standing break with the world in the sense that there is for the soul a decisive difference between the human graces as evolved from nature and as devolved from grace.

When Dr. FORSYTH speaks thus of "graces evolved from nature," and of "natural affection" as distinguished from supernatural, we seem to have stumbled upon an astonishing piece of spiritual scepticism, and must remain unmoved by even the most passionate plea based upon "the evangelical experience of the desperate soul," which involves such a denial of God in the common places of His world.

But it will perhaps be replied to us that we are "mere Theists" and unregenerate, and can therefore have no knowledge of the diviner graces of the Christian life. In Dr. FORSYTH's elucidation of the nature of the supreme moral authority, we find this passage:—

A God who is God only of individuals soon becomes an individual God. We relapse into Theism, which is just individualism obtruded into God. There is no social authority possible on a mere Theistic basis. The individual force of moral authority is due to its social nature and power, to its seat in a God who is in His nature social, and in His unity manifold, triune. "L'Esprit Saint c'est Dieu social." The seat of authority is not only in the centre of the soul, but of society. This great white throne is set up among men because its roots are in the central society of the Godhead itself.

To this metaphysical puzzle of the "society of the Godhead" we find ourselves asking again and again, "What would JESUS say?" What Dr. FORSYTH means by an "individual God," and by the social authority which is not possible "on a mere Theistic basis," we do not pretend to understand, but that the Eternal, whom with JESUS we have learnt to call our FATHER, is the one source of all moral authority, the inspirer of our life and our helper in every need, we are fully assured. And, in view of the above-quoted passage, we ask ourselves, What then of the religion of the Prophets and the Psalmists? Was there no strength of divine authority in that great word, "What doth the LORD require of thee but to do justly, to love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God?" And when JESUS bade the people do the will of the FATHER in heaven, was he mocking them with an impossible ideal, until his atoning death should give them the supernatural grace which alone could make obedience possible?

Dr. WASHINGTON GLADDEN, in the article already referred to, strongly urges, as against Dr. FORSYTH's view, that JESUS must himself have preached the Gospel, and that "where the truth of the Fatherhood of God is fully set forth, there is the whole Gospel." It is that very Fatherhood, he further argues, which finds expression in the cross of CHRIST, since it is the nature of the FATHER to suffer with His children. "He suffers with them, not only because He loves them, but also because He hates the sin that is destroying them." Thus the death of CHRIST is seen to be not a penalty paid in the place of sinful men, but a supreme act of self-sacrifice, expressive of the Divine abhorrence of sin and of love for those who are to be lifted out of their sin; and this is the law of all higher life, that we must suffer together, and help one another upon the upward way.

There is, therefore, no need to return to any doctrine of Atonement, as effecting in some mysterious transcendent way a revolution in the spiritual order of the world; but the natural unfolding of the thought of God as Father, and the trust thus awakened, wonderfully quickened by the teaching both of the life and death of Jesus, and confirmed wherever there has been the true life of brotherhood among his followers, must be all-sufficient for the moral and spiritual needs of men.

The thought of the sufferings and death of Jesus has undoubtedly a strong hold upon the human heart, and the appeal to his great love thus manifested must awaken a fresh devotion of grateful discipleship; but that the way of redemption from sin is only through the Cross, as interpreted by Dr. Forsyth, we find it impossible to believe, especially when we remember that it was Jesus himself who told the story of the Prodigal Son.

PRAYER TO BE USED DURING WAR.

ALMIGHTY God, who art the Father of all the families of man, and hast laid them under the dominion of Thine eternal law and inscrutable purpose, may it please Thee to grant that in the pain and stress of the war in which our nation is presently engaged, we may be able to restrain all private passions, and entertain just and generous thoughts of our enemies. And whether this trouble shall issue for us in victory or defeat, may we accept the event as from Thee. May devotion to duty dignify the soldier's calling, and the consciousness of faithful service be his solace in agony and mortal pain. Comfort all hearts made desolate by the ravages of war; forgive whatever of wrong has led to this dread controversy; and in Thine own good time, bring friend and foe alike into the conditions of a true and lasting peace. Amen.

HUMAN help in our need, human forgiveness of our wrong-doing, human love in our loneliness: these are the sacraments through which, at their sweetest and purest, we feel a divine help and forgiveness and love flowing into our souls.—G. S. Merriam.

It is easy to observe that, as they who are most gentle and sparing in censure are usually most exempt from blame, so the most censorious are usually the most stupid in discerning, and most careless in retrenching their own faults. And needs it must be so, for the actions of other men devour their leisure, take up the intention of their spirits, employ the keenness of their passions on them, so that they cannot, and will not, attend to themselves; they are so much abroad, they are so very busy elsewhere, that they little know or care what is done at home; while they are spying and pulling out "motes from their brother's eye," they "consider not the beam that is in their own eye," although never so gross and obvious.—Isaac Barrow.

THE INSPIRATIONS OF SCIENCE.

BY THE REV. BROOKE HERFORD, D.D.

"The invisible things of God from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made."—Romans i. 20.

I WANT to speak of the confirmation and even inspiration which science in its later stages is giving to this religious thought and faith which brings us together in the life of our churches. When I was beginning my ministry, the talk was all about the difficulties and perplexities of science. And indeed they were very real. The material world was being explored in every branch of it with such brilliant realism, that the spiritual world seemed vague and doubtful in comparison. The difficulties touched the whole circle of faith—the thought of God, of any soul in man—of immortality—even of any divine authoritativeness in morals—so that many people lost much confidence in that side of life, in all the study and exercise of religion. It seemed to lack reality, compared with the exact investigations of outward and tangible nature. I have felt all that myself. One does not need to be a scientist to follow with intense appreciation what the scientists are doing and thinking. Why, there were years when hardly a three months passed without bringing some new step of discovery, or some new forecast of theory by those who seemed to see and think the furthest, which made one feel anew as if the whole underpinning of religion and worship was being knocked away. And there could be no evading it—at least for us. I once heard Oliver Wendell Holmes say that "alone among Christian Churches, Unitarians had faced the modern discoveries of science with perfectly open eyes." And, of course, that meant perplexity and doubt for a time. But now we are going to have our reward! For if one does not need to be a scientist to feel the difficulties science presents, certainly one does not need to be a scientist to appreciate its affirmations and even its inspirations. And it has come to me of late that really, taken altogether, its great new discoveries not only do not touch the ancient reverence of mankind, but in their larger, longer sweep of meaning set it upon a broader base, and with an infinitely higher reach of meaning.

The first of these inspirations of science that I will speak of is, the reassurance of the Eternal Goodness which has come in the fuller unfolding of Evolution. At first, you know, Evolution seemed to bring insurmountable difficulty to religious faith. As men tracked it, working, here and there, they seemed to find everything silently doing itself, by impassive law; no place for God, and certainly no place for divine goodness. The law seemed not only impassive but merciless: that "struggle for existence," with the weaker always going to the wall, filling the world with strife and cruelty: a thousand things in nature and in history which no ingenuity of reasoning could show in any light of goodness. No! but gradually as the whole scope and immensity of this great thought of Evolution has appeared, as daring, surefooted thinkers have traced it back and back through the vast periods that geology proves and that astronomy has to infer, there has risen up the sense of an ordered meaning present through the whole which awes the mind. Even in the passing detail, as of some gracious beauty in a flower, or the curious wonder of an insect spinning a cocoon, one is constantly touched by an irresistible impression that something means this; but when you even glance along the whole vast cosmic process the sense of a mighty meaning becomes almost overwhelming. When the astronomer takes me back to the primal fire-mists for the remotest beginning of worlds, and shows me those fire-mists circling into spheres and systems, and some cooling into globes, and at last a strange new element of life appearing, covering the globe with verdure, coming at length to animal life, at first in lowest forms, but through the measureless periods developing into higher forms of infinite variety—from monad into mammal, and up to man; and all things coming at last to the infinitely varied wonder and beauty of the world as you and I see it about us to-day—why, simply, I may shut my eyes, just dazed, and refuse to think about it at all; but if I do think about it, I cannot help recognising in it all thought, meaning, orderly meaning, and progressive meaning.

That is something of an inspiration, this reassurance of an eternal meaning, that we at least are not chance atoms, drifting like floating specks of foam upon a tideless ocean dense with mist, but parts of a vast traceable onward movement—a movement that has already come to wonderful things, and touches us with an irresistible sense of further meanings still.

And not meaning only. I think it comes to us, in this longer look which Evolution gives, that it is a good meaning, that the power which dominates the whole must surely be good. We may not see it in the passing event. You watch things as they are working out to-day, and there is much to cause doubt as to whether the power which causes, or even permits it all, can be good. Books have been written on the cruelty of Nature. "Red in tooth and claw," as Tennyson wrote; a "scene of incessant strife," as Huxley called it. That "struggle for existence"—all things preying on one another—has an awfully merciless look, as if some vast machine were just tearing things to pieces—living things to pieces—all the time. And when you look into the human world, it does not need Dahomey and its horrors; life on the underside of civilisation; East-end life in hard times; plague or famine among the close-packed millions of India—how our hearts shudder for such things, and long for some tiny scrap of omnipotence to make them less. And sometimes things culminate in such crises of agony—such agony as Alva's soldiers wrought in Holland three hundred years ago; such agony as Armenia has suffered in our very sight; such sharp points of unutterable horror as that crowding, trampling multitude at the Moscow Coronation; or that fiery furnace at the Paris charity fair—that one feels like shrieking out against any idea of goodness in God, if God there be.

I know! I have felt all that! But still, what is it makes us horror-struck at such things? What is this pity that we feel? Whence comes it? This also is part of this long process of Evolution. It seems a curious thing, does it not, that this slow, silent working of things together which has brought the world on, even by all this struggle for existence, has, as its finest result, evolved a Being capable of looking into the struggling process, and criticising it, and being saddened by it, and trying to mitigate it? At the first flash of it, it seems as if there might be two processes of Evolution—one evolving nature higher and higher, but with these forces of struggle and merciless outcome of suffering; and the other evolving man, up to mercy and pity and help. But no! The whole is one vast complex process; and surely, then, it is in this highest, latest product—man—that we have the real interpretation of the whole, that “to which the whole creation moves.” Yes! there is plenty still that we do not understand; but such a steady unfolding, through such inconceivably vast time, of ordered meanings leading finally to man—man conscious of what goodness is, and loving it, and feeling it the very greatest thing of all—that the whole grows upon me more and more, in spite of much I cannot understand, as a very inspiration of faith in the Eternal Goodness—goodness the final meaning of the whole.

There is one of the inspirations of this great scientific truth of Evolution. Another is, the trust it gives us in the higher indications of our own nature. Here is this moral life in man, this which comes out in principles of righteousness, which makes laws and sets up the world's institution of justice and struggles for the good. Here is man's religious life, “feeling after God if, haply, it may find Him,” seeking for some life above man's self, to worship, and to lean upon in prayer and trust; and not only feeling after God, but after some further life to come. What is all this? And can man trust these things, as anything real, or are they mere restless and morbid fictions of man's conceit, taking the echoes of his own thought for intimations from a higher realm?

As this questioning age has tried to apply its science to these vague, immaterial things, they have seemed so vague, so intangible, so impossible of verification by any scientific process, that there has grown up a widespread scepticism about them, and all sorts of theories have been shaped out as to how they came, not only to be, but to prevail so widely among mankind. The thought of God has by some been traced back to the savage's ignorant dread of the powers of nature. The thought of further life to come had its beginning, we are told, in dreams. The sense of right and duty may have grown up out of the accumulated motives of self-interest. And so all round the circle of man's outreaching life towards the infinite and the Divine he has been beaten back, as it were, upon himself, and even Evolution itself has been pressed into the service to explain man's blundering aspirations, and to marshall his retreat from the supposed cloud-land of superstitious fancy, to the solid ground of facts.

Well, all that explaining away has been profoundly unsatisfactory. Multitudes have felt their lives poorer for it, even while they have sorrowfully allowed that they could see no other way. Men and women have longed to pray, and felt the old songs of worship tremble on their lips, but choked them down because they fancied science had shown only empty vastnesses of space, where once they thought was a listening, loving Presence. And it is all a blunder! Science has done nothing of the kind, and Evolution, when you take in the full vast meaning of it, does the very opposite! For Evolution has not only evolved plants and beasts, it has evolved man—and man not only in the physical frame in which you can still trace the continuous plan, but in higher faculties, and powers, and feelings which seem above all connection with that lower life of his evolved beginnings. As I try to contemplate what the evolution of Man means, my mind is filled with awe. Why, even the slow processes which have evolved the beauty of a flower, or the prehensile power of an elephant's trunk—how wonderful it is to think of them! But think of the evolution of a man: the development of mind; the growth of the first rude tribal sense of right into the “categorical imperative” of a conscience; the evolution of animal lust into pure human love; all the higher range of human qualities which are the most tremendous forces in history—the passion for righteousness, the “enthusiasm of humanity,” the uplook to some higher life than man's, the onlook to some further existence than the present. Even as mere phenomena of the present these things are too great, too uniform, too widespread, to be dismissed as mere curious variations of morbid growth. But when we take them in their place in this vast orderly evolution of human nature, why their place is the topmost and the surest place. “Evolution” not only permits us so to view them, but compels us to do, unless our whole process of thinking is to be put to confusion: Evolution, surely, guarantees its own best and permanent results. Man is the meaning of the whole. The mind is the meaning of man; and among the qualities of mind, surely those are the highest in which he rises to the sense of duty and dares to think of faith in God and in a further life to come.

Consider this last thought for a moment, for it is on this that thinking people have become most confused and discouraged to-day—the question of life to come—and it is on this that any large thought of Evolution seems to me to have an absolute inspiration! Look at it as a mere academic question of to-day, and there is a good deal to be said on both sides. Certainly, the further life has never been proved. No certain voice comes to us across the void. The promptings of nature, as you and I may feel them to-day, are vague and ill-defined. No one has ever traced the vital spark beyond the body's life, or even found it as anything distinct at all. No! but just here, where all our observations of to-day seem somehow to fail us, comes in the significance of Evolution. Look at the thought of further life, in the long development of man. It is no tardy conclusion from fragmentary arguments, but part of the mighty chain of tendency. You trace something of it as long as you can trace man at all. Goldwin Smith has lately written one of the most trenchant criticisms of all the common arguments for life to come; but at the end, he admits that “there does seem to be a voice in every man which, if he will listen to it, tells him that his account is not closed at death.” He seems to regard this as a slight concession, indeed; but really, in the light of this vast orderly Evolution, it carries the whole thing! What is it that puts in man those dim faint tendencies which keep pushing him on a little and a little more along those lines of character which lead on through incalculable periods from the savage to the sage and saint? It is not mere desire. Why, oftentimes this sense of further life has taken forms which have been a dread, and made man long not to be. To use again that saying of Dr. Martineau's: “Man does not believe in immortality because he has ever proved it; but he is for ever trying to prove it, because he cannot help believing it.” It is part of his evolution. And this great Nature, which does not evolve an instinct in the meanest insect without something to correspond to it, shall we not trust it in the greatest thought which it has evolved in the heart of man?

And just here comes in one or more of these “Inspirations of Science.” For see: all through man's thinking of what he has called “soul,” of whether there is such a thing, and of whether it is to live again, he has kept groping about among the resources and possibilities of the material body and the material world. Especially he has been hampered by the difficulty of conceiving of life not resident and continued in some body. How shall this life of mine continue to be, in this personal consciousness which alone would be any real immortality, if this material body through which it acts and feels is simply dissolved and ended? I do not know; and, once, that “I do not know” seemed a grave argument against any such continuity. But how is it to-day? Why, science itself has simply risen above all that apparatus of investigation and reasoning which used to feel limited by the resources of matter. Science itself has passed beyond materialism. In its finer researches to-day, it is moving freely and confidently among elements which are just as undiscoverable by any direct perception as life or soul in man, or as God in nature. Its most fixed terms are turning out to be mere algebraic symbols. We do not even know what matter is, or whether it is any real thing, or merely a succession of ideas or impressions such as we have in dreams, which yet seem so real. This electricity, what is it—of which no one knows whether it is a substance or a force? This ether, which no eye has ever seen, nor finest instrument detected its presence, and yet which scientists are agreed must exist, pervading even the mass of steel or stone, among the particles like air between the separate lumps in a coal-heap, and equally filling the vast interstellar spaces? Or these “X Rays,” owning in their very name how utterly beyond all previous conception they are? Life! what difficulty can there be about life, or life's continuance, when all the thought of the mere body, and of matter and substance altogether, is widened out by facts like these? Once be sure that life is at all—that you and I are points of conscious life—and that “conscious life” is the most wonderful and most tremendous thing in the Universe, and there is no difficulty about its continuance if its own mysterious nature and tendency seem to point that way.

Ah, no! The real, greatest wonder is not how personal life should continue, but how ever it came to be. But having come to be, and having evolved into this consciousness of self, and ability to look into the universe and into itself; and all the way impelled onwards towards goodness and towards the worship of some higher power, let us tread confidently on, sure that this universe is verily the expression of that higher power, and is not going to land us in chaos or intellectual confusion.

Even Paul, in that old time, when men had spelled their way into so little of the universe, thought that enough was seen for men to glorify the invisible power and Divinity: "The invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things which are made." How much more so now. This is the inspiration with which all this wonderful science of our time enriches and clears my mind. It lifts me clear out of the half-meaning and confusion of the moment to a great height, from which I see the whole creation ever moving on, in orderly growth, even the mere earth coming ever to a nobler type; and the creatures that somehow grew up in it, developing through awful silences of time from beast to man; and man growing from man the savage into man the thinker, and growing still in conscience, affection, worship, faith, and ever, part of that faith, the looking on to greater life still beyond. And then, just when such soaring thought seemed blocked and contradicted by the poor limitations of the body and the earth, science rends the veil, shows us the dull, hard matter, that seemed to hold us prisoners, as a mere ethereal texture, free to all the purposes of God, and for whatever may be His uses and destinies for man.

Yes, these are inspirations, inspirations to man to lift himself up from the ground; to trust his higher nature, and, even in the commonest lot in which he has to live, to walk with a great faith in God, and a great preaching heart of wondering adoration.

TRUTH AND MEN.

IN the course of a stirring speech at the recent meeting of the American Nation Conference of Unitarian and other Christian Churches, the Rev. Samuel A. Eliot, secretary of the A.U.A., spoke as follows:—

"I have but little use for a merely didactic religion. Intellect may here decide and conscience rebuke, but still we need a more adequate dynamic for progress. Our ideals will evaporate without embodiment unless some passion for service kindles in us. I cannot but rejoice, then, that you bid me turn from debate over the perplexities of Ethics and Divinity to consideration of the public serviceableness which is, after all, the just test and measurement of our vitality. I cannot believe that even the most accurate religious opinions can ever alone constitute a pure and true Christianity. Pure Christianity demands not only right belief and receptivity of spirit, it demands imaginative vigour, a robust temper of service, a radiant love. I distrust even the morality out of which no heroisms grow. A good theology—and we have it—that attracts but careless allegiance seems to me worthless beside a poor theology that really inspires the strength of self-sacrifice. The tests of religious conviction are such as these: Does it kindle the fire of love? Does it light the blaze of righteous indignation? Does it run through society as a cleansing flame, burning up what is base and mean? Does it refine life? If it stands these tests, then, whatever the accuracy or inaccuracy of its opinions, it is no heresy; and, if it fails to stand these tests, is it not perilously near to being a mockery?"

"Yet do not misunderstand me. I do not forget that deliberate conviction must precede all useful activity, and I rejoice that in an age too much given to superficiality and haste this Conference is ready to address itself to the careful study of great intellectual and spiritual problems. The practical and the meditative life should balance and supplement each other. A religion that was all outward activity would be but a self-exhausting fire: a religion that was chiefly opinion would be but an intricate bit of mechanism without any fire under the boiler. Neither the truth of our doctrine nor the mere quantity of our outward endeavour is a complete test of our usefulness. The scholar who has only the meditative power may find truth, but remain so wrapped up in contemplation of it as never to find the men to whom to impart it; while the man who has only the power of outward activity may find the men, but have no vision to declare to them. It is the faith that combines a truth and an affection which has immortal vitality. To furnish truth for men and men for truth, is not that the noblest office of manhood?"

* * * * *

"Let us never mistake machinery for power. Organisation will wait on inspiration. We can invent no automatic mechanism to turn our knowledge into life. Only by the consecration of the individual can organisation be made effective. Let us lay down our tracks of progress, let us devise the mechanism through which our thought and hope may speed; but let us not forget that the only source of power is in personal conviction, devotion, and self-sacrifice. God's way to men is through men. The gospel is impotent unless it is incarnated in human souls. The great religions of the world have won their triumph, not through outward organisation, but through the idealism of individuals. Christianity itself is not a matter of politics or creeds: it is just the self-perpetuating power of an example. Christianity is not a system of doctrines: it is just the testimony of a life. 'Personality,' said Bunsen, 'is the lever of history.' It is vain, said one of our own leaders, to try to make a better world except by the antecedent creation of consecrated people. 'The only salvation is through saviours, and saviours are people who have sanctified themselves for others' sake.'

"On the one hand, then, I ask you to see to it that your Association does not become a body without a spirit; and, on the other hand, see to it that it shall provide an adequate channel through which your sympathy and helpfulness can abundantly flow. If we have any precious treasure of truth, any vision of a better commonwealth, we hold it, not as a luxury, but as a trust. We must not seek to serve ourselves, but to strengthen and purify those principles of religious liberty and civic order which underlie all that we call civilisation."

THE imagination and the feelings have each their truths, as well as the reason. The absorption of the three, so as to concentrate them in the same point, is one of the universalities requisite in a true religion.—Guesses at Truth.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

PROSELYTES AND DISCIPLES.

SIR,—An imperfect newspaper report of my sermon preached before the East Cheshire Christian Union on the text, "Go ye, and make disciples," and a series of questions based on that report, place me at some disadvantage in replying to a critic so acute as Mr. Armstrong; but I will do what I can to supply omissions, and to meet objections.

Though the proselytising spirit of the Pharisees was glanced at, the point mainly dwelt upon was Christ's avoidance of the term "proselyte" in his final missionary charge (Matt. xxviii. 19, 20), although that term was in common use and was specially reserved for those who "came over" from heathenism (Acts ii. 10). Of the term "disciple" already claimed for his followers, and then extended through them to "all the nations," I speak thus:—

It is a name which binds, but does not restrict. It leaves the way open: It leaves much undisturbed. There came a day when other terms were imported into the Christian profession—the soldier, and the soldier's oath—but it began with the image of the scholar, the learner. Jew and Greek and Barbarian could come under this term. The fusion of the best elements in Eastern and Western thought and life was made possible by the adoption of this inclusive word. Discipleship is open to all grades, all ages, all occupations; there is no condition so free, so liberal, so capable of present adaptation, so capable of future expansion. It proceeds by stages, here a little and there a little; it is experimental, for each lesson must be reduced to practice:—"Go ye, and make disciples; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you."

How severely practical the primary conditions of Christian discipleship are, and how remote from intellectual test, I show by citing Christ's own statements:—"By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another; If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; If any man come to me, and hate not his own life, he cannot be my disciple; Whosoever he be of you that renounceth not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." These "ifs" of Love, Perseverance, Humility, Self-denial constitute a moral and spiritual basis, and to teach them is to make primarily a moral and spiritual appeal. In this connection I also point out that it was through this appeal grounded on this basis, and not through argumentative statement, that the first preaching of Christianity took effect:—

We read in the Acts of the Apostles that an angel "loosed the apostles out of prison, and bade them go and stand and speak to the people all the words of this life." Men taught Christ by living Christ. Moral conversion was the message which shook the Empire, and penetrated the forests of the north, and crossed the seas to our own shores, and brought kings from their thrones, and swept the country-side—the message of living witnesses radiant with the life they preached.

Against this evangelising spirit I set the proselytising spirit, the recruiting, enlisting, beating-up spirit, the spirit which says, "Be one of us by thinking as we do," which fastens on doctrinal error rather than on moral defect, and encourages a man to think that his religion is more to blame than himself, and that truth can be reached by a ladder of amended definitions. It is, I said, a shallow spirit. It imagines that a new adherent can "come over" from the convictions, habits and affections of a lifetime, forget his very mother-tongue of belief and reverence and love, and shed his faith like ill-fitting clothes:—

To "come over from orthodoxy"—what a cold-blooded phrase! If a man has ever adored Christ, and poured out his soul to him in prayer, then there is something in orthodoxy, if it has ever really been his, which is flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bone, and cleaves to him as his own skin. But if orthodoxy is to him only a set of propositions which can be exchanged for another set, and this with him is to "come over," then suspect him, and suspect yourself. What ought you really to think of one who can recast his Christology after reading a pamphlet?

It is, I added, a jealous, watchful spirit. It may be nonconformist and yet insist on conformity; not, indeed, conformity to creeds and rubrics, but conformity to type, not less oppressive. You come under close observation. You must accept certain ideals of worship and church government. You are thought disloyal if you rebel against a custom, a form, a phrase, a name—and this, I contended, was not the open discipleship of Jesus.

Coming to practical exhortation, I assumed that a Christian Union for missionary purposes was already committed to Christ's missionary method. From that point of view I deprecated the lazy, amateurish circulation of controversial literature, and the narrowing down of religious inquiry to mental perplexities:—

If we must call the penny post and printed matter to our aid, where are our Tracts for the Times? What do we say to men about their vices, apart from their views? What do we say to the outcast, the fallen, the depraved, and, still more, to the rich who misuse their wealth, the proud who misuse their strength, the wise who misuse their wit?

To grapple, then, with Mr. Armstrong's leading questions, Does Jesus condemn proselytism as such? Is it unworthy of a religious society to proselytise? I would to both questions answer, "Yes." The satire which lies in "Ye compass sea and land to make one" is, to my mind, a condemnation of method as much as of character. But I make much more of this, that the "Be one of us by thinking as we do" spirit is quite absent from his teaching. Nor can I think of him as "persuading a man to join a particular religious organisation." It was ever his way to regenerate with new affections rather than to indoctrinate with new beliefs—"Learn of me the secrets of my heart, and ye shall find rest for your souls." The conservative teaching of Jesus on the ceremonial side of religion, showing how little he desired those who came unto him to come over from that use and that society to which they were attached, is too little recognised. It was ever his aim to merge all comers in a kingdom, a society if you will, for which there should be no name less wide than that of heaven itself; and all that is at variance with his method, and seems to be opposed to his mind, I take as tacitly condemned. As for religious societies which act in his name, let them "infuse convictions" certainly, but only as we infuse them one upon another in daily intercourse, and always as principles of right conduct rather than as principles of correct belief, speaking the truth in a love quite free from the bitterness, and even from the emphasis, of sectarian zeal. To do otherwise is, I submit, to do that which is "unworthy" of religion.

Whatever it is that Mr. Armstrong defends, I hope he will not continue to call it proselytism. It is a tainted word, full of confusion and false suggestion, a term of reproach which rival Churches fling one at another. Proselytism is an admirable weapon—until it is turned against ourselves. Possibly Mr. Armstrong himself may have thought of the clergyman in the parish school as a proselytiser, though he also "may be all aglow with spiritual fervour." A Church that avowedly proselytises lays itself open to suspicion that it is not so much in love with truth as with its own expression of it, or so much concerned with men's souls as with its own success. If stigma is attached to the word on account of the saying in the First Gospel, it also attaches to it because it stands for a permanently mischievous tendency in the religious mind.

I am sorry that Mr. Armstrong, at the end of his letter, supports the amazing notion that Unitarians have a peculiar hold upon the doctrine of the Fatherhood of God. "Our Father" is the first word in orthodox teaching, Fatherhood the first picture laid upon the infant mind, and, if stern lines disclose themselves in the drawing, it is because fatherhood itself contains them—a father's love is searchingly severe—and the reported sayings of Jesus warrant them. Nay, it is quite possible to obscure the doctrine by depicting love too much as good-natured indulgence. If I mistake not, the doctrine of the Fatherhood of God is as capable of reduction to an arid formula, can be as easily lodged and carried in some receptacle of the brain, as any other theological statement. There is another doctrine on which Christ laid equal stress, the correlative doctrine of the Sonship of Man—"that ye may be the children of your Father"—and I cannot help thinking that if Unitarians would dwell as much on the conditional Sonship, so partially realised, as on the absolute Fatherhood, so universally admitted, they would be more effective instruments in making "disciples of all the nations."

I cannot hope that what I have now said will carry much persuasion, but it may do something to make clear my former meaning.

EDWIN P. BARROW.

Manchester, Nov. 13.

BRADFORD, MANCHESTER: STONE-LAYING.

On Saturday afternoon, Nov. 11, the foundation-stone of the new church in course of erection in Mill-street, Bradford, Manchester, was laid by Mr. John Dendy. The building is designed for the accommodation of the congregation and Sunday-school at present meeting in the Bradford Public Hall, under the ministry of the Rev. W. E. Attack. Notwithstanding the unsettled state of the weather, there was a fair attendance of both ministers and laymen representing the Unitarian Congregations in this district. The President of the District Association of Presbyterian and Unitarian Churches, the Rev. GEORGE KNIGHT, presided. He assured the Bradford folk of the hearty good wishes of the Association for their success, and hoped it would not be very long before the church was formally opened. He trusted they would always be loyal to truth, united in charity, and that years of honour and usefulness might be in store for them.

The Rev. DENDY AGATE, in presenting a mallet and silver trowel to Mr. Dendy, said he was desired to do so by both the Association and the Bradford friends. It was, he said, during Mr. Dendy's first year of Presidency that the Forward Movement was started, and during his second year of office that it was decided to start work at Bradford and Urmston. That work was indebted to him for much thought and interest and money, and he had watched the growth of the Bradford cause especially with a keen anxiety for its welfare.

Mr. DENDY, in the course of his remarks, said:—"We do not come here in a spirit of rivalry with any existing Church. We gladly recognise what good work is already being done in this district. The memory of the late Mr. Crossley is sufficient to teach us humility. We seek no success at the expense of any other beneficent agency. If we did we should fail, and should deserve to fail. But we believe there is room for us also, that there is a work which we are fitted to do, and people here whom we are able to help. We seek to do that work and render that help in peace and charity with all our neighbours, and, whenever possible, in hearty co-operation with them. We intend, God helping us, that it shall not be our fault if anything of strife or ill-will should follow upon the foundation of this place. We believe that in our Father's house are many mansions, and that this saying holds good of this world also. To-day we found our little mansion here, certain that if we be true and faithful He will recognise and bless it, small and humble though it be. We trust to make this place a centre of religious life and of organised work for the benefit of our fellow-men. We hope that here men and women and little children will be enabled to draw nearer in love to God and to one another. Why can we not join ourselves to some larger Church and throw in our efforts with its work? How gladly some of us would do that if it were possible! Some day it may be that all Christian people will be at home in every Christian Church; but that time is not yet. It is not yet, because in the vast majority of cases the joining of any Church involves something more than participation in those great beliefs and affections. It involves, expressly or by implication, an assent to certain more or less definitely stated matters of intellectual opinion, or articles of faith. The creeds are the doorkeepers of most of the Churches, and to be lawfully inside you must first satisfy them. We know there are great numbers of good and honourable men and women, who do in perfect truthfulness and good faith satisfy those doorkeepers and enter those other Churches. What shall we say to them, but that we wish them "God-speed," and ask their brotherly goodwill? We come here in no narrow controversial spirit. But we know also that there are others to whom this is no longer possible, who find themselves unable to enter the old homes. To them we offer a new home—not one in which they will be asked to satisfy some new doorkeeper, but one of which the doors will stand for ever open to all; where it will not be stated or implied that by entering in a man commits himself to anything more than a desire to join in work and worship with those already there. We stand here for the principle of open trusts—a principle founded upon the belief that God's revelation to man is a continuous and progressive one, that all truths are from God, and that new truths are constantly becoming known to us. We cherish the freedom to seek ever new light. We think it is wrong for us to place any obstacle in the way of the same freedom for those who are to come after us. This building, however, is to be a centre of work as well as of worship. Hither I trust will come many eager souls anxious to do something to help their fellows and by some practical service bring a little nearer the kingdom of heaven upon earth. To all such we shall offer a welcome, and try to afford them opportunities such as they desire. I have always hesitated to speak of this place merely as a church, because that word carries with it to many minds something of a reproach. It suggests to some an assemblage of persons, more or less respectable in the conventional sense, whose principal object is to gain something for themselves, if not in this world then in the next. I will not stop to inquire how far that reproach is justified. I will only say that my own belief is that one of the surest foundations for a helpful communion in religious worship is to be found in an earnest communion in religious work. And by religious work I mean all work undertaken in the spirit of Jesus, whether in his name or not, for the help of our fellow-men; for their spiritual and for their material welfare, for their secular as well as for their religious education; ay, even for their innocent and very necessary recreation. We entertain no exaggerated hopes of a speedy and brilliant success. We know that the work may be slow and difficult. Duty often is, and this is an attempt to discharge a duty, the duty of sharing what good things we have with our fellow-men. But we go forward in the faith that if we be steadfast and true, the blessing of God will rest upon this place, and that in due season some harvest will be garnered here for Him." Mr. Dendy then proceeded to lay the stone.

Mr. WAITE moved, and Mr. HAZZLEWOOD seconded, a vote of thanks to both the Chairman and Mr. Dendy, to which the latter responded. Hymns were sung during the service; the opening prayer was offered by the Rev. Priestley Prime, and the concluding prayer by the Rev. Charles Roper. The collection amounted to between £8 and £9.

A substantial tea was provided at five o'clock in the Bradford Public Hall, in which afterwards a public meeting was held, which was presided over by Mr. G. H. LEIGH, in the unavoidable absence of the President of the Association. The Chairman spoke as one closely connected with the work of the Association in recent years, who had taken a great interest in the Bradford cause. Their minister had shown himself worthy of their help and sympathy in all respects. He thought that the building in course of erection would be found sufficient for all their present requirements. They might feel justly proud of its character and appearance. In it they would be able to consolidate and do much to bring brightness and encouragement into the lives of those amongst whom they lived and worked.

The Rev. W. E. ATTACK, in the name of the Bradford people, gave a cordial welcome to everybody, and announced that apologies had been received from Revs. S. A. Steinthal, W. H. Burgess, J. E. Stead, B. C. Constable, T. P. Spedding, W. L. Tucker, R. T. Herford, J. W. Bishop, and other friends.

The Rev. DENDY AGATE made his address interesting with reminiscences. The Sunday-school which started with fifty scholars now has nearly 250 scholars. Some of those who were scholars five years ago have grown up into fine young men and women, and are helping splendidly in the work.

Mr. JOHN DENDY said that freedom was not all the message they had for the world. There was an idea abroad that they were negative and not positive in their gospel. There might be some truth in that once, for they were forced into a fighting attitude; but it was not the whole truth, for they had a strong, living, positive faith to give to the world. There seemed to him four great religious facts to teach—namely, God, Man, Revelation and Salvation. Upon all these points they had a faith to offer, strong and positive. They believed in God as the most real of all realities, with faith grounded not merely on the report of others, but from their own actual experience, which was confirmed by the testimony of others. They believed in Man, not as a fallen but as a rising being; growing in perfection, spiritual and not material; endowed with divine powers—reason, conscience, love. And as God never left man in isolation, they believed in Revelation, not as a past act, something written in a book once for all, but in a daily communication between Creator and creature. They believed also in Salvation which meant a coming home to God; not a past act performed for them, but a drawing of man to God day by day—the ultimate destiny of all. They had, therefore, a positive faith good to live by and to die by, a faith to which thoughtful people were coming more and more, and which would eventually triumph over those forms of faith which did injustice to the character of God.

Principal GORDON followed with one of his breezy speeches, with plenty of good points in it. He did not believe in the cry "Back to Jesus." The Golden Age of the Master's activity was not in the past; he believed in the evolution of Christian thought and experience which had yet to come forth from that grain of mustard seed sown so many years ago. "On to Jesus" should be the watchword of living Christians.

We are marching to Emmanuel's ground,
To fairer lands on high.

Yes, and to fairer lands below. Earth came first; Heaven only second. Emmanuel's ground was here, if they were his, if they had got his thoughts in their hearts. Then, in Bradford as in Palestine, they could be a living community proving that the life Jesus lived was contagious; and that was the reward and aim of a Christian Church.

Councillor SCOTT and the Rev. CHARLES ROPER also addressed the meeting; and the speeches were interspersed with some excellent music, vocal and instrumental, rendered by Miss F. Howard, Messrs. C. Howard, and H. Gibson. It was a most successful and inspiring meeting, and ought to send our Bradford friends on their way with a good heart.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

APPEALS.

Miss Jennett Humphreys writes:—I want some 20 pairs of cast-off cricketing trousers, some 20 woollen jerseys, and some 20 pair of indiarubber shoes, to fit out as many extremely poor members of a gymnastic class. The young fellows are of the genuine working grade; their ages vary from 16 to 20, their earnings are, perhaps, as low as 12s. or 14s. a week; they enjoy the relaxation and the sense of muscular power the exercises on the rings and ropes and bars of the gymnasium give to them; but as they "fall in" at the call of their instructor, and as they vault and climb and march, amidst better-off fellow-members, some of whom are able to afford fairish gymnastic clothing, they are sadly hampered by the unsuitability of their heavy boots and working braces and shirt-sleeves. They feel, also, that sort of humiliation which young men who can "dress" for any variety of games will readily understand; and if any of these last will look through their ample wardrobes and send such garments as they will not wear again, I shall be deeply grateful. Let the parcels be addressed to me at the Portland Institute, Little Titchfield-street, W.

Boston.—The third of the re-opening services in the Unitarian Chapel, Spain-lane, was held last Sunday evening, Nov. 11. Mr. Partington, of Hull, preached a very good sermon on "Joy in Worship," which was much appreciated by the hundred persons assembled. At the close of the service, several copies of the Christian Life were sold, and numerous tracts distributed.

Buxton.—A sermon, by the Rev. George Street, on "Protestantism Up-to-Date," preached in the Hartington-road Church, on Sunday week, is printed in full in the Buxton Herald, of Nov. 8. The preacher advocated a broader interpretation of Protestantism than that presented at the recent "National Protestant Congress" in Manchester.

Chesterfield.—The congregation here has recently suffered a serious loss in the death of Mr. Charles Wragg, at the age of sixty-six. Mr. Wragg was one of the oldest and staunchest members of Elder Yard Chapel, which he had attended from his boyhood. His seat was rarely unoccupied, and he was always an enthusiastic supporter of all that concerned the welfare of the church. He took an eager interest also in the progress of our churches generally. We shall sorely miss his faithful zeal and constancy, and hearty personal service in the cause he loved. The funeral, which was largely attended, took place at the chapel, on Oct. 23, the minister officiating.

East London Unitarian Sunday-school Union.—The first meeting of the winter session was held on Saturday evening, Nov. 11, at Stratford Unitarian Church. The Rev. H. Woods Perris presided. After tea Miss A. Lawrence read a thoughtful and stimulating paper on "Patience in our Work," which was followed by an interesting discussion, in which the Rev. W. G. Cadman, the Rev. John Toye, Miss Florence Hill, Mr. Waddington, Mr. Noel, Mr. Hawkins, and Mr. Taverner took part. The meeting concluded with games and music.

Glossop.—A bazaar, the object of which was to raise a sum of £300 towards the liquidation of the debt on the new Parsonage, was held in the School-room on the 10th and 11th inst. On Friday the bazaar was opened by the Rev. H. Enfield Dowson, B.A., of Gee Cross; and on Saturday by Mr. J. H. Brooks, of Broadbottom; the chairmen on the two days being, respectively, Mr. Wm. Pilkington, of Manchester, and Mr. Wm. Noble, of Hollingworth. In spite of very stormy weather, there was a large gathering at the opening ceremony on each day, including numerous representatives of the local orthodox churches, and many visitors from the kindred congregations of the district. The bazaar has resulted in a complete success, exceeding all the expectations of the promoters. The proceeds amount to over £400.

Horwich.—A very successful four days' bazaar was held last week in the Mechanics' Institute, to raise £500, and as much more as possible towards £1,000 needful for the redemption of ground rents and the formation of an Independence Fund for the Unitarian Free Church. The bazaar was opened on Wednesday, Nov. 8, by Mrs. John Harwood, of Bolton, the chair being taken by the Rev. S. A. Steinthal. Mrs. Harwood, in declaring the bazaar open, said she was glad to have an opportunity of congratulating the minister and congregation of the Horwich Unitarian Church upon the work they had already done, and of expressing her warm sympathy with them in their present effort. Several years ago mission services were held at Horwich, conducted mainly by the Rev. S. Thompson, of Rivington, under the auspices of the North-East Lancashire Mission, but on the establishment of the railway works there it was found absolutely necessary to provide increased accommodation, as many of the employes had been members of their churches in other districts. The mission, therefore, at once took steps to erect a church and school and to provide a minister who should devote the whole of his time to the work. This step had been fully justified by the success which had attended these efforts, as shown by the fact that at present the congregation numbered about eighty members, and there were 150 connected with the school. Another very gratifying feature was the large number of young people connected with the congregation. Their freedom of thought naturally entailed upon each one of them a very careful consideration of their religious position, and whilst they adhered firmly to their own convictions they must recognise the sincerity of those who did not agree with them. It was gratifying to think that there was now a more general disposition to accentuate points of agreement rather than of difference. She trusted that the time was not far distant when there would be still more co-operation amongst the various religious communities for the common good. She hoped and believed that church would be a centre of light and leading in Horwich. On Thursday the bazaar was opened by Sir J. T. Brunner, Bart., MP., Mr. Thomas Holt, of Bury, in the chair. Both speakers made sympathetic reference to the recent death of Mr. T. H. Hope. Sir John, referring to the object of the bazaar, said he wished well to all Unitarian congregations. They were a small body, and to those who knew their habits of thought that was no matter for wonder, for it required some strength and some courage to become a Unitarian and to proclaim oneself a Unitarian. How were men and women attracted to Unitarianism? He had thought of the case of his father, who some sixty-seven years ago had joined the Unitarian congregation worshipping then and until a few months ago in Renshaw-street, Liverpool. He came from Switzerland, where there were very few open manifestations of differences in religious thought, and his business partner in Liverpool took him to the Unitarian place of worship. He had been educated for the Lutheran Church, but had been unable to take the oath as a priest, and his visit to the Unitarian Chapel in Renshaw-street revealed to him that he had been a Unitarian in a country in which Unitarianism was unknown. This incident was recalled to show that very important results might accrue if each Unitarian would take at least one friend with him to his place of worship. He thought they did not make their ideas and teachings sufficiently known, and he was in favour of a more aggressive propaganda. On Saturday the bazaar was opened by Mr. W. H. Lever, the chair being taken by Mr. J. W. Scott, J.P., who said that they were sometimes told by their critics that the Unitarian faith was one for cultured and leisured people only. If that were true there would be very little reason in seeking to establish it in Horwich, where he should say the work-a-day people were in a vast majority, and the leisured people a small minority, if not almost non-existent. Their numerous working-class Unitarian congregations in the north, at all events, contradicted this idea. The Unitarian faith was as much for working people as it was for leisured people, or else he should not belong to it himself. As a church it was their desire to take their place in Horwich amongst the many other religious agencies, which were each in their respective spheres, labouring for the better life. That those outside their own denomination sympathised with them was shown by the presence of Mr. Lever, a gentleman broad-minded enough to sympathise with every effort of his fellow-men, and he appreciated his catholicity of spirit. Mr. Lever, in re-opening the bazaar, said he was very pleased if he could do anything to draw all Dissenters more closely together in one bond of brotherhood for one common object. He did not see why Nonconformists should allow any barrier of particular belief to stand between them and other churches in any good work that was started for the elevation of mankind. It was a very serious mistake. They all had a splendid work to do, a work which lay close to the hands of every religious denomination, a work which he ventured to think could only be undertaken by the churches and chapels throughout the length and breadth of the land. Up to now they and their forefathers had had to fight for their liberties. They had obtained their liberties, but they were now entering upon another phase, when they would have to fight for the social betterment and education of the masses of their fellow-men. The Rev. R. C. Moore, minister of the church, in proposing a vote of thanks to Mr. Lever, took the opportunity of also thanking all who had helped to make the bazaar so great a success. The total receipts amounted to £717.

Midland Sunday-school Association.—The annual autumnal conference was held in the Waverley-road Schools, Small Heath, Birmingham. After tea, which was kindly provided by the Waverley-road teachers, a meeting was held in the church, the President, Mr. E. L. Tyndall, in the chair. The Rev. E. P. Hall (of Cradley) gave an address on the "Children of the Congregation," and spoke of the way in which the children of the well-to-do members of our congregations were neglected; they did not come to Sunday-school, and many of them did not receive religious instruction at home, and the consequence was that when they grew up they often drifted away from our churches; although we gained more adults than other churches, we lost a greater proportion of our young people. He knew of one church where the children in the congregation were gathered together after the morning service, and taught by the minister, and in that church there was a larger percentage of families continuing for two or three generations than in most other churches. A discussion followed, in which several suggestions as to the best methods of instructing the children were made.

Mountpottinger (Belfast).—On Sunday evening, Nov. 5, a grand musical service was held, the church being packed on the occasion. The choir, under the leadership of the Rev. W. J. Davies, rendered choruses from Haydn's "Creation" and Mozart's "Twelfth Mass," and several solos and a trio were sung. Mr. Davies preached on "Moral Gems from a Musician's Life." The service was fully appreciated, and the collection was satisfactory. A novel and most enjoyable concert, entitled "Ye Olde Fo'kes' Concert," was given on the evening of the 10th inst., in the Central Hall, Rosemary-street, on behalf of the building fund of the Mountpottinger Church. The hall was literally crammed. All the artists and chorus were dressed in costumes representative of the last two centuries. The ladies in their beautiful old-fashioned dresses and the gentlemen in their powdered wigs, cut-away coats and knee-breeches contrived to make the platform a charming picture. The concert was greatly enjoyed, and much credit is due to the friends who worked so hard to secure a brilliant success.

Reading.—The annual sale of work in connection with the Unitarian Free Church was held in the Victoria Hall, on Wednesday fortnight, the opening ceremony being performed by the Mayor (Mr. W. G. Wellman). As in former years, the sale was a great success, the members of the Church having their efforts backed up by numerous friends outside their own community. Some tableaux by the children, arranged by Miss Skinner, were very successful. In the evening there were washing competitions (for prizes presented by Lever Bros.), polishing competitions, and other attractions. The amount received, including £20 in donations, was about £57.

Rotherham.—The second lecture of the Literary and Social Union of the Church of Our Father was delivered on Wednesday, Nov. 8, by the Rev. J. E. Manning, M.A., of Sheffield, before a large audience. The subject of the lecture was "The Salt Mines of Poland," which was illustrated by a splendid set of limelight views. The Rev. W. Stephens presided, and a cordial vote of thanks to the lecturer was passed.

Southport.—The thirty-second anniversary of the Portland-street Church was commemorated on Sunday week (5th inst.). The Rev. C. H. Well-beloved preached in the morning, and the Rev. William Bions, of Blackpool, in the evening. There were large congregations, especially in the evening, when Mr. Binns delivered a powerful discourse on "Present Day Religion, an Optimistic View." On the following Monday evening, the annual congregational tea meeting was held in the schoolroom adjoining. The attendance was excellent, and the hearty hopeful spirit manifested throughout the proceedings was most encouraging. Tea over, an adjournment was made to the church, where an organ recital was given by Mrs. Campbell, At 7.30, the chair was taken, in the schoolroom, by the Rev. C. H. Wellbeloved, who in his opening remarks spoke of losses they had sustained during the past year by death and removal, and other matters connected with their congregational life and work. Among the speakers were Mr. C. E. Hudson (Treasurer), Mr. H. B. Jagger (Secretary), Dr. Wormald, the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas (of Liscard), and the Rev. William Binns. Mr. Thomas gave a very interesting address on his personal experiences as a convert from Orthodoxy to Unitarianism. He was glad to note amongst us a re-action from extreme Rationalism leading to a new reverence for the Bible as a human book and for Jesus Christ as a human personality. Mr. Binns dwelt eloquently on the progress of religious ideas, mainly under the influence of modern science, and a more critical study of the Bible. The meeting afterwards resolved itself into a social gathering, songs and music being contributed by friends connected with the congregation. A fine electric installation has just been introduced into the church and school—the light being used for the first time on this occasion of the anniversary. It is an immense improvement.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, November 19.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

- Bermondsey, Fort-road, Upper Grange-road, 11 A.M.
Rev. HAROLD RYLETT, and 7 P.M.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel,
11 A.M. and 7 P.M.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road,
11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. H. S. TAYLER, M.A.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West
Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS.
Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.,
Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M.
and 7 P.M., Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane,
11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. WOODS PERRIS.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place,
11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.
Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Revs. BROOKE HERFORD, D.D., and
EDGAR DAPLYN. Minister's Class after Morning Service.
Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. E. YATES.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. DAWES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D.
Kentish Town, Free Christian Church, Clarence-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. A. FARQUHARSON.
Morning, "The Peace which Passeth Understanding." Evening, "Mother Earth."
Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E.
STRONGE.
Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street,
11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. C. POPE.
Little Portland-street Chapel, near Oxford-circus, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. H. WELLBELOVED, of Southport.
Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 7 P.M., Rev. HAROLD RYLETT, "Unitarians and the Bible."
Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.,
Rev. G. CARTER.
Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.
Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M.
and 7 P.M., and 3 P.M., Service for Children,
Rev. S. FARRINGTON.
Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Mr. LUCKING TAVENER. Evening, "What
Unitarians believe about the Future Life."
Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.
Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. F. ALLEN. Sunday-school Anniversary.
Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill,
11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev.
Dr. MUMMEY.

PROVINCIAL.

- BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. F. W. STANLEY.
BEDFORD, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev.
ROWLAND HILL.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
 BLACKPOOL, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
 BLACKPOOL, Unitarian Lay Church, Masonic Hall, Waterloo-road, South Shore, 6.30 P.M.
 BOOTLE, Free Church, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. W. HAWKES.
 BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. COE.
 BRIGHTON, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road, North-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.
 BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. GEORGE STREET.
 CANTERBURY, Blackfriars, 11 A.M.
 DEAL and WALMER Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. SHAKESPEARE.
 DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 1 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. BURROWS.
 EASTBOURNE, Lismore-road, Terminus-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. ST. CLAIR.
 GUILDFORD, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Mr. A. O. SHRUBSOLE, F.G.S.
 HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. MARTEN.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.
 LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M., Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. COBDEN SMITH.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. J. JUPP.
 LIVERPOOL, Ulet-road, Sefton Park, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. KLEIN. Evening, "Unitarian Christianity in the Light of Modern Religious Thought."
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. FORREST.
 MANCHESTER, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
 MARGATE, Forester's Hall (Side Entrance), Union-crescent, 11 A.M., Rev. VERNON HERFORD.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. J. E. ODGERS, M.A.
 PORTSMOUTH, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. THOMAS BOND.
 PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. COSENS PRIOR.
 RAMSGATE, Assembly Rooms, High-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. VERNON HERFORD.
 READING, Unitarian Free Church, London-road, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, B.A.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. BINNS, of Blackpool.
 SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. R. C. DENDY. Stables in the grounds
 TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Mr. E. HOWARD.
 YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. RAWLINGS, M.A.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant Unitarian Church, Hout-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY,
 STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN-SQUARE,
 S.W.—Nov. 19th, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON
 SULLIVAN, "Should we go to Church?—The Ethics of Religious Conformity."

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. W.
 STODDART, B.A., is at LIBERTY to take occasional Sunday duty.—30, West Bank, Stamford-
 hill, London, N.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D.
 DAVIS, Fairfield High School, Liverpool.

BIRTHS.

ATAK—On the 11th Nov., at Cheetham House, North-road, Clayton, Manchester, the wife of the Rev. W. E. Atak, of a daughter.

DEATHS.

CLARK—On the 11th Nov., at 12, Bridgford-road,
 Nottingham, William Clark, in his 70th year.
 LEMANN—On the 9th Nov., at Home Lodge, Bathampton, Bath, Henry Rodolph Walker Lemann, aged 87 years.

VAUGHAN—On the 9th Nov., at 25, Church-road, Forest Hill, Mrs. Elizabeth Vaughan, aged 71 years. Deeply lamented.

Board and Residence.

A DOCTOR'S wife is willing to receive into her household a GIRL (delicate or otherwise). Could attend good private school with the lady's own children if desired.

Good recommendations given and required.
 As to terms, &c., address "C," 15, German-place, Brighton.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms
 moderate.—Mrs. ROBERT TURNER, 94, Grosvenor-
 road, S.W.

BOARD and RESIDENCE, South of England. Healthy neighbourhood. Home
 comforts. Seven miles from Brighton, near South
 Downs. Station Hassocks (on main line L.B.S.C.).—
 Miss ROWLAND, Gothic House, Hurstpierpoint.

BOARDING HOUSE.—THE FELL,
 TROUTBECK, WINDERMERE, is situated 550 feet above sea level, and about 2½ miles from the station at Windermere. Every home comfort.
 Moderate terms.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West
 Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT.
 Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table.
 Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade.
 Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and
 Mrs. Pocock.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable
 private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea;
 sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address,
 Miss CHALDECOTT, Stirling House, Manor-road.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59,
 Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated.
 Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL,

Proprietor, FREDERIC SMITH.

Recently enlarged, remodelled and refurnished,
 now affording

ACCOMMODATION FOR ABOUT 250 GUESTS.

The best patronised TEMPERANCE HOTEL in London. Highly commended by leading
 Unitarian Ministers.

Spacious Coffee, Reading, and Drawing Rooms.
 Electric Light. Lift.

Apartments, 1/6 to 2/6. Breakfast, 1/3 to 2/-.
 Service, 9d.

77 & 101,

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON, W.C.

Telegrams: "QUIETUDE, LONDON."

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
 ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE,
 E.C.

Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21
 Mincing-lane, E.C.

Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A.
 7, Pall Mall, S.W.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.
 Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.

STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, 151, Brixton-road, S.W.,
 and Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent.,
 withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made
 Monthly repayment, including principal, premium
 and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years,
 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.;
 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus
 free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

Schools, etc.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE for GIRLS,
 Bristol Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

PRINCIPAL—Miss BAILY.
 HEADMISTRESS—Miss ELEANOR MOSS, B.A. Hons.

A limited number of Boarders taken at residence of Principal.

The College, which is opposite the residence, has accommodation for 120 pupils. Lawn tennis, gymnasium, asphalt playground.

The Curriculum is based on the Cambridge Examination regulations, and resident pupils have the advantage of Public School life combined with home comforts.

Application to Secretary, Miss S. AWDRY.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
 SOUTH MARINE TERRACE,
 ABERYSTWYTH.

PRINCIPAL ... Mrs. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public
 Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium.
 Swedish drill.

SCHOOL FOR GIRLS AND LITTLE BOYS.—CONAMUR, SANDGATE, KENT.

PRINCIPALS:—Miss JARVIS and Miss CLARA
 BERRY.

Good House, close to the sea; south aspect.

Reference kindly permitted to T. GROSVENOR LEE,
 Esq., Clent, near Stourbridge; JOHN HEYWOOD,
 Esq., The Pike, Bolton, &c.

THE WARREN, KNUTSFORD.

PRINCIPAL:
 Mrs. W. CARRINGTON WHITELEGGE.

Excellent individual TUITION and Home Care
 for the daughters of cultivated parents who would appreciate unusual advantages for Music and Languages.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK

SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

TWO AND A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST
 allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS
 of minimum monthly balance, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift, the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows Interest
 Monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY,
 HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR
 TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY
 HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
 FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANAC, Post free on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

COMPANIONSHIP TO LADY.—

WANTED, by young lady; 25; music; reads well; some hospital practice. Apply—Rev.
 W. JELLIE, Ipswich.

AS COMPANION.—Lady seeks engagement as above. Town or country. Good references.—E. P., 35, Highbury New Park, N.

FREDK. LONG & SON,
 AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS
 4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

BRITISH & FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

AUTUMNAL MEETINGS, BRISTOL.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 21st, 1899.

RELIGIOUS SERVICE, Oakfield-road Church, Clifton, at 4.30. Rev. JEFFERY WORTHINGTON, B.A., will conduct the Devotional Service.

SERMON by Rev. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.

Collection in aid of the Funds of the Association.

Tea at the Victoria Rooms at 6 P.M. Tickets 1s. each.

PUBLIC MEETING at 7.30. Chairman, PHILIP JOHN WORSLEY, Esq., B.A., J.P. Addresses by CHARLES W. JONES, Esq., J.P. (President), "The Work of the Association and its Claims to support"; Lady O'HAGAN, "Our Message to the Present Age"; Rev. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A., "What Modern Criticism has done for Religion"; Rev. W. TUDOR JONES, "From Orthodoxy to Unitarianism"; Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A., "Our Devotional Literature and the Use we should Make of it"; Rev. F. W. STANLEY, "The Work of our Church to-day"; Mr. OSWALD NETTLEFOLD (Treasurer), "Missionary Work from a Treasurer's Point of View"; Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE (Secretary), "Our Message to our own People."

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 22nd, 1899.

CONFERENCE at Oakfield-road Church at 10 A.M. Chairman, C. W. JONES, Esq., J.P. Papers by the Rev. H. S. SOLLY, M.A., and Rev. W. GRIFFITHS, Ph.D., on "Unitarian Missionary Needs, Opportunities, and Methods." The following will take part in the Discussion:—Revs. T. J. JENKINS, F. T. REED, A. E. O'CONNOR, D. J. WILLIAMS, T. B. BROADRICK, Mr. C. H. PERKINS, and others.

LUNCHEON at Whatley Hall, Clifton, at One o'clock, under the Presidency of CHARLES THOMAS, Esq., J.P. Tickets 3s. each.

SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS' CONFERENCE

(Under the auspices of the Sunday School Association, assisted by the McQuaker Trustees).

A MEETING of DELEGATES, TEACHERS, and other Friends interested in Sunday-school Work in Scotland, will be held on SATURDAY, 25th November, 1899, at the UNITARIAN HALL, CONSTITUTION-ROAD, DUNDEE.

The Proceedings will commence at 4 P.M. Chairman, Mr. JAMES GRAHAM (President of the Scottish Unitarian Association).

Resolution will be submitted recommending the formation of a Scottish Sunday School Union.

Papers by Mr. ION PRITCHARD (Hon. Sec. Sunday School Association), the Rev. A. WEBSTER (Chairman of Aberdeen School Board), and the Rev. H. WILLIAMSON (Dundee). To be followed by Discussion.

BARTON-STREET CHAPEL, GLOUCESTER.

WALTER LLOYD, Minister.

A BAZAAR will be held in the Unitarian School-room, GLOUCESTER, in aid of the BICENTENARY FUND for the extinction of the Debt of £380, on WEDNESDAY and THURSDAY, Nov. 22nd and 23rd.

The Bazaar will be opened on the first day at 3 o'clock by CHARLES W. JONES, Esq., President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and on the second day by Mrs. ASHBE.

Contributions in Money or Goods will be thankfully received by

Mrs. WASHBOURNE, 40, Weston-road;
Mrs. WALTER LLOYD, The Hollies, Brook-st.;
or Mr. W. HORSLEY, Secretary, Weston-road, Gloucester.

The Treasurer begs to acknowledge the following contributions:—

	£	s.	d.
Amount previously acknowledged	167	1	0
Mrs. Isaacs	1	1	0
S. C.	1	1	0

WOULD W. W. kindly communicate with W. CLARK LAZENBY, 61, Desboro'-road, Eastleigh, Hants.

BIBLE READINGS WITH MY CHILDREN.

By Mrs. PHILIP COHEN.

In two parts. Price 2s. each, or 2s. 3d. Post Free.

"Written in a style highly attractive to children."—The Very Rev. the CHIEF RABBI.
"Continues to be regarded in our private families as a most welcome friend."—Rev. G. EMANUEL, B.A.
"The charm of style is so attractive in its simplicity; will ensure a large and affectionate circle of readers."—The late Rev. A. L. GREEN.

Published by WERTHEIMER, LEA, and Co., Circus-place, London Wall, E.C.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

NOW READY FOR THE WINTER SEASON.

Two Sets of LANTERN SLIDES

Illustrating Dr. BROOKE HERFORD's Book,

"THE STORY OF RELIGION IN ENGLAND."

Set I. Chapters I.—XVI.—49 slides, illustrates "From the Far Off Past until the Beginning of the Reformation."

Set II. Chapters XVII.—XXIX.—45 slides, illustrates "Reformation Times."

The terms and conditions of the Loan of the Slides can be ascertained from the "BOOKLET OF READINGS" prepared for use with each set. Price Three pence each, by post 3½d.

A List of other Slides on Loan, including a Selection of well-known HYMNS, can be had post free on application.

London: THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

JESS: BITS OF WAYSIDE GOSPEL. By JENKIN LLOYD JONES, of Chicago. 320 pp. Crown 8vo, 1s.

The story giving the title to the volume is an account of the life and death of a horse once owned by the Author. These sermon-talks are all on out-of-door subjects, the love of Nature, her influence over man's spiritual life, and other similar themes.

THE CHOIR INVISIBLE, and other Sermons. By JOHN WHITE CHADWICK. 228 pp. Crown 8vo, 4s. net, by post 4s. 4d.

READY 1st DECEMBER.

POCKET ALMANAC FOR 1900.

Containing a List of Ministers and Churches, Diary for each Week and Month, Cash Account Pages, &c. Tuck, gilt edges, 1s. net, by post 1s. 1d.

London: PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-st., Strand, W.C.

NEWBURY PRESBYTERIAN CHAPEL RENOVATION FUND.

The Committee urgently appeal for further subscriptions towards the above fund, and thankfully acknowledge the following:—

	£	s.	d.
Amount already advertised	119	16	7
The Rev. Wm. Agar, Sidmouth	0	10	0
Anon.	5	0	0
Oswald Nettlefold, Esq.	1	1	0
Mrs. Aspland	2	2	0
A Friend	1	0	0

Subscriptions should be sent to Mr. T. H. STILLMAN, 133, Bartholomew-street, Newbury.

THE OLDHAM-ROAD UNITARIAN CONGREGATION, MANCHESTER, invite contributions of superfluous Clothing, &c, for their JUMBLE SALE, to be held NOV. 25th.

Address Parcels to Mrs. HAZZLEWOOD, 299, Oldham-road, Manchester.

HOME FOR HEALTH CULTURE, THE FIRS, BROMYARD, HEREFORDSHIRE

This Home provides a course of Systematic Daily Exercise, combined with regular outdoor life and occupation, for Ladies and Children who are not in normal health. The exercises are given in a Gymnasium fitted with Swedish apparatus, and consist of Ling's Swedish Movements. Special treatment is given for Spinal Curvature, Anæmia, Hysteria, Indigestion, Neuralgia, &c.

For further particulars, apply to The Principal Miss JESSIE BAKER (trained by Mme. Bergmon, Osterberg).

JUST PUBLISHED.

A New and Important Work for all Unitarians to Read.

Cr. 8vo, pp. 236, cloth, 2s. 6d. net, by post 2s. 10d.

THE STORY OF Protestant Dissent & English Unitarianism

BY

WALTER LLOYD.

CONTENTS:—Introduction. II. The Presbyterians. III. Richard Baxter. IV. The Ejection, 1662. V. The Protestant Dissenters, 1689. VI. The Meeting-Houses. VII. Non-Subscription. VIII. The "Christians Only." IX. The Unitarians. X. John Biddle. XI. Lindsey, Priestley and Belsham. XII. The Unitarian Societies. XIII. The Trinitarian Controversy. XIV. Undogmatic Unitarianism. XV. Conclusion.

Note.—Anyone sending Mr. Philip Green, not later than Dec. 22nd, a Postal Order for 2s. 6d., will receive a copy of this new book post free.

London: PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

Will make a SUITABLE CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

(Ready towards end of the month).

A NIGHT WITH JESUS.

A DREAM STORY.

BY J. L. HAIGH.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

(Special terms to all engaged in Domestic Mission Work).

LIVERPOOL BOOKSELLERS' COMPANY, LIMITED, 70, Lord-street, Liverpool.

THE MILL HILL PULPIT.

A Monthly Sermon by

Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., Leeds.

November Number.—"THE NOVEMBER METEORS."

Price 1d. Annual subscription, 1s. 6d. post free.

Apply, Essex Hall, or CHAS. STAINER, 82, Ravenswood-terrace, Hyde Park, Leeds.

THE ETHICAL WORLD.

EDITED BY DR. STANTON COIT and

J. A. HOBSON, M.A.

Articles on Important Social Questions, Education &c. from a purely ethical standpoint Children's Page.

TWOPENCE WEEKLY.

Office: 17, Johnson's-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

New and Revised Edition of

Prayers for the Use of Christian Families

By JOHN SCOTT PORTER.

Limp cloth, 6d.; boards, 9d.

May be obtained at Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, London, and at the Depository, 35, Rosemary-street, Belfast.

Also New and Revised Edition of

THE CHILD'S GUIDE TO CHRIST

(A Scripture Catechism for Young People).

6d. per dozen, from 35, Rosemary-street, Belfast.

The fact that a New Edition of each of the above works has been called for speaks for itself.

SCOTCH TWEEDS and SERGES at Mill Prices, Ladies' or Gents'; best quality only. Patterns post free; orders carriage paid.—Geo. McLeod & Sons, Hawick, N.B.

Printed by WOODFALL & KINDER, 70 to 76, Long Acre, W.C. and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. City Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 29 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD Deansgate.—Saturday, November 18, 1899.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 2996.
NEW SERIES, No. 100.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1899.

[ONE PENNY.]

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	753
ARTICLES :—
“Back to Jesus”	755
The Inward Life	759
A Prayer in Time of War	765
LITERATURE :—
A New Theological Quarterly	754
In a College Chapel	756
“The New World”	757
CORRESPONDENCE :—
Unitarians and the Pledge	757
The Question of Proselytism	758
Church Covenants	758
OBITUARY :—
William Clark	758
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN	759
LEADER :—
Missionary Opportunity	760
MEETINGS :—
British and Foreign Unitarian Association—
Autumnal Meeting	760
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES	765
ADVERTISEMENTS	766

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

THE Rev. Stopford A. Brooke preached last Sunday morning in the Union Club Hall, at Aberdeen, from the text “Our citizenship is in heaven,” and strongly urged the necessity for a higher ideal of citizenship in people of the comfortable classes. The service was conducted by the Rev. Alexander Webster, and the hall was crowded. Mr. Brooke also gave two lectures in the same hall, on the previous Friday and on Monday, the subjects being “Religion in Literature” and “Religion in Life.” These lectures are also to be given in Edinburgh and Glasgow. Before the first lecture, Mr. Webster, who presided, read a letter from Mr. James Bryce, regretting that another engagement prevented him from taking the chair, as he should have been very glad to do. On Monday evening, Mr. Webster explained that the lectures and the service were arranged under the McQuaker Trust. The service would have been held in their church, if it had been large enough. No other church in Aberdeen was open to Mr. Brooke except their own, and no other minister was available to take the chair. He simply stated the fact and made no comment. While the McQuaker Trust existed for the promotion of the principles of Unitarian Christianity in Scotland, no terms were laid down for its lecturers, and Mr. Brooke was free as a prophet of God to speak from his own soul.

THE meeting at the Queen's Hall on Tuesday evening, in support of the work of the Central Temperance Legislation Board, was a splendid success. Lord Peel was unfortunately prevented by illness from being present, but the chair was taken by Canon Wilberforce, and letters of cordial sympathy were read from the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Durham. An important letter from Lord Peel was also read, in which he said that the result of his three years' experience as chairman of the Licensing Committee was “a deep conviction of the magnitude of the evil to be grappled with, and of the necessity of stringent remedies if any definite improvement was to be effected.”

It has come to be a struggle for mastery between the State and a trade, and the time has fully come for the decision of the question, who is to be master? The Government have announced that they will not legislate on this subject in a hurry. No one would ask them to do so; but that which we do ask, and have a right to expect, is that they will calmly review the evidence, and deliberately adopt such remedies as the review demands.

Sir William Houldsworth, Bart., M.P., Mr. Whittaker, M.P., and Mr. W. S. Caine were among the speakers. Mr. Eardley Wilmot asked for an income of £500 a year, to carry on the important propaganda of the Board.

THE need for a high-class unsectarian public school which is being met in this country by the Willaston school, through the munificence of the late Philip Barker, of Nantwich, has been felt in America also, and is referred to in the Council's report to the National Conference, with the gratifying announcement that the need is being met by the establishment of a school at Tarrytown, N.Y., under the direction of the Rev. Theodore Williams, lately of All Souls' Church, New York.

The friends of the enterprise are gladly endowing it, so that the school shall not stand second to any other in the country, and at the same time parents who entrust their children to this school will be quite sure that they shall not grow up with an idea that religion is something outside of life, but that in its atmosphere and training they shall be taught that it is the privilege of boys and of men to live and move and have their being in their God. It seems to the Council very fortunate for us that this enterprise has been undertaken; and we are glad to commend the purposes of the incorporators, not simply to the churches in our own communion, but to all persons, in whatever communion, who feel that education without religion is hopeless, and who feel at the same time that, if there is to be any religion in education, it must not be the religion of dogma nor the religion of form nor the religion of memory, but the religion of the Holy Ghost, the religion of the Present God, and of His kingdom.

The establishment of the school is largely due to the generosity of Mrs. C. B. Hackley, of whose care for the higher interests of education and religion this is only one signal instance.

THE day before the unveiling of the Cromwell statue at Westminster, a letter from Mr. Thomas Hornblower Gill appeared in the Times, recalling the fact that in 1845 a letter of his with the heading “Shall Cromwell have a Statue?” had been published in that journal, and rejoicing in the fulfilment of his ardent wish. Cromwell was great, in Mr. Gill's view, not so much as a member of the House of Commons, but as a patriot, a ruler, and a Protestant. “His lofty English spirit was in harmony with his pure English blood,” for of all the rulers of his country, Cromwell was the most thoroughly English:—

“To no ruler of this land were its greatness and glory so dear as to him. The might and majesty of England, so attenuated under the Stuarts, under the Charles and James who preceded him, under the Charles and James who followed him, were fully maintained, more greatly advanced, under the Lord Protector. He associated the political greatness of England with her spiritual greatness: her chief of men was her chief of Protestants. Spain mourned her hostility; France played the part of a subservient ally; the stricken Waldenses blessed her helpful intervention.

Princeborn thrones and dominations
Bowed before the Imperial Isle.
Stricken souls and mourning nations
Blessed the Lord Protector's smile.

The erection of a Cromwell statue will not only be a meet expression of English patriotism, it will be a step towards the reparation of a great national wrong and scandal. Among the many sores and shames of the Restoration, none is more signal and shocking than the casting forth from their fitting resting place in Westminster Abbey of the remains of the mighty men of the Commonwealth, heroes, statesmen, Puritan pastors—Cromwell, Blake, &c.—than the indignities offered to the body of the Lord Protector. Every true English heart, saddened and ashamed at the recollection of those foul proceedings, will be gladdened and uplifted by the contemplation of Oliver's statue in front of Westminster Palace.”

A VERY interesting and sympathetic notice of the late Miss Anna Swanwick, as “An Apostle of Women's Education,” was contributed to the Weekly Register by Mr. Justin McCarthy:—

She lived only to do good, to spread the light of education, to bring literature and art and science as far as she could within the reach of the poor and the lowly, and above all things else, to help in the training of women for the higher purposes of their lives. Without touching in the least upon any controverted questions in social legislation, I may, perhaps, say that Anna

Swanwick concerned herself more with women's duties than with women's rights, and that, while she was far too enlightened not to strive for a removal of all needless difficulties that may have been placed in the way of women's usefulness, her great ambition was to bring out women's intellectual and moral nature to its full development. To this task she was faithful to the very end of her calm and noble life.

Mr. McCarthy also describes her great charm as a hostess, and the services she rendered to literature. It was a fortunate circumstance that Miss Swanwick was not obliged to write for a living, or we could hardly have had her translation of Aeschylus, or of Faust.

She was happily enabled to follow the paths which her own intellectual tastes, and her devoted interest in the welfare of the human race, marked out for her as the course of her life. We have lapsed somewhat out of the study of German literature since the days when Anna Swanwick set herself to the task of translating Goethe and Schiller. There was a passion for German poetry and German plays and German novels then, and it had its day, and a most fruitful day it was for the intellectual culture of all the English-speaking populations. Just now, however, German literature is for the time a little out of fashion, and I was positively surprised, and very much delighted, the other day to hear a distinguished English woman, who writes brilliant novels, lives in the centre of literary society, and is still young, express herself in terms of rapturous admiration over one of Jean Paul Richter's romances. The influence, however, which German literature of the great days has had upon the mind and the education of these countries, is imperishable, and it may be safely said that the name of Anna Swanwick will always be remembered in our literary history as that of one who took a leading part in the spread of that influence.

THE retirement of the Rev. William Binns from active service in the ministry has been marked, as we record this week, by the congregation of Bank-street Chapel, Blackpool, by a meeting of farewell and grateful appreciation. In Birkenhead, and Plymouth, no less than in Blackpool, are many friends who will share to the full the feelings there expressed, and we desire to add our own word of cordial sympathy with Mr. and Mrs. Binns on the occasion. The columns of this journal for many years, as well as the pages of the Theological Review and other Reviews, have been enriched by Mr. Binns's strong thought, and original and fearless utterances, and while there have been questions on which we have been strongly opposed to Mr. Binns, we have felt for him the warmest admiration, and here acknowledge a very real and by no means small debt of gratitude.

MR. O. H. HEYS, of Longsight, Manchester, warns us against a young man, giving the name of Harry Evans, and bearing a letter from John Clarke, B.Sc., said to have been connected with Hyson Green Mission, Nottingham. The story proves to be a fabrication.

SIR ALFRED C. LYALL, G.C.I.E., K.C.B., is to lecture at Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, W.C., on Wednesday, Nov. 29, at 5.30 P.M., on "Some Aspects of Asiatic Religions." The lecture is arranged by the London School of Ethics and Social Philosophy, and admission is free.

A NEW THEOLOGICAL QUARTERLY.*

THE new Journal of Theological Studies is edited by Mr. C. H. Turner, of Magdalen College, Oxford, with the assistance of the Rev. Dr. Barnes, of Peterhouse, Cambridge, under the direction of a distinguished Committee of Professors and Doctors of Divinity of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, including Professors Swete, Driver, Lock, Moberly, Ryle and Sanday. The Journal is intended to be "a regular organ of communication between students whose lives are spent, at the Universities and elsewhere, in the pursuit of scientific Theology.

Such a periodical will appeal in the first instance to professed students and teachers of Theology. But its promoters will not lose sight of the requirements of the increasing class of educated Englishmen, to be found among the laity as well as among ministers of religion, who are profoundly interested in the problems raised by Biblical and other theological studies.

After a brief introductory statement by Professor Swete, from which the above sentences are quoted, this first number opens with an article, by Professor Sanday, on "Recent Research in the Origin of the Creed," in which the clauses of the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds are placed side by side, and their origin and mutual relations considered.

Then follows an article by the Master of Balliol on "Anselm's Argument for the Being of God—its History and What it Proves." Anselm's argument Professor Caird regards as a scholastic distortion of an idea which was first presented in the Platonic philosophy, and which in modern philosophy has found a new and more adequate interpretation.

In this interpretation the argument is seen to be the converse of what it was first presented as being. It is not the proof of God from the thought of Him; but, starting with the presupposition that our minds are necessarily carried back to the consciousness of Him as the absolute unity to which all things must be referred, it is the proof that that unity must be conceived as a spiritual principle, not in the narrow sense in which that is sometimes opposed to a natural principle, but in the sense that only in spirit can the original unity return to itself through all the differences of the finite.

In an elaborate "Practical Discourse on some Principles of Hymn-singing," Mr. Robert Bridges pleads for tunes that shall be serious, and beautiful in melody, and says some strong things about the music in "Hymns, Ancient and Modern," and about the adaptation of popular airs from well-known secular songs as hymn-tunes. Those who are practically engaged in the ordering of congregational music should study this article with care. As a model of what a book of hymn-tunes should be, Mr. Bridges offers the "Yattendon Hymnal," which he has compiled, and which may be had from Mr. Frowde, of the Oxford University Press, for £1.

In an article on the "Acts of the Apostles," the Rev. J. A. Cross very clearly states the difficulties of the historical problems of the early chapters, in criticism of Lightfoot and Headlam, and in a second article on the same book, the Rev. R. B. Rackham offers a plea for an early date.

* "The Journal of Theological Studies." No. 1. October, 1899. Macmillan and Co. 3s. net. Annual subscription, post free 10s.

The Journal contains other interesting matter, including a chronicle of recent Biblical studies, and concludes with an enumeration of various recent periodicals relating to theological studies. Two American reviews are named, The Presbyterian and Reformed Review, and The American Journal of Theology, but The New World is overlooked.

THE Rev. Arthur Harvie, of 103, Avenue-road, Gateshead-on-Tyne, recently addressed to the public press a letter, for which we were unable to find space, on the subject of "Food Reform." Mr. Harvie is quite convinced that he is engaged in a great moral reform.

A mere handful of men and women have perceived that flesh-eating is immoral, and consequently they abjure the practice. The great bulk of the people are against them. These new reformers find just as much opposition in the Christian churches as in any other collections of men; the Press is against them; orthodox medical science is against them also. Few men of power and influence are on their side, while wealth, fashion, and "demos" ignore them entirely. Here is the Reformation over again; here is the Anti-Slavery campaign paralleled in our own day, only with this difference, that the matters involved are a hundred-fold more important. Religious teachers may scoff, but though it is not true that "man is what he eats," it is very certain that wrong diet is responsible for many of those evils against which Pulpit, Press, and Parliament seem alike to struggle in vain. Churches to-day recognise the crusade against intemperance as of first-rate importance, but the chief root of drunkenness is flesh-eating. . . . The fact that a bloodless diet is not only practicable, but when once adopted, pleasanter, healthier, and cheaper than the ordinary, is a small matter compared with the ethical imperative by which so many of us are driven to what the world calls "Vegetarianism."

To those who care to do more than trifle with the matter, Mr. Harvie is ready to send recipes and information.

TEMPERANCE SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 26.—To-morrow is a day to which workers in the cause of Temperance are looking forward with a great deal of interest, as it affords an opportunity for those who are unable to give their personal services to the work to contribute to the funds of Band of Hope and Temperance Societies. A powerful temperance appeal has been prepared by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong, and is being issued by the Essex Hall Temperance Association in the form of a twelve-page tract. Copies may be obtained from the secretaries of the Association on payment of the postage. The need of increased temperance effort should be apparent to all. The astounding drink bill of the nation and the fact that on an average the artisan class spend 5s. a week, per family, in drink, should urge temperance workers and sympathisers to renewed efforts, especially with a view of educating the young in the question. The Essex Hall Temperance Association is anxious that a Band of Hope should be established in connection with every one of our churches, and will give information and assistance to any friend who will assist in accomplishing this aim. Communications should be addressed to Mr. J. Bredall, 238, Barry-road, East Dulwich, S.E.

"BACK TO JESUS."

MR. ARMSTRONG'S essay, "Back to Jesus: an Appeal to Evangelical Christians," deals with a subject of such vital concern, and touches so many points of high interest to all observers of current religious tendencies, that no apology will be required from one who asks to be permitted to present some considerations not included in the notice of the book which recently appeared in these columns. Mr. Armstrong affirms that he is in warm sympathy with the movement, "Back to Jesus," and tells us that his purpose is "to show that if it were still bolder and more thorough, it would bestow on the world still more precious spiritual possessions." It cannot be said that this essay is wanting in boldness, and there is certainly a sense in which its methods of dealing with Gospel criticism may be described as thorough, but it is very difficult to acknowledge it as a real contribution to what we believe Dr. Fairbairn once called "the re-discovery of Christ."

First, one word to justify what I have said respecting critical methods. The Fourth Gospel is dismissed as untrustworthy by reason of its alleged lateness of date and certain discrepancies with the Synoptics. Even if the case for a second century authorship had been completely established and were generally accepted by scholars, it would still be a bold thing to neglect this Gospel in an effort to get back to "the original Jesus"; but when we remember the present state of critical opinion on the subject, from which it is by no means clear that the assault on traditional views is carrying everything before it, I venture to think that the attitude assumed in this essay is over-bold. It is far too thorough to be satisfactory.

Scarcely less bold is the treatment meted out to the Synoptics. In these also, we are told, we have a large element of untrustworthiness, and they can only be used subject to a certain radical rule of interpretation which the author lays down. This rule, which the writer of the notice above alluded to describes as "a sound rule of guidance," fairly amazes me by its arbitrariness. It runs as follows:—

If any part of the Gospels appear to you to breathe the love of the wonderful and miraculous rather than of the purely ethical and spiritual, remember that that may be due to the exaggerations or enlargements of the reporters; if, on the other hand, any part of the Gospels appear to you exquisite in its spirituality, superb in its delineation of ethical and spiritual truth, remember that that must come direct from Jesus, that in all probability Jesus really enlarged in that strain and emphasised the ideas so expressed much more than the narratives report.

It is not, however, [the question of the legitimacy of such a canon that chiefly interests me, it is the implication it carries; and nothing less than this is implied in it, namely, that the question of Christ's person is primary and that of his teaching secondary—a view which Mr. Armstrong, of course, strenuously denies, which, indeed, it is the whole point of his essay to deny.

For, be it remembered, his main desire is to get away from theories about Jesus to Jesus himself. But what is clear from this rule of interpretation? Surely this, that Mr. Armstrong has first provided himself with a theory about the person of Jesus before proceeding to examine the teaching recorded in the Gospels. If this is not so, there is no meaning in his canon. He goes to the records with a ready-formed conception of Jesus, formed apart from the records. His "ethical and spiritual Jesus" he takes to the Gospels and tests them by it, and rules out what in them does not correspond with his picture. He goes back to Jesus, to "an ethical and spiritual" personality, in order that he may get something by which to test the records of his teaching. Therefore he cannot be acquitted of doing the very thing which he declares ought not to be done, of making the person primary and the teaching secondary, a proceeding which, when it leads others to results that do not approve themselves to him, he contemptuously describes as "sentimentality."

It is Mr. Armstrong's thesis, then, that if we are to get back to Jesus we must go behind the Gospels. He speaks (on p. 11) of "the actual Jesus who was before all the Gospels," and (on p. 57) of "the living Jesus who was before a line of any Gospel had been penned." These phrases are so characteristic of the author's point of view that they deserve examination. The question arises, When did the Gospels begin? Formally it may be true to say that they began at the moment when the earliest of them began to be penned—that is, when the earliest evangelist put pen to paper. But in reality no book begins at that moment, and least of all a Gospel. It begins in the heart of the witness. The memorabilia which form the substantive material of the Gospels are not mere memory notes of a reporter with only an impersonal interest in what he reports; they exist not merely because the reporter happened to recollect, but because he could not forget, because of his sense of the worth of what he reports. If we are to use expressions of time with any accuracy, we must say that the Gospels began in the moment when the heart of the witness was touched to the extent of conceiving the supreme worth of that which he afterwards recorded. His inner impression is primary, its outer expression in the form of a record is secondary. Consequently, the phrase, "the actual Jesus who was before the Gospels," becomes unmeaning. The primary Gospel was contemporary with him. The disciples held it as an integral part of their life while he was yet with them.

In reading Mr. Armstrong's disparagement of the trustworthiness of the Gospels, I cannot help feeling that he exaggerates the importance of the mere passage of time. He speaks as if he thought that when the original witnesses began to narrate what they remembered of Jesus, they had some effort in remembering, and were somewhat in the position of any commonplace person who to-day sets about writing his autobiography, and has to use considerable labour in calling up past incidents. Must we not rather conceive an experience so deep that it would not merely live in memory, as a part of it, but simply dominated it, became almost memory itself? The effort must have been required not to remember, but to forget.

Furthermore, we are told that when the earliest Gospel began to be written the picture of Jesus must have been already "dimmed and distorted by the mists of time." There is danger in the use of figurative expressions like the "mists of time," it is so easy to give such a phrase a value to which it has no right. Time, the abstraction, has no power to dim or distort. Human thought working in time has that power, but it has another as well, the power to clarify and correct. Why must we assume that in the interval of time of which Mr. Armstrong speaks it was always the first, and never the second, that was exercised? Is it not a fact that the passage of time helps to make some of our past experiences clear and intelligible, while it renders others obscure?

Mr. Armstrong is surely too ready with this word "distortion." He says, speaking of the value of narratives, "You never get the pure and unadulterated mind of the original; it is always shaped and coloured, tinted and distorted in some degree by the mind through which it has passed." Let us grant at once that there must be "shaping and colouring and tinting," it could only be otherwise if the human mind partook of the nature of a sieve. But why "distorted"? Boswell has "shaped and coloured and tinted" the original Johnson, and we are everlastingly grateful to him for it. But who is prepared to affirm that he has distorted him as well? All portrait-painting, whether on paper or canvas, requires that the mind of the painter shape and tint the original, but it does not follow that he distorts it. The bad painter does, but the good does not: what he adds to the original is not distortion, but interpretation. I cannot help thinking that this stress on distortion involves a very sceptical view of the reliability of the human reason in one at least of its activities.

Mr. Armstrong rules out the Fourth Gospel partly on the ground that it was impossible for the author to give us the "precise phraseology" of the discourses of Jesus. Precise phraseology! When it is important to refer to the speeches of statesmen, the replies of Cabinet Ministers to questions in Parliament, let us be grateful for verbatim reports and the triumphs of an exact phonography. But when it is a question of getting access to one, whom Mr. Armstrong together with "all Christendom calls Lord and Master" (p. 58), whose significance to posterity lies not in any contribution to transient crises but in his gift of eternal life to men through union with himself, we do not ask for verbatim reports and precise phraseology. Nay, these are the very things we do not want, upon which it would be misery to think we were obliged to rely. The literal accuracy of a report depends upon the extent to which the reporter has obliterated himself and repressed any personal interest in the matter he transmits. If to get back to his precise phraseology is to get back to Jesus, then it follows that the most faithful witness to him would be one who had no personal concern in what he said, and no conception of its worth to his own soul sufficient to make him reflect upon it or interpret it. The reliability of the Gospels, and indeed of the New Testament as a whole, as witnesses to Christ is to be found in the very fact that they were not in the first instance "written with ink, not in tables of stone, but in tables that are hearts of flesh."

These are some of the reasons why it would appear that Mr. Armstrong, in inviting us to get back to Jesus along the lines laid down in this essay, in spite of the warmth of feeling with which he writes of that one aspect of our Lord's teaching which concerns the Fatherhood of God, is really asking us not to return to Jesus, but to avert our eyes from the very paths which conduct us to him. The first requirement in an effort to get "back to Jesus" is to disencumber ourselves of any arbitrary theory of his person which we have formed apart from the Gospels and apart from what Harnack so happily calls the "fifth" Gospel, unwritten, "the united testimony of the first Christian community." Whoso, therefore, divested of disturbing prepossession, and with perfect singleness of intention, seeks to discover the real Jesus, will never be content with "the actual Jesus who was before the Gospels," for no reality in the true sense of this term can ever attach to so spectral a figure. He will not shut himself within the narrow ground to which heroic "rules of interpretation" would confine him. Neither will he think it necessary to insist upon often-irrelevant distinctions between the Person and the Teaching, the Life and the Truth. It is the "Truth submerged in the Life," to use an expression of Dr. Hort's, with which he will always be concerned. For to press to an "actual" person is to press to his inner life, of which word and deed and, most of all, personal influence are the vehicles of revelation.

To the present writer, at least, the New Testament seems to be stamped all over with the impression of one unique self-consistent personality, of whose inner life it is the adequate reflection. It lies like a lake smitten with the noon-day beams. The waters are not wholly still, there is a measure of inevitable refraction, and the glowing disc beneath us is not the sun, but the sun's image. Nevertheless, there is no brightness in the sun that is not represented in the image, and he who gazes thereon sees "the brightness of the everlasting light and the unspotted mirror of the power of God."

AMBROSE BENNETT.

LITERATURE.

IN A COLLEGE CHAPEL.*

THE University pulpit at Harvard is one of the freest in the world. It is occupied indifferently by preachers belonging to all sections of Protestantism. Bishop Phillips Brooks and Dr. Brooke Herford have in turn held the position of select preacher there, and no antagonism or confusion was found to result from such union between an Episcopalian and a Unitarian. The sermons before us were preached by Professor Peabody from this free pulpit. One volume contains three-minutes' addresses delivered to the undergraduates and professors at daily morning prayers; the other contains longer addresses, more on the lines of the regular sermon, delivered to undergraduates and their friends at the Thursday afternoon vesper service, which is a regular institution of the University. It is noteworthy that there are no compulsory prayers at Harvard University. Some years ago it was decided to abolish the rule which enjoined attendance at morning prayers.

* Mornings and Afternoons in the College Chapel, being University Sermons by the Rev. F. G. Peabody. 2 vols. 5s. each. Houghton, Mifflin, and Co.

It was felt that compulsory prayers could hardly be prayers at all, and the experiment was tried of simply holding the morning services and inviting the undergraduates to attend. We in England have apparently not faith enough in our young men, nor reverence enough for their freedom, nor hatred enough for a mere compulsory ceremony, to be prepared to completely follow their example. I believe the authorities at Harvard are unanimous in recognising the success of the experiment. The services are fifteen minutes in length, and are conducted by the leading ministers of all denominations, and there is almost always a large number of undergraduates present. The volume containing the three-minutes' addresses given by Professor Peabody at these morning services is, to us, less interesting than the volume containing the longer discourses. A three-minutes' discourse, like a hundred yards' race, must be full-speed the whole way: it can hardly have beginning, middle, or end. It is not a little sermon, but a strong deep feeling that is wanted. The magnetism of the personality will be almost everything. There will be no time to develop anything, or explain anything. It must be the sudden impression made almost in a moment by the strong man. No doubt this was the result of the short addresses before us, but while eminently useful with Professor Peabody's personality behind them, they do not strike us as being so generally useful in cold print as the sermons in the other volume. It is to this second volume that the reader's attention ought to be directed. It contains some of the most original, suggestive, and helpful addresses that we have seen for a long time.

The suggestiveness and originality of Professor Peabody are seen especially in his power of bringing new and unthought-of meanings out of old Bible sayings. Ruskin has that power supremely both in connection with the Bible and with Art. It is a dangerous power no doubt, because sometimes meanings may be apparently taken out which really are not there. Nevertheless, that fresh personal seeing of the Bible or of Art, bringing the greatest of old things into relation with the present day, is a quality to be very highly valued. Every great book and work of art is, in a sense, a prophecy. It bears upon a thousand things of which the writer never dreamt. It means far more than the writer intended it to mean. We owe a great deal to the preacher who sees and helps us to see

The thoughts beyond their thoughts
Which to these high bards were given.

Mr. Fripp has been doing something of this work in connection with Italian art. Professor Peabody does the same thing in connection with the Bible. Take, for instance, his sermon on the "Departing Glory," from Exodus xxxiii. 21-23, "Thou shalt stand upon the rock, and . . . I will put thee in a cleft of the rock, and will cover thee with my hand until I have passed by: and I will take away mine hand and thou shalt see my back: but my face shall not be seen." "This is a graphic, Oriental, dramatic way of describing what happens in many a life. To see the truth of things as they were going away, to be hidden in a rocky cleft with a hand before his eyes, and to know the glory and greatness of experience only when it was over, that was as near as Moses could come to the direct revelation of the presence of God.

Is it not much the same with almost every life? O to discern, we cry, amid the hurry and routine and frivolity and insignificance of life the immediate signs of what is sacred and divine! But how often it happens that one is not permitted to see this great light shining into his little life. It is as if a hand were placed before one's eyes and he was held in a cleft of the rock so that the routine and commonplace of life barred out the heavenly vision. The College year slips by, the busy winter vanishes, with no sense of glory in them, but only thoughtlessness or dulness or overwhelming care. And then some day, as such experiences depart, the hand is taken away from one's eyes and he recognises how beautiful and gracious had been the privilege which had been so slightly used. "What I do," says Jesus, "thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter." We cannot give the whole sermon, but the idea which Professor Peabody works out is that life "is not, as so many people seem to think, an explanation of experience: it is, on the contrary, an education through experience. . . . There are some things which have to be hidden in order to be learned, as a wise master withholds the answer till the problem is worked out."

Another striking sermon is upon "The Scornful," from the first Psalm, "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful." "This is an unexpected series of thanksgivings with which the Book of Psalms begins. . . . Blessed is the man who is free, first from unbelief, then from unrighteousness, and then from scorn. Irreligion, unrighteousness, contempt—these are the three states of mind which are classed together. . . . To class the scorner with the unbeliever and the sinner, to add to ungodliness and unrighteousness the third great sin of contemptuousness—that seems at first sight surprising."

Then he goes on to describe how, as the spirit of contemptuousness grows, moral distinctions and the finer touches of instinct and affection tend to disappear. "And what is the characteristic attitude of the scorner's mind? The Psalmist points it out. He speaks of the scorner as sitting in his seat. That is precisely what describes him. There is no activity, no accomplishment, no positive contribution, in the scorner. He is the neutral, the stay-at-home in the warfare of life. While others are fighting the battle of good and evil, he remains there sitting in his seat. The seat of the scorner has often been a seat of learning. When metals are refined they must be heated; but when men are, it seems sometimes as if they must be cooled. The dilettante critical mind is the easiest victim of a cultivated neutrality. The habit of the scholar easily develops spiritual near-sightedness. In the midst of a world of knowledge waiting to be explained, and a world of conduct waiting to be redeemed, what is there more pitiful than to see the scorner of the academic world sitting in his seat?"

These sermons of Professor Peabody are full of invigorating influence making for manly earnestness, and one feels they must have been a real power in the life of his University. They always compel attention, which is the surest way of compelling attendance. They are essentially what the Americans call bright, but in addition they are full of religious strength and helpfulness. Academic neutrality is the special object of Professor Peabody's attack. We must close with one last quotation bearing upon it, but not inapplicable to those of us who have left the academy and gone out into the wider college of the world. "The Puritan religion was described some years ago under the title of the 'Hard Church;' and it is a great blessing to have emerged from that stern literalism of the lesser Puritanism. But is it not time to face the perils of the 'Soft Church,' the unvertebrated creed, the molluscous liberalism, which consents to any faith because all faith seems to it unreal? The Soft Church is not promoting free thought, but free thoughtlessness; it stands not for liberty, but license. It is often very broad; but it is always very thin. Out of the historic past the greater Puritanism recalls us to the stability of character wrought out of responsibility to God. . . . The real perils among us are internal, a soft theory of life, a limp literature, reckless politics, and conscienceless competition. These are foes which no navy is large enough to repel, and no coast defence strong enough to exclude. The stability of the Republic rests where the Pilgrims planted it, on the rock of a national conscience, and the only secure coast defence is along the line of the stern and rock-bound coast of righteousness."

HENRY GOW.

THE NEW WORLD.*

PROFESSOR PFLEIDERER, of Berlin, contributes to this number of the New World an article on "Jesus' Foreknowledge of His Sufferings and Death," which is provocative of thought, and demands a careful reconsideration of the prevalent conception of the last days of the Master's life, of which the expectation of impending doom certainly forms a part. An examination of the various passages in the Gospels, which represent Jesus as foretelling his death, leads Dr. Pfeleiderer to the conclusion that they are not historical, but are the products of reflection in the minds of disciples, to a large extent throwing back into the narrative Paul's view of the death of Jesus. The incident of the two swords, in Luke xxii. 36-38, is understood literally, as a protection against possible assassination; but in Dr. Pfeleiderer's view, Jesus was looking forward to a triumphant vindication of his spiritual kingdom, and the breaking of bread at the last supper was a pledge of fellowship in the confidence of victory, not a pathetic memorial of one about to die. We cannot say that we are convinced, and the interpretation of the two swords seems particularly harsh, but the suggestions of Dr. Pfeleiderer's exegesis are, of course, deserving of the most serious attention.

Two refreshing articles are those by the Rev. H. T. Colestock, of the First Baptist Church, Madison, Wis., on "Substitution, a Stage in Theological Thought," and by the Rabbi C. H. Levy, of New York, on "Progressive Judaism and Liberal Christianity." The essence of Christianity Mr. Colestock finds in filial piety.

The ideal relationship between man and God is set forth in the life of Christ. Christianity is, therefore, inseparably connected with the person of Christ. His followers are Christians, in reality, in proportion as they enter into fellowship with Christ in his perfect relationship to God; in proportion as the filial relationship of Jesus is reproduced by the Spirit of God in them. . . . Jesus taught no system of doctrines; he sought by his life and by the enunciation of great religious and ethical principles to awaken the moral life, to free the soul from bondage to external precepts and traditional regulations.

Such a conception of Christianity naturally makes an end of the substitution theory, and Mr. Colestock affirms that in several large Protestant bodies in America the worthier interpretation of the life and work of Christ, which he advocates, is steadily growing. Mr. Levy in an extremely interesting manner traces the concurrent development of thought among the Jews, culminating in the prophetic interpretation of religion, and among liberal Christians, and suggests that while organic union is neither possible nor desirable, there may very naturally be a drawing together in sympathy and co-operation in good works.

Mr. Bipin Chandra Pal, who last session was studying at Manchester College, Oxford, contributes a valuable article on "The Ethics of the Bhagavad-Gita," and Mr. E. Parritt writes on "Unitarians and the Beginning of English Liberalism" (but Theophilus Lindsey's name should not be spelt with an "a"). There are some salutary truths in the Rev. J. T. Bixby's article on "The Scientific and Christian View of Illness," criticising not too severely the absurdities of "Faith Healing" and kindred movements, while indicating what underlying truth there is in mental control over physical conditions.

In the Civil War many soldiers lost their voice by throat paralysis, and suddenly regained it by being halted by rebel pickets or other mental agitation. I knew of a bed-ridden daughter of Nathaniel Bowditch, who, when the house caught fire, not only got out of bed, but carried out of the house in safety a heavy marble bust of her father which she prized. A niece of President Arthur lost her sight as a result of fever and the Charleston earthquake shock, and the oculist pronounced her incurable. Her betrothed, to whom she had written, releasing him from his engagement, loyally came to her at once to urge an immediate marriage; and the unexpected happiness recovered for the young woman her eyesight. So love and joy raised Elizabeth Barrett from her invalid bed to elope with Robert Browning, and to live thereafter with fair health for the rest of life.

The part that illness and disease play in the divine order of the world Mr. Bixby clearly shows, and also what are the right methods to overcome them, though the process of "civilising" noxious microbes, to disarm them, seems to us to be carried a great deal too far. The encroachments of disease are to be resisted to the uttermost; but when all efforts are found to be vain, Mr. Bixby shows, in conclusion, what is the true spirit in which the inevitable must be faced.

Another article of peculiar interest is the Rev. C. W. Wendte's on "Popular Education and Public Morality," who shows how much more is needed besides progress in intellectual training to check the progress of crime, and urges that on the home and the Church must rest the chief responsibility of moral and religious training.

The number closes, as usual, with a large number of interesting notices of books.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

UNITARIANS AND THE PLEDGE.

SIR,—“Oh! Liberty, Liberty, how many crimes are committed in thy name!” I often feel, when Unitarians object to the total abstinence pledge, that their position is an abuse of the glorious doctrine of Liberty, for which Unitarians have done so much. They, who through life take all sorts of bonds and pledges and undertakings, in business, in marriage, and in various other affairs, object to one simple promise not to use a certain article which is the cause of an infinity of evil, from which the non-use of that particular article is a certain safeguard. If these same objectors were asked to promise, we will say, not to use certain feathers in their apparel because they were convinced of the cruelty involved in their production, they would hardly refrain from giving the undertaking on the ground that it would compromise their liberty. Yet, when it comes to an evil so great that it exceeds—in the words adopted by Mr. Gladstone—“the combined evils of war, pestilence and famine,” this objection is ever ready to excuse them from a step which would free them personally from those evils. It is an excuse rather than a reason, and to my mind often an evidence of insincerity and want of realisation of the enormous issues at stake.

But this objection to the pledge on the part of children is really incomprehensible. Does the man who would raise it never ask his child to “promise” that he will never do some wrong thing? This is all we ask; and in our Bands of Hope to-day there are some two or three million children who have “promised” not to take that drink which can do them no good and might do them incalculable harm. Is it not a crime, then, to retard this great Band of Hope movement on account of this feeling against the pledge? The matter has been discussed lately in connection with a church not a thousand miles from Birmingham, and an effort to start a Band of Hope there has fallen through on that account. No one who knows anything of the work of the Band of Hope can deny that it does much to preserve the young from the evils of the drink, and the responsibility of those who put a stumbling-block in the way of this good work is great. Considering the magnitude of the evil, there ought to be a Band of Hope or Temperance Society in every church; some of us think that the church itself should be the Temperance Society. Things are working in this direction, and Unitarians are moving slowly in the rearguard of the more orthodox churches, instead of, where they ought to be, in the van, in this great practical movement.

We of the Essex Hall Temperance Association, at any rate, do not feel that we have given up any liberty—in the best sense of the word—in taking the pledge against drinking poisonous (this is the dictionary meaning of intoxicating) liquors. And an opportunity occurs, which I hope the Association may avail itself of, to advance the movement. The more orthodox Free Churches—Baptist, Congregational, Methodist, Friends, &c.—have determined to celebrate the coming of a new century by a great pledge-signing crusade, and they have invited us to co-operate with them. In thus inviting co-operation, they leave it to us to carry on the work in our churches in our own particular way, uniting, it may be, now and again, in some great aggregate meeting, and do not ask us in any way to sink our individuality. The occasion is one which, it seems to me, should not be missed. Our Association has been going along in a jog-trot sort of way for the past six years, gradually working up its list of affiliated societies from forty-two in the first year to about sixty in this, the seventh. These are small things, whilst there are hundreds of Unitarian churches without any organisation to combat the great drink evil. Why should we not raise a fund, say, of £250, and organise a systematic work among the churches till we have doubled or trebled the number of our Temperance organisations, and shown that Unitarians do realise their responsibility in regard to the drink question? And as to the pledge, let us stick to it until our pledge-objecting and, I am afraid, indifferent, friends can give us a more powerful weapon with which to combat the giant Intemperance. F. A. EDWARDS,

* "The New World," a Quarterly Review of Religion, Ethics and Theology. Vol. VIII., No. 31, September. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin and Co. London: Gay and Bird (or at Essex Hall). 3s.

Treasurer, Essex Hall Temperance Association,

2, Lena-gardens, Brook-green, W.

THE QUESTION OF PROSELYTISM.

SIR,—I have to thank the Rev. E. P. Barrow sincerely for his courtesy in replying at such length and so lucidly to the questions I ventured to put to him. My letter has answered its purpose. I found it difficult to believe that I understood Mr. Barrow aright when he seemed to condemn, and to hold that Jesus would condemn, all attempts, on the intellectual side, to infuse our religious convictions into others. I gather, however, that I did not misunderstand his meaning. That which to me appears one of the most sacred duties laid upon us, to him appears an offence and an outrage. This is a radical divergence of ethical outlook; and no advantage would be served by further discussion.

I fully appreciate, indeed, the spirit of Mr. Barrow's letter. I am aware that in the enthusiasm of proclaiming beliefs that to us are full of inspiration, there is danger, as there always is in every eager and zealous operation, of giving a footing to the spirit of rivalry, of impatience for triumph, even of sectarian bitterness. I thank Mr. Barrow for pointing out these perils; but because the duty has its moral dangers, we cannot therefore shrink from the duty. Everything worth doing in human life is attended by its moral risks, only to be guarded against by the spirit of love and prayer.

It was Mr. Barrow, not I, that introduced the word "proselytism." I have no love for it. But when Mr. Barrow applied this "tainted word," as he calls it, to operations which I deem a sacred part of the duty of our churches, it seemed best to accept the word and to try to show that its "taint" was due to a misinterpretation of a text.

I deeply regret that Mr. Barrow extends his condemnation to the operations of the Postal Mission. I think he can know little of the touching gratitude, the sense of re-illuminated spiritual heaven, which the "pamphlets" he thinks so futile have often awakened in men and women longing for light in a dark place. Nor can he realise the religious quickening, the new hope and joy, which even the despised "Unitarian lecture" has often brought about in those to whom orthodox teaching had brought confusion of mind and oppression of heart.

I had thought it was generally acknowledged that Channing had been a great instrument in restoring to Christendom the lost or partially lost sense of the Fatherhood. Nor can I understand how the sense of the Fatherhood can fail to be impaired by the doctrine that the Father plunges countless souls into an endless hell, or that men can only be saved by belief in the redeeming blood of Christ, or that his children may not approach the Father in prayer save in the name of Jesus Christ. Nor, again, can I forget the hopeless way in which evangelical friends of my own have spoken to me of the remoteness, dimness, and inaccessibility of the Father. If, with what would seem to me a happy inconsistency, other professors of the doctrines of the Trinity and the Atonement realise the supreme truth which Jesus proclaimed to the world that God is our Father and that we are his children, I can only rejoice that so it is.

RICHARD A. ARMSTRONG.

Liverpool, Nov. 20.

CHURCH COVENANTS.

SIR,—I regret that I have only just now seen Mr. Anthony's note in your issue of the 4th inst. I am extremely interested in the subject of his communication, and should gladly welcome any information that would prove to me that I made too sweeping a generalisation. But on the evidence of the Poole covenant which you print, can anyone doubt that the Poole church was congregationally organised, and was not Presbyterian? Mr. Gordon tells me that John Wesley, Mr. Madgwick's predecessor, was a strong Independent, and surely his successor, Matthew Towgood, was the eldest son of Stephen Towgood, the great Congregational of Axminster, whose church had furnished Bridport (also Congregational) with a minister in Samuel Baker.

J. EDWIN ODGERS.

145, Woodstock-road, Oxford,
Nov. 14.

P.S.—Since writing the foregoing, I have referred to Hunter's "Heywood," and find (p. 235) the covenants of his church at Northowram, which I ought to have remembered. These prove my statement to be inexact. I spoke from an impression I held in common with Dr. Stoughton, who says: "The Independents . . . demanded assent in some way to articles of faith, and to the old church covenant preserved in their ecclesiastical records. The Presbyterians entered into no spiritual scrutiny, and asked for no theological confession." ("Religion in England," v. 449.) The effect of Oliver Heywood's adoption of covenants was, he tells us, that the brethren of the "Congregational persuasion" entered into communion with his church. But I think a comparison of the Northowram covenants and those of Poole will show that the latter are based on Congregational principles.

OBITUARY.

WILLIAM CLARK.

WE greatly regret to record the death of Mr. William Clark, of Nottingham, which took place on Nov. 11, at his house at West Bridgford, in the seventieth year of his age. There have been few more steadfast adherents to our faith than Mr. Clark. As a boy he attended the day and Sunday schools connected with the High Pavement Chapel, and his warm attachment to Unitarianism grew with his growth.

From scholar in the Sunday-school, Mr. Clark became teacher, superintendent, and president (an office which he held at his death); and as hon. secretary and one of the managers of the day schools, for many years he rendered invaluable help, to what was for long the leading primary school in Nottingham. Nor was he less enthusiastic in his chapel work. Few meetings were complete without him, and what he counselled wisely he was the first to strive energetically to carry out. It was due to his initiative that the scheme of building the present magnificent High Pavement Chapel was entered upon, and to his untiring efforts its successful completion was in great measure due. He was chapel warden during the whole time of the erection of the new building, now upwards of twenty years ago, and he held the same post at his death.

An earnest Liberal in politics, Mr. Clark took a prominent part in party work in middle life. For a short period he occupied a seat in the City Council, and he was a staunch Freemason. His chief social interest, however, centred in his own household of faith. He was a frequent lay-preacher. Newark owed much to him (he may almost be said to have been one of the founders of that congregation), and Christ Church and Hyson Green Mission in Nottingham had his ready help. But the solemnities of worship could not quench the exuberance of his friendliness, and he would scandalise the verger by a hearty handshake with some member of the congregation on his passage from the vestry to the pulpit. He filled the office of trustee of the High Pavement, Christ Church, and Ilkeston Chapels; had been president of the North Midland Presbyterian and Unitarian Association, and was a member of its Committee at his death. Indeed, his last appearance at the High Pavement was at the autumn meeting of that Association in Nottingham (little more than a fortnight before he died), when he spoke to thank the reader of the paper and to welcome friends from other towns—no more fitting closing task for one of his kindly genial nature. This was characteristic of the man. He always seemed bright and happy. He had a friendly word and hearty greeting for all, young or old, rich or poor, with whom he came in contact. Until in later life he removed for a time into the country—and then he always attended chapel when he could—he would be in the porch of the High Pavement, flower in button-hole, up to the moment before service began, with a cheery word for all comers, and his kindly smile and friendly welcome seemed a part of the good influences of the day. Then he would slip into his pew (close to the entrance), inviting into it any wandering worshippers from other folds, and especially children, so that his long bench became recognised as a sort of general hospitality resort. Nor was his hospitality less conspicuous at his own home, and many members of our household of faith scattered up and down the land will remember with pleasure the happy hours passed at his house, or with him in his garden, where it was delightful to see his intense love for flowers. In the presence of a large number of sorrowing friends and fellow-worshippers and of the villagers from round the country home he had only left a few weeks before, he was borne to his last resting place in the General Cemetery, Nottingham, on Nov. 13, his coffin covered thick with flowers, and a bunch of red roses, gathered in the mild autumn weather from his old garden, laid over his breast.

THE INWARD LIFE.

From Fénelon's Letters to Men.

THE greatness and goodness of God should be a frequent subject of your meditation; but you should not try to meditate without taking some special words, in order to fix your mind, which has been little accustomed to abide calmly in God's presence; you will otherwise only lose your time without strengthening your heart. You should always have a definite, plain, simple subject on which you should reflect simply. Ask chiefly to be drawn to God through the affections, for it is not by intellectual processes or arguments that He wins souls; it is by the quickening of the heart and the humbling of the spirit. Do not hope to attain to a point in which your meditations will be free from distraction—it is not possible; but try rather to make use of your distractions by bearing them with humble patience, never being discouraged. Every time you find them out, turn yourself quietly to God again. Anxiety concerning our distractions is the worst distraction of all. A short half-hour spent in meditative reading of the Gospels in the morning, and an evening reading of St. Francis de Sales' "Entretiens," will be enough, as you have little time at command. Use the remainder of your spare time in studying history, fortification, and whatever else is useful to a man in your position. Never have an idle moment. The time in which you are doing nothing useful and good is the time in which you do most harm. Check yourself unrelentingly in all that tends to a lazy, idle, self-pleasing life. As to your actions, if they are good in themselves, reject all questioning as to the motives whence they spring, otherwise you will never have done; you will get worried, be disheartened, and while cavilling uselessly over motives, you will forget to act.

You ought to resolve to lead a more active life, to see more of people in your own position; but you must be cheerful, easy, and affable—no shyness and awkwardness. Ask God to change your shrinking, reserved manner; offer yourself to Him when you go amongst others, but do not be dreamy and absent in society because you are secretly trying to realise God's presence. Rather do what He requires of you at the actual moment; that is, be kindly and courteous. Gradually the recollection of His presence will become easier to you.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

CHRISTMAS, children! Christmas is coming! What a joyful sound to many children! I hope it will be a very happy time to you all, and that you will help to make it very happy to others. We seem to hear the echo from long ago of the angels' song, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, and good will toward men"; and we see again the wise men and the shepherds, coming from afar, to see the little baby, and to bring their gifts, as in the beautiful old story. It is a time when joy and thankfulness warm all our hearts and knit them together.

And you will be thinking that many friends will be bringing presents to you, and no doubt they will; and perhaps you are planning how many presents you can give, yourselves. But I hear someone say, "There are so many we want to give to, and we have so little money." I wonder, now, how much you have, and how you get it? Do you have a penny a week from your parents, as some children that I know did? Or do you get "tips" sometimes? Those children hardly ever had a tip: but a penny a week came to four-and-fourpence a year, when saved up; and they did not think that "little money" at all. They used to save it, all the year round, ready for Christmas, and seldom spent anything on themselves.

Did you ever hear the story of the schoolboy who thought he would keep accounts, and when he came home for his holidays he showed his mother his account-book? When she had looked at it, she said to him that she was pleased to see that he had on the whole spent his money well; but she said, "though I like to see that you take an interest in others, and that you spare money for good objects, I don't think you need quite so often give money to the 'Society for the Propagation of the Gospel'—for 'S.P.G.' came very often in the accounts, and she pointed to it, as the boy looked at the pages. Then he answered: "Oh, mother, it isn't that at all—that means 'Something, probably grub.' This boy had not done much in saving up his money. Now, if you deny yourselves something, and do not spend your money on 'grub,' you will have ever so much more with which to give pleasure to others. That four-and-fourpence would soon have melted away in 'grub': but as they did not spend it in that way, it was a great delight to those children to find how many presents they could give; for, as they mostly made their presents, they had no need to buy very much.

Some children I know, who don't spend their money on "grub," got a nice large book, with leaves of brown holland, and made a really beautiful scrap-book to give to the little sick children in the hospital, with all the pictures which they could beg or collect. They got book catalogues, from friends to whom they were sent; many of the pictures they painted themselves; and they saved up all the Christmas and New Year cards which were pretty, and put them in too, either whole, or cutting out the prettiest parts. Then their mother took them to the hospital, and they gave their book themselves; and they were greatly struck with seeing so many little tiny children so helpless, and delighted with their joy over the new book. It had taken them a long time to make, but they spared no pains, and really did it beautifully.

It is, perhaps, easier for girls to make presents than it is for boys; but if the boys can draw, or carve, or carpenter, or net, or knit, or even sew a little, they may do much. And all boys are the better for knowing how to sew. Who knows where they may go or what they may do when they grow up? They may travel, or emigrate, or be soldiers or sailors, and have no one to sew for them, and then how useful it will be. A gentleman used to amuse us when we were children by telling us that when he had holes in his gloves he ran a thread all round the holes and drew them up; he called them "pooing strings."

Well, then, here are a few things that can be made for presents. If either girls or boys can paint, they can buy for a few pence at Whiteley's, or the Army and Navy Stores, charming little wooden articles; and some children whom I know paint these, with flowers, or birds, or animals, coloured leaves, or feathers, &c.; and sometimes they copy (and paint, out of their heads) pictures from "Alice in Wonderland," or the Jungle books, or any books they are fond of. There are little boxes for stamps, or pins, or studs, or work; little watch cases, stationery cases, key racks, paper knives, photograph frames, book slides, &c. One little girl had a photograph in a walnut frame, of Rudyard Kipling, to give to a cousin, and she painted on the front of the frame Mowgli and the wolf at the top, elephants at the side, and a cobra with his hood up at the bottom and rising up the other side—all from the Jungle book.

Then balls can be made for the little ones (and for hospital children too) by a bit of cork wound round with any scraps of wool or flannel, and then quilted all over with string. Reins can be knitted, to play horses with, and a penny would buy a little bell or two to ornament the horse, and to ring as he runs. Little dolls can be bought for a penny or two, and dressed in any scraps that mother can spare. Pen-wipers, with cardboard sides, painted and tied together with ribbon, are pretty and useful; or needle cases made in the same way. Pincushions for the pocket, too, made out of two rounds of cardboard, covered with silk, and neatly sewn together round the edges; blotting books, with card backs, painted, and ribbon behind; little painted card tidies, laced together with ribbon—all these things my little friends have made, as well as knitted cuffs, scarfs, &c. Netted string bags, or crochet ones, are also very nice and useful.

These are just a few "wrinkles" as to what children have done and may do. I daresay some of you know and make many other things: but, you see, a very few "tips," or a very few halfpence a week, will go a long way if you can deny yourselves "S.P.G.," and save up what will give so much pleasure to others. And if you have not yet begun to make your Christmas presents, you had better begin at once, for what with school or lessons and all the rest that you have to do, there is not a moment to lose. A money box to drop your money into, and father or mother to keep the key if you are unable to resist "S.P.G." otherwise, is a good plan. A happy Christmas, children! and I wonder who will give the best and most presents for your money?

GERTRUDE MANTINEAU.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any News-agent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are:—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER ...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR ...	3	4
PER YEAR ...	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE ...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE...	2	10	0
PER COLUMN ...	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN ...	0	3	8
BACK PAGE ...	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 25, 1899.

MISSIONARY OPPORTUNITY.

THE report published in our present issue of the autumn meeting of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association at Bristol furnishes much food for reflection on the opportunities for missionary service in the present day, and the duty which the religious needs of large numbers of our fellow-countrymen lay upon us. More than one speaker urged the importance of sincerity in religious life and utterance, and the happy privilege that is ours, to hold and declare the truth which has possessed us, without any reckoning with standards of supposed orthodoxy or the limitations of a binding creed. There are very many people dissatisfied with the religious teaching in which they have been brought up, who are searching for some better truth, and many more who, because they do not know which way to turn, are suffering religious interests to die out of their life and endure impoverishment of spirit, whereas, helpless in themselves, they are only waiting for a strong and confident word of truth to lift them again out of that melancholy decadence.

It was pointed out at Wednesday's Conference by the Rev. F. T. REED, that we often do not know how great is the field waiting for our helpful efforts, that where to a superficial observer there might seem to be a most irresponsible community, wedded to old habit, settled in the contentment of accustomed teaching and ritual, there are very likely many hungry souls with dumb inarticulate longings, only waiting for the offer of help, the giving of the message of a happier faith, to meet it with the most grateful response. Postal Mission workers know, perhaps, best of all how deep is the longing in many unexpected places, and how true the ministry open to us of meeting that need with the very word of life.

Both the papers read at the Conference showed good cause for renewed zeal in this work, and Dr. GRIFFITHS made a particularly earnest appeal for the continuance of such efforts. One suggestion he made seems to us specially deserving of attention, in reference to little groups of people convinced of a better way, who yet are not strong enough actually to organise a church. They, Dr. GRIFFITHS urged, should nevertheless hold together, and form a circle among themselves, into which others might be gathered, meeting perhaps at one another's houses from week to week, or in some one chosen room, for mutual encouragement and conference on religious matters. Was not this what very often happened in the earliest days of the spread of Christianity? Then in very humble places little groups of believers gathered together, cherishing in their hearts the new hope, nourishing the new and better life, so that even the great Apostle could send greetings to a friend, "and the church which is in thy house."

There is much opportunity for such helpful service, and for the training of gifts of quiet ministry, not necessarily in those who are to have charge of settled congregations, but in many others, both men and women, who may bear their testimony perhaps only in friendly conversations, or in the leading of a reading-circle, but with a growing capacity to meet other and in some ways greater calls, as opportunity may offer.

But whatever form our service may take, in the quiet ways of friendship or in more conspicuous public appeal, there is the same great end in view, to open the way for truer religious life. The necessity for doctrinal sincerity and truth is the necessity of life, because only in this way of spiritual freedom can we come to the truth, and only in truth can we come to God. If we engage in controversy it is not merely that we may affirm a greater correctness of intellectual apprehension and prove the doctrines we discard to be ill-founded or illogical, but rather that we may show in the truth we maintain the source and channel of a more fruitful religious life. Not by argument, but by demonstration of the spirit will truth most surely make its way.

And so the appeal comes back to us with renewed force, both in our individual lives and in the life of our churches, the life of a common devotion and self-sacrificing service, to declare the strength of the faith that is in us, and to spread the good news that there is a way of freedom, of enlightenment and reasoned conviction, of Christian brotherhood and of communion with the Eternal, that will satisfy all the needs of the human heart.

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

AUTUMNAL MEETING.

THE annual autumnal meeting of the Association was held at Bristol on Tuesday and Wednesday, Nov. 21 and 22.

The Association was represented by Mr. Charles W. Jones, J.P. (President); the Right Hon. Lady O'Hagan; Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter, M.A.; Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A.; Mr. Oswald Nettlefold (treasurer); Rev. W. Copeland Bowie (secretary). The South Wales Association by the Rev. T. J. Jenkins, Trebanos; the South-East Wales Society by Mr. Lewis N. Williams, Aberdare.

The following representatives of congregations in the West, and in South Wales were also present:—Aberdare: Rev. J. R. Hughes; Bath: Rev. F. W. Stanley; Bridport: Rev. H. S. Solly, M.A., Mr. William Colfox, B.A., J.P., Miss Colfox; Bristol: Rev. A. N. Blatchford, B.A., Mr. P. J. Worsley, B.A., J.P., Mr. Herbert Thomas, J.P., Mr. Arthur Lee, J.P.; Bridgwater: Rev. T. B. Broadrick, Mrs. Broadrick; Cardiff: Mr. W. Legassick; Cheltenham: Rev. J. Fisher Jones; Clifton: Rev. J. Warschauer, Ph.D., Mr. Charles Thomas, J.P., Mr. A. Wosey, Mr. W. M. Mitchell, Mr. Thomas Furber; Clydach Vale and Pentre: Mr. David Rees; Cirencester: Rev. H. Austin, Mrs. Austin, Mr. Dancey; Crewkerne: Mr. E. J. Blake, J.P.; Devonport: Mr. J. W. Cock, Mr. J. A. Barnes, Mrs. Ordin; Exeter: Mr. Parkinson, Mr. Skinner; Gloucester: Rev. Walter Lloyd, Mr. Keeping; Ilminster: Rev. Edward Parry, B.A.; Merthyr: Rev. D. J. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Gomer Thomas; Moretonhampstead: Rev. F. T. Reed; Plymouth: Rev. J. S. Mathers, B.A.; Pontypridd: Rev. W. Griffiths, Ph.D., Mr. John Lewis; Shepton Mallet: Rev. L. T. Badcock, Mr. Thomas Allen, Mr. Shillis; Sidmouth: Rev. W. Agar, Mr. Dennis B. Squire, Miss Squire, Miss Barnby; Swansea: Rev. W. Tudor Jones, Mr. C. H. Perkins; Taunton: Rev. Jeffery Worthington, B.A., Miss Phillips; Tavistock: General W. Jacobs; Torquay: Rev. A. E. O'Connor; Trowbridge: Mr. E. Taylor, Mr. W. Walker; Yeovil: Rev. S. S. Brettell, M.A.

Service was held in the Oakfield-road Church, Clifton, on Tuesday afternoon, conducted by the Rev. Jeffery Worthington, of Taunton, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter. Taking for his text, John xv. 16, "Ye did not choose me, but I chose you, and appointed you that ye should go and bear fruit, and that your fruit should abide," the preacher said that such was the voice of the Truth to the believers of the early Church; that great discourse summed up the reflection of the disciples on the first Christian experience. It was a new life which had come to them, a new trust, the vividness of a new insight, the power of a new hope. The whole soul was open to the inflowing of the spirit. They had not chosen that truth, but it had chosen them and taken possession of them.

He then proceeded to ask whether they could say the same of themselves, in their religious life so widely separated from the popular Churches of the day? They also were possessed by principles of religious life and conceptions of truth, which claimed their allegiance, and that they should bear fruit. They were face to face with a claim widely made that "the permanent centrality of Christ" must be the determining factor in religion, and that in present conscious communion with Christ the Redeemer all life must be lived. But they felt that the primary element in religion was the relation between the soul and God, and in earnest and searching words the preacher showed how the moral discipline of life and the work of redemption, the bringing back of the soul to God, was accomplished in more manifold ways, and more universally for the consummation of religious life, and that God the Father was the Redeemer of all souls that He had made. They could not break the continuity of that mighty order by isolating into sole significance one particular event, or one specific influence, even the highest. They could not confound the historic type of their religion with its everlasting object. In conclusion, the sermon dwelt on the necessity of clothing faith with forms, of which the first was worship, and insisted that truth must be its determining power and freedom its vital breath. They might regret their exclusion from the Church, but it was not a matter of choice but of loyalty to truth, and even in the wilderness they had their witness to bear and their work to do for the Kingdom.

This sermon we hope to publish in full next week.

THE PUBLIC MEETING.

After tea, followed by a selection of music under the direction of Mr. J. Y. Pearce, organist of Lewin's Mead Meeting, a public meeting was held in the Victoria Rooms, Mr. PHILIP J. WORSLEY, J.P., in the chair.

An opening hymn having been sung, the CHAIRMAN offered a hearty welcome to the representatives of the Association, on behalf not only of Bristol friends, but of the congregations in the West of England. He spoke of the value of the work done by the Association and the cordial relations of sympathy and co-operation which had always subsisted between it and the Western Union. They were specially glad to welcome the President, whose brother, the late Robert Crompton Jones, was held by many of them in affectionate remembrance, from the time when he worked with the Rev. William James at Lewin's Mead. Towards Mr. Carpenter they felt as one Bristol man feels towards another, and they were grateful to him for the sermon of that afternoon. He might take the opportunity of referring also to two matters of local interest, the satisfaction they had felt in welcoming Dr. Warschauer to Oakfield-road, whose ministry showed good prospect of gathering a congregation of new comers there, and the great regret with which they would part with the Rev. J. Wain, who had done such admirable work as Domestic Missionary in one of the poorest quarters of Bristol, and in whom he felt that Conigre Chapel at Trowbridge would have a worthy successor to the Rev. Samuel Martin of pious memory. He then called upon the President of the Association to give an address on "The Work of the Association and its Claims to Support."

Mr. CHARLES W. JONES, on behalf of the deputation of the Association, acknowledged the welcome accorded to them. The Association next year would be seventy-five years old, but it was as young as ever, and up to the times. If they went into Essex Hall they would think they had got into a bookseller's shop, and that was, in fact, an important part of their work. They issued year by year a number of excellent publications, and he desired to call special attention to Mr. Armstrong's last little book, "Back to Jesus." Last year they had given away 1,695 books and 103,452 tracts. He was aware of the prejudice against tracts, and shared it himself; but there was no tract published by the Association that was not well worth reading and distributing. He also referred to the special services conducted by the Rev. Stopford Brooke, which had done an incalculable amount of good, and said that he should be very sorry if the proposed lectureship at University College interfered with that preaching. Their foreign work was also excellent. The presence of Hungarian students at Manchester College he felt sure had been of great benefit both to Hungary and to the other students of the College; and latterly they had also enabled Indian students to come over. They were fortunate in having secured the Rev. S. F. Williams as their representative in India. In Scotland their work was done with the aid of the McQuaker Trust, Mr. McQuaker having left £30,000 for the promotion of such work. Their mission work, in the support of chapels and ministers throughout the country, was, perhaps, the most important of all. In addition to the help they gave, there were two large Funds devoted to the augmentation of ministers' salaries, and a number of smaller funds. He wished that all such funds could be administered by one body, but latterly something had been done in that direction through co-operation and interchange of ideas between the three chief societies. The condition of ministers' salaries was not creditable to them as a body, the richest body in the country in proportion to their numbers. He wished that the new century could be inaugurated by an advance in that matter, so that no minister in their body should receive less than £300 a year. And if it was said that there were men among their ministers who were not worth it, he quite agreed, but they ought not to be in the ministry at all. Their need was of a cultured and learned ministry, and they had colleges for the training of such men. He thought also that there should be some prizes in the ministry, and some of their congregations ought to give, as they were well able to, £1,000 a year. Only one of the original founders of the Augmentation Fund was now living, but they had not got to the end of their foundations, and there was no reason why they should not now subscribe another £50,000, and why they should not also double the amount of the Sustentation Fund. He did not think that they could make the circumstances of ministers too easy. By such means they would secure the right sort of men for the ministry and would do a great deal of good to their body generally. He need not make any special appeal to them to support the Association. They knew what its work was. He had a great dread of organisation, but he believed in association, where there was absolute freedom, both of congregations and ministers. On that principle their associations, both central and provincial, rendered most valuable service.

Lady O'HAGAN gave an address on "Our Message to the Present Age." The grave responsibilities, she said, involved in the terrible reality of war, brought home to them the necessity of being true to themselves and true to the great mission to humanity imposed by their religious ideals. They were apt to be discouraged at the obstacles to spiritual freedom which still remained, but when they realised what progress had already been made, they saw that there was much promise for the future. There were those who said that they were as far as ever from the Kingdom of God, and that Christianity has proved a failure; others said that any hope of better things was an idle dream.

Then Lady O'Hagan spoke as follows:—

In spite of such views, I remain convinced that the Kingdom of God is a true, a noble, and a necessary ideal for humanity; that Christianity must not be pronounced a failure until it has really been tried. So far mankind as a whole has scarcely given it a trial. We have had many things passing under that name, but we have reached the end of this nineteenth century without yet being able to agree as to how far we have done justice to the religion of Jesus. The first condition for such an agreement would be to know what that religion was. In the very same documents, some read it in one way, some in another; authority has failed to impose its dictum upon the world, chiefly because it has given its protection in the past to so many things which have not stood the test of experience. In fact, the powerlessness of the principle of authority to give real peace in the religious sphere is, perhaps, one of the most decided features of this end of the century.

Human reason, we are told, has done no more in that direction; we may say without hesitation that, at any rate, it has done no less.

Nevertheless, some excellent people would wish to see the claims of authority and reason, not so much reconciled—they, perhaps, despair of the task—but at any rate coupled together side by side in peaceful harness. They long for a Church in which the familiar scriptural image of the lion and the lamb sitting together would be realised in the peaceful admixture of the most opposed views of the Christian religion; a Church in which one could be safely either a Romanist without the Roman name, or a Unitarian without the Unitarian name (not to mention intermediate stages) without ceasing to enjoy the privileges attaching to a national Institution, and the respectability connected therewith. No doubt if that were possible without doing violence to the laws of sincerity, and without watering down any acquired conviction, such a state of affairs would be infinitely convenient. But I fear that the dream is a hopeless one. We must get rid of the old idea of a Church before such a thing can be attained. We must, above all, get rid of a system already subsisting, framed in definitions which, however elastic, are not capable of an indefinite number of interpretations. Then, and not till then, will it be possible for men to worship peacefully side by side, feeling their unity in that very attitude of worship, and not in the artificial bonds of an historical system illogically made to suit the purposes of our modern needs.

We are told, we were told not very long ago, that Unitarians are simply the left wing of the English Presbyterians, who have developed as they have done under their "open trusts." I can scarcely agree to allow this definition of the Unitarian name, at least as far as I am concerned, to remain there. I recognise, of course, the historical connection with the old English Presbyterians; I also recognise the more remote connection with those doctrines, vanquished but never extinguished, which reach back as far as the first three centuries of Christendom, and make Unitarian Christianity probably the oldest form of the Christian faith in its essential outlines. But I frankly confess that the Unitarian name means much more for me than any historical connection at this present time. It means for me the possible reality honestly attainable in respect to the worship of God in the spirit of Christ; it means fellowship without painful compromise, and union without the suppression of my highest present-vision of truth; it means freedom bought at no sacrifice of faithfulness to one's ideals; it means religion in the sanctuary of the soul, uncontrolled by any Act of Parliament, untrammelled by any consideration of State policy, unchecked by any historical creed. I trust, always speaking for myself, that it means the simple religion of Jesus, always ready, of course, to render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, but certainly not at the price of the things that are God's, for the sake of an outward artificial unity.

It is because I believe that true religious spontaneity and genuine religious freedom are not compatible with any artificial compromise that, while being as conscious as any one of the sweetness of old associations, I could not for their sake pay the high price that some seem not unwilling to give. And I remain convinced that our Free Churches have a great mission in the religious world in continuing to teach that sincerity is all in all in religion; that freedom of expression is the daily bread of sincerity; that religious progress is achieved, not by compromise, but through freedom; that what men need is not to find how to accommodate their faith to that of others, but how, without any such attempt, to live at peace together under the eye of their Common Father, in a true unalloyed spirit of religious toleration. Thus can our Free Churches help men and women in the coming century to realise the true unity of God's Kingdom, not so much within the fabric of some historical system however ancient and venerable, as within the more august precincts of that glorious Temple which God's Spirit is slowly but surely building up in human hearts. It is this spirit of religious toleration, this true unity in the bonds of charity and the light of freedom, that we have to make for and proclaim, not selfishly for ourselves, but for all. Unity, I take it, implies equality and excludes subservience, just as toleration excludes tyranny, and as truth in its essence excludes compromise.

It is this quality of truth which in former ages has dazzled the eyes of so many good men, and by reason of their inevitable limitations caused them to believe that freedom of action and freedom of thought must be crushed out at any price. They could not grasp the working of the laws of progress; they could not wait for the whisperings of the Spirit; they sought for absolute truth, and in their ignorant presumption would have it that the finite mind of man had perceived a supreme, complete revelation of the infinite mind of the Almighty. To them, therefore, toleration became an unworthy compromise with error, which could not be tolerated. Modern thought has taken another direction. It has come to look upon religious toleration as a moral duty, imposed upon us by our growing knowledge no less than by the clearer consciousness of our ignorance. But modern thought has also come to see that the spirit of compromise, which has, and can have, no place in search after truth, has also no place in the religious aspirations of the soul. In formulating them we are just what we are, or we are nothing; hence the fatal error of trying to build up the religion of our age upon a principle of give-and-take within the limits of a confession, however comprehensive.

That very comprehensiveness could only be obtained by sacrificing that which gives to individual religion its sacredness and value. It is not a comprehensive Church that our age needs; that would only mean sooner or later latitudinarianism, until, perhaps, one section in the Church had managed to capture or drive out the rest. What our age needs is a comprehensive spirit, allowing perfect freedom to all groups of religious thought and perfect equality to all before the law of the land; a spirit that will not permit of the education of our children being made the battle ground of our religious controversies; a spirit that will make it impossible for religious people to shut their eyes to the crying needs of our social life, that shall banish hypocritical professions, but shall submit all our spiritual claims to the clear, simple test of the Gospel: "By their fruits ye shall know them."

The Rev. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER spoke on "What Modern Criticism has done for Religion." It was, he said, a subject on which they could claim no monopoly of wisdom. There was a general movement going on in the treatment of the Scriptures, which had been indeed led by some of their forefathers in the faith, but now was shared by the best teachers of all the Churches, converging with remarkable unanimity on certain common truths in regard to the Bible. The conclusions of Colenso, for instance, as to the supposed Mosaic authenticity of the Pentateuch, which had led to his being practically outlawed by the clergy of his Church, were now taught as ascertained truths in all the best schools of theological learning throughout the land. Such accord he hailed with the greatest satisfaction, as giving the promise that their religious ideas, though they might not take the same shape, would be pervaded by common sympathies, which would lead to such co-operation between different Churches as had never been before. Criticism was fast delivering them from many crude, gross forms of belief, which had before been considered inseparable from the Bible. He had lately seen a letter in an Oxford newspaper, written by a clergyman in the country, in which it was gravely argued that in certain texts it was definitely laid down by divine authority, what kind of incense must be used in worship, and that those who used any other kind came under the condemnation of the Almighty as using "strange fire," and were liable to the death penalty. And it was argued that since it was impossible to obtain the biblical ingredients of incense, all the priests and clergy who now used incense in church were guilty of a breach of the law of God, and were on that account condemned to death. Criticism delivered them from a view of the Bible which rendered such an argument possible.

And if they wished to see a striking instance of the beneficent result of criticism, they should get the volume of the Expositor's Bible, which dealt with the Minor Prophets, and read the noble exposition by Professor G. A. Smith of the story of Jonah; there they would see how what was formerly a stumbling-block to faith became a story of singular beauty and fascination, conveying a magnificent lesson of the universalism of religion and the infinite mercy of God to the whole human race. The first service of criticism was to deliver from the bondage of low and unworthy ideas of God. And further, it showed how things which had been difficulties naturally arose in the ordinary processes of the human mind. The conflicting stories of the birth of Jesus in the Gospels illustrated this. Criticism had not only to compare such narratives, but to account for the elements out of which they had grown up, and to attempt to understand the processes of the human mind, by which certain great conceptions might express themselves in poetic and literary forms. By such study of the great literature of the Bible they gained an idea of historical development or religious evolution, which gave them a much loftier and truer idea of the Divine working in the education of the human race than was possible under the old system, which regarded the Bible as in every word and syllable the direct utterance of the Most High.

They were enormously indebted to the process of historical criticism in the last generation for giving a new meaning to the whole of the story of the Old Testament as a great preparation, in a larger and wider sense than had before been realised, for the life and teaching of Jesus Christ. At a recent meeting of Evangelical clergy in Manchester, a whole day had been spent in the denunciation of one or two Oxford teachers, and notably of Canon Driver, because he had conceded that a number of passages in Isaiah, supposed to refer to Jesus, had a different meaning in connection with the events of the time. To those clergymen it appeared rank blasphemy, and they could not disassociate their interpretation of the prophecies from the conceptions they had formed of the predictions concerning Jesus Christ. But now it was seen that Hebrew prophecy had a larger meaning than was supposed, as teacher of the people in the sublime truths of the unity of God and the need of doing His will as the first duty of man on earth. So the Old Testament came to them with a meaning quite different from what it bore thirty years ago, as a nation's thought working out under Divine guidance the noblest of all truths and flowering and ripening in the great word and work of their common Master. What was the effect on their religion? It took it out of the printed book and drove it home to the sanctuary of the soul. Religion was not something cut and dried on the printed page, something to be believed at their peril; it was wrought into the daily experience of their life, in conscience which was the rule and guide of conduct and thought and feeling; it lived in the home as the source and spring of affection, and within, to lead on and upward, to bring them into the clearer light and liberty of God. He was, therefore, thankful to have lived in a period when criticism could go boldly forward to liberate religion from its ancient trammels, to set them free for that religion of spirit and truth which it was the immortal glory of Jesus Christ to have for ever made clear to the world.

The Rev. W. TUDOR JONES described his passage "From Orthodoxy to Unitarianism." His training, he said, had been in Orthodoxy. As to the Scriptures he was taught that every word was to be believed, whether understood or not, and if science came into conflict with the Bible, that showed the insufficiency of science. Such opinions were still held by more people than they sometimes thought. The Bible was still largely held to be a supernatural book. The effect on himself as he grew up was that in the Church and the church meeting he was taught that that supernatural thing was the essence and criterion of religion, while in philosophy he was taught the processes of growth in the human mind. The two modes of conceiving things remained in two different compartments of the mind, with the disastrous result that he found it impossible to be religious without an artificial pulling up of the feelings and separating them from knowledge, thus cutting his consciousness into two parts. Religion and ordinary life did not mean one and the same thing. He could be religious without living correctly, and could live correctly without being religious. That had a disastrous effect on mind, body, and spirit. It cramped his intellect, blunted his conscience, and paralysed his will. But, meanwhile, the force of knowledge was at work. He studied Green and Edward Caird and Martineau. In the evening in the prayer meetings he prayed that their influence might vanish from his heart; but once they came in it was a difficult thing to turn them out, the probability was that they would turn out what they found in the soul before.

He had been trying to get outside thought and outside himself, but his understanding was winning the day. He was thrown back upon himself, and instead of praying to a God at a distance, as he had done for years, there suddenly dawned upon him the reflection of God in knowledge, feeling, and will, the reflection of God in goodness. He, therefore, reconstructed his theology, not upon the metaphors of Paul or any other, but upon life itself, and Tennyson's words came to him as a flood of light—

Speak to him, thou, for he hears, and spirit with spirit can meet;

Closer is he than breathing, nearer than hands and feet.

A new world opened upon him; life brought its myriad meanings; the thrill and joy of living came back. Beyond dogmas he was thrown back on principles—the principles of Jesus himself; everything in the world became sacred; the equipoise of mind and spirit was felt as never before. That was what the gospel of Unitarianism had done for him. It had saved him in a very real sense. It was the only gospel that offered help for the whole of human nature, without any artificial pruning.

Addresses were then given by the Rev.

V. D. DAVIS on "Our Devotional Literature and the Use we should make of it," and by the Rev. F. W. STANLEY on "The Work of our Church To-day."

MR. OSWALD NETTLEFOLD then spoke of "Missionary Work from a Treasurer's Point of View," and announced that he had that morning received an anonymous cheque for £250 for the Association. They had in the past year lost many valued friends, and they should miss not only their valued personal support, but annual subscriptions amounting to £120. That amount must be made up, and he hoped soon to reach again the high-water mark of 1894 after the appeal of Dr. Brooke Herford, when their income amounted to £2,074, whereas now it stood at £1,792. He was particularly anxious that the younger members of their families should be led to feel their responsibility for the financial support of the Association, and that a large number of new subscribers should be so secured.

On the motion of the Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE, seconded by GENERAL JACOB, President of the Western Union, a vote of thanks to the Chairman was passed, after which a closing hymn was sung, and the Rev. A. N. Blatchford pronounced the Benediction.

THE CONFERENCE.

On Wednesday morning a Conference was held in Oakfield-road Church, Mr. CHARLES W. JONES, President of the Association, in the chair.

Before proceeding to the business of the Conference, the CHAIRMAN said, that as he understood that was the first general meeting of their body in Bristol since the settlement of the Rev. Dr. Warschauer as minister of that church, he desired to offer to him on behalf of the ministers and congregations of the district a cordial welcome.

To this Dr. WARSCHAUER briefly responded, and two papers were then read by the Revs. H. S. Solly, of Bridport, and Dr. W. Griffiths, of Pontypridd, on "Unitarian Missionary Needs, Opportunities, and Methods."

PAPER BY THE REV. H. S. SOLLY, M.A.

Having referred to two conspicuous facts in the present condition of religious life in this country, the growing power of the Sacerdotal party in the Church of England, and the drawing together of the Evangelical Free Churches, Mr. Solly said it was evident that for a good time to come the churches represented in that Conference would have to stand alone. They had not to undertake the reformation of the whole of Christendom. The work of liberalising other denominations was being done more effectually by such men as Dr. Clifford among the Baptists, Dr. Horton among Congregationalists, and Dean Fremantle in the Church of England. The great charge laid upon them was to prove the possibility of a vigorous, healthy Church life, animated by an earnest religious spirit, and based not upon a dogmatic creed, but upon the principle of religious freedom and the Open Trust. Were they doing that? Were they proving, so that none could doubt, that the Open Trust was compatible with firm conviction, with self-sacrificing devotion to the cause of the Kingdom of Heaven, and with that love of God and man which constituted the essence of practical Christianity, so that other Churches might be enabled to realise the strength and beauty of that principle of freedom, and adopt it for themselves without fear of losing their own vital faith? They must regretfully admit that in many places they had not succeeded in manifesting such clear evidence of the truth and spiritual power of their views and principles as would at once authenticate their divine inspiration; and that should lead them, not indeed to doubt the convictions which they knew to be true, but to reconsider some of the methods by which they tried to sustain their Church life. They had not failed. After another 500 years of religious history in England, there would be one thing by which they would be remembered—for having in the latter half of the nineteenth century found a home for James Martineau, for having found for him the ministerial experience and professional appointment which had enabled him to be the man he was, and teach the world those truths which would not be forgotten while the English language lasted. But for their Free Churches and the College, supported by their members, he might have remained an engineer, or adopted some other profession, even the ministerial, but he could never have developed the real self which made him pre-eminently the modern prophet of the living God. It was not failure to have rendered that possible; and what they saw in one conspicuous instance, they could trust in a thousand cases where it was not so evident, where the same principles must be doing the work God required of them, contributing their allotted share towards the "far-off, divine event, to which the whole Creation moves."

On the other hand, it was idle to ignore the fact that there were places where the conditions were so adverse to healthy life and growth in the adoption of their fundamental principles that they could not expect results fit for public exhibition. Their mission work should not be limited to the establishments of lonely outposts, and the maintenance of struggling churches. They desired to reach the "unattached," and to give those who had not heard their word a chance of learning that there was a gospel of Unitarian Christianity; but why should not that be done where there was the best likelihood of building up a strong and healthy church? Other churches knew the value of the repeated and sustained efforts of a seven or eight days' mission in connection with well-established churches; and while the methods might be improved, it would be well to adopt the principle of such "missions." Every church was sure to lose gradually its old supporters; the real test of its life was its power to win new adherents. No church was a Christian church that was content to be a religious club, benefiting its own members only; no minister was a Christian minister unless in some way or other he was a missionary to those from whom he received nothing, to whom he gave, hoping for nothing in return.

How best to utilise the limited resources at their disposal, both of men and money, was a difficult question; but he thought they would do well to concentrate their efforts more on places where the conditions were fairly hopeful. There were large towns where they had fine buildings for chapel and school purposes, but where the congregation was very scanty. In such a town it was absolutely certain that they might build up a strong self-supporting congregation by adopting the appropriate measures, and by persevering till they did succeed. But they would not do the work by simply making a grant of money to the small congregation. They must, themselves, seek out and send there a strong man as the missionary of a strong society, and must support him when there with frequent visits from other men sufficiently strong to be a real help in carrying on mission work. They must absolutely get rid of the idea that all they had to do was to help a weak congregation. It was they, themselves, the Missionary Society, that must go there to do the work, and must invite the help of the congregation on the spot, such as it was, to aid them in doing the work, which they recognised as their own. And they must do it with such tact and Christian charity as not to injure the self-respect of the little group of faithful supporters of the cause, but make them the nucleus out of which an independent church should eventually be developed.

As to missionary methods, it could not be too strongly insisted that the form of worship best suited for those who formed regular congregations was not the best for those who were not accustomed to habitual services. But as they seldom did much out-door preaching, and did not reach many absentees through cottage services, it was absolutely essential that they should get the people into buildings where they had a chance of speaking to them. There were two methods by which they could certainly get the people to come in crowds. The first was by good high-class solo-singing, widely announced, with an intimation that at the services all seats were free. At such services the people should be cordially welcomed and shown into the best seats, and they should have plenty of simple hymns with popular tunes to sing themselves, and the address should be moral and religious, but not doctrinal. The aim was to teach people the worth of worship, not the folly of somebody else's creed. A doctrinal lecture on some other night might be announced, for those who wished it, but they should not try to utilise what should be with some of those present the beginning of a religious habit for purposes merely critical and intellectual. The second method was by lantern services, which might be held in their school-rooms as reverentially as in any cathedral. The experience of the Rev. J. J. Wright and others had shown what splendid mission work might be done by that means; and he suggested that the Association might well provide a stock of first-class slides suitable for such services. They wanted pictures of events in the Bible that were good to preach about, pictures illustrative of the life and words of Christ; and they should have also a good collection of hymns, which could be clearly read on the slides. There would not be sufficient demand for such pictures as they needed to justify the trade in producing them, it must be a missionary enterprise; but £50 so laid out would be of the greatest service to their mission-work. In conclusion, he urged that those ministers and earnest-minded laymen, who did not feel called to go out and hold services in the streets and lanes of their towns and cities, should be all the more intent on observing and adopting the means which were found successful in drawing the people inside their chapels and school-rooms.

PAPER BY THE REV. DR. GRIFFITHS.

Mighty forces were at work, said Dr. Griffiths, preparing the soil where they might sow the seed, forces which lessened year by year the prejudice and antagonism which used to obstruct the work on which their hearts were set. They were speedily passing through the stage of battling for their rights to take part in building the walls of the Holy City; the task which lay before them was that of construction, not of defence. Their message was adapted to the deepest needs of the people, but it must be presented in language they could comprehend, and so as to touch their heart and conscience. It was necessary to enter sympathetically into their inner thoughts and realise the way they looked at the great problems of religion and life. The message they must go forth to proclaim was to help earnest inquirers to a fuller life, to equip them for better service in the present, and inspire them with trust and hope for the great Beyond. The propagandist who made it his special business to attack the doctrines cherished by others did not adopt the best method for securing permanent results. If he were wise he would endeavour to lead those who were losing their hold on the old doctrines along the line of least resistance. Though it behoved them to proclaim their message clearly and openly, it must be with sweet reasonableness.

Their churches existed not merely that the regular attendants might be benefited, but that they may impart what they receive; not merely to be ministered unto, but to minister, and in the truest sense to give their life for others. A heavy responsibility rested on them to provide suitable religious homes for those rendered homeless and cheerless by the crash of systems once a shelter to them. The number of such was increasing year by year. But it was not their task to provide a cave of Adullam, whither anyone who happened to be in love with the last novelty might resort. When a church of their order was organised in a new district, it would not be out of place for the leaders to make it perfectly clear that they cherished no bitterness or ill-will towards other churches, and their purpose was not to oppose or denounce existing churches, but to further the interests of the Kingdom of God. It was worthy of the most careful consideration whether the time had not come to introduce their movement into every large town where no sanctuary of their faith existed. Sunday services conducted by the ministers of the nearest churches might be tried for a month, and if the attendance proved satisfactory and a fair number of earnest and energetic persons showed manifest signs of sympathy, the series might be continued for three, six, or twelve months. If at the close of that period the co-operation and support promised seemed to justify the organisation of a church, the necessary steps for that object should be taken. But if the number was considered too small, a circle might be formed, and weekly meetings be held at the homes of members for conversation on topics relating to the religious life. The local Association, through its missionary or other representative, should keep in touch with such a circle and arrange for an occasional sermon.

Could they not do something to transmute the vast amount of latent power in their churches into active power? Surely it was not presumptuous to urge every church to look beyond its borders, and consider whether it might not help in starting new groups in neighbouring localities, and whether it was not its duty to encourage its minister to preach to them as often as practicable. There seemed to him something wrong about the spiritual life of churches which insisted on having their own minister or some other ordained minister in the pulpit at every service. There were many of the laity, both men and women, fully competent to conduct an occasional service, and who would gladly do so, if the importance of giving their minister an opportunity to preach at some new centre were properly laid before them. Every church might also do useful missionary work if it undertook, once a year at least, to distribute literature from house to house, with a card or leaflet inviting sympathisers to attend. In these and other ways churches could utilise their energies with great benefit to themselves and to the cause in general. But they must have patience and not look for too speedy results from such missionary work.

What, therefore, did they need? Among other things, a stronger spirit of comradeship and fellowship in their ranks. The extreme individuality which too often appeared was a source of weakness. That, no doubt, had a great deal to do with the fact that many who moved to places where Unitarian churches did not exist made little effort to keep in touch with their cause in any practical way. If they were animated by a true spirit of comradeship they would continue their interest and take delight in helping the progress of their community in every way open to them. The spirit of comradeship was essential to solidarity, and solidarity was essential to the truest success of their missionary work. They needed also a more general understanding of what their missionary work was intended to achieve. Sometimes, he was afraid, they emphasised freedom and truth in such a way as to lead people to suppose that "Freedom and Truth" was the motto inscribed on their banner. Those were great and worthy objects, but not the goal of their struggles and aspirations. They must on no account lose sight of the supreme fact that Goodness was the most distinctive note of their message. Freedom and Truth were only means to an end. To help men to become good rather than to teach them truth was their chief aim. And finally, they needed a Pentecost, the flooding of their community with the divine influence which would make them eager to utter their message to the world, which would lead them to dare mighty things in the cause of God and His Christ. Few as they were, they might accomplish great things if they believed in their high destiny as stewards of the gospel of light and love and light, and acted accordingly. Notwithstanding difficulties and discouragements in their work, the voice that came from the scattered band of workers throughout the land was this:—"Be strong and work, for the God of truth and righteousness and love worketh with you, and leadeth you on from one silent victory to another."

An interesting discussion followed, in which the Revs. T. J. Jenkins, F. T. Reed, Mr. C. H. Perkins, the Revs. A. E.

O'Connor and Walter Lloyd, Lady O'Hagan, the Revs. D. J. Williams, J. E. Carpenter, and T. B. Broadrick, Mr. W. J. Cock, and the Rev. W. Tudor Jones took part.

The readers of the papers having responded, the CHAIRMAN made a few closing remarks, and the Conference separated.

THE LUNCHEON.

The Conference was followed by luncheon at the Imperial Hotel, Clifton, presided over by Mr. CHARLES THOMAS, J.P. There was a large attendance. Mr. Thomas expressed the pleasure it gave him to welcome the representatives of the B. and F.U.A. and the ministers and delegates from South Wales and the West of England, and he hoped the sermon and the addresses they had listened to, and the social intercourse they had enjoyed, would encourage and strengthen them all in the work. He referred to the recent visit of Her Majesty the Queen to Bristol, and to the beneficence and glory of her reign, and proposed the health of the Queen. Mr. Colfox, J.P., High Sheriff of Dorset, in an interesting speech, submitted the toast of "Civil and Religious Liberty." He referred to the old struggle against the Test and Corporation Acts, the exclusion of Nonconformists from the Universities, and to the general progress of enlightenment in the present generation. He believed that at heart the bulk of the English people had no love of sacerdotalism, that a pure and noble and intelligent Protestantism was going to win the day sooner or later. He trusted that Willaston School might before long rear some young men of ability and earnestness who would afterwards proceed to Manchester College, Oxford, and help to recruit their ministry. Mr. Lewis N. Williams, of Aberdare, responded, and spoke of the love of civil and religious liberty which characterised the Welsh people. If he could have addressed the meeting in his native tongue, he could have done better justice to the sentiment. General Jacob, the President of the Western Union, proposed, and the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie seconded, a resolution very warmly thanking the congregations at Bristol and Clifton for their generous hospitality. The Rev. A. N. Blatchford, B.A., and the Rev. Dr. Warschauer responded, and expressed the pleasure which the presence of so many representatives had afforded them. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Charles Thomas for presiding brought the proceedings to a close.

To CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c., received from the following:—C. D. B.; B. C. C.; J. M. C. (Calcutta); W. H. D.; J. H.; W. H.; H. H. J.; E. W. L.; H. S. M.; J. T. P.; H. B. S.; J. H. T.; J. M. L. T.

EPP'S COCOA. The most nutritious.
EPP'S COCOA. Grateful and comforting.
EPP'S COCOA. For breakfast and supper.
EPP'S COCOA. With natural flavour only.
EPP'S COCOA. From the finest brands.

A PRAYER IN TIME OF WAR.

O THOU who rulest among the Nations, and even out of darkness bringest light, our hearts turn to Thee in this present darkness of War. Bless Thou our country. Make wise the hearts of rulers and of people to be guided towards Thy will. Rebuke every feeling of pride, anger, or ambition. Especially we pray Thee to bless and strengthen every kind feeling that lights up the strife—every generous impulse, all noble courage and fortitude, every heroism of self-denial. Bless all who suffer; sustain the wounded and the dying; inspire pity and help for all widows and orphans; comfort all mourning and anxious hearts—and out of these struggles and confusions of the world bring Thou the larger meanings of Thy Providence and the final Peace of Right. And so Thy Kingdom come, and Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven!

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Ainsworth.—Special services were held on Sunday on occasion of the annual collections for the B. and F.U.A. At the afternoon service, the Rev. M. R. Scott, resident minister, preached from Mark xvi. 15 a sermon appropriate to the occasion. The collections amounted to £5 7s. 8d., which was very satisfactory.

Atherton.—The sermon in memory of the late Mr. T. H. Hope, preached in Chowbent Chapel on Nov. 12 by the Rev. J. J. Wright, has been printed, together with the order of the special service on that occasion. The sermon contained a warm appreciation of Mr. Hope's life of unwearying service and his remarkable character, and ended with an earnest appeal to the younger members of the congregation to close up the ranks, and to give themselves to the service.

Blackpool.—The Rev. William Binns having retired on account of failing health from the ministry of Bank-street Chapel, after six years of highly valued service, a farewell meeting was held in the schoolroom on Wednesday week, which was well attended. After tea the chair was taken by Mr. J. H. Wood, who spoke in terms of warm appreciation of the services rendered by both Mr. and Mrs. Binns. He was followed by Mr. J. Chew, a trustee of the church, who spoke in the same sense, and on behalf of the congregation presented to Mr. Binns a cigar case and a purse of gold. Mr. Binns acknowledged the gifts in a speech of characteristic humour and genuine feeling. After forty-one years of active ministry he was retiring, he said, and should again take to occasional lay preaching, of which he had had experience before he entered the ministry. His first training had been in a Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-school, and, though widely separated now from the beliefs of that body, he still enjoyed being present at their meetings. He did not intend leaving Blackpool, and should offer himself as a candidate for the Board of Guardians. Mr. Underwood, superintendent of the Sunday-school, then presented Mrs. Binns with a photograph of the scholars, for which they and the teachers had subscribed, and both he and Miss Robinson expressed their deep regret at the retirement of Mrs. Binns, who had been so constant and untiring in her school work. Mrs. Binns, having acknowledged the gift, Mr. Piper, of Derby added some words of warm appreciation of Mr. Binns's services, and also of Blackpool as a winter health resort. The Blackpool Times of Nov. 18 gives a full report of the farewell meeting, and also of a lecture by Mrs. Binns on the previous Monday evening before the Literary and Scientific Society on "Robert Browning." The Council Chamber was crowded, and the lecture was warmly appreciated.

Birmingham : Small Heath.—On Sunday last special musical services were held, selections from Mendelssohn's works being given by the choir; in the morning, from the oratorio St. Paul, and in the evening from the "Hymn of Praise." The collections were in aid of the choir fund. There was a large congregation in the evening.

Boston.—The Lincolnshire Echo of Monday has an appreciative word for our Boston friends. It says:—"The re-opening services have been continued with unabated interest, and last night (Sunday) there was a fairly good congregation present to hear an exposition of the principles of Unitarianism by the Rev. J. Howard, of Tamworth. He took for his subject, 'Three corner stones of our Faith,' which he dealt with in a very plain and concise manner, and riveting the attention of those present from first to last." Mr. Howard, also by invitation, addressed the P.S.A. of men in the afternoon in the public hall.

Chester.—On Nov. 11 a Rummage Sale was held in connection with Matthew Henry's Chapel, the proceeds of which amounted to £10. This has been added to the Restoration Fund, and makes over £23 contributed to the fund since the re-opening of the chapel.—(See advt.)

Congleton.—On Sunday week the Mayor, Mr. Alderman Wm. Worrall, attended the parish church in the morning, and in the evening Cross-street Chapel, of which he is a member. There a sermon was preached by the Rev. J. H. Smith on "Our sufficiency is from God," and at the close of the service a brief meeting was held in the schoolroom, when the Mayor thanked Mr. Smith for his sermon, and the members of the corporation and other officials for their presence at both services.

Crewkerne and Yeovil.—The Rev. S. Sidaway Brettell, M.A., has resigned the charge of Crewkerne and Yeovil, and will terminate his ministry at these places at the end of the year.

Crewe.—Anniversary services were held at the Free Christian Church on Sunday, the preacher being the Rev. C. E. Oliver, B.A., of Denton. The morning service was well attended, and in the evening the church was full. Miss Soonce sang "The Toilers," and "The Better Land," and the choir rendered special music. On Monday evening the annual tea party took place, about 130 people being present, and subsequently a public meeting was held, the chair being taken by Mr. Charles W. Jones, President of the B. and F.U.A., who was supported by Mr. T. H. Gordon (Town Clerk of Dukinfield), Mr. Richard Robinson, Mr. Alderman Briggs (Crewe), Mr. S. Maxen (Crewe), Rev. H. D. Roberts (Chester), and Rev. R. S. Redfern, minister of the church, who in thanking the president for his presence, spoke of the work they had to do as a Church and the progress of liberal thought in other bodies.

Darlington.—The anniversary of the church was held on Sunday, Nov. 12, when the Rev. Frank Walters, of Newcastle, conducted the services, and preached two eloquent and impressive sermons, taking for his subject in the morning, "The Word made Flesh," and for the evening, "What shall the Harvest be." The morning congregation was the largest we have had for some years, and in the evening the church was almost as full as the building would hold. At both services many sympathetic friends from other Nonconformist churches in the town were present. The soir   was held on Monday, the 13th, when upwards of eighty partook of tea, provided by the ladies of the congregation. A public meeting followed, the Rev. Bodell Smith in the chair, when addresses were given by the Rev. Frank Walters, the Rev. A. Harvie, of Gateshead, Mr. Cox Walker, and Miss Lucas, of Harrogate. Music and songs were rendered during the evening by several friends.

Evesham.—On Sunday week the Mayor (Mr. Geoffrey New) attended morning service at All Saints' Church, when an eloquent sermon was preached by the vicar, and a collection was made for the Lord Mayor's Transvaal War Fund. On the same day collections were also made at the Out-street Chapel, and in the evening a special sermon on the war was preached by the Rev. Rudolf Davis.

Gloucester.—The bazaar for the reduction of the debt on Barton street Chapel was successfully opened on Wednesday afternoon by Mr. Charles W. Jones, President of the B. and F.U.A., and on Thursday by Mrs. Ashbee. The first day's receipts amounted to over £40. A fuller report will appear next week.

Guildford.—On Sunday last the claims of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association were eloquently and movingly pleaded by Mr. O. A. Shrubsole, F.G.S., of Reading, who most kindly consented to preach at the church at Guildford upon this special occasion.

Kidderminster.—On Sunday week the Mayor (Mr. Alderman E. Parry) attended the parish church at morning service in state, and in the evening the New Meeting, of which he is a member, when an earnest sermon was preached by the Rev. E. D. Priestley Evans, minister of the chapel. The collection, which was for the Mayor's Fund for the relief of the wives and children of local reservists gone to the war, amounted to £8 15s. 6d. Mr. Priestley Evans has been elected president of the Kidderminster Nonconformist Council for the coming year.

Leigh, Lancashire.—The annual meeting of the Bolton District Sunday-school Union was held here on Saturday last. Tea was served in the schoolroom to about 90 persons. Afterwards a meeting was held in the chapel, presided over by the Rev. R. C. Moore, president. Officers were elected for the ensuing year. Several addresses were delivered, and a good programme of music and song had been provided by Mr. F. Eckersley and his choir. The meeting was a very successful one, and would encourage the teachers in their work.

London: Essex Church.—In continuation of the educational lectures, Mr. Wm. Bruce, L.C.C., gave a lecture on Tuesday last on "The Housing of the Working-classes." The Rev. Frank K. Freeston, who presided, referred to the crying urgency of the housing difficulty, and to Mr. Bruce's labours on the County Council as chairman of the Housing Committee. The lecturer dealt with the whole question very thoroughly, giving the latest statistics of overcrowding, indicating the powers at present possessed by Parliament or the Council to deal with the evil, and describing, with the help of lantern views, the slum removing and replacing already carried out in Bethnal-green and Clare-market. He also supported the proposal for suburban cottages and cheap trains or trams, but opposed that for taxing ground values. Questions were asked and answered at the close, and interesting speeches were made by Mr. Parsons, of the Charity Organisation Society, Mr. Charles Mitchell, Mr. James Beale, and Mr. Rupert Potter. The sixth lecture will be given by Mr. Freeston on Tuesday next on "Oxford and its Colleges."

London: Welsh Services.—There was a very good attendance last Sunday evening at Essex Hall, when Mr. J. Islan Jones, of Jesus College, Oxford, officiated in a very able manner. A collection was made on behalf of the B. and F.U.A.

Manchester: Pendleton.—The church anniversary services were held on Sunday, Nov. 19, the preacher being the Rev. John McDowell, of Leeds, who was the first minister of the Pendleton congregation, holding his pastorate for seventeen years. He has now accepted the position of minister to the Parker Memorial Church, Boston, U.S.A., and will sail for America in December. Mr. McDowell's visit to Pendleton was thus a re-union and a farewell. There was a large attendance both morning and evening, and the services were inspiring and helpful. Many friends from a distance were present to testify to their personal attachment to Mr. McDowell, and to bid him farewell and god-speed in his new home. The collections amounted to £15, this being a much larger sum than has been collected for a considerable number of years.

Moneyrea.—On Tuesday evening the Rev. J. Rentoul, Presbyterian minister of Dromore, delivered a highly appreciated lecture on "Father Mathew" before the United Temperance Guild. The Rev. R. Lyttle occupied the chair. Mr. James Orr, Mrs. D. McCullough, and Mr. T. S. White also spoke. The proceedings closed with singing and prayer.

Train yourself to find the good in what seems evil, to make of disaster an opportunity for your courage, to master suffering by patience, to learn from sorrow sympathy.
—G. S. Merriam.

RE-ENGAGEMENT desired as HOUSEKEEPER or similar post. Widow, not young; 3 years with Gentleman.—Mrs. MAYNARD, The Oaks, Wythenshawe-road, Sale, Cheshire.

HOUSEKEEPER.—Wanted, a kind, cheerful person (middle-aged) as HOUSEKEEPER.—Address, care of Rev. JOHN ELLIS, Piggah House, Broomhill, Sheffield.

A LADY seeks an engagement as LIBRARIAN or SECRETARY; understands the Remington typewriter.—Address, X. Y. Z.; INQUIRER Office, Essex-street, Strand.

COMPANIONSHIP TO LADY.—WANTED, by young lady; 25; music; reads well; some hospital practice. Apply—Rev. W. JELLIE, Ipswich.

AS COMPANION OR LADY HOUSEKEEPER.—Lady seeks engagement as above. End of January. Town or country. Good references.—E. P., 55, Highbury New Park, N.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, November 26.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Bermondsey, Fort-road, Upper Grange-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. HAROLD RYLETT.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. STRONGE.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS.
Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. WOODS PERRIS.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOM, B.A.
Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Revs. BROOKE HERFORD, D.D., and EDGAR DAPLYN. Minister's Class after Morning Service.
Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. PIKE.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. DAWES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D.
Kentish Town, Free Christian Church, Clarence-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. A. FARQUHARSON.
Morning, "Our Dead." Evening, "Happiness."
Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. D. AMOS.
Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. C. POPE.
Little Portland-street Chapel, near Oxford-circus, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Mr. HERBERT RIX.
Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. CADMAN. Evening, "The Authority of Jesus."
Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M., Mr. J. BREDALL, and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. CARTER. Musical Services.
Plumstead, Common road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.
Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., and 3 P.M., Service for Children, Rev. S. FARRINGTON.
Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M., Mr. LUCKING TAYNER, and 7 P.M., Mr. T. ELLIOT, "What Unitarians believe about the Bible."
Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.
Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
Sydenham Public Hall, Kirkdale, Sydenham, 7 P.M., Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE, M.L.S.B., "The Message of Unitarians to the Present Age."
Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. MUMMEY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. F. W. STANLEY.
BEDFORD, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. ROWLAND HILL.
BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
BLACKPOOL, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
BLACKPOOL, Unitarian Lay Church, Masonic Hall, Waterloo-road, South Shore, 6.30 P.M.
BOOTLE, Free Church, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. MORLEY MILLS.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. COX.
BRIGHTON, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road, North-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. T. A. GORTON.
BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. GEORGE STREET.
CANTERBURY, Blackfriars, 11 A.M.
DEAL and WALMER Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. SHAKESPEARE.
DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 1 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. BURROWS.
EASTBOURNE, Lismore-road, Terminus-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. ST. CLAIR.
GUILDFORD, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. S. LANG BUCKLAND.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. MARTEN.
LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.
LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. S. HICKS, B.A.
LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M., Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. COBDEN SMITH.
LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. J. JUPE.
LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton Park, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. KLEIN. Evening, "Unitarian Christianity: its Spiritual Ideals in the Worship of God, and its Practical Aims in the Service of Humanity."
MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. FORREST.
MANCHESTER, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
MARGATE, Forester's Hall (Side Entrance), Union-crescent, 11 A.M.
MOSELEY and BALSALL HEATH INSTITUTE: OUR FATHER'S CHURCH, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. J. SNEATH.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. J. E. CARPENTER, M.A.
PORTSMOUTH, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. THOMAS BOND.
PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. COSENS PRIOR.
RAMSGATE, Assembly Rooms, High-street, 6.30 P.M.
READING, Unitarian Free Church, London-road, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, B.A.
SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. WELBELOVED.
SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. R. C. DENDY. Stables in the grounds.
TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Mr. J. L. MACBETH BAIN.
YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. RAWLINGS, M.A.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant Unitarian Church, Hout-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY, STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN-SQUARE, S.W.—Nov. 26th, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "The Economic Relations between Men and Women as a Factor in Ethical Evolution."

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY, SOUTH-PLACE, FINSBURY.—Nov. 26th, at 11.15, W. S. GODFREY, "Persistent Superstition: The Bible."

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. W. STODDART, B.A., is at LIBERTY to take occasional Sunday duty.—30, West Bank, Stamford-hill, London, N.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D. DAVIS, Fairfield High School, Liverpool.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK

SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.
INVESTED FUNDS, £10,000,000
Number of Accounts, 85,094.

TWO AND A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT ACCOUNTS on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold for Customers.

SAVINGS' DEPARTMENT.

SMALL DEPOSITS received and INTEREST allowed MONTHLY on each completed £1.

The BIRKBECK ALMANAC, with full particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

CAN any Lady recommend a thoroughly nice Girl suitable for HOUSE-PARLOUR-MAID, with some knowledge of house-work.—Apply "South Wales," care of INQUIRER, 8, Essex-street, Strand, London.

Forest Gate Unitarian Church.

A SALE OF WORK

will be held on WEDNESDAY and THURSDAY,
DECEMBER 13th and 14th,
in aid of the CHURCH FUNDS.

A variety of Useful Articles, with some choice
Fancy Goods, Needlework, Carvings, &c., will be offered. Contributions are earnestly invited, and may be sent to Mrs. PERRIS, 180, Upton-lane, or
Mrs. JOSE, 15, Osborne-road (Forest Gate).

Mrs. ALFRED LAWRENCE will open the Sale on the First Day, at 3 o'clock.

Schools, etc.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE for GIRLS, Bristol Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

PRINCIPAL—MISS BAILY.
HEADMISTRESS—MISS ELEANOR MOSS, B.A. Hons.

A limited number of Boarders taken at residence of Principal.

The College, which is opposite the residence, has accommodation for 120 pupils. Lawn tennis,
gymnasium, asphalt playground.

The Curriculum is based on the Cambridge Examination regulations, and resident pupils have the advantage of Public School life combined with home comforts.

Application to Secretary, Miss S. AWDRY.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, SOUTH MARINE TERRACE, ABERYSTWITH.

PRINCIPAL ... Mrs. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public
Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium.
Swedish drill.

HINDHEAD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

PRINCIPALS—Miss J. F. GRUNER (Certif. Student of Girton College), Moorcroft, Hindhead,
Surrey.

Miss MACRAE MOIR (Cambridge Higher
Local), Lingholt, Hindhead, Surrey.

The aim of the School is to combine the advantages of a good Boarding School with a thorough Education and healthy outdoor life. Girls may be prepared for College-entrance and other examinations.

The district of Hindhead is one of the healthiest parts of England, and much recommended by doctors for its bracing air and gravel soil.

Miss MOIR receives ten boarders in a thoroughly
well-built modern house, with southern aspect.
Great attention is paid to healthful conditions of life. References allowed to parents of present and past pupils.

Terms for Board and Education on application
to the Principals.

THE WARREN, KNUITSFORD.

PRINCIPAL :
Mrs. W. CARRINGTON WHITELEGGE.

Excellent individual TUITION and Home Care
for the daughters of cultivated parents who would appreciate unusual advantages for Music and Languages.

HOME FOR HEALTH CULTURE, THE FIRS, BROMYARD, HEREFORDSHIRE

This Home provides a course of Systematic Daily Exercise, combined with regular outdoor life and occupation, for Ladies and Children who are not in normal health. The exercises are given in a Gymnasium fitted with Swedish apparatus, and consist of Ling's Swedish Movements. Special treatment is given for Spinal Curvature, Anæmia, Hysteria, Indigestion, Neuralgia, &c.

For further particulars, apply to The Principal
Miss JESSIE BAKER (trained by Mme. Bergmon, Osterberg).

BOOKLETS FOR CHRISTMAS.

"DAILY MEDITATIONS" & "NIGHT UNTO NIGHT."

By W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

PRICE ONE SHILLING (leather, gilt).

"Night unto Night" can also be had in cloth binding, red edges, price Sixpence.

ESSEX HALL, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, W.C.

MATTHEW HENRY'S CHAPEL, CHESTER.

SUPPLEMENTARY STATEMENT.

During the progress of the work it was found that dry-rot had got into the floors of the Vestry
and the Gallery, involving their entire renewal.
Other matters were also discovered that required reconstruction for the safety and soundness of the Building. These have added £100 to £150 to the original estimates. It was deemed better to have all done at once, and so completely restore the old chapel that further repairs shall not be needed for many years. Instead of £750, as originally estimated, the restorations will cost about £900 (with extras and architect's commission). Rather over £600 have already been generously promised; and the Committee confidently appeal to the known liberality of Unitarian and other friends at home and in America, for the further sum required to complete the Restoration of Matthew Henry's venerable and historic chapel, in every way worthy of its 200th anniversary in 1900.

	£	s.	d.
Amount already acknowledged...	600	13	0
Rummage Sale	10	0	0
Rd. Robinson, Esq., Birkenhead ...	2	2	0

Donations sent to the Rev. H. D. ROBERTS,
Brook Lodge, or Mr. WM. ORRETT, 15, Foregatestreet, Chester, will be duly and gratefully acknowledged.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.

Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21,
Mincing-lane, E.C.

Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A.,
7, Pall Mall, S.W.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.

Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.

STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, 151, Brixton-road, S.W.,

and Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent,
withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made
Monthly repayment, including principal, premium
and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years,
13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.;
10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus
free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms
moderate.—Mrs. ROBERT TURNER, 94, Grosvenor-
road, S.W.

BOARD and RESIDENCE, South of England. Healthy neighbourhood. Home
comforts. Seven miles from Brighton, near South
Downs. Station Hassocks (on main line L.B.S.C.).—
Miss ROWLAND, Gothic House, Hurstpierpoint.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West
Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT.
Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table.
Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade.
Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and
Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable
private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea;
sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address,
Miss CHALDECOTT, Stirling House, Manor-road.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59,
Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and
RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated.
Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL,

Proprietor, FREDERIC SMITH.

Recently enlarged, remodelled and re-furnished,
now affording

ACCOMMODATION FOR ABOUT 250 GUESTS.

The best patronised TEMPERANCE HOTEL in London. Highly commended by leading
Unitarian Ministers.

Spacious Coffee, Reading, and Drawing Rooms.
Electric Light. Lift.

Apartments, 1/6 to 2/6. Breakfast, 1/3 to 2/-.
Service, 9d.

77 & 101,

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON, W.C.

Telegrams: "QUIETUDE, LONDON."

FREDK. LONG & SON, AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS 4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

ZEBRA CRATE POLISH.

ST. NICHOLAS OLD MEETING,
IPSWICH.

APPEAL FOR £1,500.

The above Unitarian Chapel will be 200 years old in 1900. It is, therefore, one of the few remaining original Nonconformist places of worship. It stands, externally and internally, almost as it was when built, but now needs extensive and immediate repairs.

It is felt that this is the best opportunity, not only of making these structural repairs, but also of fitting it with some of the comfort and requirements which are essential in these days to attract and keep fresh members.

The congregation averages 50 in the morning and 100 in the evening; and is steadily increasing in a fast developing industrial town.

It is proposed to celebrate the Bi-centenary by (1) Putting the building in a thorough state of repair; (2) making the seating accommodation comfortable; (3) supplying heating apparatus; (4) repairing the organ.

The estimated cost is £1,500; and an earnest appeal is here made to sympathisers throughout the country to co-operate in this work of preserving in a state of usefulness, and in its historic character, one of the oldest monuments of our spiritual descent.

WILLIAM JELLIE, Minister.
G. J. NOTCUTT, Chairman.

Donations or promises may be sent to F. H. SMITH, Hon. Sec., 32, Warwick-road; ROBERT HAMBLIN, Hon. Treas., 19, Gippeswyk-road; or W. J. SCOPES, Queen-street, Ipswich.

This appeal has the support of the B. and F.U.A., and they have promised to contribute.

From Trustees and Subscribers:—

FIRST LIST.		£	s.	d.
Mr. Robert Pearce	...	100	0	0
Mr. G. J. Notcutt	...	50	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. T. Grosvenor Lee	...	50	0	0
Mrs. Pearce	...	30	0	0
Mrs. Henry Rutt	...	25	0	0
Mr. R. Hamblin	...	10	0	0
Mr. Arthur Pearce	...	10	0	0
Miss Rachel L. Notcutt	...	5	0	0
Mr. J. Glyde	...	5	0	0
Mr. R. Hamblin, junr.	...	5	0	0
Mr. G. Hines, J.P.	...	5	0	0
Mr. F. H. Palmer	...	5	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. F. Robinson	...	5	0	0
Mr. W. J. Scopes	...	5	0	0
Mr. W. R. Symonds	...	5	0	0
Mr. F. H. Smith	...	5	0	0
Mr. P. Wilkinson, B.A., B.Sc.	...	5	0	0
Mr. F. Woolnough	...	5	0	0
Mr. S. J. Hutley	...	3	3	0
Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard	...	3	3	0
Mrs. S. A. Notcutt	...	2	2	0
Miss Ellen Webster	...	2	0	0
Mrs. F. Woolnough	...	2	0	0
Mr. Herbert Cornish	...	1	1	0
Mr. C. J. Palmer	...	1	1	0
Mrs. F. Cornish	...	1	1	0
Mrs. Symonds	...	1	1	0
Mrs. F. H. Smith	...	1	1	0
Mr. A. G. Scopes	...	1	1	0
Rev. William Jellie	...	1	1	0
Mrs. Calver	...	1	0	0
Mrs. P. Wilkinson	...	1	0	0
Miss Woolnough	...	1	0	0
Mrs. Miall	...	1	0	0
Mr. H. Elsom	...	1	0	0
Mr. J. Pearce Harvey	...	0	10	0
Mrs. Reeve	...	0	10	0
Mrs. Scott	...	0	10	0
Miss Patrick	...	0	10	0
Mr. W. T. Bovill	...	0	10	0
Mr. E. Brookes	...	0	10	0
Mr. H. Norton	...	0	10	0
Mr. Pollard	...	0	10	0
Mr. S. J. Monser	...	0	5	0
Mr. W. Cooper	...	0	3	0
Mr. M. J. Parsons	...	0	3	0
Master G. Wilkinson	...	0	2	6
		359	9	0

RESPONSE TO APPEAL.—FIRST LIST.

President of the B. and F.U.A.	...	10	0	0
Mr. Francis Taylor, J.P., Diss.	...	10	0	0
Lady E. J. D. Lawrence, London	...	5	0	0
Mrs. L. M. Aspland, do.	...	2	2	0
Miss S. S. Dowson, Gledeston	...	2	0	0
Mr. J. J. Robinson, Arundel	...	1	1	0
Mr. Herbert Thomas, Bristol	...	1	1	0
Mrs. McCosh Clark	...	1	1	0
Mr. J. Youngman, Wickham Market	...	1	1	0
Mr. J. A. Gotch, Kettering	...	1	0	0
Sir R. K. Wilson, Bart., Richmond	...	0	10	0
Mrs. Temple, Streatham	...	0	5	0

[Total ...£394 10 0

JUST PUBLISHED.

A New and Important Work for all Unitarians to Read.

Cr. 8vo, pp. 236, cloth, 2s. 6d. net, by post 2s. 10d.

THE STORY OF Protestant Dissent and English Unitarianism.

BY

WALTER LLOYD.

CONTENTS:— Introduction. II. The Presbyterians. III. Richard Baxter. IV. The Ejection, 1662. V. The Protestant Dissenters, 1689. VI. The Meeting-Houses. VII. Non-Subscription. VIII. The "Christians Only." IX. The Unitarians. X. John Biddle. XI. Lindsey, Priestley and Belsham. XII. The Unitarian Societies. XIII. The Trinitarian Controversy. XIV. Undogmatic Unitarianism. XV. Conclusion.

Note.—Anyone sending Mr. Philip Green, not later than Dec. 22nd, a Postal Order for 2s. 6d., will receive a copy of this new book post free.

London: PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

THE MILL HILL PULPIT.

A Monthly Sermon by

Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., Leeds.

November Number.—"THE NOVEMBER METEORS."

Price 1d. Annual subscription, 1s. 6d. post free.

Apply, Essex Hall, or CHAS. STAINER, 82, Ravenswood-terrace, Hyde Park, Leeds.

THE ETHICAL WORLD.

EDITED BY DR. STANTON COIT and
J. A. HOBSON, M.A.

Articles on Important Social Questions, Education &c. from a purely ethical standpoint
Children's Page.

TWOPENCE WEEKLY.

Office: 17, Johnson's-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

New and Revised Edition of

Prayers for the Use of Christian Families

By JOHN SCOTT PORTER.

Limp cloth, 6d.; boards, 9d.

May be obtained at Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, London, and at the Depository, 35, Rosemary-street, Belfast.

Also New and Revised Edition of

THE CHILD'S GUIDE TO CHRIST

(A Scripture Catechism for Young People).

6d. per dozen, from 35, Rosemary-street, Belfast.

The fact that a New Edition of each of the above works has been called for speaks for itself.

HOPE-STREET CHURCH, LIVERPOOL.

1849.—1899.

(Minister, The Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.)

JUBILEE CELEBRATION.

The BAZAAR of the SEASON, "YE OLDE ENGLISH VILLAGE," DECEMBER 14TH, 15TH, and 16TH, 1899, in the COLLEGE OF MUSIC, 98, UPPER PARLIAMENT-STREET, to provide Funds for the Maintenance of the Fabric of the beautiful Church erected during the Ministry of Dr. Martineau, and the furnishing of the new Church Hall, the Jubilee Gift of W. B. Bowring, Esq., J.P.

The BAZAAR will be opened at 2.30 P.M. each day. On the 14th Dec. by Sir JOHN T. BRUNNER, Bart., M.P.; on the 15th Dec. by Mrs. W. B. BOWRING; and on the 16th Dec. by the Hon. Mrs. DE BEAUMONT KLEIN.

Mrs. HUMPHRY WARD, the Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., JOSEPH COVENTRY, Esq., and others, will take part in the proceedings.

Mr. and Mrs. HAROLD COVENTRY LANGDALE, Hunter's-late, Wavertree, Liverpool (Secretaries).

SCOTCH TWEEDS and SERGES at Mill Prices, Ladies' or Gents'; best quality only. Patterns post free; orders carriage paid.—GEO. McLEOD & SONS, Hawick, N.B.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

NOW READY FOR THE WINTER SEASON.

Two Sets of LANTERN SLIDES

Illustrating Dr. BROOKE HERFORD'S Book,

"THE STORY OF RELIGION IN ENGLAND."

Set I. Chapters I.—XVI.—49 slides, illustrates "From the Far Off Past until the Beginning of the Reformation."

Set II. Chapters XVII.—XXIX.—45 slides, illustrates "Reformation Times."

The terms and conditions of the Loan of the Slides can be ascertained from the "BOOKLET OF READINGS" prepared for use with each set. Price Threepence each, by post 3½d.

A List of other Slides on Loan, including a Selection of well-known HYMNS, can be had post free on application.

London: THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

JESS: BITS OF WAYSIDE GOSPEL. By JENKIN LLOYD JONES, of Chicago. 320 pp. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The story giving the title to the volume is an account of the life and death of a horse once owned by the Author. These sermon-talks are all on out-of-door subjects, the love of Nature, her influence over man's spiritual life, and other similar themes.

THE CHOIR INVISIBLE, and other Sermons. By JOHN WHITE CHADWICK. 228 pp. Crown 8vo, 4s. net, by post 4s. 4d.

READY 1st DECEMBER.

POCKET ALMANAC FOR 1900.

Containing a List of Ministers and Churches, Diary for each Week and Month, Cash Account Pages, &c. Tuck, gilt edges, 1s. net, by post 1s. 1d.

London: PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-st., Strand, W.C.

Will make a SUITABLE CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

NOW READY.

A NIGHT WITH JESUS.

A DREAM STORY.

By J. L. HAIGH.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

(Special terms to all engaged in Domestic Mission Work).

LIVERPOOL BOOKSELLERS' COMPANY, LIMITED, 70, Lord-street, Liverpool.

THE NEW KINGDOM.

AN

ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY.

ONE PENNY. Post Free, 1s. 6d. per Annum.

Contents for DECEMBER:

A Christmas Greeting (Poem), by E. Ceredig Jones, M.A.

Three Faces. A Parable.

A List of Musical Plays, Operettas, &c., for School Entertainments.

In the Field:—Ministerial: Accrington, Boston, B. and F. Unitarian Association, Chorlton, Glossop, Leicester, London, Manchester, N.E. Lancashire S.S. Union, Richmond, Wanted.

Our Church at Urnston (illustrated).

A Visit to Cairo: The Pyramids. Wm. Harrison.

End of Year: Renewal of Subscriptions.

Book Notice: "Our Faith."

Uncle Will's Sunbeam Circle.

To be had from the Publishers, Messrs. WM. HOUGH AND SONS, Manchester; RAWSON AND CO., 16, New Brown-street, Manchester; ESSEX HALL, London; and all Newsagents.

Printed by WOODFALL & KINDER, 70 to 76, Long Acre, W.C. and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. City Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 29 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD Deansgate.—Saturday, November 25, 1899.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 2997.
NEW SERIES, No. 101.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1899.

[ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	769
ARTICLES :—
A Correction	770
"Back to Jesus"	771
An Object Lesson	774
The Inward Life	775
A Social Gospel	779
LITERATURE :—
Dr. Hastings' Dictionary of the Bible	772
The Moral Order of the World	773
Publications Received	774
CORRESPONDENCE :—
"Back to Jesus"	774
The Question of Proselytism	774
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN	775
LEADER :—
Christian Fellowship	776
THE PULPIT :—
The Election of Truth	777
MEETINGS :—
Scottish Sunday School Conference	779
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES	779
ADVERTISEMENTS	781

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

CHRISTMAS appeals from many sides are beginning to pour in, and while the special claims of the Transvaal War Fund will doubtless have been felt by many of our readers, we beg that the poor connected with our Domestic Missions may not be forgotten, or be made to suffer because of that other urgent need. We publish to-day several appeals from the Missions, and confidently ask for a generous response that shall strengthen the beneficent activity of men whose lives are faithfully spent among the poor.

News has been received by friends in this country of the death on the 25th ult. at Leicester, Mass., of the Rev. Samuel May, in his ninetyeth year. Mr. May was a cousin of Samuel Joseph May (1797-1871) and, like his elder relative, a staunch abolitionist, though a comparatively young man during the "Martyr Age." It will be remembered that it was Samuel J. May who, in 1834, made the famous appeal to Dr. Channing, after which his first book on slavery was published.

A BAZAAR was recently held in Manchester to raise £15,000 for the "Gentlewomen's Employment Association and Loan Training Fund for Girls." In this effort the late Miss Anna Swanwick took a warm interest, and she contributed two of her poems, hitherto only printed for private circulation, to a volume prepared by her cousin, Mrs. Thomas Worthington, for sale at the bazaar. Writing on the subject she said: "Such a loan fund as you suggest for the benefit of girls left destitute, without means to secure the training which would enable them to support themselves, would, in my judgment, be most valuable." The volume, which is entitled "A Medley," contains an interesting account of the Gentlewomen's Employment Association, which was established in 1891, and has proved of eminent service. There is a striking frontispiece and also a full-page drawing by Mr. Edmund New, from a print, of the old Manchester Market Place. And among the contributions, in addition to Miss Swanwick's two poems, will be found a most amusing dialogue, "The Charity Bazaar," by the late R. L. Stevenson; part of a lecture on "Poetry and Science," by Professor W. Knight; and contributions by Canon Rawnsley, Judge Parry, Hamilton Aidé, Mrs. Archibald Little, and others. From some verses, "In Memoriam: Bishop Fraser," we are glad to quote the following:—

'Mid "dusky lane and wrangling mart"
He heaved no recreant sigh!
He only felt the mighty heart
Of our humanity.

For him, dark streets and alleys grey
Were filled with sacred light—
The pillar of the cloud by day,
And of the fire by night.

Rare flowers are laid upon his grave:
Another wreath is there—
The tribute of his people's love,
The murmur of their prayer.

More than 500 copies of the book were sold at the bazaar, but it is still to be had, and is well worth having, apart from the excellent object for which it is sold. To any who may desire a pleasant memento of Miss Swanwick, or be willing to help the Loan Training Fund, Mrs. Thomas Worthington will be glad to send the remaining copies at the reduced price of 2s. 6d. a copy, with 3d. for postage. Applications should be made at once to Broomfield, Alderley Edge, near Manchester.

ATTENTION is called to the announcement in our advertisement columns of the performance of A Midsummer Night's Dream for the London Bazaar Funds. Particulars of the cast will be announced later. The Entertainments Committee (whose chairman, Mr. Herbert Lawford, is one of the organisers of this performance) have arranged for the tickets for all reserved seats to be issued at first unnumbered. Purchasers of tickets should immediately present them at Essex Hall, where a plan of the theatre can be seen, and seats chosen and the numbers marked on the tickets. Anyone unable to attend personally at Essex Hall can send their tickets to Mr. H. Lawford, 28, Nightingale-lane, Balham, S.W., who will allot the best seats obtainable in strict priority of application, and return the tickets in due course. The Committee hope by this means to avoid any complaints of allotting the seats unfairly. The moral of this tale is obviously "First come, first served," but without following another proverb and allocating the laggards to the superintendent of the nether regions, it is possible that those who leave it till too late (as at the performance of Comus) may find all the tickets sold; or, at least, that early birds have snapped up the best places.

THE Rev. Priestley Prime is about to publish an essay, written at the request of the Exeter Assembly of Divines, on the records of that Assembly, formerly known as "The United Brethren of Devon and Cornwall," and formed in 1691. The essay also deals with the proceedings of an earlier Assembly, founded in 1655, which lasted only for a few years in the Commonwealth time. As the cost of publication is not wholly covered, Mr. Prime will be glad to forward copies to anyone interested in the subject, for 1s. 6d. a copy, post free. His address in Hooley Range, Heaton Moor, Stockport.

THE Sermon by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong, issued as a Temperance appeal by the Essex Hall Temperance Association, may be had from the Secretaries for distribution at the rate of 1s. 6d. for 50, or 2s. 6d. for 100. It contains the following passages:—I appeal to you once more to give this topic your careful study in the court of conscience and humanity. Read, mark, learn and inwardly digest those opening chapters of "The Temperance Problem and Social Reform," by Joseph Rowntree and Arthur Sherwell, which, in words so calm, so careful, so restrained, so far removed from all suggestion of fanaticism, state the tremendous problem. If you cannot away with the fanatics, read the statisticians. Under the cold array of figures there is a burning eloquence of appeal derived from no rhetoric but fact.

And then, again, you may not think that the legal remedies advocated by this group or by that are the true remedies. You may not think total prohibition the best thing to work for, or local option, or direct veto, or municipal public-houses, or sterner regulation of the trade, or prohibition of the sale to children. All these treatments of the evil may seem to you fallacious; but the evil is there, and we want it treated. What are you going to do?

If you do not approve of total abstinence, spend no time or energy in girding at the teetotallers, but make up your mind how the individual can best bring his influence to bear; and then bring yours. If you do not approve of this or that proposal for legislation, spend no time or energy in inveighing against those who do approve, but think out a better way yourself, and work at that. We teetallers and direct vetoists are constantly being told, "Oh! that is not what you ought to do; you ought to do the other." No, good critic, it is not we, but you, who ought to do that other. We are doing what we believe in to the best of our poor judgment, and we can do naught else. It is for us to do what we believe in—for you to do what you believe in. If you have a better cue for this stupendous evil, which is gnawing the vitals of the nation, for God's sake do not sit by the way-side scolding us, but get to work yourselves, and bear a hand against the common foe.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.—A series of nearly 150 lantern slides has been prepared, illustrating the holiday home movement of the above Association as carried out at Great Hucklow last year, and the general features of the beautiful Derbyshire country in which the Home was opened. The Rev. Charles Peach has prepared a lecture to accompany the slides, and during the past fortnight he has delivered it to large audiences at Brook-street, Manchester, Upper Chapel, and Upperthorpe, Sheffield, Rotherham, and Chesterfield. The views were on each occasion very much admired, and great interest was shown in this new undertaking, substantial collections being taken after each lecture for the funds of the new Home. Arrangements can be made with Mr. D. A. Little, Bowdon, for Mr. Peach to visit any school with the lecture on condition that a collection be taken on behalf of the building fund of the new Home.

THE LATE MR. BENJAMIN HEAPE.—At a meeting of the executive committee of the Memorial Hall, Manchester, held on the 24th ult., it was resolved:—"That the members of the executive committee of the Memorial Hall, on their own part and that of all their co-trustees, sorrowfully place on their minutes an expression of sincere regret at the decease, on Sept. 16, of their old and esteemed colleague, Mr. Benjamin Heape. A trustee from the foundation of the Hall in 1864, he ever took a deep interest in its usefulness and welfare. The charm of his society, and his unflinching attendance at their meetings, endeared him to all his co-trustees, who derived great advantages from his sound judgment and invaluable co-operation. That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Mrs. Heape, with the sincere condolences of the trustees with herself and her family."

A SINGLE sin, however apparently trifling, however hidden in some obscure corner of our consciousness—a sin we do not intend to renounce—is enough to render real prayer impracticable.—Frances Power Cobbe.

It is commonly the best men are the most candid and gentle, and they are most apt to blame others who deserve worse themselves; the sharpest tongues and foulest lives do usually go together; they who are the strictest judges of their own, are the fairest interpreters of other men's actions; they who will least pardon others do most excuse themselves; they who are strangely acute in descrying other men's faults are stark blind in discerning their own.—Isaac Barrow.

A CORRECTION.

SIR,—The following is the substance of correspondence which has recently passed between the writer of these words and the Editor of the Nineteenth Century. The subject of it will sufficiently appear in the first of the two letters.

(I.)

To the Editor of the Nineteenth Century.

... I venture to ask you to do me the favour of allowing me to offer a few words of protest re an expression which occurs in the October number of the Review and which has given offence to many of your readers. It has caused some of us no small surprise to meet with such an expression in your famous periodical. It must have slipped into your pages without your knowledge, it is so entirely contrary to the fair and liberal spirit which you have shown on some former occasions, even towards such a heretic as myself.

I allude to the words in which Mr. G. W. E. Russell, sharply attacking some of the bishops, speaks of them as fraternising "with a Socinian blasphemer." These latter words, by direct implication, not only contain a considerable amount of error, but are abusive and even calumnious in a degree which I cannot believe that Mr. Russell really intended. I speak with some reason, and even with indignation, on the point; because I was myself, for some years, associated in a certain work, which I need not further name, with several of the most widely-known bishops. Whether Mr. Russell had me in his mind in writing as he has done, I do not know. If not, there are other more prominent persons stigmatised sometimes as Socinians, and not unknown in London and throughout the country, to whom his words might be applied, and if it were one or other of these gentlemen that he tacitly refers to, I should like to inform him that, although they are members of churches which are both free and liberal, and commonly called Unitarian, these gentlemen are neither Socinians nor blasphemers. The modern Unitarian is, so far as I am aware, in no case a Socinian. Indeed, I venture to remind Mr. Russell that the nearest approach to that evil-sounding designation really belongs to Anglicans and Evangelicals. This I say, recalling one most important practice of theirs—I mean their worship of Christ. This is unknown among the Unitarians, who confine their religious worship to the Great Father alone, believing that only such worship is authorised by the New Testament.

But, leaving this point, let me assure Mr. Russell that neither the old Socinians nor the modern Unitarians were or are blasphemers. On the contrary, the former were earnest and God-fearing men, who at times suffered persecution for their religion's sake, and who are well known to those acquainted with their theology for their learning and the vigour of their writings in its exposition. They little deserve the ugly interpretation which, in the discreditable ignorance of so many religionists, has been fastened upon their name, and still clings to it, and which has been now so unhappily revived by one who ought to have known better. Hence, I would repeat, the phrase "Socinian blasphemer" conveys a two-fold error. The modern Unitarians are not Socinians; nor were the men who in former times bore that name blasphemers, but very much the reverse. It is right, therefore, I submit, that Mr. Russell should be informed to this effect, as well as your readers, if any there be, who are not aware of it; and that he and they should for the future refrain from the vituperative use of the unwarranted epithet of which I speak.

To the foregoing, the Editor of the Nineteenth Century replied that he did not wish to encourage letters to the Review, after the manner of the newspapers; but he would consult Mr. Russell and the writer should hear again. This he did, with the result that neither he nor Mr. Russell thought the correction needed, and of course declining to admit it. Mr. Russell alleged that he had intended no personal reference in using the offensive words—that is, they were vague and general. (But query, does not this make the matter worse, for the words might now be more widely applied at will, by any ignorant or narrow-minded reader?) Mr. Knowles now hoped I was "quite satisfied" with the explanation. In reply to this I could only write:—

(II.)

... I am sorry to have your letter, and not at all "satisfied," either with it or with Mr. Russell's. Clearly he is not justified in flinging at any one, named or unnamed, phrases which are insulting and untrue. It is foolish to reply that he had no one in particular in view in writing those ugly words. If so, why did he write them? There are plenty of ignorant and bigoted people who will be glad to make a personal application of them; and some of these are not unknown to the Editor of the Nineteenth Century. I will not mention names.

You, I suppose, are not unwilling to be a particeps criminis in this case, to the great surprise of many readers. For you have not only published the offensive words—which may be taken to reflect on living and well-known men—but you decline to admit a correction of them in the form of a short letter. This mode of communication is by no means unexampled in the last page or two of the Review. Of this I have given you an undeniable instance. But the writer in that case was a big man, and I suppose a small one like myself must not expect any such indulgence. Yet, I should have thought a sense of justice might have had some weight.

I am greatly surprised.

G. VANCE SMITH.

In a mist the heights can for the most part see each other; but the valleys cannot.—Guesses at Truth.

THE love of reading is a great resource, but not the very avenue of wisdom. Live your best; try to shun all extravagance, extravagant wishes as well as expenditure. Try to believe that place does not make so much difference as whether we are busy in the place.—William Smith.

EPPS'S	COCOA.	The most nutritious.
EPPS'S	COCOA.	Grateful and comforting.
EPPS'S	COCOA	For breakfast and supper.
EPPS'S	COCOA.	With natural flavour only.
EPPS'S	COCOA.	From the finest brands.

"BACK TO JESUS."

THE able and lucid paper by Mr. Bennett on some aspects of Mr. Armstrong's recent book deals with a subject of such importance that there need be little hesitation in sending another contribution from one who also finds it quite impossible to think along Mr. Armstrong's lines. Mr. Bennett rightly fastens upon the historical scepticism of "Back to Jesus" as its radical defect. I believe that on careful analysis this historical scepticism would be found to involve far more than appears on the surface, and if carried to its logical issue, would not only destroy any rational basis for our Christian sentiment, but also involve the whole of the teaching of Christ as well as his person in the distorting "mists of time." Unless we can assign to the New Testament a far higher degree of historical veracity than Mr. Armstrong seems prepared to allow, there is no such thing as getting back to "the actual Jesus" either as Teacher or Lord; and his book appears to me, if I may say so with all deference, a demonstration of the futility of the attempt. It is, then, on this question of history and the necessary implications of a sound historical criticism that the whole problem may, in the first instance, be said to turn. To discuss the matter with any fulness in these columns would be impossible. All that can be attempted is to suggest a few considerations supplementary to those on which Mr. Bennett has so justly insisted.

It is often said that we must apply the same methods of judgment to the New Testament that we should use in dealing with any other collection of historical literature. It is a wise and useful canon, but those who urge its claims with the greatest emphasis are often the very men who fail to put it into practice. They split the New Testament into fragments. They assign its books to different dates and different authors, and range them in opposing theological camps. They trace the growth of the various interpretations of our Lord's person and work, the Jesus of the Synoptic Gospels, the Incarnate Word of St. John, the indwelling Christ of St. Paul, the great High Priest of the Hebrews. No scholar would for a moment question the legitimacy and the need of this kind of work, though he might be inclined to plead for greater caution and sanity of judgment than are sometimes brought to bear on these questions. But it is when this process of critical analysis has been completed that the work of historical construction begins, and it is here that the critic who has grown short-sighted through long peering into details often fails us. He is lacking in breadth of view and historical imagination, and the saving salt of ordinary common-sense. If we can imagine an intelligent reader with some historical training coming to the New Testament for the first time, he would, I believe, detect the differences of thought and tendency which have been mentioned, but he would also detect something else, which is too often lost sight of—namely, a remarkable spiritual unity, a unity all the more impressive because it arrests the mind and fascinates the imagination in spite of the acknowledged differences of attitude and feeling in the primitive group of Christian thinkers and writers. With this discovery the historical interest has somewhat shifted its ground. Our imaginary reader deeply impressed by this pervading unity would begin to inquire eagerly into its cause. Perhaps the first thing to strike him would be that all the books which are collected together in the New Testament are the literature of a single movement. They have not come together by accident or the caprice of an editor. They throb with the life of the same great spiritual drama. They are pervaded by an inherent historical unity. And this historical unity would soon reveal itself as something far deeper than that of mere co-existence in time or even of common ancestry. It is the unity of a common impulse and spiritual purpose. The New Testament is the literature of Christianity as it begins to realise that it is to be a great missionary power in the world. It is instinct with the love of souls, with the passionate desire to bring men into the knowledge and love of God, and of His son Jesus Christ our Lord. With a voice which only gathers eloquence from their variety of interpretations the New Testament writers bear witness to their unity in the new spirit which has come into the world, the spirit which cares for the salvation of men. But instantly the question suggests itself and demands an answer, what is the source of this spirit, how have these men with these differences of intellectual training and tendency, on which so much stress has been laid, arrived at this remarkable agreement which gives to all their writings the same stamp of distinctness and originality? The answer to this question is to be found in the fact that the New Testament is the book of a single character and personality. There is a common profession of loyalty to the one Lord, and it is a loyalty not only on the lips, which may cover a great deal of radical diversity, but it shows itself above all in the desire to fashion men into the likeness of his character. On the character of Christ there is no diversity in the New Testament. It lives and moves on every page. The ethics of the Sermon on the Mount live again in St. Paul. The teaching of the cross in the Synoptics reappears in St. John. It is always the same living Master, the one regal character, who stamps himself on the disciple's mind.*

My contention, then, is that a true historical criticism is bound to emphasize the unity of the New Testament, a unity which in its intensity and power is, I believe, quite unique in a collection of historical documents written by different authors in different places; and further that this unity is in itself of immense importance as giving us reliable evidence, and evidence which so far as I can see no criticism can shake, of the mind, the character, the spirit, in a word the life and person of Jesus Christ.

I have left myself but little space for dealing with two other arguments which are also of great importance. Hitherto I have spoken of the New Testament as a whole. We may now confine our attention for a few moments to the Synoptic Gospels. The position, which in an earlier part of this paper I have ventured to describe as that of historical scepticism, usually entrenches itself in the belief that the Apostles are on the whole very unreliable witnesses, untrained, and full of prejudice. Mr. Armstrong appears to be weighted with a sense that they "shaped and coloured, tinted and distorted." Does it never occur to him, at least as a corrective to the bias of this statement, that our Lord himself shaped and coloured the minds who afterwards reported of him? There is ample evidence in the Gospels that he chose the Twelve for a special purpose, that he trained them to speak his message and share his work. They were no casual listeners, but by daily intercourse and the discipline of suffering had lived their way into his heart and spirit; and it was the best training possible for reporting to others that which they had heard, which they had seen with their eyes, which they had looked upon, and their hands had handled of the Word of Life. The one matter upon which there seems to have been serious misconception was the Messiahship. Here the Master's thought, expressed in a phraseology which for them and others had another and quite familiar meaning, was out of touch with their minds. But this particular want of understanding would make no difference to their impressions of his life and work, and of the life which he meant them to live and the work he meant them to do.

Great stress is also laid at times upon the fact, and it seems to bring disquiet to some minds, that we have no power to prove that any particular saying of our Lord's must have been spoken exactly as it has been reported to us. It seems to be imagined that we are to take the Gospels line by line, and then sum up against their historical validity, because there are so many details about which we cannot be absolutely sure. But this is to overlook entirely the value of cumulative evidence, and of that power of seeing the whole behind the details which is possessed by every great historian. "We might not be sure," as Mr. Rashdall has well said, "that any given saying is genuine, but we might still be quite sure that by far the larger part of them are so.*" We may even go a step further, and say that no doubt about isolated details can invalidate the veracity of the portrait which the details combine to produce. We are not dealing here with a long chain of evidence, the strength of which is to be found in its weakest link, but with thousands of rays of light which converge upon a single focus.

The question of the reliability of the Gospels, and of the New Testament as a whole, is, in my judgment, the gravest issue presented to us by Mr. Armstrong's recent book. It brings us face to face with the momentous problem of the place of historical revelation in our religion. With the very narrow and insecure ground which he allows us I feel that his clinging to historical Christianity at all is sentimental rather than rational, and that from his own point of view he would strengthen his position greatly if, instead of bidding us go back to Jesus, he abandoned history entirely for intuition. He would then range himself avowedly on the side of the small group of thinkers who agree with Amiel when he wrote that "le déplacement

* From this statement I should be inclined to exclude large parts of the Book of Revelation. But if, as the most recent criticism seems to show, it is a Jewish Apocalypse worked over here and there by a Christian hand, this exclusion does not invalidate my statement. The Apocalypse has little of the distinctness and originality of genuine Christian work.

* "Doctrine and Development," p. 70 see also the whole sermon from which these words are taken on "The Historical Value of the Gospels."

du christianisme de la région historique dans la région psychologique est le vœu de notre époque." The attempt to resolve Christianity into a psychology of spiritual experience has always been attractive to a certain order of mind. Its weakness lies not so much in what it affirms as in what it denies, in an over-strained individualism and the caprice of lonely sentiment unchecked by healthy contact with historical fact. It is, in the words of Henry More, "a slighting of the history of Christ, a making a mere allegory of it—tending to the utter overthrow of that warrantable though more external frame of Christianity which Scripture itself points out to us." I have too keen an appreciation of the fertilising influence of the mystics upon Christian piety to speak slightly of the efforts of any who may claim a kinship, however distant, with them; but it is impossible to hope much from a mysticism or psychology of religious experience which has its roots in a conscious historical despair.

W. H. DRUMMOND.

LITERATURE.

DR. HASTINGS' DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE.*

THE second of the four volumes which are to complete Dr. Hastings' new Dictionary of the Bible fully maintains the high standard of the first, and confirms the impression which it made of considerable freedom and courage in Old Testament criticism, such as we find in the distinguished scholars of the Lux Mundi school, while in dealing with the New Testament there is a much stronger leaning towards traditional views. In fact this volume, which contains the most important New Testament articles, may be regarded as a demonstration in force, equipped with abundant learning and skill of presentment, together with great religious earnestness, in defence of a complete scheme of orthodox Christianity.

The Old Testament is not, of course, neglected. Professor Ryle contributes the article on Genesis, while the Hexateuch as a whole, with a full treatment of its composite character, and a discrimination of the various sources, is dealt with by the Rev. F. H. Woods, vicar of Chalfont St. Peter, who also deals fully with the story of the Flood. The analogy between it and the Flood stories of other nations is traced, and its origin is found in the poetic presentation of some natural occurrence. The conclusion of the article is a good example of the manner in which the Old Testament narratives are treated.

Even though it be true that the Israelites found this Flood story handed down from the religious mists of a far distant past, a religious student of Scripture will have no difficulty in recognising that divinely guided religious feeling and insight by which an ancient legend became the vehicle of religious and spiritual truth.

An article on the History of Israel, by the Rev. W. E. Barnes, traces the political history up to the time of the Maccabees, leaving the rest of the story for a later article on the history of New Testament times, and the religious history for another later article on the theology of the Old Testament. Professor A. B. Davidson writes on Hosea and Jeremiah, Professor W. T. Davison on the Book of Job, Professor G. A. Smith on Isaiah, clearly setting forth the results of recent scholarship as to the work of Isaiah himself, and as to the great prophet of the Captivity. Among the learned articles contributed by Professor König, of Rostock, is one on Jonah, dealing in a decisive manner with the book as post-exilic, and containing not history but a symbolic narrative. The article on Jerusalem, by Lieut.-Colonel Conder, is illustrated by an excellent full-page map of the city and its surroundings, from the Ordnance survey.

But it is in the New Testament articles that the chief interest of this volume centres. In the first volume under "Father" we were referred to the article "God," which is included in the present volume, together with articles on Jesus Christ, the Holy Spirit, the Incarnation, the Gospels, the Apostle John, and the Gospels and Epistles which bear his name, grace, heaven, hell, and the Kingdom of God; thus it will be seen that all the great questions of most vital moment in the consideration of Christian truth are here dealt with.

The article "God" is divided into two parts, Professor A. B. Davidson writing on God as represented in the Old Testament, and Professor Sanday, in an elaborate and deeply interesting article, on the doctrine of God in the New Testament. Professor Davidson points out how the Old Testament never argues about the existence of God, but contains the record of the growing knowledge of God in human life, culminating in the spiritual conviction of the prophets, in whom the dawning of truth, and especially of moral truth, was indeed the revealing of God, prepared for by personal religious experience. The various names applied to God are examined in turn, and the origin of the curious form "Jehovah" is explained. It is recognised that the Old Testament does not contain any doctrine of the Trinity. "The Old Testament can scarcely be used as authority for the existence of distinctions within the Godhead."

Professor Sanday's article opens with a description of the tendencies of contemporary Judaism in New Testament times, laying stress on the great doctrine of the Divine Unity, the transcendence and omnipresence of God, and the removal of anthropomorphisms in the interpretation of Scripture. He notes, however, the great injury done to religious life by the neglect of the prophets in comparison with the Law, but refers also to the plea of Mr. Montefiore's Hibbert lectures for a different interpretation of that fact.

Then follows a full statement of the teaching of the New Testament. Starting from the idea of God as held by the Jews of that age, it is asked: "How did Christianity vivify, restore, enlarge and enrich this idea?" And the answer is as follows:—

It did so (1) by asserting with greatly increased breadth and emphasis certain of the attributes of Godhead; (2) by presenting in the person of Jesus Christ a special revelation, brought home in the most palpable forms, of the nature of God as expressed in these attributes; and (3) by opening the eyes of men to the truth that God is not, as was supposed, a simple Monad, but that within the Oneness of His Being there were included certain distinctions which made possible a constant flow and return of the highest and purest affections, dimly shadowed in the like affections of men, and putting a crown to the divine perfections.

The meaning of the Fatherhood of God, and of His love and righteousness, is carefully analysed, with full references to the chief passages in the various New Testament writers, and then follows a section on the revelation of God through Christ and through the Holy Ghost, and a concluding section on "Distinctions in the Godhead." This last, as elaborating the third division of Professor Sanday's answer quoted above, as to how Christianity has enlarged the thought of God, naturally attracted our keen interest and attention, not unmixed with other feelings in contemplation of that strange dogmatic necessity which leads to a description of the Eternal, the God of the prophets, and of such Psalms as the 23rd and 139th, and we must add, also, the God of Jesus, as "a simple Monad."

The formulated doctrine of the Trinity, "Three Persons in One God," Professor Sanday admits is not to be found in the New Testament, and to expect to find it there would, he says, be an anachronism. Yet the doctrine is, in his view, a working out of data contained in the New Testament, a rendering of those data intelligible to the consciousness as part of a reasoned and formulated whole.

The Christian theologian is well aware that the only expression possible to him is approximate: he applies to the whole construction the dictum of St. Augustine; he says what he says, non ut illud diceretur sed ne taceretur (De Trin. v. 9). But he is almost compelled to say something, and the deliberate judgment of the Church has been that he is warranted in saying so much as he does.

Against that "deliberate judgment" there have always been earnest heretics who have protested; and we must still ask, why is the Christian theologian "almost compelled" to say so much? Would he not be wiser to rest in the actual spiritual teaching of Jesus and his closest followers, and not attempt the elaboration of any dogmatic scheme, by which the thought of such varied minds as are represented in the New Testament must be compelled to uniformity?

In the critical study of what is called "by anticipation the doctrine of the Trinity in the New Testament," Professor Sanday hesitates to start from the Baptismal formula of Matt. xxviii. 19, because it "belongs to a comparatively late and suspected part of the Gospel," though he, himself, is ready to hold the traditions to be authentic; but as the classical "Trinitarian" text he takes the threefold benediction of 2 Cor. xiii. 14, "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all." In this benediction, Professor Sanday affirms, there are "Three so bracketed together as to be at the same time One," and that the only other alternative interpretation leads to the impossible Arian theory of "Beings who were not Man and yet not wholly God." But would anyone who did not take the doctrine of the Trinity to the interpretation of this benediction have any such thought of it? And is it hypercritical to suggest that this formula is most unorthodox?—for if the Three are to be found in it, it is noteworthy that "The Father" is not mentioned, and the order is startling; whereas if there are only Two, the Lord whose grace it is desired to share, and God whose love is manifest in Jesus, and who is Himself the ever-present Spirit, we seem to be in touch with facts in the spiritual life of which we have actual knowledge, and are spared the difficulty and danger of any question as to "Monad" or "Triad." For similar reasons we remain unsatisfied by Professor Swete's article on the "Holy Spirit," full and masterly in treatment as it is.

* "A Dictionary of the Bible," edited by James Hastings, M.A., D.D. Vol. II.—Feign to Kinsman. Edinburgh: T. and T. Clark, 1899. 28s.

Professor Sanday's article on "Jesus Christ" fills fifty of the closely-printed pages of the dictionary, and is in fact a wonderfully concise and complete work in itself, while even more space is given to the Apostle John and the works that bear his name, the three articles on John by the Rev. T. B. Strong, the Gospel, by the late Dr. H. R. Reynolds, and the Epistles by Professor Salmond, filling together sixty-two pages. Professor Sanday's article on "Jesus Christ" will repay the most careful study, and we could wish that in a somewhat enlarged form it might soon be separately published to ensure a wider circulation, for it appears to us altogether admirable in conception and in tone; and while we can by no means accept the conclusions as to miracles, the Virgin birth and the Tri-unity of God, it is very valuable to have such a survey of the whole field, and a statement so moderate and earnestly presented of the prevalent orthodox conception of Christ. The article concludes with an interesting note on Lives of Christ, and this final advice to the student: "He should read Ecce Homo."

There are many other points of interest in this second volume on which we should have been glad to dwell, but must be content with one more quotation from the article on "Hell" by Professor Salmond. Having dealt with the meaning of the word, and of Sheol and Gehenna in the Bible, and other New Testament expressions referring to the future punishment of sin, the article concludes:

The New Testament is silent on many things on which imagination and speculation have both spent themselves largely and to little profit. It speaks much less of the retribution of the impenitent than of the reward of the righteous. In what it does say of the former it gives no satisfaction to curious inquiry. It limits itself to intimations which address themselves to character and conduct, and which convey the impression of the untold moral issues that depend upon the present life.

The only mis-print we have noted in this volume is on p. 721, where, in the survey of literature dealing with the problem of the Fourth Gospel, the Rev. J. J. Tayler's name is mis-spelt.

THE MORAL ORDER OF THE WORLD.*

DR. BRUCE's book leads us as pilgrims through the ages of the past in quest of wise, weighty, and light-giving words concerning the moral order of the world and the Providence of God. After listening to the words of Buddha and Zoroaster, after following the thought of the Greek tragedians and the Stoics and considering the questions connected with heathen divination, after hearing the strong voice of Hebrew prophecy upraised in the cause of righteousness and listening to the searching free-spoken inquiries into the Providential order that are found in the Book of Job, we come finally to sit at the feet of Jesus, where the storm of contention is changed into the calm of a perfect trust, and the accents of complaint have been replaced by a spirit of imperishable serenity. Here in effect our pilgrimage ends, for though the succeeding chapters on "Modern Thought" are naturally to the modern reader among the most interesting in the book, they are yet criticisms of it in the light of the works of the Great Teacher at whose feet we sat two thousand years ago.

Leaving the reader to consult the book itself for an accurate account of Dr. Bruce's own views on the numerous philosophical questions met with and discussed in the course of this pilgrimage, we shall confine ourselves to a brief diary of our own impressions derived from accompanying him upon it.

Our starting point was Buddhism. There we seem to have seen the moral order of the world underlying and overruling every other order. It and it alone is order, and all other order is derived from it, and the outcome and expression of it. All else must of moral necessity fall in line with this moral necessity. This faith of the Buddhist in the moral foundation of the world is an assertion of the moral consciousness; a very deep consciousness in man, and possibly the best fitted to fathom the world to its fundamental depths. As an assertion of the moral consciousness, it is a powerful and weighty utterance. The moral consciousness of the hearer is deeply impressed by it, and feels morally certain that there is truth in it.

Thus far Buddhism is strong; but now begins its weakness—this moral order has no moral orderer, there is no God; and still farther, the simple assertion of the moral consciousness is itself largely brought into doubt by the efforts to support it with the evidence of purely hypothetical witnesses, and the unverified histories of worlds beyond our ken.

Our impression of Zoroaster is that in him the moral consciousness is more timid; it cannot support the great assertion of Buddhism, and is divided within itself between a whole-hearted and a half-hearted assertion as to the ultimate power and extent of the moral order. It has a moral belief in morals, but not a necessary belief in the necessity of morals. It is consequently a believer in the moral order as supreme morally, but not necessarily. It has, therefore, a dualistic conception of the world's order. Existence is more ultimate than goodness, and on the foundation of existence both goodness and badness step forth. There are two gods, the good god and the bad god, with their respective followers. It appears to be a moral chaos rather than a moral order, for the good god has no necessary right over the evil, righteousness not being in the nature of things.

The development and modification of Greek thought as it is seen in the Greek dramatists—Aeschylus, Sophocles and Euripides—brings us onward to the teachings of the Stoics, and the criticism of their doctrine of lopping off all desires in order to avoid all disappointments. The highest morals, however, have never sprung from "no desire," and it is incredible that any such system could ever have produced this world, or be the moral order which has produced its beauties, self-sacrifices, and heroisms that moralit approves of in it. It is hard to know how the Stoic harmonised this teaching with his belief in living according to nature, for nature has many desires.

Though a chapter on "Divination" rightly finds a place, and we pause to watch men tapping the world, in however illicit a manner, in search of those inner meanings which they believe it to contain, we must yet look to the Hebrew prophets to find that truer method of divination which lies in following the dictates of the moral consciousness, and looking within rather than without for the divine meanings of life. To the Hebrew prophets we owe that intense assertion of the righteousness of God which has commended itself ever since to the conscience of mankind, and forms a remarkable contribution to the upbuilding of our conception of the moral order.

The Book of Job aptly follows after the Hebrew prophets, as if questioning with every possible objection everything they have said, yet none the less breathing their own affirmation in the same deep moral consciousness.

At last we stand before Christ, and are suddenly conscious, as Dr. Bruce puts it, of a great change in the "psychological climate." This change is all the more remarkable, as taking place in the same spiritual territory. There is the same intense faith in the moral order, the same passion for righteousness, the same faith in the blessedness of the righteous; there also remains the same knowledge that the experiences of the righteous are not always happy ones. But in Jesus the storm has changed into a calm. The theoretical rebellion against the existence of evil has ceased, and the practical conflict with it has begun. Jesus does not seek to explain evil, but to overcome it. Jesus also has found more than the moral order, he has found the Moral Orderer. And though the personal tie between the child on earth and the Father in heaven has to stand the strain of many trials and to be passed through the worst aspects of life's severest side, yet Jesus ever found in the Moral Orderer a teacher and a strengthener—not so much a storm-god, but rather a sun and a shield. He was conscious, moreover, of his life in this world as a mission "sent unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel," and he explained to his disciples what their "mission" was. Christ's teaching of Providence, of Providence for the individual no less than Providence for the race and Providence for the whole ordering of the world, has proved able, as none other has in like degree, to satisfy the demands alike of heart, conscience, and reason. Nor is it the least noteworthy feature of Christ's teaching, that his method of overcoming the evil with good proceeds by slow evolution and growth, not by leaps and bounds. Jesus's teaching harmonises, as to method, with the evolutionary system of the world, and as to spirit with the Divine mind that is directing it. The application of the teaching and practice of Jesus to the problems of our times is thus suggested to us as the true solution of those problems and the truest and surest way, both of recognising and acting in accordance with the moral order of the world.

The criticisms that follow, in the light of Jesus's teaching, upon the unbalanced optimism of Browning and the many vagaries of modern dualism will be read with zest by all interested in modern thought. We can only recommend our readers to read these and the whole book for themselves, and add our own humble plaint of sorrow that the hand of death has now robbed us of all prospect of further books by the same author.

* "The Moral Order of the World, in Ancient and Modern Thought." By Alexander Balmain Bruce, D.D. Hodder and Stoughton. 7s. 6d.

WILFRED HARRIS.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

TO PUBLISHERS.—All Books, &c., sent to THE INQUIRER will be acknowledged under this head, with name of publisher and price, if supplied. The necessities of our space, however, compel us to limit the number selected for critical notice and review.]

History of Dogma. By Dr. Adolph Harnack. Translated by W. McGilchrist, B.D. 10s. 6d. (Williams and Norgate.)

The Literary Study of the Bible. By K. G. Moulton, M.A., Ph.D. 10s. 6d. (Isbister.)

Leaves from the Tree of Life. By A. Maclaren, D.D. 5s. (Isbister.)

The First Step. By Leo Tolstoy. 6d. (Broadbent, 19, Oxford-street, Manchester.)

Prayers for the use of Christian Families. By J. Scott Porter. 6d. (Ulster Unitarian Association, Belfast.)

The Child's Guide to Christ: A Scripture Catechism for Children. 6d. a doz. (Ulster Unitarian Association, Belfast.)

Cassell's Magazine, with Plate. 1s. (Cassell and Co.)

Liberty in the Nineteenth Century. By F. M. Holland. 7s. 6d. (Putnam.)

Principles of Public Speaking. By G. C. Lee, Ph.D. 7s. 6d. (Putnam.)

Boadicea: A Play in Four Acts. Poems for Recitation, &c. By Mrs. Aylmer Gowing. 3s. 6d. (Kegan Paul.)

Horace Bushnell, Preacher and Theologian. By T. T. Munger. 6s. (James Clarke and Co.)

Story of David. (Dean and Son.)
Pocket Almanac for 1900. 1s. (Philip Green, 5 Essex-street, W.C.)

Review of Reviews, Woman at Home, Contemporary, Good Words, Good Cheer, Sunday Magazine, Cornhill, Nineteenth Century.

AN OBJECT-LESSON.

THE time is 8.30 P.M., and the scene a school-room attached to a spacious chapel, built at a time when the surrounding neighbourhood was the home of well-to-do citizens of London; but the days of its prosperity are over, and close on its borders is one of the poorest and dingiest districts of North London. And so the chapel a few years ago had practically no congregation, for there were no funds wherewith to maintain a minister; but then a young Scotchman, a Cambridge M.A., came along, full of the enthusiasm of humanity and looking for no pecuniary reward, took up the work. There is now a congregation of about 100 in the morning, and 250 in the evening, comprised of weekly labourers in the city and the small tradesmen who supply their wants.

It is the minister's week-night class we are attending, having been told that we shall there see him at his best.

The subject of study is "The Deeper Knowledge of God." Punctually at 8.30 a start is made, but for fully ten minutes afterwards there is a stream of new arrivals, principally of men who have evidently just left their work. In all there are about 80 present, of which about two-thirds are women, some of them with note-books in their hands. All of them are eager and intelligent, and most of them reveal their straitened circumstances in their dress.

The first twenty-five minutes are devoted to the putting and answering of questions suggested by the previous lecture. These follow thick and fast when once the silence is broken, and the leader is never at a loss in his replies. We begin to see the scope of his teaching as philosophical, theological and scientific theories are made to illustrate his theme; he has seen the new light, and is taking the thinking part of his congregation with him.

In beginning his lecture, he reviews his previous lessons, for he wants his audience to advance slowly but surely. He shows how the old orthodoxy gave man the idea of a God outside the world, alienated from His creatures, and being a party to a scheme of salvation rather difficult to understand, partial in its operation, and uncertain of attainment. But this had given place with many to a conception of great beauty and attractiveness. It translated the historic Jesus into the universal Christ reigning in the heavens, and encouraging and supporting all who believed in his name. But even this thought, ennobling as it was, must disappear before advancing knowledge. We must get at the esoteric teaching of Jesus and learn to know God as he himself did. The universe consisted of spirit and the manifestations of spirit. Man was on the plane of self-consciousness, and salvation and happiness depended upon adjusting his thought to that of the Absolute. God's laws were unerring in their operation, and evil and sin arose through their contravention. True life was a continual advance from one plane of being to another. Prayer was aspiration after the true life. He had been asked whether we might think of God as a person. In reply, he said that in our present plane of being we knew nothing beyond personality; therefore, we were bound to think of God as a person, if we would ascribe to Him the highest we know; but God in Himself must be super-personal. More we could not say. We shall never get beyond the word Father; but the contents of that word might be richer than many who used it thought.

This very brief sketch is sufficient to show the high ground taken by the lecturer. More questions were then asked, all pertinent and intelligent—one being whether the teaching set forth was supported by the Bible. The reply was that the Bible must be regarded as literature, it contained the evolution of the thought of God among the Jewish people, but we must interpret its teaching by the light of present-day knowledge.

The meeting, which lasted nearly to ten o'clock, closed, as it began, with prayer. The touching part, to us, was to see this body of earnest inquirers giving up their old thoughts and accepting new ideals from their teacher because they loved him, and they saw that he had a brighter truth to offer them.

We have ventured to call this meeting an object-lesson because of its suggestiveness to us. We will confine ourselves to two reflections.

In the first place, the minister, Mr. J. Bruce Wallace, M.A., and his church, the Brotherhood Church, Southgate-road, N., are affiliated to the Congregational Union, which is evidence that other historic Churches beside our own are openly taking new ground; and, secondly, the meeting is a proof that one man, at any rate, by his personal influence, has succeeded in interesting a purely working community in the deeper and broader problems of religion; so much so, that not only do they attend his Sunday ministrations, but gather round him of a week-night also.

E. CAPLETON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

"BACK TO JESUS."

SIR,—You kindly invite me to reply to the Rev. Ambrose Bennett's unfavourable criticism of my Essay "Back to Jesus." I think, however, that I shall do much better to let the Essay and the criticism stand side by side, leaving it to the thoughtful reader to decide where the truth lies. I have said, not unadvisedly or lightly, what I had to say; and I would rather be judged by what I wrote in the calm atmosphere of a temporary retirement, than by a controversial rejoinder to an unsympathetic attack—a rejoinder, too, which would have to be framed with the disadvantage of an honest inability to understand Mr. Bennett's position. I am sure he has striven to make himself clear, but in large parts of his article I have the misfortune to be unable clearly to apprehend his meaning.

I wrote "Back to Jesus" with a profound desire to be helpful to others and to clear the teaching of Jesus from what appeared to me to be adventitious obscuring elements. I have the happiness to know that by some readers what I have written has been found helpful as I had hoped; I cannot expect that it should be so to all. I find that critical principles which I had thought were almost truisms appear to Mr. Bennett utterly novel and unwarranted. I can only trust that, in spite of our very wide intellectual divergence, we may both be led into the spirit of truth.

RICHARD A. ARMSTRONG.

Liverpool, Nov. 27.

THE QUESTION OF PROSELYTISM.

SIR,—If Mr. Armstrong had read my letter a little more carefully, he would not have done me the injustice of taking it to mean that I "would condemn all attempts, on the intellectual side, to infuse our religious convictions into others." In that letter I expressly say, "As for religious Societies, let them 'infuse convictions,' certainly, but only as we infuse them one upon another in daily intercourse, &c." Is this a condemnation of "all attempts"? I am as eager as Mr. Armstrong, I think, for the spread of enlightened conviction on the intellectual side, but by "infusion" I mean infusion, and not that diffusion which, so far as I can judge, has little effect beyond that of stiffening the resistance of those who oppose themselves.

EDWIN P. BARROW.

Manchester, Nov. 27.

THE INWARD LIFE.

From Psalms of the West.

Who is the Christian man, and in whom is the spirit of the everlasting word?

God so loved the world, that He hath revealed His holy ones in all times, His warriors in every nation.

Search and look if thou hast not the truth very nigh unto thee, in the virtue of a life that thy heart may know.

Why worship ye the Holy One of Israel, and condemn the prophet of your own country, the wise and living of your generation?

Why speak ye bitter things against the reformer, since ye call him Master who was slain for his reforming.

Ye make saints of the disciples of Judæa, but the disciples of your own day and of your own land ye spurn under your feet.

Why do ye magnify the Saviour in prayers and hymns, and reject him in your lives?

Why bid ye men by creeds to acknowledge him Lord, whom ye defy in your thoughts, whom ye betray in all your years upon earth?

* * * * *

Let us leave our vanities and cleave to righteousness, let luxury depart from us, and let temperance and peace be our friends;

Let us live as brethren in helpful confidence, let war cease, let strife give place to reason, and the show of riches to quick and joyful simplicity;

Let bitterness show discord no more, let strong persuasion be merciful to the soul of a brother.

Surely we all are weak, we cannot rightly advance a cause by dredging the character of an adversary.

Let us reverence every soul that seeketh righteousness, and respect the depth and marvel of mind;

Let opinion vary as flowers and trees, and the precious quality of each be enshrined in grateful regard;

Let all controversy be in reason and goodwill, let no word that savours of hatred confound the approaches of truth;

Backbiting is the token of a weak cause, and tyranny is the instrument of foolishness;

Let our passions be subdued before our enemies, let our speech be weighed again and again, and our thought be jointed with tenderness.

The cause of justice is worthy of zeal, even above the object of a party, though despised in the din of war.

Let opinions be freed from the pressure of circumstance, let every man act for the good of all, as though he looked upon the world from afar off.

Blessed is the faith that catcheth not at false advantage, mighty the devotion that scorneth the turns of policy.

Trust the man that followeth not in a throng, who will not flatter a multitude, and make evil good to his profit;

Who bringeth every care to the law of love, and seeketh judgment in the proving of conscience;

Who believeth in the light, and obeyeth the spirit of Christ—he is the Christian man, and in him shall we behold the fruit of Eternal Thought.

THE feeling is often the deeper truth, the opinion the more superficial one.—Guesses at Truth.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

"He shall give his angels charge concerning thee."—Psalms xci. 11.

THIS morning, when I went to the window, I saw in the early dusk the blackbirds running about the lawn, trying to pick up a breakfast before the sparrows and the starlings and the robins were awake. They are always here at this time, and I often wonder where they spend the night, as a tree with the wind whistling through the branches would not be a cosy place for a little bird to sleep in—even though it is wrapped in feathers.

Thinking of this brought a charming story of long ago to my mind, which I will try to make short enough for this column.

Toward the end of winter, as the fast of Lent drew near, the old abbot Ki-nach desired, as was his custom, to leave his monastery and go to the hermitage the brethren had in the hills, that he might keep it more strictly. A young monk went with him, and together they walked through the open fields, and then higher through the wood, and then higher still till they came to the wild rocky place where was the hermitage. It was only a hollow cell in the rock, without bed, or chair, or table, or fire, hardly large enough for the two to shelter in. But the early spring-time was pleasant, with the sense of swelling buds, and the timid living creatures, shy but hardly afraid; and the two monks thanked God, and began to keep, with prayers and meditation, their fast.

One night as the abbot lay awake before dawn, he heard a bird singing so clear and sweet that it seemed like a bird from heaven. And when morning came he told the young monk about it. And the young monk said, "Father, it is the blackbird. Such is their wont at this time of year." That day, as they were walking in the wood, a little brown bird fluttered out from the ivy that climbed over a great wall of rock near their cave, and parting the overhanging ivy branches, there was a nest, and within it three small eggs. Then the two carefully avoided that place in their walks, lest they should again frighten the mother-bird from her nest.

But, as often happens in the spring-time, the pleasant days suddenly came to an end, and the storm drove across the sky. The branches twisted and snapped, the icy sleet drove into every exposed place. And as the old abbot lay listening in the dark night to the howling wind and felt the bitter cold, he bethought him of the little blackbird on her nest trying to keep her eggs warm. And he lifted up his heart to the Lord of the storm and prayed Him to have the bird in His care. And the sense of the whole world of men and living things nestling as it were under the wings of God came to him, and he said to himself, "How excellent is Thy loving kindness, O God; therefore the sons of men shall put their trust under the shadow of Thy wings."

Then after a while he said to the younger monk, "Look forth into the night, my son, and see if the storm be abating." And the young monk went to the opening of the cave, and as he looked he spoke in a voice full of awe, "Father abbot, father abbot, look, look!"

And the abbot came and looked, and the sleet drove in their faces, but in the midst of the storm was a space of light, and the light streamed from an angel who stood near the wall of rock with outstretched wings sheltering the blackbird's nest from the storm.

That is the story. Perhaps it may seem to you a trifling business for a great angel from heaven to concern himself about, just to shelter a mother-bird on her nest. But is not this the charm of it? That some old monk—or whoever dreamed this beautiful story—should have had a heart so full of tenderness for the birds of the air as to picture it worth an angel's while to protect one of them from the storm. Yet if we think of it, this is not so surprising as what Jesus said about the birds, "Your heavenly Father," he said, "careth for them." And again, "Not a sparrow falls to the ground without your Father."

But are there any angels? Angels, to the men who believed in them, were those unseen presences who were always busy carrying out God's will. Some of them guided the sun and stars on their way through heaven, some went continually to and fro on God's errands. And one of their chief duties and delights was to watch over children and men and women, and lead them away from the dangers they themselves, perhaps, did not see. They were our unseen protectors, keeping us from the unseen perils around us. Now and then they were seen for a moment, but for the most part they were invisible. And what nowadays may seem strange to us who know a picture angel by his wings the moment we see him, these angels in the old time usually looked like men, and people took them for men and didn't know them for angels till afterwards, till they were gone.

But this was the central idea of an angel. He was an invisible guardian against the dangers of our life. This was surely a beautiful shape for the sense of an unseen love and care around us to take. "He shall give his angels charge concerning thee." One stronger than I am, wiser than I am, loving, patient, always at hand to help, grieved when I am selfish, ill-tempered, cowardly, always reminding me of my duty, always trying to keep me out of temptation, out of harm, out of sin, always beside me—why, if a child or man really believed this, how much courage and comfort he would feel in such a belief. Always some one to turn to, someone whose help was ready, someone at your side to guard and guide you. Yes, indeed, that is a beautiful form for the feeling of the unseen love and care, somehow always round us, to take.

And yet there is a form still more beautiful, and if we will only dwell on it till we realise it, we may find it still more comforting and sustaining.

For as Jesus, who always went straight to the heart of the matter, assures us, there is such an unseen Protector, Guide, Friend, always with us. Not an angel, not a messenger, but the great God Himself constantly with us, to direct and guard us, to direct and guard us in all the difficulties and all the dangers of our lives; and when we are sure of this, then the angel may fade away without our losing anything.

It is beautiful to think of a guardian angel. Sometimes it may help us to picture the Divine care in that way. But best of all is it when we can say and feel The Lord Himself is my Keeper.—C. A. F.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any News-agent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are:—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER ...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR ...	3	4
PER YEAR ...	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE ...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE ...	2	10	0
PER COLUMN ...	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN ...	0	3	8
BACK PAGE ...	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, DECEMBER 2, 1899.

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP.

UNITY of the Spirit in the bond of peace has always been the true ideal of Christian fellowship, and it may be useful to consider how that unity can be preserved in face of the radically divergent views and aims of different bodies of Christians. The Sacerdotalists of the Anglican and Roman communions offer to the world one method of religious life, as by divine appointment, while what are known as Evangelical Christians, in many Churches, affirm that they alone possess the true and unadulterated faith; beyond the pale of these two great sections of the Christian world are other earnest followers of JESUS, unable to accept either the Sacerdotal or the Evangelical position, to whom even the name of Christian is denied, who yet dare to think that they have some knowledge of that deeper unity of the Spirit, into which are gathered all faithful and humble children of God, and most intimately those who have become sharers of the mind of CHRIST.

How widely these three distinctive types of religious life are separated is plainly to be seen. With the Sacerdotalist unity is found only in the Church, into which, as the true fold of CHRIST, members must be received through the sacrament of baptism. And within the Church, where the priest exercises his supernatural functions, is to be sought the Holy of holies in human life, where God is nearest to His children. The Real Presence of God in the sacrament on the altar, given by the priest as heavenly sustenance to a faithful people, is the central point in the religious life of the Church, towards which all devotion is directed. By this means, it is affirmed, God has appointed that men should come to the fullest knowledge of things divine, and be best strengthened for their service in the world. Thus religious service centres in the altar, which cannot be too highly exalted, or guarded with too profound a reverence.

In contrast to this conception of religious life stands the Evangelical, which looks to find God most surely, not upon the altar through the mediation of a priest, but in the human heart redeemed by faith in the atoning death of CHRIST. In this view the Church is the invisible union of all faithful souls, born again into the new life rendered possible by the supreme spiritual fact of the Atonement; and the chief stress of religious life must be among the faithful a joyful and adoring gratitude for the gift of heavenly life thus received, and an eager hungering to gather in more souls, to declare to them through preaching of the Gospel the Word of Life, and to bring them to the one act of faith in the Redeemer, through which they can come to God.

Here are two unmistakable types of religious life, both of which have been fruitful of much devoted service and many saintly lives. But if it is asked, can either one or the other rightly claim exclusive possession of the mind of CHRIST, or of the way of divine life, the answer is not doubtful; and from what is common to both we may perhaps be led to a truer view of Christian fellowship and the right emphasis of the religious life.

What is common to both is an earnest Christian manhood, kindled to new life by the ideal of the manhood and the religion of JESUS—living with God in the world, trusting in the Eternal Goodness, with childlike spirit surrendered to the FATHER's will, devoted to His service, acknowledging the claims of the Kingdom of God amid all human affairs; and in personal character moulded in the likeness of the Master's gentleness and purity of heart, his strength of loyalty to truth and righteousness, his patient suffering, his pure, unselfish love. To be worthy citizens of the Kingdom, and children of the FATHER in heaven, is the common end, by whatever varying means attained; and what we affirm is, that the end may be reached, in the glory of a true Christian manhood, by those who can accept neither the claims of the Church with her offer of supernatural mediation, nor the Evangelical demand for faith in the Atonement as the divinely appointed way of life.

Thus there is another conception of the Church and of the way by which the soul may come to God, and to us it seems to be the way taught by JESUS, both in his word and in his life. Under this conception the Church is simply the gathering in a reverent and childlike spirit of those who seek to worship and to do the FATHER's will, which was what JESUS urged above all things on his disciples. And this is the ideal we have set before us in our Free Churches, that we should be together in presence of the Holiest, with mind and heart ever open to the light and conscience quick to hear the divinest word, that our worship may find expression not only in the devotion of the hour of prayer, but in the constant spirit of a faithful life. For the emphasis of religion must be on life, and it is in the whole of life, and not in any special sacrament of the altar that the Real Presence must be found. In this endeavour we believe that our churches are most truly Christian, thankfully accepting the teaching of the Master and the inspiration of his leadership, since they who learn of JESUS are brought most intimately into the fellowship of the children of God, and are best prepared both to understand and to do the FATHER's will. And herein is also that unity of the Spirit, which can unite in the bond of peace. It is not determined by any of those dogmas which divide the Churches, but by likeness to him who "went about doing good," knowing that to be the FATHER's will. In self-forgetting service of the Kingdom individual disciples and Churches alike will find that they are at one, and all the things which separate will fall into their due places of subordination.

But if we hold to this conception of the Church, we must acknowledge that it can be effective to the full measure of its strength only when it is indeed filled with the true Christian spirit. We may learn of those whose adoration centres in what is on the altar, to guard the reverence of the house of prayer, to bring our offerings to make it beautiful, and to come together in the spirit of a true devotion; we may learn of those who demand first of all the self-surrender of unquestioning faith, a new fervour of consecration to the Highest, and trust and rejoicing in the Love which is over all; but most of all we must learn to be true to our own special testimony, in the companionship of JESUS and the faithful of every generation, knowing that the witness of the present Spirit does not fail and that only perfect love can cast out fear and permanently save from sin. We are told that we have no message of deliverance for the sinner; we have to learn to help as JESUS helped, through the power of all-conquering love. If we are hungering for greater strength we must find it in more perfect surrender to the service of the Kingdom, in which God will be with us, in truer brotherhood, in more patient, steadfast, humble work and prayer. CHRIST is most surely found among the needs of common people; in the life of cheerful, unselfish service we are brought nearest to God and to our fellow-men.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c., received from the following:—J. B. (thanks); M. C.; C. F.; J. H. (Brussels); P. M. H.; R. J. J.; G. O. R.; H. R.; J. C. S.

THE PULPIT.

THE ELECTION OF TRUTH.*

BY THE REV. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.

"Ye did not choose me, but I chose you, and appointed you that ye should go and bear fruit, and that your fruit should abide."
—John xv. 16.

SUCH was the voice of "the Truth" to the believers of the early Church. That wonderful discourse, ascribed in the Fourth Gospel to the last night of the Teacher's earthly career, which has served as a sanctuary of faith and peace to so many troubled souls, sums up, if I read it aright, the reflection of a disciple on the significance of the first Christian experience. Never in city or hamlet overlooking the broad waters of the Mediterranean had such events been seen before. Eager inquiry, calm conviction, enthusiastic rapture, these and many other phases of philosophic and religious activity could easily be witnessed. There were the crowded lecture-rooms of professors, there were quiet retreats of thought, there were exciting processions of great Oriental rites; but you had only to turn aside from the streets and squares, the temples and universities, into some simple upper room, and among the little group of shop-keepers and artisans, some Jews, some Greeks, some freemen, and some slaves, you would hear words of a new life. They would be sometimes uttered with an emotion which would make them disconnected and unintelligible; sometimes one may fancy, in low calm speech whose clearness would hide rather than reveal their depth and intensity; but both alike would testify to the overwhelming force of a new trust, the vividness of a new insight, the power of a new hope. You might have followed Plato as he led you up the mountain heights of speculation, and pointed through the radiant haze to the far-off vision of the good; but if you sat at the feet of Paul, and listened to his speech of love, joy, peace, you knew that you entered into another world. There every energy was concentrated in one great rush of emotion going forth to God and Christ. There the whole soul was opened to the persuasive influences of the spirit. There new ideas, desires, aims, lighted the loneliest lot from dawn till eve, and filled the darkest watches of the night with thankful song. And these priceless boons were not the issue of long investigation. They were not the attainment of the inquiring mind. They did not result from ingenious experiment and protracted research. They depended on no balancing of evidence. They were given, not won: and those who shared them had not picked them out among a multitude of rival claims, they were the channels of something greater than they knew, the instruments of a power beyond and above themselves, the messengers of a voice which set its word upon their lips, and laid upon them the compulsions of speech and deed. Such as these had not chosen the truth, they were chosen by it. It was not theirs to reason but to obey. They were its elect servants to whom was committed the supreme privilege of carrying it forth to a waiting world, where the fields were everywhere open to the husbandmen, and the harvest of souls was sure.

Is this our case now? God, as we know, fulfils Himself in many ways, and it does not follow that the spiritual methods of the first century constitute a uniform type for all the rest of our nineteen. I speak to-day to members and friends of an Association which seeks to propagate a particular view of Christian truth. Some of us have been reared in it from our childhood; some of us have adopted it, perhaps with painful sacrifice. Our adherence to it may sometimes have exposed us to ridicule or misunderstanding; we are still sometimes denied for its sake religious fellowship which would be precious to us; how far can we honestly affirm that we have not chosen it, it has chosen us, and in that choice has opened to us lines of obligation along which we must needs take our appointed way?

The fact is surely that to an extent far larger than we know our beliefs are made for us rather than by us. Only in some strange moments of self-confidence do we say to ourselves, "Go to, let us sit down and discover the truth." By far the larger portion of the vast and varied mass of ideas, hopes, desires, dim or articulate, which make our life, are given to us, and not wrought out by us. The process of election to certain standards of thought or feeling goes on within us in a thousand ways beyond our control. It operates in the broadest sense through the past, as we enter into an inheritance created for us out of the unseen by master minds, and fused into the very structure of our being by ages of common experience which has slowly risen in value by its fostering aid. It operates within the compass of our own lives through the education of our early years, through the influences of our home and school, through the types of character with which we were first made familiar, through the early appeals to our taste and admiration when imagination was still plastic and we had not hardened under the influences of the world. The conceptions of the scientific interpretation of the universe in which our modern thought is steeped, the notions of morals—crude or refined—which belong to our class, our party, our nation, our religion, these, whether they be recently acquired or part of the age-long social evolution of our race, are given to us; we are their servants, not their lords; the humble instruments through which their imperial sway may be promoted, not the sources of their authority or the makers of their crowns. And even on the peaks of thought, in those high moments when ages of laborious reflection are concentrated in one flash of new insight, the seer accepts the idea that unifies and combines the scattered fragments of his past experience as something offered to him rather than fabricated by him. He finds it—does he?—but at least it was first there. Before the truth he sees, he stands with no conscious mastery or enjoyment, crying "Behold, I have chosen thee"; rather is it with awe and homage, with lowly self-surrender and the humble mind that he whispers "I thank thee that in thy grace thou hast chosen me."

And the same is true of that election which seems to us more private and personal; through temperament or mental constitution we are so made that we see truth, first or last, one way and not another. Through outward circumstance or opportunity we each have our own private election to the higher life. Through unexpected gifts of friendship, through quickening contact with nobler holier souls, through the book or poem which suddenly speaks to ears which a year or two ago it could not reach, is our faith born within us; but we have little to do with its begetting. Our eyes are opened, and we see; but the touch that opens them comes from another hand.

But is there, then, I shall be asked, no voluntary element in what we cherish and in what we reject? Are we, after all, simply at the mercy of experiences which we cannot foresee or control? Is the life of faith nothing more than a passive drifting with the stream, till it suddenly falls into the boundless deep? Are we not sometimes invited to choose our religion? In these days when every one discusses the foundations of belief, must we not admit that there is at least a preparation in which the will calls on thought and feeling each to contribute its share? Is it not a duty to examine evidence, to discard prejudice, to cultivate sympathy with forms of experience which we can with difficulty realise, to direct our attention deliberately to other points of view, and clear out from their secret recesses the last phantoms of suspicion and terror, animosity and mistrust? All this belongs, indeed, to our proper discipline. We invite others to do it, it is no less incumbent on ourselves. And this activity is still further excited when we are summoned to give shape to our thought, to clothe our faith with form. In finding fit methods of sustaining it we may make many an experiment. The difficulty of finding for it adequate expression as it passes from our inner life into the fields of thought and endeavour all around may make large demands on our patience and deliberation. Between the idea and the institution lies the will, which chiefly selects the plans on which it shall be reared, and determines the adjustment of the aims which it shall embody. It is largely within our power to control the stress which we will lay on varying elements. We can bring one object into prominence, and thrust another out of sight, and in this lies for us the trial of character, that as the messengers of the truth we should bear fruit, and that our fruit should abide. How, then, in the light of the considerations which I have thus briefly sketched, do we stand in relation to some of the religious tendencies and opportunities of to-day? I name only two by way of test or example; your own observation will easily add more.

From a large number of our fellow-Christians we are separated by a principle which has been recently defined as the "permanent centrality of Christ."* The individual life of the believer, the corporate existence of the Church, even the manifold energies of philanthropy, are not to be derived historically by channels near or remote from Jesus of Nazareth, they must be knit in present conscious union with Christ the Redeemer. I do not wish to speak with other than respect of a plea which is sometimes urged with passionate sincerity, but to members of a Unitarian Association it may not be amiss to point out why the religious experience of many of us takes a different form.

* A sermon preached at the autumn meeting of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association in the Oakfield-road Church, Clifton, Nov. 21.

* By the Rev. P. T. Forsyth, of Cambridge, in an address delivered at Manchester.

The primary element in our religion is the relation between the soul and God. Were there no such relation, religion could not exist. To realise it and uphold it, to find in it the joy and peace of the present, and the boundless hope of the future, to win through it perpetual strength for fresh endeavour, and draw from it a constant quickening of love—this is the meaning of our devotion. But the Author of our being has done with us as He has done with the world; He has brought us into a field of infinite variety, and given us powers and aptitudes to match. He has prepared for us the scene, and equipped us with instruments of thought to find out some of its secrets. He has led us slowly forwards along hidden paths to goals of knowledge far beyond our first dreams. He has invited us to behold his works, and has called up prophet and seer into the inner chamber of His sanctuary, and there revealed in manifold ways the marvellous unity of nature and life. He has unfolded to us the order of the skies; He has enabled us to discover the constitution of worlds. Far, far behind the dimmest dawn of history He has given us glimpses of the mighty forces that were at work to train and educate our race. He has taught us to bind together within one reign of law the motes in the sunbeam or the insect on the grass with the rise and extinction of stars and the hopes and purposes of innumerable souls. And in so doing He has made us realise that our thought is kindred with His own; in our affections is love that answers His; through our endeavours we are made conscious of His everlasting right; and, as we look up, we understand through our own experience the meaning of that great word which we have learned from the chiefest of His sons, and know Him as Maker, Friend, Father of our spirits for evermore.

That is the briefest summary of what may be called the natural relation between the soul and God. But when that relation is ignored by indifference, when it has been violated with recklessness, or trampled under foot in deliberate sin, what then? Bring to mind, if you can, the days or months that you have spent in cold or stubborn apathy. Remember the sullenness or the defiance with which you cherished some secret of guilt. Bethink you how you clung to it, and would not let it go; how you withheld the avowal which truth demanded rather than lose your place in another's esteem; or how you cherished the passion which purity or honour or love bade you subdue. Recall the hardness of judgment with which you dismissed the virtues of others as a mockery, detected a taint in all disinterestedness, and declared the heroisms of the great and noble little more than worthless shams. If you have known such moods yourself, or if you have been conscious of them in others, if you have been lifted above them into strenuousness and sincerity and joy, or if you have seen the wild and wayward passion quelled, the perversion of power restored to noble use, a fair order established over wantonness and riot, and harmony triumphant above the discord and the jar, what was the agency that brought you back, wherein lay the might for victory? Through many channels does it make its way. It speaks to us, perhaps, through some warning word falling, as we say, by chance —but what is chance?—on ears that are not yet wholly closed. It rises in memory out of the scenes of a pure home and a mother's tenderness. It meets us out of the faithful heart of a friend. It comes to us through some unexpected affection, disclosing depths of goodness we had never known before, and calling us to follow halting and timid on the long ascent. It breathes through the devoted endeavour of those who wrestle in the dark places of our sin and shame. It looks out upon us from the pages of the Gospel in the word and work of Jesus, reinterpreted, reinforced, by those who have caught his spirit and are fired with his love. But always and everywhere its essence lies in a revelation of character, which shows us good in the midst of evil, which makes us know the lower and the higher, and at length brings us, humble and penitent, to the feet of God. And there we are in the Father's presence once again. His was the law of right that rebuked us. His was the truth that judged us. His was the love that sought us out and brought us back. Has there been no redemption for those who have never known the name of Jesus? Why, the whole world is full of it, for redemption is the mighty process of the moral education of the race. It is part of the great plan of history. It is the purpose of God for all humanity. It has been always going on since the first brute stumbled into human shape; and it will not be ended till the last elements of the brute within us are purged and cast out. God was indeed in Jesus reconciling men unto Himself. But so was He also in those who blazoned forth their Master's work. So was He in those of elder time who laid down their lives for truth and righteousness. So has He been since, age after age, in the hearts of all who have fought the fight bravely for honour and faithfulness and love. So always and everywhere, so is He at this hour, wherever goodness suffers pain cheerfully for human needs, and gives of its strength or its thought, its labour or its endurance, to win the lost from evil and set them once more on the upward way. And in all this the centre and the source and the goal are one, giving unity to the process and assurance of victory in the end, God the All-holy as well as the All-wise, All-powerful, All-loving, the Father and Redeemer of all souls that He has made.

We cannot, therefore, break this mighty order by isolating into sole agency or significance one particular event. Nor can we distinguish one specific influence and raise it to universality under the name of Christ. For the historic can never be itself the universal. It may be its temporary manifestation, its channel, its instrument; but it is limited in space and time; it is personal and belongs to an individual, and the individual is known by his limitations. The philosopher does not insist on the "permanent centrality" of Aristotle or Kant; still less does the man of science claim such a place for Newton or Darwin. Almost as well might one maintain that all water must be drawn from one fountain; but the only source that is permanently central for all springs is the envining sea. The lightning is caught to carry thought around the globe; but the only battery that is permanently central for all electrical operations is the solid earth. We may not take the part for the whole, the finite for the infinite, or substitute what seem to us illusions for the might and the immensity of what is. God is, we are; and the boundless meaning of those two facts, which we have each of us to apprehend anew for ourselves, it may well take us eternity to realise. We will discard no helps along the road; nay, rather, will we recognise with trembling at our own infirmity and with ceaseless gratitude to the Giver of all good, how little we should dare to stand alone in so august a presence were it not for him who passed, fearless and faithful, showing us the way. But we will not confound the historic type of our religion with its everlasting object; nor can we palter with our sincerity and in the interests of common work disown differences which others deem vital, though to us they seem to touch only the outer framework and not the intimate essence of our faith. God in the world, God in humanity, in Jesus—aye, blessed be his name—God even in our own souls, for creation and judgment, for redemption and guidance, for daily quickening and for everlasting sanctification—these are for ever within the range of our experience and insight one and the same. I do not say that this immense conception can solve all difficulties, ward off all sorrow, secure immunity from pain, or guarantee us a safe and easy course amid the shocks and dangers of the world. Not for that is it that God gives us being, and calls us into fellowship with Himself. But I say that those whom this faith embraces "can no other"; they have not chosen it, it has chosen them; to live in its glory is their constant joy, to invite others to share it their privilege and delight. If we be appointed for this high service, let us see to it that we bear fruit, and that our fruit abide!

But, lastly, faith must clothe itself with form, and the election of truth carries with it already certain definite modes and conditions of fruitfulness. And the first of these is worship. No soul that has realised its dependence on the Author of its being, no child of God that has recognised its Father's love, can abide in solitary estrangement; it must seek alone or in the fellowship of the house of prayer to utter forth its gladness and its wants, and lay its hopes and cares, its failures and endeavours, within the sight of the All-merciful. And in such worship truth must be its determining power, and freedom its vital breath. These requisites are none of our choosing. They spring from the very essence of our religion. They are the only conditions under which we can know God and serve Him. If they have the result that they force us to part company at the church-door from the great mass of our fellow-believers within the Establishment, we may lament our exclusion from much that we admire, but we cannot seek admission except on terms that will enable us to preserve our own integrity. So long as that Church prescribes at its entrance the sacrament of baptism which attributes to water and the word a magical change in the very sentiments of God towards the unconscious babe; so long as it separates from the great body of its members an order of priests on which it claims to confer supernatural gifts which the ordinary layman cannot share; so long as it frames its ritual of prayer upon mediatorial assumptions that we deny, encourages by its use of the whole Psalter the unrebuked expression of sentiments of ferocity that are absolutely contrary to the spirit of Christ, or dishonours the Deity by requiring its clergy (for instance) to define Him in their prayer for fair weather as the "God who didst once drown all the world except eight persons"—so long we must repudiate its forms; we cannot habitually have part or lot in its services; we must remain where the truth has set us, able to welcome the ministry of the word from any soul under the wide heavens.

It is no joy to me to stand apart. When I study the mighty history of the Church of England, and note the share which, sometimes for evil but how much more often for good, it has claimed and enjoyed for so many centuries in the affections of our people; when I see the splendid labours of thousands of its clergy and their helpers in our great cities, or contemplate the magnificent expansion with which during the present age it has thrown its arms all round the globe—I acknowledge with deep admiration the immensity of its resources, the breadth of its aims, the beauty of much of its piety, the vastness of its opportunities for good. But not even for a share in such privileges will I ask it to recognise me when I reject nearly every article in its creeds, and when—even if I accepted their theological affirmations, I should still regard their authoritative imposition on the teacher of religion as a fundamental wrong to the independence of the soul. If ever a time should come when the aspiration of one of its modern champions should be realised,* and it should open its doors with "a comprehension so liberal and so wide that it denies inclusion to none who sincerely and religiously claim to be included," I shall rejoice if I can take my place within its ranks; but I know that this can only happen through the admission that all the existing conditions of its fellowship are after all but open questions, and the concession of liberty to each parish or congregation to frame its worship according to its needs.

But I may spare you these speculations, for it is sufficiently plain that such changes will not come in our day. And meanwhile for us the way is clear. The option lies between "the Institution" and the Truth. We cannot barter away our spiritual freedom for a place in any organisation, however noble; and if we must needs bear our modest fruit in the wilderness, why, that is our contribution to the great purpose which shall one day make the desert blossom as the rose. Only let us see to it that no languor or indifference starves it, no arrogance or self-satisfaction cankers it, no jealousies or distractions shrivel it. In steadfastness, humility, concord, are the conditions of our witness. To that witness we are called by obligations not of our own making. Through it lies according to our faith the way of service which God has appointed for us to our time. This is our place in the great warfare with ignorance and sin. Accept its difficulties blythely, they are God's tests of our integrity. Discharge its responsibilities untiringly, they are the discipline of our courage and our trust. So may the God of hope fill you with joy and peace in believing, "for of him and through him and unto him are all things, to him be the glory for ever," Amen.

* See a recent article in the Spectator on the "Future of the Church of England."

SCOTTISH SUNDAY SCHOOL CONFERENCE.

A CONFERENCE of Sunday-school teachers and others was held on Saturday, Nov. 25, in the Unitarian Christian Church, Dundee. The following delegates were present:—Aberdeen, the Rev. Alex. Webster, Misses Rosina F. Craigmill, and Isabella E. Falconer; Edinburgh, the Rev. R. B. Drummond, B.A., Mr. Alex. Godsell, Miss J. Noble, Miss A. Whytock; Glasgow—St. Mungo-street Church, the Rev. E. T. Russell, Mr. J. C. Hull, Mr. James McLeod, Miss McLeod, Mr. E. S. Thomson, Miss Thomson; St. Vincent-street Church, Mr. Jas. Graham, Mr. Gilbert Horton, Mr. Chas. Forsyth, Miss Nelly Ballantyne, Miss Elizabeth McCall; Kilmarnock, Mr. Peter Arrol, Mrs. Gibson, Miss Jane Black; Kirkcaldy, the Rev. A. Ernest Parry, Mrs. Parry, Miss M. Strachan, Miss M. G. Strachan, Mr. John Heggie, Mr. A. B. Melville; Dundee, Mr. James Smeaton, sen., Mr. James Smeaton, junr., Miss Jessie Smeaton, Miss Reid, Miss E. Walford, Miss E. Young, Mrs. Whamond, Miss Williamson, Mr. Robbie, Mrs. Robbie, Miss M. Leighton, Miss E. Odhner, Miss A. Smith, the Rev. H. Williamson.

There were also present Mr. C. H. Dandy, Mr. C. Meldrum, Mr. Alex. McGibbons, Mrs. Miller, Mr. R. Wighton, Mrs. Kuenen, Mr. Alex. Stewart, Mrs. Stewart, Mr. Ion Pritchard, hon. sec., S.S.A., and others.

After tea the meeting was presided over by Mr. JAMES GRAHAM, President of the Scottish Unitarian Association. He explained the purpose of the Conference which had been called by the aid of the McQuaker Trustees, and the Sunday-school Association with the view of establishing a Sunday School Union in Scotland. A resolution was unanimously adopted, appointing the Rev. A. E. Parry, of Kirkcaldy, convener of a committee formed from representatives of each school. This Committee will draw up a Constitution and rules for the proposed Union to be submitted to another meeting.

Mr. ION PRITCHARD read an interesting paper on "An Ideal Sunday-school."

A discussion followed.

The Rev. ALEX. WEBSTER, of Aberdeen, read a paper on "The Bible in the Sunday-school." Mr. Webster mentioned the way in which he had been instructed in Bible knowledge in his youth. If the Bible were to be used it ought to be in the hands of competent teachers, who would be very careful in what they presented to the scholars as facts.

A discussion followed, in which several speakers supported Mr. Webster's position.

The Rev. HENRY WILLIAMSON opened the subject of Mission Sunday-schools. Their schools in Scotland were more strictly congregational than in England. He advocated an effort to reach the children of the unchurched masses. An experiment had been tried in Dundee with some success. It was mentioned in the discussion that successful efforts had been made at South St. Mungo street, Glasgow, and at Kirkcaldy, in gathering in children during the week evenings.

The Conference closed with hymn and benediction.

The gathering afforded the friends in Scotland the first opportunity of seeing each other. Some of the delegates had travelled over 100 miles.

A SOCIAL GOSPEL.

MR. DAVID REES, of Pentre, who attended the recent autumnal meeting of the B. and F.U.A., at Bristol, writes to express his disappointment that, excellent as the meetings were, the acute social problems of the day were practically ignored. We cannot print the whole letter, but it concludes as follows:—

"The emphasis laid by the speakers on theological truths, and the absence of all reference—except a passing allusion in an impromptu address by Lady O'Hagan—to the social problems that beset us, and that call so loudly to all the Churches for a solution, was sadly disappointing to me. Mazzini has told us that every social problem is a moral problem, and every moral problem a religious problem. Yes, verily; for morality and religion must inevitably succumb to an empty stomach. Has not our own great preacher told us lately how it is almost impossible for a hungry man to be honest?"

"The great battles of our religion in the future will be fought on the field of these social questions, and any Church that refuses to apply itself to their solution inevitably condemns itself to sterility and decay. It will become a last year's nest on the boughs of the wide-spreading tree of the Kingdom of God. Length of creed, or theological truth, will not save it.

"That will be the fate of our Church or any other; they deserve no better. If all the Churches do not unite to find a solution to these vital social questions, a worse than Egyptian plague will befall them. That Church that applies itself heart and soul to remedy our social evils, and saves our people from their present hell of worldliness, drunkenness, poverty, and selfishness, has the future in the hollow of its hand."

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

CHRISTMAS APPEALS.

London: Portland Sunday School and Institute.—Miss Jennett Humphreys desires to thank senders of parcels in answer to her recent appeal, from Dorking, Brighton, and Liverpool, with which no names were sent.

Manchester Domestic Mission, Willert-street.—We have each year been enabled to cheer many homes and the lot of the children connected with our Mission (which is situated in one of the most sombre parts of Manchester) by the gifts of friends sent us to dispense at Christmas. But as this year finds us with larger numbers, we are hoping that our friends will help us more liberally by sending children's garments and toys, &c., suitable for a Christmas tree, or money to purchase. We are also much in need of left-off clothing for the very poor.—Rev. J. W. Bishop, Mission House, Willert-street, Manchester.

Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal-green, E.—The Rev. W. G. Cadman thanks the friends of the Mansford-street Church and Mission who have so kindly helped in former years, and again makes his Christmas appeal. He asks for donations and subscriptions to the Poor's Purse (which is generally replenished at this season of the year), and to the Christmas Fund. This latter provides the tea parties and most of the Christmas gifts for more than 300 Sunday-school scholars, the 'mothers' meetings Christmas party and that for congregation and parents. It also provides the Christmas entertainments and whatever expenses are needed for the Monday evening entertainments and lectures which are given in the winter months. Clothing, both new and discarded, is greatly needed, especially for men and women. Parcels may be addressed to Mrs. Cadman; donations should be sent to the Rev. W. G. Cadman, The Parsonage, Mansford-street, Bethnal-green, E.

Rhyl-street Mission, Kentish Town.—The Rev. J. Pollard writes:—Through your columns I once more appeal to subscribers and friends. Christmas and cold weather are now upon us, and the poor round and about the Mission at Rhyl-street, with its branch at Litcham-street, are looking forward to their usual treats, which give them such good cheer. The miserable condition of the poor people around the Missions I cannot gauge, after seventeen years active work and much study; the circle of influence each year becomes wider, and especially so with the heavily burdened. Many through your Missions have been taught to be more thrifty and self-reliant, and many other works have been performed in a quiet unostentatious way. I cannot dispense with the help of our kind friends, and I feel sure our good work will appeal to all and result in our receiving either a subscription or donation to enable me to give necessary aid to the deserving poor. Assistance towards helping to give the poor some enjoyment at this season will be greatly appreciated by all. I require more money to enable me to give the usual Christmas teas for our Sunday-school children, &c., and books and toys for prizes will also be gratefully received by Miss Anna Sharpe, The Grove, Hampstead, N.W.; or the Rev. Joseph Pollard, 90, Savernake road, N.W.

Birmingham: Church of the Messiah Domestic Mission.—The annual meeting was held Nov. 27, at the Church of the Messiah. Mr. T. H. Russell presided, and among those present were the Rev. L. P. Jacks, the Rev. T. Pipe (missionary), Councillor R. F. Martineau, Dr. James Russell, Messrs. E. H. Lee (hon. treasurer), W. B. Kenrick (hon. secretary), H. K. Beale, T. H. Ryland, and a number of ladies. The fifty-fifth annual report of the committee recorded that the work of the mission had been carried on during the past year with unabated energy and success. The missionary (Mr. Pipe) had been invited by the committee of the Manchester College, Oxford, to deliver a course of eight lectures on missionary work to the students. The treasurer's report showed that the total receipts for the year were £498 3s. 7d., and the total expenditure £482 9s. 7d., leaving a balance in hand of £15 14s. The missionary's report gave a satisfactory account of the various agencies connected with the mission, the work done during the year being described in detail. The three aims of the mission were to cope with religious destitution, to meet social need, and to assist in the alleviation of the sadness and friendlessness of poverty. They had succeeded in obtaining 258 families of the poor on their congregational roll, and through their different agencies they had obtained a great hold on the children. They had instituted a people's drawing-room, which had proved to be a great success.—On the motion of the Chairman, seconded by Councillor Martineau, the reports were adopted.

Boston.—The service in the Unitarian Chapel, Spain-lane, last Sunday evening was conducted by the Rev. J. Freeston, of Nottingham, who, taking for his subject, "Glorious Truths for the Twentieth Century," preached a most earnest and eloquent sermon, which was listened to with great interest by all present.

Bridport.—A series of lantern services has been held in the schoolroom for the last four Sunday evenings from eight to nine o'clock. The attendance on each occasion has been very good—quite as large as the room will comfortably accommodate—and the earnest and reverential spirit all that could be wished. The slides chosen illustrated "The Parable of the Sower," "The Story of Joseph and his Brethren," "The Stories of Samuel, Saul, and David," "The First Two Chapters of the Book of Ruth," "The Reign of King Solomon," "The Twenty-third Psalm," and "The Parable of the Prodigal Son." Great difficulty was experienced in finding suitable hymns with popular tunes, those offered for hire in the ordinary way being mainly taken from Sankey's "Songs and Solos," and very frequently, for one reason or other, quite unsuited to our worship. Children were not specially invited to these evening services; indeed, their attendance was rather discouraged, and they constituted but a small minority in the whole congregation, but those who did manage to find their way in were so interested and attentive that a plan is being considered for darkening the windows of the school and holding scholars' afternoon lantern services.

Dundee.—The anniversary services of the Unitarian Christian Church were held on Sunday, Nov. 26. In the forenoon the Rev. Henry Williamson delivered a discourse bearing upon the completion of the twenty-ninth year of the occupancy of the building. They had not ceased to have faith in the success of the Unitarian cause. The afternoon service was held in connection with the Sunday-school. Mr. Ion Pritchard, hon. sec. of the Sunday School Association, delivered an interesting and most instructive address based upon the word "Chivalry." Mr. Pritchard had brought a large sheet of paper with the word printed in large blue letters. He succeeded in keeping the attention of the youngest children in showing how they might practice true "chivalry." The conference and the presence of Mr. Pritchard on Sunday for once removed from Dundee the feeling of entire isolation, which is the unavoidable lot of the brethren there.

Framlingham and Bedford.—Mr. W. H. Shrubsole, F.G.S., preached at Bedford on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 19, and at Framlingham in the evening. The Rev. H. J. Lawson assisted at the evening service. On Monday evening Mr. Shrubsole lectured on "Swiss Scenery." The lecture was of a most interesting character, and over 100 magnificent pictures were shown. The Rev. J. Holmes Pilkington, M.A. (rector), presided. Mr. Brooks gave free use of the Corn Hall, and rendered other valuable assistance. Messrs. Simpson Bros. gave use of lantern services free. The proceeds were given to new heating and lighting arrangements for the Old Meeting, and other gifts have been received from members to complete the renovation.

Gloucester.—The two days' bazaar towards the liquidation of the debt incurred in the structural alterations of the Barton-street Chapel was opened in the school-room on Wednesday week by Mr. Charles W. Jones, J.P., of Liverpool, and President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. The Rev. W. Lloyd, in welcoming Mr. Jones, and expressing gratitude for the kind response he had given to the Church's invitation to perform the ceremony of opening, added that it was a perfectly genuine and honest sale of work, and not a fancy fair or gala. Mr. Jones said he had already, as President of the Association, opened a bazaar, and had been attacked by his wife for his apparent violation of his principles, but as he grew older he felt he was not so sure that people did not put their prejudices forward and call them principles. While objecting to a great bazaar, however, he did not object in the least to a sale of work, for he thought it was an excellent opportunity to those who could not give money to a charitable object to give their handiwork. Such bazars did a great deal of good, and it therefore gave him great pleasure to open their bazaar that afternoon. He was very pleased that they had improved their chapel, because he did not think they could have anything too beautiful in their worship. If they cared for their religion, for their minister, for their services, they ought to get the best they could and do everything with enthusiasm. Referring to the assistance which Gloucester Unitarians received from other religious bodies, he did not believe they would ever arrive—certainly not in our time, or in the next century—at that comprehensive, inclusive church which was going to take them all in. He hoped it might come, but he did not think it would. Still they could arrive at a state of toleration without it, and agree to differ and see the good which existed in all churches. A great want at the present time was not knowledge—although that was wanted—or perfection of views, but sincerity in the inward parts, sincerity in inward matters as in worldly matters. They ought not to compromise. They must all have differences of opinion, but he hoped the churches would more and more endeavour to live in harmony with each other. Speaking of the object of the bazaar, Mr. Jones said he liked to see churches get into debt, but not remain in it, and added that he thought nothing of a charity which reached the end of its year without a balance on the wrong side. He did not think it was a true charity, a charity which had money and did not spend it. The ceremony concluded with votes of thanks to Mr. Jones and the ladies who provided the articles for sale, proposed by Mr. Croxford, and seconded by Mr. Washbourne. The Rev. W. Lloyd, in inviting Mrs. Ashbee to open the bazaar on Thursday, referred to the services rendered to the congregation by the late Mr. Ashbee and his family, and expressed the pleasure it gave them to see Mrs. Ashbee there. Mrs. Ashbee, in a few well-chosen words, declared the sale open, and hoped the result would exceed their expectations. A vote of thanks to Mrs. Ashbee was proposed by Mr. N. Burge, and seconded by Mrs. Lloyd. The receipts for the two days amounted to £59; subscriptions from members and friends of the congregation will bring the fund up to £240 less expenses, leaving a deficit of £150, which it is hoped will be still further reduced by the end of the year. (See Advertisement.)

Guildford.—Nov. 24 brought a delightful evening to the members of the choir and many of their friends, when Mr. F. G. Lemare, the organist at our church, generously and most hospitably invited them all to supper at the Imperial Restaurant. It is needless to say that everything passed off pleasantly, for this was a result that Mr. Lemare's thoughtful kindness could not fail to attain.

London: Little Portland-street (Appointment).—The Rev. H. S. Perris, M.A., has accepted an invitation to become the minister of this chapel for the year 1900. Mr. Perris has also been appointed superintendent of the Portland Sunday-school and Institute, Little Titchfield-street. The services at Little Portland-street will be conducted until the new year by the following ministers:—Dec. 3, Rev. Henry Gow, of Leicester; Dec. 10, Professor J. Estlin Carpenter; Dec. 17, Rev. P. H. Wicksteed; Dec. 24 (morning service only), Rev. F. H. Jones; Dec. 31, Rev. F. H. Jones. A collection in aid of the chapel funds will be taken at the close of every service, morning and evening. The Rev. H. S. Perris, M.A., will commence his ministry on Sunday, Jan. 7.

London: Stratford.—The Sunday-school anniversary sermons were preached to good congregations by the Rev. F. Allen, on Sunday, Nov. 19. On the following Wednesday the thirtieth anniversary church meeting was held, presided over by Dr. Blake Odgers. The report, read by the secretary, Mr. W. J. Hawkins, showed that the work of the church and kindred institutions was being successfully carried on, and referred with pleasing results to the settlement of Mr. Lucking Tavenor as lay-worker under the Rev. T. E. M. Edwards, minister in charge. The treasurer's report showed a balance in hand of £131.25d. Encouraging addresses were given by Dr. Blake Odgers, the Revs. R. H. U. Bloor, T. E. M. Edwards, H. Woods Perris, and Mr. Tavenor. After the customary votes of thanks, a very successful meeting was closed with the Benediction, pronounced by the Rev. R. H. U. Bloor.

London: Sydenham.—The special Sunday evening services which commenced on Sunday last, at the Public Hall, Kirkdale, Sydenham, attracted a good congregation. The hall, which seats about 120, was full, and great interest was manifested in the address delivered by Mr. Bowie. At the close there was quite a rush for literature, especially for those pamphlets which explained our position and principles. Unitarian friends from the neighbourhood rendered good service by their presence and help, and it is hoped that they will still strengthen our hands in this new movement.

London Unitarian Bazaar, Essex Church Stall.—In aid of the above a most successful concert recently took place, realising the substantial sum of £60. Mr. and Mrs. G. Henschel not only lent their house on the occasion, but, with their daughter and other artistes, gave their services and delighted the audience with an excellent programme of vocal and instrumental music, while to Mrs. Bailey, of Clarendon-road, is due the organisation and the arrangements for the concert. Grateful expressions of appreciation have been forwarded to Mr. and Mrs. Henschel and Mrs. Bailey.

Manchester: Sale.—A guild has been formed among the members of this church. It aims at reaching those who are outside the usual pale of church work, and seeks in the first place by the promotion of discussion and inquiry to aid in the advancement of social and philanthropic ideals. Hence an entirely unsectarian name has been chosen, and it is known simply as the Side Social Guild. The session commenced by a social evening on Nov. 15, when the general objects and methods of the guild were explained and the arrangements for the session set forth. The first public meeting took the form of a lantern lecture, entitled "Homes and Hovels," which dealt with the housing problem in our great cities. Some startling revelations of slums and slum life, and of the evil effects of the landlord system were shown by means of photographs. As a contrast, and as showing what can be done in the way of providing pleasant, healthful and artistic workmen's dwellings, pictures were shown of model cottages at Port Sunlight, Aintree and elsewhere. The lecturer was Mr. R. B. Byles, of Leeds who has made a special study of the housing question, and is at present assisting in a campaign which is being conducted against insanitary and unsuitable dwellings in that city. The lecturer strongly urged that the true remedy for this fearful evil is to be found in the public authorities securing land and themselves building suitable dwellings thereon. The guild is exceptionally fortunate in having the entire sympathy and co-operation of the minister, the Rev. James Forrest, M.A. Mr. Forrest preached on the previous Sunday as an introduction to the lecture mentioned above a sermon from the significant text, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." He uttered a strong and eloquent appeal for the thoughtful consideration of one of the most pressing social problems of the day. One of the surest test of the practical nature of our Christianity, he said, was to be found in our attitude toward those social problems that closely touch caste prejudice. Dealing with the conditions under which the people in our great cities are condemned to live, he said that to deprive a moral being of physical necessities was to take from him also hope and courage and aspiration. By condemning man to a brutal existence he was degraded below the level of the brute. So long as the evils existing to-day were allowed to continue, so long were they deliberately bidding defiance to the first law of Christian life. While slum property continued to deface and deform our civilisation, while rents and riches were considered of more consequence than human health and happiness, while people of any class were allowed to live under unhealthy, unnatural, and indecent conditions, no matter how Christian our professions might be, we were guilty of the monstrous iniquity of condemning to worse than homelessness the only Christ of our time. That was not the time or the place to discuss means and methods of solving any social problem, but in view of the principles that were supposed to be the essence of Christianity, it would be better to disclaim their professed religion than to allow any interest or expense to take precedence over human health and hope and happiness—in short, over human life.

Mossley.—The re-union of past and present scholars of the Christian Sunday-school, held on Saturday, Nov. 18, was as usual a great occasion, the company numbering over 500, but an element of sadness mingled with the pleasure of the evening from the knowledge that Mr. James Rhodes, the only surviving trustee of the Christian Church, and for fifty years conductor of the choir, was lying on his death bed. On the following morning Mr. Rhodes passed away, being in his seventy-ninth year. A native of Mossley, he went as a boy to the Methodist New Connection Sunday-school, and in 1840 became a teacher. On the division of 1851, under Joseph Barker's influence, he was one of the founders of the Christian Church, in which his musical gifts, inherited from his father, were of great service. For many years he was a member of the Mossley Choral Society, and was a diligent student of the Mechanic's Institute in its earliest days. The funeral service on Wednesday week was conducted by the Rev. T. R. Elliott, who, on the following Sunday morning, preached a memorial sermon, and at the service special commemorative music was sung.

Norwich.—We are glad to note that Mr. I. M. Wade has been elected a member of the School Board.

Peckham.—On Sunday last (Temperance Sunday) the morning service in the Avondale-road Church was conducted by Mr. J. Bredall (hon. sec. Essex Hall Temperance Association), who preached an admirable sermon on "Moral Responsibility" to an evidently interested audience. In the evening the Rev. G. Carter addressed a good assembly, including a fair proportion of strangers, on the words "For their sake I consecrate myself." Collections were taken on behalf of the Avondale Band of Hope, and copies of Rev. R. A. Armstrong's sermon, issued by the Essex Hall Temperance Association, were distributed at the close of each service.

Poole.—The first of the series of social evenings was given in the Unitarian Schoolroom on Wednesday, Nov. 22, when a very enjoyable evening was spent, there being selections of music, songs, games, &c., and the following ladies and gentlemen took part:—Misses Hulton, J. Bayley, S. and F. Bayley, and E. Little also the Rev. E. S. Anthony, and Messrs. Sear, Moss, Travers, and A. and W. Bayley, and R. Belben. During the evening refreshments were handed round.

Preston.—The congregation at Preston have just forwarded to the Rev. Joseph Harrison, their late minister, who resigned the pulpit a short time ago on account of ill-health, a sum of £175 which they have subscribed for his benefit and as a token of their regard and of their sympathy with him in his trouble. Thanks also to the kindness of the ministers of neighbouring congregations, who are supplying the pulpit free of charge, the Preston congregation are being enabled to continue Mr. Harrison's salary for a period of six months from the date of his resignation.

Rotherham.—On Tuesday, Nov. 21, a lecture was given to the Literary and Social Union of the Church of our Father, by the Rev. C. Peach on "The Holiday Camp in Derbyshire," illustrated by lime-light views. The lecture was greatly enjoyed, and after a cordial vote of thanks a collection was made for the building fund of the Holiday Home.

Stratford-on-Avon (Appointment).—Mr. B. Burton Betham has accepted an invitation to the ministry of the Free Christian Church.

The Essex Hall Temperance Association.—Under the auspices of this society, an address on "How to retain our Children as Abstainers" was delivered on Thursday, Nov. 23, by the Rev. W. C. Pope, in the schoolroom of Wansworth Unitarian Church, the Rev. W. G. Tarrant occupying the chair. In the course of his address, Mr. Pope pointed out that if it was felt a necessity for children to join Bands of Hope, it was equally a necessity for them to remain total abstainers when grown up. The perils and pitfalls of drinking customs were most dangerous to those emerging from childhood and forming habits of life. It was an awful thing to realise that a large proportion of the community should be able to say to Temperance reformers, "You call us up to your bar of justice and tell us we are charged with rioting, with drunkenness, with idle habits and want of thrift; but let us tell you—no mother ever prayed with us, no father ever pointed out to us the evils of vice and crime." The example set by parents was a great factor for good or evil, and when Temperance workers had to battle against that their efforts were thwarted. A discussion followed, in which Mr. T. Pallister Young, Mr. F. A. Edwards, Mr. R. Montford, Mr. A. H. Briggs, and Mr. J. Bredall took part, and the proceedings were varied by music, singing, and recitations contributed by friends.

Wakefield.—The annual school sermons were preached in Westgate Chapel on Sunday last, Nov. 26, by the Rev. Christopher J. Street, LL.B., of Bolton. The subjects dealt with were most appropriate and ably treated; the attendance at both services was large and the collections highly satisfactory. On the following evening the annual congregational soirée was held in the Sunday-school, when fully 150 persons sat down to tea. At the subsequent meeting the Rev. Andrew Chalmers, who presided, briefly reviewed various activities of the church during the past year, and referred to its gains and losses. Mr. George Webster, J.P., proposed a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Street for his kindness in visiting Wakefield and for his impressive and helpful sermons of the previous day, this being seconded by Mr. P. F. Booth, editor of the Leeds Times. References were also made to the great loss sustained by the congregation through the death of Mr. Marriott, of Sandal Grange, who had helped the congregation munificently for many years, and left a large bequest to increase the endowment. Mr. Street, in responding, spoke of the evil results arising from the abuse of authority and the spread of the sacerdotal spirit. The Rev. E. Ceredig Jones, of Bradford, also delivered a genial and helpful address. The rest of the evening was occupied by an excellent programme of music by the choir and musical friends who had kindly come to assist, and the gathering was in every respect enjoyable and successful.

We cannot tell what shall be on the morrow, but we can choose what we ourselves will be. We can resolve to live faithfully whatever betides. We can walk with the bright angels and wrestle with the dark ones, and enter the flying hours to leave a blessing behind.—N. L. Frothingham.

Do not show forth your piety by a gloomy, severe, constrained manner. "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty." If once you love Him with all your soul, you will almost always be cheerful and light-hearted; but if you seek Him only in a Judaical spirit of fear, you will not find Him, but you will find constraint and trouble instead. Be a kind, obliging, frank, helpful friend; it will win others and lessen opposition.—Fénelon.

You will never lose God, so long as you are throwing your whole strength against the evil within you and toward the highest fidelity you know. He may elude your thought; your emotion may not consciously stir toward Him, but He has hold of your hand.—G. S. Merriam.

A lowly spirit God has consecrated
As His abiding rest;
An angel by some patriarch's tent hath waited
When Kings had no such guest.

—Anon.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, December 3.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Bermondsey, Fort-road, Upper Grange-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. HAROLD RILEY.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. T. W. FRECKELTON.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS.
Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. WOODS PERRIS.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.
Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Revs. BROOKE HERFORD, D.D., and EDGAR DAPLYN. Minister's Class after Morning Service.
Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. DAWES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D.
Kentish Town, Free Christian Church, Chatham-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. A. FARQUHARSON. Morning, "The Fruit of the Spirit." Evening, "Unseen Manna."
Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. STROONG.
Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. C. POPE.
Little Portland-street Chapel, near Oxford-circus, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. HENRY GOW.
Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. CADMAN.
Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. CARTER.
Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.
Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., and 3 P.M., Service for Children, Rev. S. FARRINGTON.
Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M., Mr. CARLIER, and 7 P.M., Mr. LUCKING TAVENER, "Songs in Trees."
Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.
Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Mr. T. ELLIOT.
Sydenham Public Hall, Kirkdale, Sydenham, 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A., "The Hebrew and Christian Scriptures."
Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M., Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A., and 7 P.M., Rev. BIPIN C. PAL.
Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BALSALL HEATH INSTITUTE: OUR FATHER'S CHURCH, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. J. SNEATH.
BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. AUSTIN.
BEDFORD, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. ROWLAND HILL.
BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
BLACKPOOL, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
BLACKPOOL, Unitarian Lay Church, Masonic Hall, Waterloo-road, South Shore, 6.30 P.M.
BOOTLE, Free Church, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. W. HAWKES.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. COE.
BRIGHTON, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road, North-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.
BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. GEORGE STREET.
CANTERBURY, Blackfriars, 11 A.M.
DEAL and WALMER Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. SHAKESPEARE.
DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 1 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. BURROWS.
EASTBOURNE, Lismore-road, Termin-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. ST. CLAIR.
GUILDFORD, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. S. LANG BUCKLAND.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. MARTEN.
LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.
LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M., Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. COBDEN SMITH.
LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. J. JUPP.
LIVERPOOL, Uilet-road, Sefton Park, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. KLEIN.
MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. FORREST.
MANCHESTER, Strangeways, 10.20 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
MARGATE, Forester's Hall (Side Entrance), Union-crescent, 11 A.M., Rev. E. HILLIER.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. J. E. CARPENTER, M.A.
PORTSMOUTH, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. THOMAS BOND.
PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. COSENS PRIOR.
RAMSGATE, Assembly Rooms, High-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. HILLIER.
READING, Unitarian Free Church, London-road, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. A. VOYSEY, B.A.
SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. WELBELOVED.
SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. R. C. DENDY. Stables in the grounds
TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Mr. S. FIELD.
YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. RAWLINGS, M.A.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant Unitarian Church, Hout-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY, STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN-SQUARE, S.W.—Dec. 3rd, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "The Ethical Aspect of the Law of the 'Survival of the Fittest.'"

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY, SOUTH-PLACE, FINSBURY.—Dec. 3rd, at 11.15, JOHN M. ROBERTSON, "Cromwell and Imperialism."

POSTAL MISSION RELIGIOUS CONFERENCE NEXT SUNDAY AFTER-NOON at COLLEGE CHAPEL, STEPNEY-GREEN, at Five o'clock. "The Religious Luck of the Nineteenth Century." Opened by Mr. LUICK-TAVENER INC. Tea at Six o'clock. All welcome.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. W. STODDART, B.A., is at LIBERTY to take occasional Sunday duty.—30, West Bank, Stamford-hill, London, N.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D. DAVIS, Fairfield High School, Liverpool.

BIRTHS.

BARNES—On the 20th Nov., at 3, Holmdale-road, West Hampstead, N.W., the wife of Edwin H. S. Barnes, of twin daughters.

DEATHS.

RHODES—On the 19th Nov., at Mossley, James Rhodes, aged 78 years.

"THE INQUIRER" CALENDAR.

SUNDAY SERVICES are advertised at a charge of 10s. per year, prepaid, a space of two lines being given to each announcement; extra lines are charged 4d. each. Orders can be sent for a portion of the year, not less than thirteen weeks, at the same rate. Calendar Notices not prepaid £1 the year. Single Announcements 6d. per line. All information as to the change of preachers should reach the Office not later than Thursday.

Essex Hall, Strand, W.C.

Books for Christmas Presents.

Our London friends are invited to visit the BOOK ROOM OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION AT ESSEX HALL, to inspect the varied Stock of Books suitable for Prizes, Libraries, or Presentation, on show.

In addition to the Publications of the Association, the Stock consists of a Selection of the best Books published by the General Trade.

A Special Catalogue of Presentation Volumes for Young People will be ready in a few days, and will be sent post free on application.

London: THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

NOW READY.

POCKET ALMANAC FOR 1900.

Containing a List of Ministers and Churches, Diary for each Week and Month, Cash Account Pages, &c. Tuck, gilt edges, 1s. net, by post 1s. 1d.

JESS: BITS OF WAYSIDE GOSPEL. By JENKIN LLOYD JONES, of Chicago. 320 pp. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The story giving the title to the volume is an account of the life and death of a horse once owned by the Author. These sermon-talks are all on out-of-door subjects, the love of Nature, her influence over man's spiritual life, and other similar themes.

THE STORY OF THE BIBLE, from the Standpoint of Modern Scholarship. By WALTER L. SHELDON. 181 pp., Crown 8vo, paper cover, 1s. 6d. net; by post, 1s. 8d.

London: PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-st., Strand, W.C.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE, COVENTRY-STREET, W.

A MATINEE PERFORMANCE of A MID-SUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM will be given at the above Theatre (kindly lent by Mr. J. H. Leigh), in aid of the Funds of the LONDON UNITARIAN BAZAAR, on TUESDAY, January 16th, 1900, under the direction of Mr. Herbert Lawford and Mr. J. H. Leigh.

Doors open at 2 o'clock. To commence at 2.30.

Price of Tickets:—Private boxes, £2 2s. to £4 4s.; stalls, 10s. 6d.; balcony (first two rows), 7s. 6d. (other rows), 6s.; upper circle (reserved), 4s.; pit, 2s. 6d.; gallery, 1s.

Tickets can be obtained from any member of the Entertainment Committee; at the various Unitarian Churches, or at Essex Hall, where a plan of the reserved seats can be seen, or from Mr. HERBERT LAWFORD, 28, Nightingale-lane, Balham, S.W.

The Private Boxes can only be obtained from Mr. Lawford.

AS COMPANION or LADY HOUSE-KEEPER.—Lady seeks engagement as above. End of January. Town or country. Good references.—E. P., 55, Highbury New Park, N.

SCOTCH TWEEDS and SERGES at Mill Prices, Ladies' or Gents'; best quality only. Patterns post free; orders carriage paid.—Geo. McLeod & Sons, Hawick, N.B.

FREDK. LONG & SON,
AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS
4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

Correspondents are requested to note that to be sure of insertion the same week, news must reach the Office by the first post on Thursday at latest, and the earlier in the week the better.

Schools, etc.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE for GIRLS, Bristol Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

PRINCIPAL—MISS RAILY.

HEADMISTRESS—MISS ELEANOR MOSS, B.A. Hons.

A limited number of Boarders taken at residence of Principal.

The College, which is opposite the residence, has accommodation for 120 pupils. Lawn tennis, gymnasium, asphalt playground.

The Curriculum is based on the Cambridge Examination regulations, and resident pupils have the advantage of Public School life combined with home comforts.

Application to Secretary, Miss S. AWDRY.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, SOUTH MARINE TERRACE, ABERYSTWITH.

PRINCIPAL ... MRS. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

SCHOOL FOR GIRLS AND LITTLE BOYS.—CONAMUR, SANDGATE, KENT.

PRINCIPALS:—Miss JARVIS and Miss CLARA BERRY.

Good House, close to the sea; south aspect.

Reference kindly permitted to T. GROSVENOR LEE, Esq., Clent, near Stourbridge; JOHN HEYWOOD, Esq., The Pike, Bolton, &c.

THE WARREN, KNUTSFORD.

PRINCIPAL:

MRS. W. CARRINGTON WHITELEGGE.

Excellent individual TUITION and Home Care for the daughters of cultivated parents who would appreciate unusual advantages for Music and Languages.

HOME FOR HEALTH CULTURE, THE FIRS, BROMYARD, HEREFORDSHIRE

This Home provides a course of Systematic Daily Exercise, combined with regular outdoor life and occupation, for Ladies and Children who are not in normal health. The exercises are given in a Gymnasium fitted with Swedish apparatus, and consist of Ling's Swedish Movements. Special treatment is given for Spinal Curvature, Anæmia, Hysteria, Indigestion, Neuralgia, &c.

For further particulars, apply to The Principal Miss JESSIE BAKER (trained by Mme. Bergmon, Osterberg).

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.

Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21, Mincing-lane, E.C.

Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.

MISS ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.

STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, 151, Brixton-road, S.W., and Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made. Monthly repayment, including principal, premium and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years, 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.; 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

Forest Gate Unitarian Church.A SALE OF WORK

will be held on WEDNESDAY and THURSDAY,
DECEMBER 13th and 14th,
in aid of the CHURCH FUNDS.

A variety of Useful Articles, with some choice
Fancy Goods, Needlework, Carvings, &c., will be offered. Contributions are earnestly invited, and may be sent to Mrs. PERRIS, 180, Upton-lane, or
Mrs. JOSE, 15, Osborne-road (Forest Gate).

Mrs. ALFRED LAWRENCE will open the Sale on the First Day, at 3 o'clock.

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms
moderate.—Mrs. ROBERT TURNER, 94, Grosvenor-
road, S.W.

BOARD and RESIDENCE, South of England. Healthy neighbourhood. Home
comforts. Seven miles from Brighton, near South
Downs. Station Hassocks (on main line L.B.S.C.).—
Miss ROWLAND, Gothic House, Hurstpierpoint.

BOARDING HOUSE.—THE FELL,
TROUTBECK, WINDERMERE, is situated 550 feet above sea level, and about 2½ miles from the station at Windermere. Every home comfort.
Moderate terms.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West
Cliff, BOARDING-ESTABLISHMENT.
Univalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table.
Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade.
Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and
Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable
private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea;
sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address,
Miss CHALDECOTT, Stirling House, Manor-road.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59,
Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and
RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated.
Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL,

Proprietor, FREDERIC SMITH.

Recently enlarged, remodelled and refurnished,
now affording

ACCOMMODATION FOR ABOUT 250 GUESTS.

The best patronised TEMPERANCE HOTEL in London. Highly commended by leading
Unitarian Ministers.

Spacious Coffee, Reading, and Drawing Rooms.
Electric Light. Lift.

Apartments, 1/6 to 2/6. Breakfast, 1/3 to 2/-.
Service, 9d.

77 & 101,

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON, W.C.

Telegrams: "QUIETUDE, LONDON."

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.

SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.
INVESTED FUNDS, £10,000,000

Number of Accounts, 85,094.

TWO AND A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST
allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT
ACCOUNTS on the minimum monthly balances,
when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold for Customers.

SAVINGS' DEPARTMENT.

SMALL DEPOSITS received and INTEREST
allowed MONTHLY on each completed £1.

The BIRKBECK ALMANAC, with full particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

ASSOCIATION SUNDAY.

NOVEMBER 19, 1899.

The TREASURER (Mr. Oswald Nettlefold), on behalf of the COMMITTEE of the BRITISH and FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION, acknowledge, with thanks, the following Collections received up to Nov. 29th:

	£	s.	d.
FIRST LIST.
Aberdare: Old Meeting House (June) .	1	11	6
Ainsworth	5	7	8
Allt-y-placa	1	9	0
Barnard Castle	0	5	0
Billingshurst	0	16	4
Birkenhead	2	15	4
Birmingham: Newhall Hill (April) ..	1	13	7
Blackpool: Lay Church	0	14	4
Boston (Feb.)	0	11	9
Bournemouth	5	15	9
Bradford (March)	4	7	6
Bridport	2	11	5
Brighton	3	0	2
Burnley	3	2	0
Buxton	0	13	4
Caernarvon	0	7	6
Capel-y-Bryn	1	11	0
Capel-y-Fadfa	1	11	6
Cape Town (June)	5	1	0
Cardiff	2	4	5
Carmarthen	0	17	0
Chatham	2	0	8
Chelmsford	0	7	0
Cheltenham	1	5	2
Chester	2	7	3
Chichester	0	13	6
Choppington	0	7	0
Chowbent	9	9	0
Ciliau	0	14	3
Cirencester	1	0	0
Clifton (including Autumnal Meeting) ..	16	0	4
Colne	1	9	0
Crewkerne	1	14	8
Croft	1	4	0
Crumlin	1	8	6
Cuddeford, Mr. Robert, of Exeter ..	1	1	0
Cullompton	0	7	6
Cwmbach	0	13	4
Eastbourne	1	5	0
Evesham	2	0	0
Guildford	1	1	9
Horsham	2	10	8
Hull (Jan.)	3	10	0
Hyde: Boston Mills (Jan.)	0	5	0
Ikeston	0	14	0
Kilmarock	1	5	0
Kings Lynn	0	13	8
Knutsford	2	16	6
Lancaster	2	17	6
Leigh	1	14	0
Liverpool:—Ullet-road Church	93	10	1
Hope-street Church	11	8	9
Llandyssul	1	10	0
Llwynrhadowen	1	0	0
London:—Highgate	3	17	9
Islington	11	4	10
Kentish Town	3	6	2
Mansford-street	0	10	2
Plumstead	1	0	0
Rhyl-street	0	6	6
Stoke Newington Green	3	14	9
Walthamstow	0	10	0
Wandsworth	2	5	0
Welsh Services	0	10	6
Wood Green	3	6	11
Longsight (Feb.)	1	10	9
Lydgate	1	3	8
Macclesfield	2	6	0
Merthyr Tydfil	1	11	3
Moretonhampstead	0	16	0
Newbury	0	19	6
Newport	1	7	6
Norwich	2	0	8
Nottingham: Christ Church	1	10	6
Padham	1	1	0
Pantdefaid	2	0	0
Pepperhill	1	0	0
Pontypridd	0	17	10
Rhydygwin	1	0	0
Rivington	3	3	10
Scarborough	2	10	9
Sheffield:—Upper Chapel	11	9	3
Shepton Mallet (March)	1	3	0
Ditto (Nov.)	0	13	6
Sidmouth	1	17	6
Southampton (April)	1	0	0
Southend-on-Sea	0	10	0
Stannington	1	13	6
Sunderland (Jan.)	0	10	0
Ditto (Nov.)	0	4	0
Swinton	1	4	5
Todmorden	2	2	0

	£	s.	d.
Torquay	1	17	0
Trowbridge (April)	1	1	0
Tunbridge Wells	1	13	4
Whitechurch	0	16	6
Wick, near Bridgend	0	10	0
Total	£300	8	0

NEWBURY PRESBYTERIAN CHAPEL RENOVATION FUND.

The Committee urgently appeal for further subscriptions towards the above fund, and thankfully acknowledge the following:—

	£	s.	d.
Amount already advertised	129	9	7
Mr. Jos. Wristbridge	0	5	0
Rev. E. Turland	1	1	0
Mr. Charles Thomas	1	1	0
Mrs. E. G. Holt	5	0	0

Subscriptions should be sent to the minister, the Rev. E. TURLAND, Charlton-villas, Newbury, or to Mr. T. H. STILLMAN, 133, Bartholomew-street, Newbury.

MATTHEW HENRY'S CHAPEL,
CHESTER.*SUPPLEMENTARY STATEMENT.

During the progress of the work it was found that dry-rot had got into the floors of the Vestry
and the Gallery, involving their entire renewal.
Other matters were also discovered that required reconstruction for the safety and soundness of the Building. These have added £100 to £150 to the original estimates. It was deemed better to have all done at once, and so completely restore the old chapel that further repairs shall not be needed for many years. Instead of £750, as originally estimated, the restorations will cost about £900 (with extras and architect's commission). Rather over £600 have already been generously promised; and the Committee confidently appeal to the known liberality of Unitarian and other friends at home
and in America, for the further sum required to complete the Restoration of Matthew Henry's venerable and historic chapel, in every way worthy of its 200th anniversary in 1900.

	£	s.	d.
Amount already acknowledged	612	15	0
H. R.	1	0	0

Donations sent to the Rev. H. D. ROBERTS,
Brook Lodge, or Mr. WM. ORRETT, 15, Foregatestreet, Chester, will be duly and gratefully acknowledged.

BARTON-STREET CHAPEL, GLOUCESTER.*BI-CENTENARY FUND FOR EXTINCTION OF THE DEBT.

	£	s.	d.
Amount already acknowledged	169	2	0
Bazaar, Nov. 22 and 23	71	2	8
Mrs. Field	1	0	0
Richard Eve, Esq.	2	2	0
H. Woolcott Thompson, Esq.	1	1	0
Mrs. Biss	0	10	6
T. Farber, Esq.	1	1	0
Rev. H. Austin	0	10	0
Mrs. Harris	1	0	0
Anonymous	0	5	0

£150 is still required. Donations will be thankfully received by Mr. J. WAREING, Treasurer, 138, Westgate; Mr. WALTER HORSLEY, Secretary,
Weston-road; Rev. WALTER LLOYD, The Hollies, Gloucester.

LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL SOCIETY.

The ANNUAL SOCIAL GATHERING of TEACHERS and ELDER SCHOLARS will be held at ESSEX HALL on SATURDAY, Dec. 16.

F. W. LAWRENCE, Esq., M.A., will preside.

Tea at 6 P.M. Music, &c., 7 P.M.

ALEX. BARNES, } Hon. Secs.
HAROLD WADE, }

RE-ENGAGEMENT desired as
HOUSEKEEPER or similar post. Widow, not young; 3 years with Gentleman.—Mrs.
MAYNARD, The Oaks, Wythenshawe-road, Sale, Cheshire.

TAKE CARE

when drinking Cocoa, to have the pure article only, as many so-called "Pure" Cocos contain added matter that is not only unnecessary, but often positively harmful.

CADBURY'S COCOA

IS ABSOLUTELY PURE

and untampered with, and can be taken with the greatest benefit in Childhood, in Youth, or in Old Age.

THE BRITISH MEDICAL JOURNAL—Article on "Drugged Foods," June 4th, 1898—says:

"There is a general consensus of opinion that the addition of active drugs, belonging to the classes of nervine stimulants, to beverages and articles of dietary in ordinary domestic use is not for the benefit of the community, and is likely in time to produce a deterioration of the public health. At the present moment we are beset by another danger arising from the addition of kola to certain articles of food. Kola has been found on analysis to contain 2·13 per cent of caffeine. Caffeine is undoubtedly a useful drug when employed in suitable cases and in appropriate doses, but if taken habitually in large quantities it is capable of inducing an undesirable condition of over-stimulation of the nerve-centres."

CADBURY'S COCOA is absolutely Pure, and "a Perfect Food."

ALWAYS INSIST on having CADBURY'S—sold only in Packets and Tins—as other Cocos are sometimes substituted for the sake of extra profit.

Will make a SUITABLE CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

—o—
NOW READY.

A NIGHT WITH JESUS.

A DREAM STORY.

By J. L. HAIGH.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

(Special terms to all engaged in Domestic Mission Work).

LIVERPOOL BOOKSELLERS' COMPANY, LIMITED,
70, Lord-street, Liverpool.

HOPE-STREET CHURCH, LIVERPOOL.

1849.—1899.

(Minister, The Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.)

JUBILEE CELEBRATION.

The BAZAAR of the SEASON, "YE OLDE ENGLISH VILLAGE," DECEMBER 14TH, 15TH, and 16TH, 1899, in the COLLEGE OF MUSIC, 98, UPPER PARLIAMENT-STREET, to provide Funds for the Maintenance of the Fabric of the beautiful Church erected during the Ministry of Dr. Martineau, and the furnishing of the new Church Hall, the Jubilee Gift of W. B. Bowring, Esq., J.P.

The BAZAAR will be opened at 2.30 P.M. each day. On the 14th Dec. by Sir JOHN T. BRUNNER, Bart., M.P.; on the 15th Dec. by Mrs. W. B. BOWRING; and on the 16th Dec. by the Hon. Mrs. DE BEAUMONT KLEIN.

Mrs. HUMPHRY WARR, the Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., JOSEPH COVENTRY, Esq., and others, will take part in the proceedings.

Mr. and Mrs. HAROLD COVENTRY,
"Langdale," Hunter's-lane,
Wavertree, Liverpool (Secretaries).

RUMMAGE SALE, to raise funds for Resetting the Roof Tiles of the Unitarian Christian Church, Percy-street, Oxford. Goods and Money to be sent before Dec. 10th, gratefully acknowledged by the Rev. VERNON HERFORD, O.C.F. Sacks on application.

BOOKLETS FOR CHRISTMAS.

"DAILY MEDITATIONS" & "NIGHT UNTO NIGHT."

By W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

PRICE ONE SHILLING (leather, gilt).

"Night unto Night" can also be had in cloth binding, red edges, price Sixpence.

ESSEX HALL, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, W.C.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A New and Important Work for all Unitarians to Read.

Cr. 8vo, pp. 236, cloth, 2s. 6d. net, by post 2s. 10d.

THE STORY OF Protestant Dissent and English Unitarianism.

BY

WALTER LLOYD.

CONTENTS: — Introduction. II. The Presbyterians. VII. Richard Baxter. IV. The Ejection, 1694. V. The Protestant Dissenters, 1699. VI. The Meeting-Houses. VII. Non-Subscription. VIII. The "Christian Only." IX. The Unitarians. X. John Biddle. XI. Lindsey, Priestley and Belsham. XII. The Unitarian Societies. XIII. The Trinitarian Controversy. XIV. Undogmatic Unitarianism. XV. Conclusion.

Note.—Anyone sending Mr. Philip Green, not later than Dec. 22nd, a Postal Order for 2s. 6d., will receive a copy of this new book post free.

London: PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

THE ETHICAL WORLD.

EDITED BY DR. STANTON COIT and
J. A. HOBSON, M.A.

Articles on Important Social Questions, Education &c. from a purely ethical standpoint
Children's Page.

TWOPENCE WEEKLY.

Office: 17, Johnson's-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

JOHN PAGE HOPPS' MONTHLY.

THE COMING DAY.

ENLARGED. PRICE THREEPENCE.

Contents for DECEMBER:

The First Christmas Morning. A Carol by J. P. H.
The Birth of God.
The Light of the World.
God in His Christs.
Science and Hell.
A Vision of Christ.
A Letter to the Queen, by John Page H. pp. 2.
The Devil's Gospel for the Day.
George Meredith's Poems.
Kipling's Place.
Our Hell in South Africa.
Notes on Books and Notes by the Way.

London, Edinburgh, and Oxford:
WILLIAMS and NORGATE, and all Booksellers.

THE MILL HILL PULPIT.

A Monthly Sermon by

Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., Leeds.

December Number.—"FOR THE RED CROSS."

Price 1d. Annual subscription, 1s. 6d. post free.

Apply, Essex Hall, or CHAS. STAINER, 82, Ravenswood-terrace, Hyde Park, Leeds.

Printed by WOODFALL & KINDER, 70 to 76, Long Acre, W.C. and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. City Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 29 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD Deansgate.—Saturday, December 2, 1899.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 2998.
NEW SERIES, No. 102.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1899.

[ONE PENNY.]

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	785
CORRESPONDENCE :—
The "Scenian Blasphemer"	786
Lantern Hymn Slides	786
ARTICLES :—
The York Case... ..	787
"Back to Jesus"	788
The Decay of Dogmas	788
The Inward Life	791
OBITUARY :—
Sir Henry Tate	790
Samuel May	790
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN	791
LEADERS :—
A Church that Ministers	792
A Great Giver... ..	793
LITERATURE :—
In Quiet Places	793
Mr. Lloyd on English Presbyterianism	794
Echoes of Old Lancashire	794
Publications Received	791
PROVINCIAL LETTER :—
Wales	795
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES	796
ADVERTISEMENTS... ..	797

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

IN another column will be found a report of the York case, which was decided by Mr. Justice Kekewich on Wednesday. His Lordship's judgment is, of course, the matter of chief interest and value, and of that our report is full, and in the vital points, we believe, quite accurate. The Times, of Thursday, gave nearly a column to a report of the case, and dealt with it also in a leading article. We note, however, one mistake twice repeated in the leader, and following the law report. In the report of the evidence, the Rev. H. Rawlings, the present minister of St. Saviourgate Chapel, is represented as calling himself "a Christian agnostic." This is repeated in the leader, and in a second reference it seems to be implied that the Judge also described Mr. Rawlings so. But what his Lordship said was that Mr. Rawlings was acceptable to both parties, "whatever his opinions may be, whether more or less tinged with agnosticism"; and as in the course of Mr. Wurtzburg's examination, his Lordship had himself said, "In one sense, there is not an educated man who is not an agnostic," no injurious inference can be drawn from the other reference. As to "Christian agnostic," we believe we are right in saying that Mr. Rawlings did not describe himself in those terms. What he did was to quote an article by Canon Curtis in the Nineteenth Century some little while ago, in which that dignitary of the Church of England declared himself a Christian agnostic, and Mr. Rawlings made the reference to show that "agnostic" was a term of very various meaning, and by no means necessarily incompatible with Christianity and religion.

THE Peace Society makes its usual appeal to ministers of religion with peculiar significance to observe the Sunday before Christmas Day, which this year will be Christmas Eve, as "Peace Sunday." "On the one hand," it is said in the secretary's invitation, "the labours and results of the Conference at The Hague are a matter for congratulation, and stimulate both hope and gratitude on the part of Christian people; on the other, the unhappy war in which our country is engaged, and the strong feelings which it has evoked throughout the nation, occupy the public mind, and indispose it towards the calm consideration of the high principles of the Kingdom of Christ." The more reason is there that the word of Christian truth should be fearlessly uttered, and with a faith that refuses to be mocked into despair. Helpful literature on the subject will be supplied to preachers on application to the office of the Society, 47, New Broad-street, E.C.

WHAT we have constantly felt in these trying days about the war in South Africa we cannot better express than in these words of an editorial note in the December British Friend :—

"The war fever still rages, and lovers of peace can only possess their souls in patience. Before long the nation will wake up from its bad dream, and realise something of what it means to maintain 'ascendancy' with sword and gun. Though, as we write, only minor engagements have yet been fought, hundreds of homes in England and South Africa are already plunged in mourning. The war has already been terribly destructive of officers—fine young men whose lives might have been spent in the service of their fellows. Army reserve men are torn away from their families, who in many cases are left with but little provision. And yet a section of the Press of this country is not ashamed to gloat over the 'slaughter of Boers,' and to publish any false story that hatred can invent of their meanness and treachery. The spectacle is simply revolting, as Lady Godolphin Osborne well urges in a dignified protest, which appeared in the Daily Chronicle of the 8th ult. Even assuming, as many do, that the war was forced upon us, still it is not the part of a great nation to treat the slaughter of men as a subject for levity or exultation."

"For the Red Cross" is the subject of the Rev. Charles Hargrove's sermon in this month's Mill Hill Pulpit. It does not shrink from depicting the horrors of war, and quotes the Duke of Wellington's saying: "Believe me, nothing, except a battle lost, can be half so melancholy as a battle won." And with the thought of what is now taking place in South Africa comes at once the question, What can we do?

It is the first question which occurs to any man or woman of common humanity who is witness of illness or accident at home. To stand by indifferent, and watch while a fellow-creature suffered or died before our eyes, were almost impossible to ordinary flesh and blood. And so at home we make provision for sufferings which otherwise we might be obliged to witness while helpless to relieve. We support a great infirmary for all who are sick and in need; we maintain a workhouse hospital for the relief of the hopeless and friendless, and refuse admission to no sufferer; we have a medical staff and nurses and hospital even for those who are in gaol, convicted of crimes against the law of God and man.

And these, our soldiers, they are not the sickly and diseased, they are not helpless and destitute, far less are they undeserving or offenders; they have been stricken in the very prime of their strength, they suffer because they are ready and brave, they have fallen in their country's service.

Is the war righteous? Then are they the victims in a righteous cause. Is it unjustifiable? Their business not to judge of the right or wrong of policy, but to do their country's bidding, and be loyal to their oath of service. For England! for England's cause or for England's fault—it matters not a whit which, in weighing their merit and enforcing their claim—for us, and to do our bidding, they fight; and obedient to their country they fall and die.

Then followed a strong appeal, which at Mill Hill met with a generous response, the day's collections for the Red Cross Society amounting to £143 10s. 9d. Whoever suffers through the war, said the preacher, must be helped, and by us who sit at home and have no trouble.

"The wounded have first claim, and the Red Cross Society appeals to us on their behalf. Its truly Divine Service recognises no distinction of nationality, but is by all civilised nations had in reverent regard. Like a foredawn of the Kingdom of Heaven on earth, reflection from the glory which shone over the shepherds when the first proclamation was made of 'Peace on earth, goodwill among men,' even such its declaration, sanctioned by the International Convention at Geneva, thirty-five ago, and observed ever since:—'Wounded and sick soldiers shall be entertained and taken care of, to whatever nation they may belong.'"

WE are glad to note that Dr. M. J. Savage, of New York, has been able to resume the regular weekly issue of his sermons in the Messiah Pulpit. The first sermon of the new series on "Religion, a Superfluity or a Necessity," appeared on Oct. 20, and the sermon of the following week was entitled "Dr. De Costa, Bishop Potter, and the Star." This dealt with a recent occurrence of great significance. Bishop Potter, of New York, having ordained Dr. Charles A. Briggs, who had proved too heterodox for the Presbyterians, as a clergyman of the Episcopal Church, Dr. De Costa sent in his resignation as a clergyman of that Church, which was accepted. In a long letter to his Bishop Dr. De Costa explained that this action was taken because, in his view, the Episcopal Church was committed to the Higher Criticism of the Bible, which destroyed its authority as miraculous and infallible divine revelation, and he could not countenance what he regarded as a betrayal of trust. —

DR. SAVAGE points out in his sermon that the position of Dr. De Costa and of the Star, which supported his action, is logically unassailable, and that the Bishop's position, in view of the formularies of his Church, is not so sound. And yet the recognition of progressive thought in the Episcopal Church, as among the Congregationalists, Baptists, and others, can only be welcomed as a great advance in the interest of religion. It ensures a truer appreciation of the Bible and of the realities of Christian faith. Dr. De Costa had charged it against the Episcopal Church that it is honeycombed with Unitarianism, on which Dr. Savage remarks:—

I believe it. I do not mean to say that these men are consciously Unitarians. I do say that the studies in which they are engaged, if they keep on, will lead them to our position. Our position, do I say? I do not like the word; it sounds like standing still. Everything in God's universe is on the move. Unitarianism is a movement, a method; and we appeal for freedom of thought and scholarship, because we know that freedom in thought and scholarship will lead us to the truth, and the truth is God. . . . We are all on God's great ocean tide; and, if Unitarianism has any advantage over the other denominations, it is simply because it has been the avowed policy of Unitarianism to keep its eyes open for God's next sunrise, and its arms outspread to embrace any messenger that comes from God with his truth. That is the only advantage Unitarianism claims.

ARRANGEMENTS are being made to hold a World's Temperance Congress in London in the second week of June, 1900, and a consultative conference to further this object was held at Sion College on Monday evening, at which the Essex Hall Temperance Association, which has decided to co-operate, was represented by its treasurer, Mr. F. A. Edwards, F.R.G.S. A comprehensive list of papers by representative temperance men and women dealing with the various branches of the movement is being prepared, and the Congress promises to be of great interest. In the sectional meetings there will be discussions on the historical, scientific, educational, commercial, and industrial, legislative, women's work, and continental phases of the question, and several colonial and foreign delegates have promised to take part.

PREACHING recently at St. Peter's Church, Cardiff, the Right Rev. Bishop Hedley gave the first of a series of sermons on "Wrong Ideals of Christ's Church." As a Roman Catholic he proposed to examine the ideals of various Christian teachers, to guard his hearers against error. He should deal (1) with Unitarianism, which meant every individual for himself; (2) Nonconformity or every congregation for itself; (3) Low Anglicanism, or every country for itself; (4) High Anglicanism, which was now a contradiction in terms. The bishop then dealt in a lucid manner and in a tolerant spirit with the theological system of the Unitarians, whom he characterised as the "only logical and consistent Protestants."

WE note with pleasure that there are a few places in the United Kingdom where the Free Church Councils include all Nonconformists without exception, and, indeed, we suppose all other people who are in favour of a Free Church. Atherton (better known as Chowbent), Burnley, and Kidderminster are three such places, and there may possibly be one or two others unknown to us. We have heard it hinted that in one of these places Unitarianism is so strong that because of its local strength alone it is included. With a knowledge of the facts we believe that, whatever weight may attach to this motive, there is a real breadth of spirit in the leaders of all the Nonconformist churches concerned, and we only mention the half-suspicion of lower motive to discount it as unworthy. Moreover, we have to account for our inclusion where we are certainly not relatively strong. Nor should we forget that every local Free Church Council which includes Unitarians has itself to pay the penalty of exclusion from the great Evangelical Free Church Union of Great Britain and Ireland. Last Sunday afternoon and evening, in the largest hall in Atherton, under the auspices of the Atherton Free Church Union, all the Nonconformists of the district (who closed their chapels in the evening for the purpose) united together, afternoon and evening, in two special services, the united choirs leading the singing. The services were most successful, and it should not, as we are sure it will not, be the fault of members of our own free faith if such services are not held in many other places.

A LARGE number of the original drawings for Mr. Edmund New's illustrations, referred to in our article, "In Quiet Places," are now on view, together with other interesting exhibits, at Mr. Montague Fordham's, 9, Maddox street, W. There are also to be seen a number of works from the Kelmscott Press, including the great "Chaucer," illustrated by Burne-Jones, and some exquisite examples of book-binding. The work of the Birmingham Guild of Handicraft, and several other kinds of modern English handiwork are represented.

MEMBERS of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association and many others will find when they next visit Essex Hall that there is now a Public Call Office of the National Telephone Company in the Book Room, where messages can be received or forwarded. The number of the Essex Hall Office is "1,643 Gerrard."

WORK gives balance and regularity to the movements of the soul. It drives all discarded fancies out of the mind. The condition, however, is that it shall be really work, not the show of it; that we shall put ourselves wholly into it for the time; that we shall not work mechanically, nor reluctantly, but with our thoughts present, our heart in it, as well as our hands.—
James Freeman Clarke.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

THE "SOCINIAN BLASPHEMER."

SIR,—Some one has sent me your paper of this date, marked at the passage headed "A Correction."

There evidently is some misunderstanding. Mr. Knowles sent Mr. Vance Smith's letter to me for my observations.

I replied categorically denying that Mr. Vance Smith was in my mind when I wrote the offending passage. I also categorically affirmed that the person to whom I referred was not a member of Mr. Vance Smith's religious denomination. I said nothing about "vague and general." I wrote with definite reference to a particular occurrence, and to a person whom, for obvious reasons, I do not name.

GEORGE W. E. RUSSELL.

18, Wilton-street, Grosvenor-place, S.W.
Dec. 2, 1899.

LANTERN HYMN SLIDES.

SIR,—Lest a line or two in the Bridport report of last week should mislead, let me say that there is really no difficulty in getting Hymn slides suitable to our Unitarian Lantern Services. Messrs. Riley Bros., Lanternists, Bradford, Yorkshire, have a good list of large type Hymn slides, from which an ample supply for the purposes of our services can be selected. They cost 1s. a piece, and are, of course, usable again and again as Hymns in a Hymn-book are. Such opening Hymns as "Praise ye the Lord 'tis good to raise," "All people that on earth do dwell," "Come ye that love the Lord," &c.; such closing Hymns as "Lord dismiss us," "Abide with me," "Guide me oh Thou great Jehovah," "Glory to Thee" (simply covering the last verse over on the slide with gummed paper), &c.; and other Hymns such as "Lead kindly Light," "Nearer my God to Thee," "For ever with the Lord," &c. And these are but a sample—for I do not happen to have the printed list by me—of good large type Hymns available for us, and used, as I know, at many of our places where lantern services are now held. Moreover, there is no difficulty whatever in making one's own Hymn slides. We have had many made from the Essex Hall and other Hymn-books. The highest price charged by a lanternist for making a Hymn slide is 1s. Of course it can be made for less. But I write simply to show that no one need complain that good Hymn slides are not available. J. J. WRIGHT.

Chowbent, Dec. 5.

THE SOLDIER'S GRAVE.

You thought not of the right or wrong,
Your country called, and forth you trod
On Honour's path, and none shall say,
You have not now the sleep of God.

For though 'twas for the wrong or right,
You rest within a splendid grave,
And your soul's star, undimmed, shall join
The constellation of the Brave.

EDWARD TISCHEMACHER.

THE YORK CASE.

Attorney-General v. Lewin and others.

THIS case was heard on Tuesday and Wednesday in the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division) by Mr. Justice Kekewich, the writ having been issued in April, 1897.

The defendants were the Fabric Trustees of St. Saviourgate Chapel, York, and the members of the Chapel Committee of 1897; the plaintiffs, the Attorney-General with the Rev. J. K. Wain and Mr. Thomas Manning, a trustee of the chapel and a member of the congregation respectively, as relators.

The plaintiffs claimed:—

1. An injunction to restrain the defendants, the Fabric Trustees, from permitting the said Meeting-house to be used for the propagation of Agnostic or Secularist or Atheistic principles, opinions or doctrines, or otherwise than as a meeting place for religious and well-disposed Christian people called Protestant Dissenters.

2. That such of the Fabric Trustees as hold opinions inconsistent with the trusts and purposes expressed in the indentures of 1692 and 1719 may be removed from the trusteeship and fit and proper persons appointed trustees in their stead.

3. An injunction to restrain the defendants, the members of the said Committee from appointing or permitting any person to preach or conduct service in the said Meeting-house who holds opinions or views antagonistic to those expressed in the indentures of 1692 and 1719.

4. That the defendants or some of them may be ordered to pay the cost of this action.

For the plaintiffs there appeared Mr. Warrington, Q.C., and Mr. Wurtzburg; for the Fabric Trustees Mr. Renshaw, Q.C., and for the Committee Mr. Warrington Q.C., and Mr. Jackson.

A large amount of evidence was taken from Mr. Manning, and other members of the York congregation as to the character of the teaching of the late Sydney Morris, and of others who had since occupied the pulpit, and on other matters. Dr. Brooke Herford and the Rev. Henry Rawlings, present minister of the chapel, also gave evidence.

His LORDSHIP, in delivering judgment, said that in the course of the trial many interesting questions had been discussed, questions in which he took the deepest interest, on which he had read a good deal, and thought more. But it was his duty to decide between man and man irrespective of his own views. Nevertheless, he must bring to the discussion of the case such knowledge as he possessed, and it was useless to say that he did not know what agnosticism was, and, within limits, what Unitarianism and Arianism were. The first thing he had to do was to consider the meaning, the proper construction of the deed of 1692. It was there recited that certain well-disposed persons being Protestants have unanimously agreed and contributed to the purchase of a parcel of ground hereinafter mentioned to the sole use and intent that a spacious and fit house may be thereon erected for religious and well-disposed Christian people now called Protestant Dissenters from time to time to meet in and there hear religious worship on the Lord's day and other days.

He entirely agreed with Mr. Renshaw that they were not at liberty in construing a deed to look at the recital unless the operative part was ambiguous. In the operative part it was said that the property was conveyed to the persons named, with provision for successors, upon special trust and confidence, to the absolute intent and purpose that the said premises, &c., the house and tenement thereon to be erected shall be used and employed as a meeting place for religious worship or what other use or uses the said Thomas Colton, &c., their heirs and successors shall think most convenient.

Reading those words alone, he might treat them as ambiguous; they must be taken to refer in the latter part to the "religious worship" which preceded the more vague reference to convenient uses. The meaning, he considered was, "such uses as the trustees shall think convenient, consistently with the house being used for religious worship."

But apart from that the words "most convenient" introduced enough vagueness to enable him to look back to the recital, and he was by no means satisfied that a strict interpretation of the deed did exclude reference to the recital, where the history was part of the settlement, so we might fairly bring in the general intent in the recital, and hold that the house cannot be properly used by the trustees, cannot be thought by them to be conveniently used, except for the purposes there described—namely, that religious and well-disposed people called Protestant Dissenters may meet there and from time to time hear religious worship. And the use in both places of the word "religious" excluded necessarily anything contrary to religion in the broadest sense. It was possible for anyone to call his belief religion, but religion had a fairly accepted meaning even by scientific men, and religion could not be held to embrace irreligion or the negation of religion.

The chapel was to be used for Protestant Dissenters, and he did not think it could be now contended that Unitarians were not within that term for such purposes. The Dissenters' Chapels Act fixed a limit of twenty-five years usage to determine what was lawful, provided no form of worship was prescribed. In that case no form was prescribed, and the twenty-five years' use recognised by the Act came in. But it must be a use consistent with the original trust, and it would be impossible to say that a place devoted to religious worship could be converted into a theatre or any other such purpose, and then because for twenty-five years it had been so used, hold it to be a right use according to the trust. The term only meant to sanction a use not inconsistent with the original purpose as described in the deed of foundation.

So far there was no great difficulty in the case.

His Lordship then asked: What had been done? It was clear that after a time the meeting house in question became a Unitarian chapel. It was a well-known matter of history that the Presbyterians in England to a great extent did become Unitarians. For some reason the Presbyterians lapsed into Unitarianism, they slipped from one into the other; and that became a Unitarian chapel. It was impossible for him to say that such a change was a departure from the trust. It was not, and it could not be argued that the chapel was not properly used as a Unitarian chapel.

But then it was said that of late it had passed from a Unitarian chapel into a chapel of an entirely different character, and that by some means or other not only had Unitarianism, which was admittedly a form of Christianity, disappeared, but the teaching of the chapel now was agnostic, irreligious and atheistic. If it was irreligious it contradicted the words of the deed. It could not properly be used for agnostic or atheistic teaching. The difference of those two terms was, that the agnostic avowed he did not and could not know of the existence of God, the atheist took a more positive view and said there was no God.

He had a body of evidence before him to prove that from time to time there had been agnostic teaching of the broadest character in that chapel. He did not rely, in coming to that conclusion, on the fact that the Beatitudes, the Lord's Prayer, and the Ten Commandments had been obliterated, and one motto, of Christian origin and excellent in itself, but not pointing to the existence of God, put in its place. That might have been more or less accidental. Nor did he rely so much on the alteration of the hymn-book. No doubt it was different in character from former books, different in the elimination of religion from it, and the alteration of hymns in that direction. But apart from that, he had distinct evidence that ministers had used the chapel to preach strictly agnostic doctrine—doctrine the substance of which was that not only does man not know God, but he cannot, and if there be a God, He is unknowable. That was entirely inconsistent with the trust-deed. If the chapel was used for such teaching, and services were conducted on those lines, it was not being used for Protestant Dissenters to meet for religious worship.

But the difficulty was that, perhaps in consequence of that injunction, the present minister, whatever his opinions might be, was unobjectionable to those who had instituted the action. They accepted Mr. Rawlings, and Dr. Herford, a representative of the Unitarian body, accepted Mr. Rawlings, and looked on him as a Unitarian minister. So there was nothing now to complain of, although there had been in the past.

An injunction was, therefore, not to be thought of. But a declaration would enable persons to apply in future, if there should be any departure from the trust.

His Lordship then turned to the question of costs. Dealing first with the committee men, there had been no evidence to show that they had not used reasonable care in finding ministers to preach in the chapel. They may not have used the very best of judgment, and may have been misled; but there was no reason for visiting them with costs or any other penalties. And he had not got the persons there, for with one exception they were not now in office. And as to Johnson (the exception) nothing was proved against him. The others should be dismissed from the action, and against Johnson, the declaration would be made in his presence; but he ought not to be made to pay any costs. There was another reason equally conclusive. The plaintiffs had thought fit to charge the committee men and trustees with deliberately doing what was complained of in furtherance of their own views, and charged them with being themselves agnostic and irreligious. In the defences that was distinctly denied, and not a scrap of evidence was brought to meet that denial. It was a very serious thing to bring such a charge and not attempt to prove it. As to the trustees, he had no statement of what their duties were, and he was not satisfied that they had not performed them. There was nothing to show that they had put any difficulty in the way of the appointment of a proper minister. The plaintiffs must therefore pay their costs also.

His Lordship concluded with the declaration that the chapel must be used "for religious and well-disposed Christian people from time to time to meet in, and there hear religious worship on the Lord's day and other days."

It will thus be seen that the fundamental principle is established beyond question, that the chapel must be used for religious worship, and that other use, inconsistent with such worship, is a distinct breach of trust. For the rest, the Fabric Trustees, against whom complaint was made, are not removed, and the plaintiffs have to pay all the costs.

"BACK TO JESUS."

PERHAPS Mr. Armstrong will not adhere after all to his resolution not to enter into controversy about his book, "Back to Jesus." If Mr. W. H. Drummond's article moves him to reconsider his decision no one can be surprised. But it may rather confirm his view that a discussion of the kind is unprofitable, and even may be worse. While I sympathise very much with this view I shall not be alone in thinking some reply to that article desirable; and in case he prefers to remain silent I should like to offer the following remarks.

Mr. Drummond, endorsing the views of Mr. Ambrose Bennett, uses a phrase which I do not find in Mr. Bennett's article—namely, "historical scepticism"; and at the close of his remarks he speaks of a mysticism or psychology "which has its roots in a conscious historical despair." Reading Mr. Armstrong's book for the third or fourth time, I fail to see how the author can be justly charged with either the "scepticism" or the "conscious despair." Instead of these, I find notes of very decided belief and assurance as to the "actual Jesus." Mr. Armstrong's conception of Jesus may differ from Mr. Drummond's or Mr. Bennett's, but that it is a definite one, and that it has been reached through the study of history and tradition, is evident. The book says of Jesus: "That we have a picture of him, highly historic and very largely reliable, in the earlier gospels we may readily and thankfully admit" (p. 12). The whole book is based on the author's settled conviction of this. His rejection of certain elements in the story is no more an act of despair, conscious or otherwise, than Mr. Drummond's when he inclines to exclude large parts of the Book of Revelation from the genuinely Christian testimony of the New Testament. How little there is of hesitation in Mr. Armstrong's mind as to his having arrived at historic truth, in a measure sufficient to stir his heart's deepest affections, may be inferred from the following passage (p. 97):—

Let me then say, that for my own part, I yield to none in love and reverence for that gracious Master, whose words touch me as no other words have ever touched me, and whose person seems to me the most lovable and reverend, the purest, the most beautiful, the holiest that has ever worn human flesh.

It must be that such expressions, the emphasis of which could hardly be increased, fail to describe in its fulness the regard in which Mr. Drummond holds the "gracious Master," and, apparently, he would deem the feelings here indicated as "sentimental rather than rational"—to use a phrase of his own. It may be, though I doubt it, that those of us—I am one of them along with Mr. Bennett—who try to get our conception of Jesus enriched and clarified by considering the effect of his life and character on his generation, are less mystical than those who do not attach so much importance to that kind of consideration. Mr. Armstrong, who knows the way in which disputing theologians have bespattered each other with injurious epithets, will not be troubled overmuch at Mr. Drummond's suggestions that he has somewhat failed in "commonsense" and is held to historical Christianity by a merely sentimental tie. But let us suppose that I have a view of Christ's person beside which Mr. Armstrong's is but a faint glimmer. The supposition is wildly improbable, for faintly glimmering perceptions of things do not give rise to feelings such as are expressed by the quotations given above. But if it were even possible, the question I would ask Mr. Drummond is, by what right have I in such a case to suggest to Mr. Armstrong, or to anybody else who "clings" to historical Christianity, that he had better drop off and leave all that to me and my party? It is strange that a member of one of those Free Churches which the Evangelical Free Churches refuse to admit to their fellowship should assume anything like that attitude and not be conscious of his mistake. Does the possession of that "saving salt of commonsense" which is so lacking to the critics criticised by Mr. Drummond destroy all sense of humour, not to say decency? Of course Mr. Drummond meant nothing offensive by suggesting that Mr. Armstrong should abandon "history" for "intuition." Our brethren the Evangelicals mean nothing offensive when they deny to the Unitarian the name of Christian; our brethren the Episcopalians mean nothing offensive when they deny to Nonconformist ministers the name of clergy and to their solemn rites the name of sacraments; our brethren the Romanists mean nothing offensive when they deny to the Anglicans the name of a Church. There is no offence in it—except to the spirit of a larger Christianity than cares to boast its superiority in any particular, and only desires that whether in one degree or another all men might come to Jesus and learn the way of life from him. It is a suggestive incident, and if not also an accident Mr. Drummond is more orthodox than he knows.

In Mr. Bennett's article there is much that is attractive, but it seems to me that he is not warranted in declaring that Mr. Armstrong, in spite of his own advice, goes to the gospels with a ready-made theory of the person of Jesus. The canon or rule which the book lays down as a guide in the selection of the New Testament materials may err one way or the other. It may assume too much as to the defects of the Apostles, or it may allow too little for the human conditions under which Jesus himself lived and thought. But whether it err or be valid, it is not a theory of the person of Jesus in any sense comparable to what is implied in the general use of the phrase.* It says nothing as to his rank, his "substance," his "nature" or "natures," or as to his function, messianic, mediatorial, or otherwise. All it implies is just what is implied when without any theory at all as to the person of Shakespeare, the critic of Henry VI., or any other play, assumes that if the lines and scenes are of palpably different styles and betray several contributors, the noblest, deepest, and wisest thoughts and the most pregnant sayings are those that must have come from the great original to whom all is traditionally ascribed, while the inferior matter is due to imitators and collaborators. Of course if this is to have a theory of the person of Shakespeare, nothing further need be said. In the same way if to assume that the most spiritual utterances of the Gospel are more likely to have come from Jesus than from his followers is to have a theory of his person, and not merely to follow a common principle of critical biography Mr. Bennett is right; not otherwise.

I think it should be pointed out that Mr. Armstrong did not invent the phrase "Back to Jesus," nor did he originate the search among the mingled literature of the first age of Christianity for those things that might most surely be held as genuine. His book aims, not at setting forth a complete view of the significance of Jesus in the history of the Church and of mankind—it may be time to do that when we know that history completely—but simply at discovering to the Evangelicals, and others, who have set their faces in the direction of these Gospel studies, the lines along which, in the author's view, a candid student will be led. Some readers may miss from the results obtained by him things which they hold dear. Others may think Mr. Armstrong is too sanguine and affirmative. But that his method of inquiry is the only valid one appears to me certain, and that it will be an ill day for Christian thought when it is subordinated to general views or to the testimony, often vague and always unverifiable, of the "Christian consciousness." W. G. TARRANT.

THE DECAY OF DOGMAS.†

In one of her letters George Eliot says, after attending some Church service, "It is well to see what our neighbours are doing. To live in seclusion with one's own thoughts is apt to give one very false notions as to the possibilities of the present time in the matter of conversion either to superstition or anti-superstition." It is because I feel this myself very strongly that I venture to bring before you to-day some considerations touching a tendency which appears to be characteristic of nearly all Churches in our day—namely, the Decay of Dogmas.

The subject is not only interesting as a study in Evolution, but its results are likely to be an important factor in our own religious and denominational life, and in the near future; for there can be little doubt that the new century, even in its early years, will witness ecclesiastical developments undreamed of by those who are content to dwell in their own small fenced-in corner of the great fold, and to see nothing beyond. This ignorance is, of course, not confined to our own body; it is only here and there, in this busy life, that people of any Church have either time or opportunity for learning what their neighbours are doing, as George Eliot says—much less about what they are thinking. The prophet was alone in the valley of dry bones, and was the sole spectator of the wondrous vision; and it is not till the rattle approaches the roar of thunder that outsiders learn that anything unusual is happening.

* See, for instance, Dr. James Drummond's "Study of Theology," p. 200, and Dr. Martineau's "Seat of Authority," pp. 237-242.

† A paper read at the annual meeting of the North Midland Presbyterian and Unitarian Association at Nottingham, Oct. 24, by Miss M. Catherine Gittins.

This is really the case now with what is rightly called the New Reformation, and a spiritual resurrection is in progress which will ere long change the face of Christendom; the dry bones in the dismal valley of orthodoxy are being clothed upon by the Spirit of the Lord with living flesh, and will soon rise up and stand on their feet “an exceeding great army,” breathing a new spirit of faith and love that shall be strong to vanquish the hosts of sin and death. Surely it is well that we, who are privileged like the prophet to behold this wondrous vision, should learn to watch with intelligent sympathy that great uprising, that we may be able not only to help when occasion offers, but to join the ranks and fall into our appointed places as they march on their triumphant way.

It is not, however, with the results but with the causes of the New Reformation that we are now concerned. I have called my paper the “Decay of Dogmas,” and it is to the crumbling away of orthodox dogmas during recent years that I wish to direct your attention. Those of us who have taken part in Postal Mission work receive almost daily evidence of this fact, and it is my experience in this field which has led me to take a special interest in the movements of liberal thought outside our own body. It is an immense subject, of which I can but touch the fringe. Speaking generally, it is, of course, the spirit of the age—the Zeit Geist—which has brought about the change; but, in tracing it historically, we notice various definite factors which have contributed their quota to the result.

Miss Gittins then referred to the publication of “Essays and Reviews” in 1861, and of Seebohm’s “Oxford Reformers,” which contrasted the ideal of Colet, Erasmus and More with that of Luther, forestalling much of what is now being said of the baleful influence of the Augustinian philosophy on the Creed of Christendom. Professor Seeley’s “Ecce Homo,” and Matthew Arnold’s “Literature and Dogma,” reached a wider circle, and the liberalising influence of the great poets, Tennyson, Browning, and Lowell, was also noted, together with that of Ruskin, whose anti-dogmatic spirit has done so much to break down the barriers of creed and to infuse a wholesome common-sense into the modern mind in its treatment of theological questions.”

But great as the influence of such writers had been, the progress of scientific knowledge was still more potent in its destructive force. “It is, indeed, the trumpet-blast of Evolution that has caused the walls of the old theological Jericho to totter.”

And the Paper continued:—In recent years not only has the doctrine itself, as applied to natural science, been popularised by many writers, but a whole literature has arisen dealing with the evolution of theology itself. In this field, one writer, Professor Fiske, of Harvard, stands pre-eminent, and his University addresses on different branches of this subject are most striking. Professor Fiske is universally acknowledged as a leading scientist, whose authority carries weight with scientific men on both sides of the Atlantic, and he has also a keen spiritual insight and firm faith in everlasting realities which render him peculiarly well fitted to undertake the task of proving to the world that science and religion need no reconciling, but are essentially one. His position somewhat reminds one of another great pioneer of liberal religion a century ago—Dr. Priestley—whose brilliant discoveries in chemistry first drew attention to his writings and laid the foundation of his influence over the theological thought of his age. And nothing, perhaps, shows the distance in thought travelled over in the hundred years more clearly than a comparison between the two books, Priestley’s “Corruptions of Christianity,” and Fiske’s “Cosmic Philosophy.” The one is mainly occupied with overthrowing the orthodox interpretation of various texts from a very orthodox Unitarian point of view; the other in surveying the whole field of human knowledge, and building up a religion wide enough and deep enough to satisfy the yearnings of the generations that are to come. But it is not necessary to read the great works in which this is made manifest to the learned; for, happily, Professor Fiske felt the need of putting the results simply and effectively before the College students, and the world is the richer for the brilliant series of discourses which began with “The Destiny of Man” and “The Idea of God,” and has culminated lately in the volume entitled “Through Nature to God.”

Miss Gittins then noted some of the most striking evidences of what she had described as the decay of dogma. There were movements beyond the borders of Christianity, such as that of the Brahmo Somaj in India, and Dr. Washington Sullivan’s Ethical Church in London. In the Eastern Church there had been the protest of the Doukoborts, and in the Roman Church signs of unrest and revolt were manifest in Austria, Italy, and France. The movement of the revolting priests in France, led by the Abbé Bourrier, was specially notable. His paper, Le Crétien Français, started in October, 1897, had been a striking success, and was now published weekly. In the Church of England the establishment of the Church Gazette was a sign of new vigour in the Broad Church party, and the strong protest of the Rev. C. E. Beeby against Latin Christianity, in the interest of a pro-founder and more liberal creed, made in the same direction. Reference was also made to the movement of thought among High Church men, marked by the publication of “Lux Mundi” and to the milder tone of Low Church Calvinism. Among Evangelical Nonconformists the new Free Church Catechism was a hopeful sign, and there were other evidences of the “decay of dogmas” among them.

The Paper then concluded as follows:—When I was preparing my paper, I wrote to Mrs. Dendy who has had much experience in Postal Mission work, and she kindly sent me a long and interesting account of it. She says: “I am quite in agreement with you as to the great change of opinion which is taking place in the orthodox churches.” “Of late years the preachers are even dropping the old orthodox phraseology as well as the crude doctrines which are becoming more and more repugnant to the more spiritual among them. There is, as you say, much more insistence on life and character than on creed.”

Lastly, I have to bring to your notice a movement in which I have lately been much interested among the Methodists in the north of England and Ireland. I come in contact with it through the Postal Mission, and feel it a great privilege to have as correspondents a lady and a gentleman who are amongst the most strenuous adherents of the new faith in God and humanity which is rising from the ashes of the creeds. It bears the name of the “Consecration Movement,” and its leader and founder is a Mr. H. Johnston, of Belfast, in whose preface to a book of sermons we find the following explanation of its attitude:—

The threefold aspect borne by every modern “Church” may be designated by the terms—Theology, Spirituality, Organisation. “We are not aware of any element in Church-life that is not included in one or other of these heads, and it is hardly necessary to point out that only one of the divisions is divine and essential, the other two being entirely human and changeable.” “Our aim being entirely spiritual, we know nothing of theological dogma on the one hand, nor of Church government on the other. We concentrate all our energies to secure the consecration of individual lives to God, knowing that this is the grand remedy for all that is wrong, whether in creed or Church order.”

The movement is by no means confined to the Methodist connection, but includes many from other orthodox dissenting communions. Indeed, its leaders are in the same position as the Broad Churchmen, who believe it their duty not to secede individually from the communion to which they may happen to belong and endeavour to batter it down from outside, but to remain within and unite their forces to remove the impediments which hinder their union with the like-minded outside the pale. As Mr. Johnston says: “Any organisation must become rigid and worldly in the absence of a spiritual element, and the personal piety that would keep a new one right would make an old one good.” He treats doctrine in the same way as man-made, and only of use when it helps to the building up of character, the one end and aim of all Christian teaching.

I wrote to inquire how far this movement had spread among the people, and the following is an extract from a letter written in reply by the editor of their little journal, Consecration:—He says: “Our movement has been in existence for twelve years, and our magazine four. Thousands have come to our side who have been disgusted with the narrowness of the so-called old school, and the Churches are ripe and ready for the Truth on Progressive lines.” My lady correspondent says: “We find the people everywhere ready to receive this more practical putting of the Gospel. The leaders have so many calls for their services that they cannot comply with nearly all the requests," and again "hundreds in this neighbourhood have been won to God on those lines, and, without fail, in every church where it has been preached the members in great numbers have accepted it—with the exception of old people—and naturally they are so fixed in a rigid orthodoxy that it is only one here and there who can see differently."

I fear I have taxed your patience unduly, but I hope I have proved my thesis—that these old dogmas are really decaying and dying a natural death, and that the ground is thus being prepared for that Church of the future which shall be more comprehensive and beautiful, more free, and at the same time more reverent than any known on earth before, and which shall enshrine in the heart of the nations the simple and sublime faith of Jesus in the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of Man.

OBITUARY.

SIR HENRY TATE.

Not unexpectedly to friends who had been long aware of his failing health and the painful malady from which he suffered, came the news of the death of Sir Henry Tate, at his residence, Park-hill, Streatham Common, on Tuesday morning. The bulletin on Monday had already announced "unconscious," and he passed away quite peacefully, being in his eighty-first year.

Henry Tate was the son of the Rev. William Tate (1773-1836), a native of Newcastle-on-Tyne, who, as a young man, was a lay preacher among the Wesleyan Methodists, and then for a short time minister among the Baptists and the Methodist New Connexion. Having become a Unitarian he preached for a few months at Dukinfield, and in the summer of 1800 removed to Chorley, in Lancashire, where he ministered until his death, and also conducted a school.

At Chorley, therefore, Henry Tate was born in 1819, the youngest but one of twelve children. As a young man he went to Liverpool and entered into business as a grocer, the humble beginning of a career of great energy and success. A writer in the Liverpool Daily Post says of him:—

A man of keen perspicacity, untiring energy, great business acumen, and the highest standard of probity, he won success in commerce which few men achieve, and which, in fact, only those who possess such sterling qualities as he possessed can; and as his wealth increased, his generosity increased, until he earned, one might say, a universal reputation as a merchant prince and a large-hearted benefactor.

And, once more, we quote from a leading article in the same journal:—

Henry Tate was a plain man, never above his business, never hesitating to show his interest in it. He would go into an inn for tea with a party of friends in the country, and seeing that the sugar on the table was not in cubes, would visibly indicate an opinion that the place was quite behind the age. But this quaint enthusiasm in detail was associated with a broader enthusiasm, which made him the master of vast operations and great markets. And all the time this remarkable man's good acts were growing with his good fortunes.

We need not attempt here to tell the story of the growth of his business, and of his entry in middle life upon the industry of sugar-refining, or of the astonishing results of his adoption of a German patent, which sent "Tate's cubes" all over the world. We only note that about the year 1880, having opened an extensive sugar refinery in London, Mr. Tate removed from Liverpool, and made his home at Streatham.

Far more significant than his achievement of great wealth, was the noble use to which it was put. The greatest of his public benefactions was to the whole nation, in the building of the National Gallery of British Art, better known as the Tate Gallery, on the site of the old Millbank penitentiary, and the gift at the same time of sixty-five pictures by British artists, from his own collection. Not a fortnight ago, the extension to this gallery, consisting of ten additional rooms, built by his further munificence, was opened without public ceremony. This was but the crowning instance of a long succession of most generous gifts, of which only a part are known to the public. Thus it is said that he gave £20,000 anonymously to the Nurses Fund, and other instances of private acts of beneficence are now related, showing what has been the constant tenour of his life. Among his other public benefactions were £20,000 for the Tate Library at University College, Liverpool, with £5,000 for books and other gifts, amounting in all to £42,000; £5,000 for the rebuilding of the Liverpool Royal Infirmary, with another £5,000 for maintenance; £10,000 for the building fund of Owens College, Manchester; £24,000 for the building of the Hahnemann Hospital in Liverpool. Brixton, Battersea, Streatham, and Silvertown also owe to him their free libraries. To the religious community into which he was born, and in fellowship with which his long life was spent, his generosity was equally great. The Tate Library in Manchester College, Oxford, for the building of which he gave £10,000, is among the most beautiful of his gifts. In 1896 he gave £5,000 to the College, to endow a lectureship on the theory and art of preaching and of pastoral work; and a like sum for a similar purpose to the Unitarian Home Missionary College at Manchester, having there already founded a Tate Scholarship in 1878. In these gifts he showed his earnest solicitude to strengthen the ministry of our churches, a solicitude which remained with him to the end.

In 1891 Mr. Tate was presented with the honorary freedom of the city of Liverpool, receiving that honour at the same time as his friend and coadjutor in many works of charity, Mr. William Rathbone. He was a trustee of the National Gallery, a magistrate of three counties, and last year was created a baronet.

Sir Henry Tate was a warm supporter of Mr. Gladstone, until the Unionist secession, which he joined. He was for a time in the Liverpool City Council, but was not a platform speaker or an active politician.

He was twice married, and is succeeded in the baronetcy by his son, Mr. William Henry Tate, J.P., of Liverpool.

The funeral is to be at Norwood Cemetery, this (Saturday) afternoon, at half-past two, and is to be conducted by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A.

SAMUEL MAY.

THE Rev. Samuel May, of Leicester, Mass., whose death on the 25th ult., in his ninetyeth year, we recorded last week, was a graduate of Harvard College, in the Class of 1829, with Wm. Henry Channing, James Freeman Clarke, and other distinguished men. Mr. May sympathised with Wm. Lloyd Garrison and the pioneers of the Anti-Slavery movement heart and soul. In 1847 he became the general agent of the Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society, and, in the words of Mr. Frank Garrison who knew him well, "He filled this post with the greatest fidelity and self-abnegation to the close of the Anti-Slavery struggle, to which no one brought richer gifts of integrity, humanity, and culture, inherited and personal." Mr. May visited England and formed warm friendships with many on this side of the water, amongst others with Dr. and Miss Estlin, and Miss Carpenter, of Bristol. On May 29, 1847, he wrote from Boston to Miss Carpenter, describing a meeting which probably marks the advent of his Anti-Slavery career:—

We had an exceedingly interesting meeting yesterday afternoon and evening, at the house of Theodore Parker, in this city. He styled it, in his notes of invitation, a "Council of Reformers," and the object was to discuss the general principles of Reform, and the best means of promoting it. Let me give you the names of some of those present:—Ralph Waldo Emerson, Amos B. Alcott, Wm. Henry Channing, James Freeman Clarke, Wm. Lloyd Garrison, Wendell Phillips, Edmund Quincey, Mrs. M. W. Chapman, Mrs. Follen, James and Lucretia Mott and daughter (of Philadelphia), Caleb Stetson, J. L. Russell, Francis Jackson, Charles Sumner, Samuel G. Howe, and others. It was a matter of deep interest even to see this collection of the men alive of our neighbourhood and day. From 4 to 10 P.M., with a short interval for tea, a most spirited conversation was held on all the great Reform subjects of the day. I am more than ever convinced that the Anti-Slavery Reform carries all others with it, and that its triumph will be theirs.

To pursue Mr. May's career through the next eighteen years would be to trace the history of the Anti-Slavery Society, and that our limits forbid. On Jan. 1, 1865, Emancipation was proclaimed by President Lincoln. Four months later, Mr. May, Mr. Garrison, and other leaders, seeing the Anti-Slavery Society had consummated its mission, withdrew from it. But all through the thirty-five years that followed, Mr. May has been instant, in season and out of season, in the cause of liberty and justice—in America, for the freedmen still so cruelly abused in the south, for Woman's Suffrage, for Temperance, and for the oppressed everywhere in the land; in this country, in helping to denounce the wrongs of India and the legislation for facilitating vice at home and abroad. He has never been wanting with pen and purse to uphold the right.

In April, 1895, to celebrate Mr. May's eighty-fifth birthday, friends on both sides of the water were invited to congratulate him on the event. The letters were collected in an album and presented. He wrote respecting it to a friend:—

At first I was a little vexed to think how my friends had been called on—amidst all their busy lives—to write letters to me. But when I came to read the letters, to see them gathered in a handsome book—my secure possession—that feeling mostly passed away, and I most gratefully adjust myself, as I best can, to that which a good Providence has brought me. The book is wonderful, in my eyes. It seems, indeed, to belong to some ideal person, rather than to me, and yet there are resemblances and correspondences which seem to warrant me in accepting it as my own.

Since that birthday Mr. May lost his life-long companion, his beloved wife, only three years his junior. But his two daughters have faithfully sustained his declining steps, and with his two sons now mourn his loss, but with the assured consolation that he “rests in the Lord.” R. M.

THE INWARD LIFE.

From Fénelon's “Letters to Men.”

CERTAINLY, sir, you ought to make a short meditation every morning, placing yourself in God's Presence, worshipping Him, offering yourself wholly to Him, and asking the help of His Holy Spirit in what you are about to do. You know how we have done this together; it cannot be too simply done. Do not seek God in fine reflections or extraordinary emotions; speak simply, briefly, not in a studied way to Him—out of the fulness of your heart, as to a real friend. Take two or three considerations on the most weighty truths of Christianity. You can take them either from the “Imitation” or from the Retreats you have heard. Follow your own inclinations as to this, or rather the leadings of grace. . . .

I should read as little as may be, and directly I came to one or two important truths, I would stop to dwell upon them with recollection, and to work them into my heart after having grasped them technically. If afterwards I found my meditation getting too dry and lifeless, I would turn again to the book, so as to recall my subject and fix my mind.

At first be satisfied with a quarter of an hour for meditation, in case you become weary and dry; but if you find yourself able to go on for half an hour without tiring your head, do so. Generally speaking, it is best to begin with a short time, and gradually train yourself. You might do the same for another quarter of an hour at night, and so by degrees your meditation will become half an hour long. I assume that you will always proceed to make some practical resolution, ending with an act of self-abandonment to God, and of thanksgiving for the help He has given you.

As to your spiritual reading, which ought to be systematic, it should be for a good quarter of an hour, and very slow. Read on your own behalf; I mean, do not stop short in believing what you read, but apply it to yourself, and think over the practical results of every precept as concerns you.

In this way try not only to gratify your tastes, but to digest this sacred food for your soul's nourishment. And moreover, it requires thorough mastication in order to be well digested; people who bolt their food quickly are apt to get attacks of indigestion instead of nourishment.

It is better to read but little, and that attentively. Careful reading insensibly becomes a sort of meditation, whereas otherwise it often drifts into what is vague and unprofitable. Too much variety in spiritual reading, as in other things, tends to dissipate the mind, scatter and waste it.

You might read with profit St. Francis de Sales' “Introduction to the Devout Life,” then some of Rodriguez's writings, especially one on “Conformity to the Will of God,” going on to St. Francis' “Entretiens.”

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

I REMEMBER last year telling you about a little book of “Addresses to Children,” by the Rev. Bernard J. Snell, of the Brixton Congregational Church. Since then Mr. Snell has published another book,* in which there are sermons for the Elders and “Words to the Children,” printed alternately; and it is part of one of these little talks to the children that I am now going to repeat to you.

It is about Cheerfulness, with a text out of the Book of Proverbs, “A merry heart maketh a cheerful face.” This is part of what Mr. Snell says:—

Have you never wondered how happy blind people are? There was a lady who could not move from her couch, and when she was lying there she could not read, she could not sew, she could not see. They asked how it was she was so happy, and she said: “It would make things so much harder if I fretted about them.” So she kept her heart brave.

Much depends upon the way of looking at things. I know a boy who every morning has to eat his porridge; sometimes he grumbles and says: “There are people who have such nice things to eat for breakfast!” And some one said: “Yes, but there are some children who have to go to school without any breakfast at all.”

“Oh,” said a girl, “bother the rain, it spoils all the fun.” But she forgot that the ducks thought the rain great fun; and she forgot that the trees and the flowers after dry weather eagerly welcome the falling showers.

The other day when I cracked a tea-cup there was a kind fairy in the house who said: “Never mind, it's only cracked.” And when the next day I happened to break that cup, the kind fairy said: “Well, I am glad that it's only the cracked one.”

“A merry heart goes all the way;

A sad tires in a mile a.”

Yes! Better far is it to make the best of things.

I think that you, children, would find it better far sometimes to play at fairies than to occupy yourselves in telling or listening to fairy stories. The other day baby was very cross, and mother was very busy, and very soon father would be coming home from the City very tired. And Tom said (he had been reading Shakespeare): “Well, I'll be Mustard-seed, and I'll play ball with baby. Here goes.” And Susan said: “I'll be Peas-blossom, and lay the table quickly, so that mother will be so surprised.” And they went so quietly to work that when their little sister came in and saw their tea-table so delightfully set, she said: “Why it's a tea-party!” And when father came home from the City, he said: “Well, have we come into a fortune?” Mother said: “No, but fairies have been at work.” And everybody was happy—especially the “fairies.”

* “The Virtue of Gladness and other Sermons,” by Bernard J. Snell, M.A., B.Sc., author of “The Widening Vision,” “The Good God” (Children's Sermons), “Gala or Loes,” &c., H. R. Allenson. 3s. 6d.

Do you know, children, that some people have to try so hard to be cheerful? I suppose he is the most famous pianist living, and a gentleman said to him a little time ago: “You must be very, very happy to give so much pleasure to so many people!” And he said: “Yes, I am happy to give so much pleasure.” And then he said, after a pause: “You know all the happiness has gone out of my life. You know that my wife is dead, and my only child is an incurable cripple. Why, I became a performer of music just in order that I might have the best possible advice for my poor boy. And sometimes when the public is applauding, I stand there and think of my poor boy lying on his couch; and I feel how empty and vain all the applause is.” Yet he kept a brave heart.

What you and I have to do for others' sakes as for our own sake, is not to give way to things, but to stand firm and be men. It is not always easy, I know. There is a text in the Bible which bids us, “Rejoice evermore.” And that, Mr. Snell adds, we shall best learn to do by thinking of Christ, and what he suffered so uncomplainingly. For when we understand him, we know the Christian secret of joy.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

TO PUBLISHERS.—All Books, &c., sent to THE INQUIRER will be acknowledged under this head, with name of publisher and price, if supplied. The necessities of our space, however, compel us to limit the number selected for critical notice and review.]

Zola. By Herbert Burrows. 6d. (Sonnenschein.)

Story of Samson. (Dean and Son.)

A Night with Jesus. By J. L. Haigh. 6d. (Liverpool Booksellers' Co.)

Das Willensproblem, namentlich in der englischen Philosophie des XIX. Jahrhunderts. 2m. Dr. J. Warschauer. (Jena: Otto Rassmann.)

Memories. By C. Kegan Paul. 7s. 6d. (Kegan Paul.)

A Critical History of the Doctrine of a Future Life. By R. H. Charles, D.D. 15. (A. and C. Black.)

The Psychology of Religion. By E. D. Starbuck, Ph.D. 6s. (Walter Scott.)

The Story of the Nations. Modern Spain. By Martin A. S. Hume. 5s. (Fisher Unwin.)

Young Days. Vol. VI. 1s. 6d. (Sunday School Association.)

The Helper, 1900. 2s. 6d. net. (S.S.A.).

Unwin's Chap Book. 1s. (Fisher Unwin.)

Scribner's, Expositor, Harper's, Bookman.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c., received from the following:—E. S. L. B.; E. F. C.; F. E. C.; E. M. F.; M. F.; M. H.; W. H.; E. M. (Geneva); J. E. M.; W. R.; G. St. A.; J. M. L. T.; N. M. T.

EPPS'S COCOA. The most nutritious.

EPPS'S COCOA. Grateful and comforting.

EPPS'S COCOA. For breakfast and supper.

EPPS'S COCOA. With natural flavour only.

EPPS'S COCOA. From the finest brands.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any News-agent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are:—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER ...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR ...	3	4
PER YEAR ...	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE ...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE ...	2	10	0
PER COLUMN ...	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN ...	0	3	8
BACK PAGE ...	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, DECEMBER 9, 1899.

A CHURCH THAT MINISTERS.

IN contrast to the Sacerdotal and Evangelical ideals of religious life we spoke last week of that cherished in our Free Churches, which we hold to be in completest harmony with the mind of CHRIST. In that ideal the Kingdom and the Household of God are the ruling thoughts, calling upon men to be together and to help one another as faithful citizens of the Kingdom here on earth, as children of the FATHER in heaven. This, as it seems to us, was at the heart of the teaching of JESUS, who in his own life manifested the true spirit of a child of God, and showed to his fellow-men what it means to do the FATHER'S will. The Church, therefore, comes to be simply a gathering of brethren who seek to be together in the Divine presence, for worship and prayer and thanksgiving, and to receive enlightenment and strength, that they may better understand and more faithfully do their duty as citizens of the Kingdom, and enter into the life of children of the Household of God. Such a Church is Christian—not through participation in any miraculous sacrament provided by the mediation of a priest, nor through the redemption of its members effected by the atoning death of CHRIST—it is Christian simply through learning of CHRIST and sharing in his spirit, because its members recognise in him the revealer, by Divine grace, of the life they are called to live as children of God, and in his friendship and leadership find the surest quickening of their own deeper life.

To be true to that ideal, to make such churches effective as they have never yet been in ministering to the deepest needs of the world, is the aim constantly set before us. For this many things are required, but all springing from the one central faith, which is perfected in love; and we propose here to indicate some of the lines along which we might strive in our churches for a greater faithfulness, by which to attain to a more effectual strength of religious life. Only so shall we be spared that reproach now so readily brought against us, that the Orthodox, after all, have the only true theology, and the Unitarian has but a poor and utterly inadequate grasp of Divine truth, because his religion, tested by a wide experience, is seen to be so palpably lacking in the energy of an all-subduing faith.

And first, the church is for worship and reverent service of the living God, which demands the faithful effort of each one, both in the hour of prayer and in daily life; for there can be no true service of God that does not include the ministering to human needs, since the will of the FATHER is concerned with the true welfare of all His children.

Much might be done to render the hour of united worship in our churches more helpful and more profoundly reverent and instinct with the true spirit of prayer. Too much can never be done by the generous and humble offerings of worshippers, to make the house of prayer beautiful and eloquent of reverence and aspiration. But far more than the outward order of the house is the inward frame of the people and the manner in which they assemble and participate in the service. Whether the form of service be liturgical or of Puritan simplicity, it is the offering of the heart that tells, and each one has something to give, either to make or to mar the helpfulness of the hour. It is to be feared that we are seldom sufficiently impressed with the greatness of the act of worship, the need of quiet, inward preparation before we come together, the responsibility laid upon each one to add his own measure of reverence and aspiration and prayer to that silent force, which then in the Divine presence kindles the deeper life in others. But herein is a veritable power of ministry, which is the surest sign of a living Church.

Such inward preparation and personal contribution to the spirit of prayer in the Church implies a consecrated life and the strong witness of a disciplined character—not in any temper that could fall under the condemnation of self-sufficiency or Pharisaism, but in the self-forgetfulness of a child-like spirit, surrendered to the FATHER'S will. We believe in salvation by character, but that is not to be found in its richest measure without faith in the living God; and it is the prayer of daily life, which rejoices to be with God in the world, which feels the needs, the aspirations and the Divine presence amid the common things of daily life, out of which comes the prayer that most truly ministers in the Church. Thus every one has that further contribution to make to the power of a living Church, the contribution of personal character, strongest in the humility, the unselfishness, the compassion and the love of CHRIST.

And having learnt that lesson, the church itself becomes not only the place of united prayer—although that must always be its supreme purpose—it becomes also a religious home, type of the larger fellowship of the Household of God. In such a home the bond of brotherhood is felt to be no empty profession as part of an accepted, conventional creed, but a living power to draw men together and to kindle in every heart the insight of helpfulness which only love can give, and which was so wonderfully given to CHRIST. Thus, as in the hour of prayer the spirit of the gathering in the FATHER'S presence ministers with uplifting power, bringing new hopefulness to the darkened heart, rest to the weary, peace and comfort to the mourner, faith, courage, and joy, or the conviction of penitence and the quickening of better life, according to the inward need of each, so the companionship of brotherly love and the home-feeling of the church adds a new helpfulness, and may gather in many solitary ones and make life richer in all purer influences for those who otherwise would have an existence far more cramped and unlovely. There is no limit to the happy privilege of helpfulness which may be thus developed by a true companionship in the Church, and in such ways does the grace of Christian charity make the love of God more real. Such a test should be continually applied to our Church life, to see how far the sympathy, the intelligence, the many gifts of members are used for the service of their fellows, how far the Church is the centre of united and vigorous work. In the school, in social clubs, in societies for many helpful and enlightening pursuits, in special works of charity and other beneficent activities, the eager life of the Church is abundantly poured out, for there is no genius so ready and inventive of helpful methods as that love which cares to understand, and upheld by faith in the Eternal Goodness is unwearied in well-doing. And while the Church home is itself such an active centre of work, no relation of life remains untouched. Children of the Household are also citizens of the Kingdom, and there is no more inspiring impulse at the heart of a living Church, than to make the power of God, kindled in faithful souls, felt in the world, for the establishment of righteousness and the overthrow of oppression and wrong, for the cleansing of foul places, the destruction of evil passion, and the victory of peace and brotherhood among all nations of the earth.

These are some of the directions in which by more determined faithfulness we may be led into fuller and more vigorous life; so we may forget ourselves in a new devotedness of service, and for ourselves and our churches find the greater joy which comes to those who learn truly to minister of the things of God.

A GREAT GIVER.

"THIS Gallery and sixty-five pictures were presented to the nation by HENRY TATE, for the encouragement and development of British Art, and as a thank-offering for a prosperous business career of sixty years." Such is the inscription upon the base of one of the columns in the central hall of the National Gallery of British Art, better known by its popular name of the "Tate Gallery." The words in their simplicity are in keeping with the character of the man whose noble generosity they record. Never, we should say, has great wealth, honourably acquired, been more wisely used than it was by Sir HENRY TATE. To give lavishly and carelessly where there is abundance far beyond what can minister to any personal wants or pleasures, is no difficult matter; but to give with true beneficence, understanding and wisely meeting both public and private needs with overflowing generosity and unostentatious modesty, that is a very rare gift, the exercise of which throughout a long life, as it was with Sir HENRY TATE, must be recognised with honour and heartfelt gratitude.

That the freedom of the city of his early choice and of his strenuous working life, and a baronetcy should be conferred upon him, are but tokens of far higher honour which crowns a man of the people, who has known how to share his abundance with his fellow-men in such a way as to enrich their higher life, to minister to their knowledge, their enlightenment, and their pure delight in beautiful things, both in the present and succeeding generations.

The Tate Gallery naturally stands first, as a truly national gift, and a memorial of that love of art, and warm interest in artists, which were so marked a feature in his life; but not less noble memorials of our friend remain in the Tate Library in University College, Liverpool, and again in Manchester College, Oxford. These, together with the several free libraries he founded, remain as characteristic expressions of that high appreciation of the value of learning, and the essential need of education for the true welfare of the people, naturally found in one who had grown up in the home and the school of an earnest Nonconformist minister. And yet further, his many gifts to hospitals and convalescent homes, and his founding of the Hahnemann hospital in Liverpool, bear witness to the ready helpfulness of a truly compassionate, thoughtful, and affectionate nature.

A great giver without doubt he was, and if at any time he felt the burden of so great a responsibility, we may be sure that there came to him abundantly the gladness and thankfulness of knowing that his gifts were wisely and well bestowed.

LITERATURE.

IN QUIET PLACES.*

It is to the first of the books mentioned below that this notice is specially devoted, but the others are included because they are all illustrated by Mr. Edmund New, and the chief purpose of this article is to call attention to his work. The books all belong to the last four years, the earliest, if we are not mistaken, being Mrs. Crofton's delightful "In the Garden of Peace." Her second book, "Outside the Garden," and the little book on "Shakespeare's Country," as well as "The Life of William Morris," belong to the present year.

In the final chapter of "In the Garden of Peace," Mrs. Crofton writes:—

There could be no record of the Garden of Peace without the pictures, for words might not carry the home beyond the little circle, or accurately show the nut-hatches carrying nuts and the tomtits' acrobatic feats. It was a subject to be treated tenderly; but then an artist can only treat scenes tenderly when Nature guides the pen. So the artist came and listened to the birds while he worked in the Garden of Peace, and he watched the giant poppies open and shut in the sun, and the white sweet peas' gentle blossoms. "All great art is praise," says Ruskin, and an artist's office "seems to be that of interpreter and mediator between Nature and man. . . . his eye can see deeper, his ear hear more, his heart is sooner thrilled, his sympathies are more attuned, his mind receives physical impressions more directly than other men."

When we look at Mr. New's work we feel that he is gaining for himself a high place among such interpreters of Nature, in the modest path that he has chosen, and we cannot speak too warmly of the delight which many of his illustrations give. The drawings are all done in pen and ink, and are reproduced by process block, so that the effect is similar to that of a woodcut. They are not, of course, all uniformly successful, and the Cambridge book is disappointing, not from any fault, it would seem, in the drawing, but in the printing of the pictures. The charm which we find in nearly all the illustrations is not easy to analyse, but it must be largely in the wonderful truthfulness of the drawing, and in the sense of complete enjoyment of the quiet scene, the quaint old houses, or the lovely flowers, in which the artist has forgotten himself. This is the case both with scenes of purely natural beauty, and where there are noble buildings which seem to have grown into perfect harmony with beautiful natural surroundings. Of these latter, some of the best examples are in the illustrations of Kelmscott Manor, in "The Life of Morris," the drawing of Compton Wynyates in "Shakespeare's Country" (in which also Anne Hathaway's Cottage is specially charming), and the views of Merton from the meadows, the garden front of Wadham and St. John's, and Magdalen Tower, in "Oxford and its Colleges."

It is not necessary to be a fisherman to enjoy the "Compleat Angler," although for this edition Mr. New has drawn not only a surprising variety of fish, but also frogs and tadpoles with a sympathetic care for which old Isaac Walton would not have stinted his praise. There is, as is well known, much more than the fisherman's lore in the book, and as we are led through the valley of the Lea, and again through Dovedale in Derbyshire, we have in Mr. New's pictures many fascinating glimpses of old-world villages and wayside inns, quiet meadow paths, and the shaded banks of rivers; and scattered here and there, chiefly for the heading of a page or at the end of a chapter, there are little groups of flowers, drawn for their own sake, with just that tenderness of which Mrs. Crofton speaks, with clearness of line, and, as it seems to us, an exquisite understanding of the beauty which is inexhaustible even in the simplest flower. The same love of flowers, and the same sureness of touch, in a somewhat different manner, appear notably in the illustrations of "The Garden of Peace."

All lovers of White's "Selborne" will desire to possess this new edition, the seventy-eighth that has appeared since the first publication in 1789, according to Mr. Alfred Paterson's bibliographical list printed in an appendix. The editing of the volume could hardly have been in more accomplished hands than those of the late Grant Allen, whose scientific knowledge and literary taste combined to furnish an admirable introduction and notes to the letters, unobtrusive, and of real value.

The interest of Gilbert White's letters, Mr. Allen points out, is chiefly literary. They have, indeed, a real worth in the history of science and in the example they afford of a careful first-hand observer of Nature; but the abiding charm of the letters, witnessed by their constant reproduction, is in the picture they present of the man himself, a native of the secluded village where he spent the greater part of his life, a fellow of Oriel, in orders, but with no very active duties, unmarried, and engaged in constant quiet observation of Nature, and especially of the bird life around him, of which he sends the record in letters to two friends engaged in similar pursuits. We are not presuming here to introduce to our readers so well known a classic as White's "Selborne," but we cannot refrain from quoting one short passage from a letter written in 1769, thoroughly characteristic of the man and his habitual interests:—

If ever I saw anything like actual migration, it was last Michaelmas Day. I was travelling, and out early in the morning; at first there was a vast fog; but, by the

* "The Natural History of Selborne." By Gilbert White. Edited, with Introduction, by Grant Allen, with upwards of 200 illustrations by Edmund H. New. John Lane. 21s. net.

"Walton and Cotton's Compleat Angler." Edited, with Introduction by Richard La Gallienne, with over 250 illustrations, by Edmund H. New. John Lane. 15s. net.

"The Life of William Morris." By J. W. Mackail, with sixteen full-page illustrations by E. H. New. Two vols. Longmans. 32s.

"In the Garden of Peace." By Helen Milman (Mrs. Caldwell Crofton), with twenty-four illustrations by E. H. New. (1896.) John Lane. 5s. net.

"Outside the Garden." By Helen Milman (Mrs. Caldwell Crofton), with twenty-four illustrations by E. H. New. John Lane. 6s.

"Oxford and its Colleges." By J. Wells, M.A. Illustrated by E. H. New. (1897.) Methuen and Co. 3s.

"Cambridge and its Colleges." By A. H. Thompson. Illustrated by E. H. New. (1898.) Methuen and Co. 3s.

"Shakespeare's Country." By Bertram C. A. Windle. Illustrated by Edmund H. New. (1899.) Methuen and Co. 3s.

time that I was got seven or eight miles from home towards the coast, the sun broke out into a delicate warm day. We were then on a large heath or common, and I could discern, as the mist began to break away, great numbers of swallows (hirundines rusticae) clustering on the stunted shrubs and bushes, as if they had roosted there all night. As soon as the air became clear and pleasant they were all on the wing at once; and, by a placid and easy flight, proceeded on southward towards the sea; after this I did not see any more flocks, only now and then a straggler.

And we will add also the concluding sentences of Mr. Grant Allen's Introduction:—

Everybody can love and observe Nature. Everybody can take lessons from White in such love and observation. The aim we should propose is to build ourselves up in the round; to make of ourselves full, evenly-balanced, broadminded human natures. We do not want to be lop-sided. As a preservative against one prevalent form of lop-sidedness in modern life, White's methods and example are of incalculable value. Try to look out upon Nature with the same frank, unprejudiced, first-hand view, asking her questions, and letting her answer them herself, instead of forcing a hasty answer upon her; and then, whether you succeed in "advancing science" or not, you will at least have advanced our common humanity by the presence in its midst of one more candid, single-hearted lover of truth and beauty.

What we may thus learn from White's letters is rendered easier and more delightful than ever by Mr. New's illustrations. In the Introduction it is said, that thoroughly to understand the book one must go to Selborne itself; but while to the majority of readers that may not be possible, in this edition Mr. New takes us there and with unwearied good-nature and consummate skill shows us all that is most worth seeing. We see the village from near and far, with glimpses of the surrounding country, the wooded hills, the open downs and many neighbouring villages. In Selborne itself there are charming pictures of the quaint village street, of the church, where White's grandfather was vicar, and the churchyard, where are the graves of both the elder and younger Gilbert White. And above all we are shown, under many aspects, the picturesque and substantial house, "The Wakes," with its beautiful garden, the home for so many years of the man who has made Selborne famous. There are also drawings of more than sixty different birds, which came under White's observation, together with three most interesting kinds of cricket and other creatures.

At Selborne we are in the heart of genuine English country, quiet and restful, rich in treasures of unfailling beauty and delight; and there, as in the "Garden of Peace," Mr. New acts as a faithful interpreter, for whose work we are sincerely grateful. Whoever in these days of stress and often ignoble haste helps us to be quiet and to enjoy the quiet places of the earth, is doing us no slight service; and when at the same time he makes us see into the very heart of the beautiful, in which resides a spirit that is pure and unselfish, he is ministering to that which is deepest and best in human nature, and brings us very near to the Divine. We do not wish to make any exaggerated claims for Mr. New's work, it is essentially modest in its character and scope; but in some of the simplest things that he has drawn we seem to see touches of that deeper spirit, which we take to be signs of high promise. Mr. New bears a name which has long been held in honour in our religious community, and it is on that account an additional pleasure to call attention to his work, and to those gifts of insight and delight in things beautiful which he has inherited and is proving that he can put to such worthy use.

MR. LLOYD ON ENGLISH PRESBYTERIANISM.—I.*

MR. LLOYD entitles his new book "The Story of Protestant Dissent and English Unitarianism," but it is obvious that its principal aim is to discuss the English Presbyterianism to which it is customary to trace our origin. He thinks that the Presbyterians have been greatly over-estimated.

In the Commonwealth time they were the most intolerant of the Puritans, and the most bitterly opposed to any idea of religious liberty. That will hardly be disputed; but Mr. Lloyd goes on to maintain that this temper continued after the Restoration, that in the Era of Toleration they still were as rigidly doctrinal as ever, constantly occupied in theological disputes, and utterly removed from the breadth and Catholicity which has been often claimed for them. A long chapter on Richard Baxter examines his claims to be held up as a Nonconformist ideal, and says: "The Baxterian Catholicity praised by Dr. Martineau is evidently only a product of the imagination." Mr. Lloyd says that it is quite a mistake to suppose that the Presbyterians differed from the other Nonconformists in leaving their trust deeds freer than others—practically they were all alike. Moreover he goes on to argue that our usually ascribed origin in Presbyterianism is really an error. Unitarianism, he maintains, was not a development of Presbyterian freethinking, especially, but of various separate and independent movements, which he traces in a series of interesting chapters on John Biddle, Lindsey, Priestley and Belsham, the Unitarian Societies, &c.

The strongest and most interesting part of the book is the chapter entitled "The Meeting-Houses," in which he examines the claim so frequently made that the "open trusts" of which so much is said were left open deliberately, with a view to possible development, or at any rate from a dislike to creeds, and an unwillingness to impose tests upon their descendants. Mr. Lloyd examines this whole matter more fully, we think, than it has been examined before, and with results which we frankly admit must modify a good many of our popular statements on the subject. His great point is, that in reality there was no such difference of practice between the usage of Presbyterians and others of the Nonconformists.

I am informed, on unquestionable authority, that there are in the occupation of the Congregationalists also, some hundreds of chapels with "open trusts" many of which at least date from the same period as the "Unitarian" ones. The Baptists followed the same practice of not including doctrinal statements in their trust deeds. We must, therefore, assume that if there was any principle involved in this practice, it was some general one, and not one peculiar to the Presbyterians—(p. 105).

We should have liked to know more definitely Mr. Lloyd's "unquestionable authority," but the statement is in general agreement with Mr. Herbert Skeat's testimony, and also of the Rev. Alexander Gordon, who holds it true in the main. And the reason sufficiently appears in the fact that there was no need to put doctrinal directions in the trust deed, as that matter seemed sufficiently secured by the law of the land. The Toleration Act itself required subscription to the doctrinal articles of the Church of England, and meeting-houses had to be licensed by the bishop of the diocese, the archdeacon, or the justices of the peace; so that all that any of the Nonconformists thought of doing was of distinctly securing their property as places of worship.

It was not till half a century later, when Methodism had sprung up, and the growth of Arianism was introducing dividing lines of doctrine among the Nonconformists, that the practice began of more carefully guarding chapel trusts by references to the Westminster Confession or some other standard of orthodoxy, or by indication of denominational belonging. It appears to be really in the case of these later trusts that the "Open Trust" has any significance of intentional freedom.

While we thus fully admit the value of this special examination of the "Open Trust" question as it concerns the history of our older congregations, we cannot follow Mr. Lloyd in the same way in his general history as it touches the Presbyterians and our relation to them. We must reserve this criticism, however, for another number. B. H.

ECHOES OF OLD LANCASHIRE.*

THE perusal of this little work has given us more pleasure than its title had led us to anticipate. It proves to be a good deal more than a piece of book-making compiled from county histories and the publications of local antiquarian societies. The volume, in fact, is not confined to topography and local antiquities. It treats of biography and folk lore, as well as literary and bibliographical gossip. It is pleasing, too, to note that a good many of the items in the programme come to us at first hand. The articles, it is true, are of the briefest, and are handled in the lightest manner; but this, we take it, is in harmony with the design of the writer, who, in this instance, appeals to a public desirous not so much of being instructed as entertained.

The readiest method of showing the scope of this collection of papers is to quote a few of their titles.

Thus, beginning with "The Lancashire Plot" of 1694, we have "De Quincey's Highwayman," "What was the first Book printed in Manchester?" "Kufic Coins found in Lancashire," "Newspapers in 1738-39," "A Lancashire Naturalist: Thomas Garnett," "The Traffords of Trafford," "How the first Spinning-machinery was taken to Belgium," "A Manchester Jeanie Deans," "Literary Taste of the Eighteenth Century," "Manchester and the First Reform Agitation,"

* "The Story of Protestant Dissent and English Unitarianism." By Walter Lloyd. London; Philip Green, 5, Essex Street. 2s. 6d. net.

* "Echoes of Old Lancashire." By William E. A. Axon. William Andrews and Co., 5, Farringdon-avenue, E.C. (Limited to 500 copies.) 7s. 6d.

"The Folk-lore of Lancashire," and "Alexander Barclay and Manchester."

Those who can claim blue blood or broad acres, or who study the history of the possessors of either, will find much to interest them in Mr. Axon's account of the fine old territorial family of Trafford—a house whose proud claim it is to have been settled at Trafford in the days of Canute; and who are still considerably more than extant. There must be few houses with so long a pedigree, settled for so long a period in one spot. The Oakovers "of that ilk," in Staffordshire, are, we believe, among the select few who trace their lineage to an Anglo-Saxon ancestor.

A hint for aristocratic masquerade is furnished by a Mr. Trafford, who, at the Preston Guild Fancy Dress Ball, in 1823, "was remarkably dressed in his own crest: a clown in parti-coloured clothes, a flail in his hand, and a motto, 'Now thus.'"

Few citizens of Liverpool, at the present day, are aware, it is to be presumed, that their city was the home, and probably the birthplace of Thomas Lurting (born 1629), a Quaker and a sailor, captured by the press-gang. Yet here was a man of whom, with all his eccentricities, his town, his country, and indeed the world might be proud. The constant collision between his duties on a warship and his pacific principles was bound to produce a series of "situations" for which the modern novelist and dramatist would be grateful. The most bizarre, as well as the most pathetic, of these adventures is narrated in the tract of George Fox, entitled "To the Great Turk and his King, at Algiers." It was written by Lurting at Liverpool in 1680. Lack of space alone restrains us from quoting largely from it. The history of a ship's mate, dominating and leading his captain and all the crew by sheer force of character; of his delivering them from Algerine corsairs, through the quiet determination which rests upon implicit faith in God's Providence; how, when his Turkish captors had in turn been made captive, the British mariner braved all sorts of perils in order to land them unscathed upon their own shores; together with the spectacle of these same pirates parting with their strange benefactor, upon the Barbary coast, with tears and embraces—all this can only be duly appreciated when read in the simple, unaffected narrative of the Quaker seaman himself.

To Liverpool folk, also, the article upon "Mrs. Fletcher in Lancashire" will especially appeal. Her visits to the Rathbones at Green Bank, and to William Roscoe at Allerton Hall, as well as her intercourse with the Gregs, with Mrs. Gaskell, and other Lancashire notables, are only too briefly touched upon.

Perhaps, however, for those who do not entirely subscribe to the doctrine that the proper study of mankind is man, the chapter upon the naturalist, Thomas Garnett of Clithero, uncle of Dr. Richard Garnett, of the British Museum, will be the most interesting in the book.

The description of John Middleton, "The Chylde of Hale," contains no reference to the account of this Lancashire giant, given by Dr. Plott, in his History of Staffordshire, nor to the Diarist Pepys' visit (on June 9, 1668) to the buttery of Brasenose College, Oxford, when he saw the size of the "child's" hand carved in stone, with the date affixed.

A word of commendation is due to the printer and binder of this pleasant little volume.

J. L. THORNELY.

PROVINCIAL LETTER.

WALES.

"TO-DAY's need is a more vigorous denominationalism, rooted in intelligent conviction and nourished by intelligent enthusiasm. The 'sprawling Catholicism,' which forms petty alliances with all the Churches, but will fight for none of them, neither him that gives nor him that takes, &c." When I read these lines in one of the denominational papers, the question forced itself upon me, How far does this hit the weak point in our armour? It has frequently been asked among us why it is our cause does not prevail more; but no methods of diagnosis that have been so far applied seem to have "touched the spot." Sometimes I feel we are too much given to introspection, instead of laying hold, with all the vigour of which we are possessed, of the work that lies nearest at hand.

If we turn our eyes upon the prophets of the past, we shall find they have always been men of a mighty faith and great power, their power being borne of their faith. Rowlands and Harris, the leaders of the Methodist movement in Wales, and Whitfield and Wesley after them in England, did a grand work in their day. But then they did not allow any little scruples of intellectual doubt, with which they may have been troubled, to interfere with what they considered the clearly-spoken voice of duty. It would have been a sad paltering with the demands of conscience if they allowed any trivial obstacles to prevent their exercising that mighty rescuing power, which they felt was in them, in the interests of the seething mass of humanity they saw, or fancied they saw, sinking before their eyes. And the mantle of these people has fallen upon a host of faithful successors.

There is a letter extant, penned by the Rev. David Jones (1735-1810) of Llangan to the Countess of Huntingdon—it was published in the Evangelical Magazine for Dec. 1810 or Jan. 1811—in which the reverend gentleman tries to cheer up the drooping spirits of her ladyship in these words:—"Don't be cast down. The ark we are embarked in will never give up to the waves. Ride on therefore without fear. Though the billows may rage and foam, you will not be disembarked till you are brought to your desired port. . . . I had rather go to the bottom with you, than survive with your enemies. This is the very truth." Now, is not this a specimen of the kind of faith of which it has been said it can remove mountains? It has certainly been the inspiration which has made Welsh Calvinistic Methodism the most powerful religious community in the Principality.

And here I would ask, Have the Unitarians, as such, any message to the world, and do they, like the Methodists, believe in their message? I most assuredly believe they have the message, but I am not quite so sure of the potency of their belief. What we sadly need is more faith in our faith, a half-hearted assent is of little good. But weak or strong in faith, united we stand; separated, we fall. It were well if we could be somehow induced to concentrate our forces upon the work involved in our message. We may read our message differently, but there are the three pillars of the Unitarian faith as held in the past, God and duty and immortality; these, I take it, remain with most of us to-day firm and strong as ever; and knowing them to be factors in the faith of all Christian and even of non-Christian religious communities, we feel the more confident and cannot help looking upon them as belonging to the eternal verities. Believing in these verities I would appeal to all my fellow-workers in the Principality to be up and doing and to throw themselves heart and soul into their work. The word was never more true than to-day, that the harvest is ripe and ready for the sickle and the labourers far too few.

The orthodox churches in Wales are realising their position and fully alive to their duties; and the Welsh Press to-day is showing signs of a more vigorous life than it has ever done during the whole course of its history. Its literature in all departments bulks larger than ever, and though much of it, from our standpoint, is far from satisfactory, still we cannot help feeling that the trend of whatever real thinking is done, is in the direction of liberal Christianity as we understand it. Judged by their Hymn-books however, of which there have been four published recently, we might fancy that the Churches are all in a state of complete stagnation; for we find in them all the crudities of what we had supposed to be a dead or dying theology—hymns which sing of the death of God and of the torments in hell of such other folk, all and sundry, as do not belong to their own particular communions. All this is very sad; but we find it difficult to realise what it means in face of other facts we know. In an able article in our chief quarterly—Y Geninen—with the pertinent question, "What has become of hell?" as its caption, we are told that the pulpit is everywhere ignoring it and that the pews are silent. To what conclusions are we brought when we put these two facts side by side? Again, when we find Dr. Cynddylan Jones, in his own eloquent and attractive way, defending in his "Davies Lecture" every iota of what he calls the Mosaic theology, and Emrys ab Iwan, in the same quarterly we mentioned before, ventilating with much sympathy the teachings of recent Biblical criticism with respect to the formation of the Hexateuch, we are inclined to ask what Young Wales will say by-and-by?

Within our own special field of operations we have experienced nothing sensational of late. Our vacant pulpits are gradually getting filled. At Cwmbach, Wick, Swansea, Clydach Vale, Pentre-Rhondda, and Aberdare, new ministers have been secured; those at the last three are converts from the orthodox, and much good is expected from them. Mr. W. Tudor Jones brings with him a good record from his last denomination, and the congregation at Swansea is said to be reviving under his genial sway. Mr. David Rees has uphill work before him at Pentre, and is seriously handicapped by the heavy debt. Could this only be removed, he has a very promising field, and he seems just the man for the work that awaits him. Mr. E. Robinson Hughes comes to us from the Baptists and has been received with open arms everywhere. From his labours we shall hope for a large measure of success.

Much has been done in recent years to add to the comfort of many of our churches. In addition to those at Pentre and Clydach Vale, we have had new buildings at Cefn, Gellionen (still encumbered with a heavy debt), Pantdefaid, Ciliau (in course of erection). Early next spring they purpose commencing operation at Merthyr. It was here in 1814 our people were turned out from their old chapel, where they had been worshipping from 1749, a hundred and fifty years ago. It was in 1821 the present structure was erected, and it is now in every way unworthy of the town and of the congregation. At Pontypridd where they are, so to speak in lodgings, and labouring under great disadvantages, they are on the lookout for a site.

Our quarterly meetings continue to be a great rallying force, always bringing together the clans in great numbers; and our musical festivals—held annually—stir up pulsations that seem to be felt even to the uttermost parts of our community. If we might without offence, we should like to remind our Welsh readers that these festivals were originally instituted for other purposes besides music. Would it not be well once more to have a short paper or two read at intervals on some topic of general interest to our churches? Most of our churches are interested in the great London Bazaar, and are doing something towards its success. Let our London friends see to it that the Welsh stall does not put them all in the shade. In the spring of 1901 we shall look for help from all quarters towards our own Welsh bazaar, which we shall then hope to set in motion for the total extinction of our chapel debts, &c.

Before bringing these scattered notes to a conclusion, I should like once more to pronounce my shibboleth, and to ask the promoters why their grand movement to have a school for our own boys (it is a thousand pities the movement was not made fifty years ago) should not be founded on principles as broad as Channing House for girls. Surely they do not wish to hamper it with unnecessary restrictions. Why English? Channing House is open to children from Ireland, Scotland, Wales, &c.

R. J. JONES.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

CHRISTMAS APPEALS.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, S.E.—The Rev. Frederic Allen, owing to the large increase in the number of depositors in our Provident Bank (1,200 this year) appeals for more visitors to carry on this work. The help of ladies or gentlemen, who can give a few hours on Monday morning, will be heartily welcomed. The requisites needed for such visitation are time, kindly sympathy and tact, so that the people visited may feel that those who call upon them are friends interested in their well-being. The Poor's Purse also needs replenishing, and for the various societies, clubs, &c., in connection with the work at Stamford-street, hospital letters, gifts of books, magazines, games, &c., are at all times acceptable. The names of those willing to help in any way should be sent to Mr. Allen as soon as possible to 5, Holland-grove, S.W.

Deptford.—The Rev. A. J. Marchant writes:—

I desire once again to appeal to your readers for aid towards my Poor's Purse. The claims upon it are increasing. In addition to providing a little extra comfort for our poor at this festive season, there are frequently urgent cases of need in this deplorably poor district, which, in the latter part of the year, I find it impossible to relieve. Gifts of money, clothing, &c., will be most gratefully received. May I further intimate that we shall soon be called upon for a final settlement of our account for the renovation of our chapel, and that a sum of £20 is still needed to relieve us from the burden of debt. 37, Clifton-road, Peckham, London, S.E.

George's-row Domestic Mission.—The Rev. F. Summers writes:—Will you allow me to appeal to those kind friends who are in the habit of rendering assistance at this season (of the year for the poor of the Mission, and also to intimate to others how glad I should be if they would generously volunteer to take the places of those helpers whom, by death, I am so frequently losing. My district is, unfortunately, one of the poorest in London, and any assistance, therefore, would be gratefully received. I am in need of money for the Poor's Purse, new or cast-off clothing, books, toys, &c. The address is Domestic Mission, George's-row, St. Luke's, London, E.C.; or 1, Fassett-road, Dalston, N.E.

Blackley.—A Cake and Apron sale, promoted by the Ladies' Sewing Society, in aid of the new school scheme, was held on Saturday last. The sale realised over £14.

Bolton: Opening of New Mission.—Some old cottages on Halliwell-road, near the corner of Esrick-street, have been converted into a commodious Mission Hall by the Bank street congregation, and the premises were opened on Saturday in the presence of a crowded assembly. The devotional service was conducted by the Revs. N. Anderton, B.A. (assistant minister), and H. M. Livens (Unity Church), and the sermon was preached by the Rev. C. J. Street, M.A., LL.B. (senior minister at Bank street). Mr. Street based his remarks upon Psalm cxviii. 1, "Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it." The day to which they had long looked forward had at length arrived. Difficulties, apparently insuperable, had been overcome; some of them had been encountered to the last. It was due that he should make some statement as to the purpose they had in view in entering upon this work. It was intended to be a branch agency of the Bank street Church, the most venerable chapel in the town, the first home of Nonconformity in the days of persecution. It had been a school in which many of Bolton's most honoured citizens had been trained. It possessed a splendid history of faithfulness, of which they had good reason to be proud. In that history Unity Church had had a worthy share for some decades past; and now they offered participation in the heritage to the people of the Halliwell district. What were the motives underlying their effort? In the first place, they desired to keep their own young people in connection with them. They found many of their younger scholars, who resided at a distance, irregular in attendance, for causes easy to be understood. Some of them became connected with the schools of other denominations, and others went to no school at all. They were in danger of becoming detached. The preacher urged that they had a right to claim their own, and a duty to look after them. They would be glad to take these young children and guide their religious training until they were old enough to transfer themselves to Bank-street, unless they preferred to continue their connection with the Mission. The second reason for this effort was a desire on their part to undertake some Missionary work, to "go into the highways and by-ways" and compel them to come in. Their compulsion would be that only of persuasion and gentle appeal. There was a call to those who believed that they held some truth to extend their borders, to offer to others the advantages they themselves possessed. Into the Sunday-school they were anxious to gather the children now attending no school, in addition to those legitimately belonging to them. Then they would gather the parents together for regular worship of God, along with some of the elders of their own flock who found the distance from the centre a hindrance. And this would at the same time afford an opportunity of free worship to any others who might desire it, one more centre of light and leading being established in the community. The responsible leaders at Bank-street had looked around, and chosen this neighbourhood as the most suitable in which to begin operations. They had the great advantage that many of their own friends were on the spot or in the immediate district and ready to take their share in the work; and moreover, there was a great population around, and largely a new one. The preacher then went on to say that he was well aware except the Lord built the house they laboured in vain that built it. The Psalm from which the text was taken was one of the songs of the Second Temple, and it constituted a reminder to the pilgrims that no work, not even the building of a splendid temple, was worth anything unless the Lord had blessed it, and unless it was done in His spirit and service. This Mission Hall was not, indeed, a home that had been specially built, but the principle applied equally to all work. It must deserve God's blessing, or it would fail. He ventured to think that the spirit which prompted this effort was sincere and earnest, and under the guidance of the Heavenly Father. He was sure it was undertaken in faith and with a solemn spirit of consecration, not indeed of the "ecclesiastical kind, but a personal consecration of worship and good work to the service of God. Having described in eloquent terms the character of their teaching as a veritable and greatly needed Gospel, and their ideal of Church life, Mr. Street affirmed that by their faith in freedom they were dedicating that house to the Lord's service, and concluded with an earnest aspiration that it might be with gladness and true loyalty that people came together there. The collection towards the cost of maintenance amounted to £11 6s. 7½d. The Sunday-school was opened on Sunday afternoon, when fifty-six children presented themselves for admission, and there was a large staff of teachers; and at the evening service the Rev. N. Anderton, B.A., preached to a crowded congregation on "Our Mission," the music being led by the Bank-street Sunday-school Choir.

Boston.—The service in the Unitarian Chapel, Spain-lane, last Sunday evening, was well attended. Mr. B. Holmes, of Hull, gave a very earnest and interesting sermon on "God is Love," which was much appreciated by all who heard him.

Bristol: Lewin's Mead Domestic Mission (Appointment).—The Rev. Alfred Lancaster, of Middleton, near Manchester, has received and accepted a cordial and unanimous invitation to become the Missionary-minister, in succession to the Rev. Joseph Wain. Through the courtesy of the Middleton Congregation, Mr. Lancaster is enabled to enter on his duties, on the first Sunday in the New Year.

Darlington.—Last Sunday evening the Rev. H. B. Smith preached on "War," and a memorial to the Queen was adopted at a subsequent meeting praying her to take immediate steps to offer terms to the South African Republic. On Monday Mr. Smith gave a doctrinal lecture at Shildon.

Doncaster.—On Sunday, 26th ult., the annual sermons were preached, in the morning by the Rev. H. Thomas, in the evening by the Rev. C. Hargrove, M.A. Mr. Hargrove gave an eloquent discourse to a large congregation on the nature of the free position of our old open-trust chapels, and indicated its bearings on their history and its consequences in regard to modern religious freedom and the development of religious thought and activity.

Guildford.—A recent meeting of the Ward-street Literary and Debating Society has attracted considerable public attention. The magnetic element was a lecture by Mr. Edwin Ellis, J.P., C.C., upon "Some grave Social Problems which will have to be faced in the coming Century." The main feature of the address was an attempt to settle the vexed question how are the interests of the employer and the employed to be harmonised? Naturally, the speaker viewed affairs from the standpoint of the employer, but his observations clearly showed not merely the measure of justice which lay upon his own side, but the weight which moved the balance in the contrary direction. The whole lecture was admirably just and sympathetic. It was suggested that Mr. Ellis should amplify his dissertation, and deliver it in the enlarged form at a subsequent assembling of the Society, when representatives of Trades Unions could be invited to be present, and the meeting could be fully advertised and held in a hall, the dimensions of which should be more appropriate to the event than the little Ward-street Schoolroom.

Horwich.—On Sunday week special temperance sermons were preached in the Nonconformist chapels of the town, and on the following Monday evening a largely attended public meeting was held in the Public Hall, at which the following resolution, moved from the chair and seconded by the Rev. R. C. Moore, was adopted:—"That this meeting, representing the Free Churches, the local branch of the British Women's Temperance Society and the Horwich Temperance Council, enters its earnest protest against the sale of intoxicating drink to children. It respectfully reminds the Bolton Bench of magistrates that the Licensing Commission practically agrees that sixteen years of age should be the lowest at which children should be served by either on or off licenses; and it urges that all possible steps should be taken to enforce this recommendation."—Last Saturday a party in commemoration of the recent bazaar was very kindly given in the schoolroom by Mrs. Smithells and Mrs. Henry Harwood. The guests numbered about one hundred, and included the local stall-holders, workers, and a few friends. Mr. Henry Harwood presided at the proceeding after tea. Willing hands had most tastefully decorated the room for the occasion. Replying to an enthusiastic vote of thanks, Mrs. Harwood said that the people had worked so hard and so harmoniously at the bazaar that both her mother and herself felt it would be a distinct pleasure to invite them to a well-earned party and entertainment. Mr. Thomas Harwood, of Bolton, the chairman of the North and East Lancashire Mission Committee, was present, and spoke a few words in support of a vote of thanks to Mrs. Smithells and to Mr. and Mrs. Harwood. A stall of goods left from the bazaar had been arranged in the large class-room, and during the evening over £9 was thereby realised for the Independence Fund.

Kilmarnock.—On Wednesday week the Rev. A. C. Henderson, B.D., who has just settled at Kilmarnock, gave a lecture in the new hall of the Co-operative Society on "The Worlds Around Us," which was illustrated by limelight views and diagrams, and was much appreciated.

Liverpool: Hope-street.—The Rev. A. Cobden Smith, late of Burnley, who for the past six months has been assisting the Rev. R. A. Armstrong at Hope-street Church, has now accepted an appointment as assistant minister to Mr. Armstrong for a further period of one year.

London: Forest-gate.—It will be seen from the advertisement that a sale of work, in aid of the funds of this church, is to be opened on Wednesday next by Mrs. Alfred Lawrence.

London: Islington.—The annual meeting of old scholars and teachers took place at Unity Church on Wednesday, Dec. 6. Unfortunately a good many friends were absent, but those who attended, to the number of 57, enjoyed a pleasant evening. There was an informal programme of music and songs, including speeches from Dr. G. Dawes Hicks, Messrs. J. T. Preston, Mackey, and H. Wade. The meeting was brought to a close by all present singing "Auld Lang Syne."

London: Wood Green.—Mr. H. B. Holding, chairman of committee (and for some time hon. sec.) of the Wood Green Unitarian Society, has just been co-opted for the second time to membership of the Tottenham School Board. This congregation is especially fortunate in possessing so many members who have been elected to local public bodies, for, besides Mr. Holding, Mr. W. J. Cowan is on the School Board; they are both on the District Council (Mr. Cowan being chairman of the Finance Committee and Mr. Holding chairman of the Works Committee); Mr. W. Beasley is on the Middlesex Council, and Mrs. Beasley is a member of the Edmonton Board of Guardians, while another of the congregation (Mr. Charles Smith) has also been a member of the District Council and former Local Board for many years.

Manchester: Oldham-road.—On Saturday, Dec. 2, a "Ladies' and Gentlemen's Effort" was held in the Schoolroom, Varley-street, in aid of the Sunday-school funds. The "Effort" took the form of a tea-party and social evening, and was highly successful. There was a good attendance, and the school funds substantially benefited, the provisions having been given. Songs and instrumental music, chiefly by friends not connected with the school, who had kindly given their services, were interspersed with dances, and (by permission of the Daily Mail) Kipling's "Absent-Minded Beggar" was recited by Mr. W. T. Reynolds, after which the tambourine was passed round, and the sum of 25s. collected for the War Fund.

Manchester: Sale.—At the weekly meeting of the Social Guild, a paper was read by Mr. F. Milne, on "Licensing Reform," with special reference to the minority report of the Royal Commission. He regarded the recommendations contained in that report as a valuable contribution to the work of reform, and as forming a practicable basis for legislation. A discussion followed, some speakers advocating as the first and only sure step towards the solution of the drink problem, the municipalisation of the drink traffic, or the introduction of a reform on the lines of the Gothenburg system.

Northumberland and Durham Unitarian Christian Association.—At the monthly meeting of the Committee held on Monday evening last, a letter was read from the Rev. Arthur Harvie, accepting the invitation of the Committee to remain in the district as Missionary Minister for a further period of twelve months dating from May 1, 1900.

Norwich.—The congregation of the Octagon Chapel have unanimously called the Rev. Alfred Hall, late of Manchester College, Oxford, to fill the vacant pulpit. Mr. Hall, who will not enter upon his pastoral duties until June next, when the Hibbert Scholarship, which he at present holds, will expire, hopes to visit Norwich during the approaching holidays, and will conduct the Christmas morning service at the Octagon.

Pontypridd.—The Rev. J. Harwood, in the course of a visit to the aided churches in South Wales, spent Sunday, Nov. 26, at Pontypridd, and addressed a congregation of about seventy adults on "Our Religious Affirmations." A conference with the members of the congregation was afterwards held, Mr. John Lewis in the chair, when the need of the congregation for a building of its own, in which not only services, but week-night meetings could be held, was strongly emphasised, and thanks were expressed to the B. and F.U.A. for its support.

Stockport.—It is usual at the Stockport Sunday-school to have what is known as a "Monthly Service" on the last Sunday in each month, when, instead of the usual teaching, an address is given by the minister or some lay friend, and readings, recitations, sacred songs, &c., are given by the teachers, scholars, and friends, forming what may be regarded as a "Pleasant Sunday Afternoon," to which the parents and friends are invited. On Sunday afternoon, Nov. 26, this monthly service was of a more special character, and was held in the church, for it had been arranged that Mr. W. Goldthorpe, J.P., a broad-minded Congregationalist, who is a Judge in the Manchester district, should give the address. The devotional part of the service was conducted by the minister, the Rev. B. C. Constable. Mr. Goldthorpe gave an interesting address. He spoke of the times, some forty years ago, when he was a resident in Stockport, and contrasted the state of progress then with what it is now. He referred to the great curse of drink in England, and affirmed, from his own personal experience as a Judge, that in the great majority of cases brought before him, drink was at the bottom of them. He thought, however, that gambling was even a worse evil in the country than drink. He said how much he had appreciated the service, especially the hymns. The service was considered a decided success. In the evening the Rev. B. C. Constable preached the annual Temperance sermon. On Monday the Ladies' Auxiliary Society held a successful sale of work in the schoolroom for the benefit of the church funds. The chair was taken at three o'clock by Lieut.-Colonel H. Turner, and the sale was opened by Mrs. Sidney Hollins. The proceeds amounted to about £50.

Stockton.—During November lectures were given by the Rev. W. H. Lambelle on his cruise in the Adriatic, and by Mr. B. C. Pal on "Christianity and Hinduism." Mr. Pal also preached on Sunday evening, Nov. 19, from the words "I and my Father are one."

Walthamstow.—Mrs. Humphry Ward has presented two copies of "Robert Elsmere" to the library of the Unitarian Christian Church, and the librarian would be glad to receive copies of other works of interest to thoughtful and inquiring readers.

DEATHS.

THOMSON.—On the 26th Nov., at 85, Addison-road, Kensington, London, Louisa, wife of John Millar Thomson, of King's College, London, and youngest daughter of Charles Arthur Aikin.

MARRIAGES.

McDOWELL.—MATHERS.—On the 5th Dec., at Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds, by the Rev. Charles Hargrove, M.A., the Rev. John McDowell, now of Boston, U.S.A., to Annie (Sissie), eldest daughter of the late John Shackleton Mathers, Esq., J.P., Hanover House, Leeds. No cards.

"THE INQUIRER" CALENDAR.

SUNDAY SERVICES are advertised at a charge of 10s. per year, prepaid, a space of two lines being given to each announcement; extra lines are charged 4d. each. Orders can be sent for a portion of the year, not less than thirteen weeks, at the same rate. Calendar Notices not prepaid £1 the year. Single Announcements 6d. per line. All information as to the change of preachers should reach the Office not later than Thursday.

Essex Hall, Strand, W.C.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, December 10.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Bermondsey, Fort-road, Upper Grange-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. HAROLD RYLETT.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. FREDERIC ALLEN.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Mr. HERBERT RIX, B.A.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS.
Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. WOODS PERRIS.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.
Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Revs. BROOKE HERFORD, D.D., and EDGAR DAPLYN. Minister's Class after Morning Service.
Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. D. BADLAND.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. DAWES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D.
Kentish Town, Free Christian Church, Clarence-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. A. FARQUHARSON.
Morning, "Jahweh." Evening, "What must we do to be saved?"
Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M., Rev. J. E. STRONGE, and 7 P.M.
Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. C. POPE.
Little Portland-street Chapel, near Oxford-circus, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. CARPENTER, M.A.
Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. CADMAN.
Pockham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Musical Service, Rev. G. CARTER.
Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.
Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., and 3 P.M., Service for Children, Rev. S. FARRINGTON.
Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M., Mr. LUCKING TAYNER, "The Lamp of Truth" (Ruskin), and 7 P.M., Mr. S't.
Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.
Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M., Rev. T. E. M. EDWARDS, and 6.30 P.M., Mr. LUCKING TAYNER.
Sydenham Public Hall, Kirkdale, Sydenham, 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. STRONGE, "The Old and New Faith in God."
Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. MUMMEY.

PROVINCIAL.

BALSALL HEATH INSTITUTE: OUR FATHER'S CHURCH, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. J. SNEATH.
BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. F. W. STANLEY.
BEDFORD, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. ROWLAND HILL.
BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
BLACKPOOL, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
BLACKPOOL, Unitarian Lay Church, Masonic Hall, Waterloo-road, South Shore, 6.30 P.M.
BOOTLE, Free Church, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. W. HAWKES.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. COE.
BRIGHTON, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road, North-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.
BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. GEORGE STREET.
CANTERBURY, Blackfriars, 11 A.M.
DEAL and WALMER Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. SHAKESPEARE.
DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 1 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. BURROWS.
EASTBOURNE, Lismore-road, Terminus-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. ST. CLAIR.
GUILDFORD, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. S. LANG BUCKLAND.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. MARTEN.
 LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M., Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A., and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. PEACH.
 LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M., Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS, and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. L. JONES.
 LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M., Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. COBDEN SMITH.
 LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. J. JUPP.
 LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton Park, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. KLEIN. Evening, "The Atonement in Modern Religious Thought."
 MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. FORREST.
 MANCHESTER, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
 MARGATE, Forester's Hall (Side Entrance), Union-crescent, 11 A.M., Mr. WRIGHT MATTHEWS.
 OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. C. B. UPTON, B.A., B.Sc.
 PORTSMOUTH, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. THOMAS BOND.
 PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. COSENS PRIOR.
 RAMSGATE, Assembly Rooms, High-street, 6.30 P.M., Mr. WRIGHT MATTHEWS.
 READING, Unitarian Free Church, London-road, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. W. FRECKELTON.
 SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
 SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. WEILBELOVED.
 SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. R. C. DENDY. Stables in the grounds.
 TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
 TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Mr. E. CAPLETON.
 YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. RAWLINGS, M.A.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant Unitarian Church, Hout-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY,
 STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN-SQUARE,
 S.W.—Dec. 10th, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON
 SULLIVAN, "Our Consolations in Life."

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY,
 SOUTH-PLACE, FINSBURY.—Dec. 10th, at 11.15, Professor BEESLY, "The Reign of Queen Elizabeth."

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. W.
 STODDART, B.A., is at LIBERTY to take occasional Sunday duty.—30, West Bank, Stamford-
 hill, London, N.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D.
 DAVIS, Fairfield High School, Liverpool.

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK.
 SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.
 INVESTED FUNDS, £10,000,000
 Number of Accounts, 85,094.
 TWO AND A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST
 allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
 TWO PER CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT
 ACCOUNTS on the minimum monthly balances,
 when not drawn below £100.
 STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold for Customers.

SAVINGS' DEPARTMENT.
 SMALL DEPOSITS received and INTEREST
 allowed MONTHLY on each completed £1.
 The BIRKBECK ALMANAC, with full particulars, post free.
 FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

WANTED, a NURSE-ATTENDANT
 for an old gentleman in the country.
 Must be a total abstainer. Previous experience desired; should be over 40; must be well recommended.—Apply to Mrs. P. H. WICKSTEED, Sidenham Farm, near Wallingford.

COMPANIONSHIP to LADY wanted
 by young lady, 25; musical, good reader;
 some hospital practice.—Apply, Miss JELLIE, care of Rev. W. Jellie, Ipswich.

BOOKLETS FOR CHRISTMAS.

"DAILY MEDITATIONS" & "NIGHT UNTO NIGHT."

By W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

PRICE ONE SHILLING (leather, gilt).

"Night unto Night" can also be had in cloth binding, red edges, price Sixpence.

ESSEX HALL, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, W.C.

HOPE-STREET CHURCH,
 LIVERPOOL.
 1849.—1899.

(Minister, The Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.)

JUBILEE CELEBRATION.

The BAZAAR of the SEASON, "YE OLDE ENGLISH VILLAGE," DECEMBER 14TH, 15TH, and 16TH, 1899, in the COLLEGE OF MUSIC, 98,
 UPPER PARLIAMENT-STREET, to provide Funds for the Maintenance of the Fabric of the beautiful Church erected during the Ministry of Dr. Martineau, and the furnishing of the new Church Hall, the Jubilee Gift of W. B. Bowring, Esq., J.P.

The BAZAAR will be opened at 2.30 P.M. each day. On the 14th Dec. by Sir JOHN T. BRUNNER, Bart., M.P.; on the 15th Dec. by Mrs. W. B.
 BOWRING; and on the 16th Dec. by the Hon. Mrs.
 DE BEAUMONT KLEIN.

Mrs. HUMPHRY WARD, the Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG,
 B.A., JOSEPH COVENTRY, Esq., and others, will take part in the proceedings.

Mr. and Mrs. HAROLD COVENTRY,
 "Langdale," Hunter's-lane,
 Wavertree, Liverpool (Secretaries).

Forest Gate Unitarian Church.

A SALE OF WORK

will be held on WEDNESDAY and THURSDAY,
 DECEMBER 13th and 14th,
 in aid of the CHURCH FUNDS.

A variety of Useful Articles, with some choice
 Fancy Goods, Needlework, Carvings, &c., will be offered. Contributions are earnestly invited, and may be sent to Mrs. PERRIS, 180, Upton-lane, or
 Mrs. JOSE, 15, Osborne-road (Forest Gate).

Mrs. ALFRED LAWRENCE will open the Sale on the First Day, at 3 o'clock.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
 ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE,
 E.C.

Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21,
 Mincing-lane, E.C.

Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A.,
 7, Pall Mall, S.W.

F. H. A. HARCASTE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.
 Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
 STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, 151, Brixton-road, S.W.,
 and Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent.,
 withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made
 Monthly repayment, including principal, premium
 and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years,
 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.;
 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus
 free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

SCOTCH TWEEDS and SERGES at Mill Prices, Ladies' or Gents'; best quality only. Patterns post free; orders carriage paid.—
 GEO. McLEOD & SONS, Hawick, N.B.

ENGAGEMENT as COMPANION,
 experienced, and good references.—G.,
 INQUIRER Office.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A New and Important Work for all Unitarians to Read.

Cr. 8vo, pp. 236, cloth, 2s. 6d. net, by post 2s. 10d.

THE STORY OF Protestant Dissent and English Unitarianism.

BY

WALTER LLOYD.

CONTENTS:—Introduction. II. The Presbyterians.
 III. Richard Baxter. IV. The Ejection, 1662. V. The Protestant Dissenters, 1689. VI. The Meeting-Houses.
 VII. Non-Subscription. VIII. The "Christians Only."
 IX. The Unitarians. X. John Biddle. XI. Lindsey,
 Priestley and Belsham. XII. The Unitarian Societies.
 XIII. The Trinitarian Controversy. XIV. Undogmatic
 Unitarianism. XV. Conclusion.

Note.—Anyone sending Mr. Philip Green, not later than Dec. 22nd, a Postal Order for 2s. 6d., will receive a copy of this new book post free.

London: PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

Books for Christmas Presents.

Our London friends are invited to visit the BOOK ROOM of the SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSO-CIATION AT ESSEX HALL, to inspect the varied Stock of Books suitable for Prizes, Libraries, or Presentation, on show.

In addition to the Publications of the Association, the Stock consists of a Selection of the best Books published by the General Trade.

A Special Catalogue of Presentation Volumes for Young People will be ready in a few days, and will be sent post free on application.

London: THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, Essex
 Hall, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

Will make a SUITABLE CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

NOW READY.

A NIGHT WITH JESUS. A DREAM STORY.

By J. L. HAIGH.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

"Its tender dealings with tender delusions is very clever."

LIVERPOOL BOOKSELLERS' COMPANY, LIMITED,
 70, Lord-street, Liverpool.

THE ETHICAL WORLD.

EDITED BY DR. STANTON COIT and
 J. A. HOBSON, M.A.

Articles on Important Social Questions, Education
 &c. from a purely ethical standpoint
 Children's Page.

TWOPENCE WEEKLY.

Office: 17, Johnson's-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

THE MILL HILL PULPIT.

A Monthly Sermon by

Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., Leeds.

December Number.—"FOR THE RED CROSS."

Price 1d. Annual subscription, 1s. 6d. post free.

Apply, Essex Hall, or CHAS. STAINER, 82, Ravens-wood terrace, Hyde Park, Leeds.

LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL SOCIETY.

The ANNUAL SOCIAL GATHERING of TEACHERS and ELDER SCHOLARS will be held at ESSEX HALL on SATURDAY, Dec. 16.

F. W. LAWRENCE, Esq., M.A., will preside.

Tea at 6 P.M. Music, &c., 7 P.M.

ALEX. BARNE3, } Hon. Secs.
HAROLD WADE, }

SUSTENTATION FUND

For the Augmentation of Ministers' Stipends.

At the ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the Contributors, to be held on WEDNESDAY, the 7th of February, 1900, the Contributors will have to elect six Managers in place of Messrs. G. Brown, Ernest W. Enfield, C. Harding, W. Long, D. Martineau, and Frank Preston, who retire by rotation, and, with the exception of Mr. Enfield, who has resigned, are eligible for re-election.

Any Contributor may be nominated by two other Contributors, to fill a Vacancy on the Board of Management. Such nominations must be sent to one of the Secretaries not later than 1st of January, 1900.

HARRY RAWSON, }
Eccles, Manchester; } Hon.
A. W. WORTHINGTON, } Secs.
The Hill, Stourbridge, }

S^T. NICHOLAS OLD MEETING, IPSWICH.

APPEAL FOR £1,500.

The above Unitarian Chapel will be 200 years old in 1900. It is, therefore, one of the few remaining original Nonconformist places of worship. It stands, externally and internally, almost as it was when built, but now needs extensive and immediate repairs.

It is felt that this is the best opportunity, not only of making these structural repairs, but also of fitting it with some of the comfort and requirements which are essential in these days to attract and keep fresh members.

The congregation averages 50 in the morning and 100 in the evening; and is steadily increasing in a fast developing industrial town.

It is proposed to celebrate the Bi-centenary by (1) Putting the building in a thorough state of repair; (2) making the seating accommodation comfortable; (3) supplying heating apparatus; (4) repairing the organ.

The estimated cost is £1,500; and an earnest appeal is here made to sympathisers throughout the country to co-operate in this work of preserving in a state of usefulness, and in its historic character, one of the oldest monuments of our spiritual descent.

WILLIAM JELLIE, Minister.
G. J. NORCUTT, Chairman.

Donations or promises may be sent to F. H. SMITH, Hon. Sec., 32, Warwick-road; ROBERT HAMBLIN, Hon. Treas., 19, Gippeswyk-road; or W. J. SCOPES, Queen-street, Ipswich.

This appeal has the support of the B. and F.U.A., and they have promised to contribute.

From Trustees and Subscribers:—

SECOND LIST.		£	s.	d.
Amount acknowledged...	...	394	10	0
A Friend	200	0	0
Sir John Brunner	25	0	0
Mr. F. Nettlefold	10	0	0
The Misses Bond	10	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Robert Cash	3	3	0
Miss Preston	3	3	0
Mr. E. Clephan	2	2	0
Mr. H. J. Morton	2	2	0
Mr. Lionel F. Gowing	1	1	0
Mr. Cornelius Woolnough	1	1	0
Mrs. Cornelius Woolnough	1	1	0
Mr. S. S. Tayler	1	0	0
Mrs. Stanley J. vons	1	1	0
Miss Alice Field...	0	10	0
Miss Eldcart	0	10	0
Mr. Charles Cornish	0	10	0
Mrs. Cattermole	0	10	0
Mr. Greenwood	0	2	6

Total ... £657 6 6

Schools, etc.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE for GIRLS,
Bristol Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

PRINCIPAL—MISS BAILY.

HEADMISTRESS—MISS ELEANOR MOSS, B.A. Hons.

A limited number of Boarders taken at residence of Principal.

The College, which is opposite the residence, has accommodation for 120 pupils. Lawn tennis, gymnasium, asphalt playground.

The Curriculum is based on the Cambridge Examination regulations, and resident pupils have the advantage of Public School life combined with home comforts.

Application to Secretary, Miss S. AWDRY.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
SOUTH MARINE TERRACE,
ABERYSTWITH.

PRINCIPAL ... MRS. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

HINDHEAD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

PRINCIPALS—Miss J. F. GRUNER (Certif. Student of Girton College), Moorcroft, Hindhead, Surrey.

Miss MACRAE MOIR (Cambridge Higher Local), Lingholt, Hindhead, Surrey.

The aim of the School is to combine the advantages of a good Boarding School with a thorough Education and healthy outdoor life. Girls may be prepared for College-entrance and other examinations.

The district of Hindhead is one of the healthiest parts of England, and much recommended by doctors for its bracing air and gravel soil.

Miss MOIR receives ten boarders in a thoroughly well-built modern house, with southern aspect. Great attention is paid to healthful conditions of life. References allowed to parents of present and past pupils.

Terms for Board and Education on application to the Principals.

THE WARREN, KNUTSFORD.

PRINCIPAL:

MRS. W. CARRINGTON WHITELEGGE.

Excellent individual TUITION and Home Care for the daughters of cultivated parents who would appreciate unusual advantages for Music and Languages.

FREDK. LONG & SON,
AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS
4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE,
COVENTRY-STREET, W.

A MATINEE PERFORMANCE of A MID-SUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM will be given at the above Theatre (kindly lent by Mr. J. H. Leigh), in aid of the Funds of the LONDON UNITARIAN BAZAAR, on TUESDAY, January 16th, 1900, under the direction of Mr. Herbert Lawford and Mr. J. H. Leigh.

Doors open at 2 o'clock. To commence at 2.30.

Price of Tickets:—Private boxes, £2 2s. to £4 4s.; stalls, 10s. 6d.; balcony (first two rows), 7s. 6d. (other rows), 6s.; upper circle (reserved), 4s.; pit, 2s. 6d.; gallery, 1s.

Tickets can be obtained from any member of the Entertainments Committee; at the various Unitarian Churches, or at Essex Hall, where a plan of the reserved seats can be seen, or from Mr. HERBERT LAW FORD, 28, Nightingale-lane, Ballham, S.W.

The Private Boxes can only be obtained from Mr. Lawford.

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms moderate.—Mrs. ROBERT TURNER, 94, Grosvenor-road, S.W.

BOARD and RESIDENCE, South of England. Healthy neighbourhood. Home comforts. Seven miles from Brighton, near South Downs. Station Hassocks (on main line L.B.S.C.).—Miss ROWLAND, Gothic House, Hurstpierpoint.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea; sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address, Miss CHALDECOTT, Stirling House, Manor-road.

S^T. LEONARDS.—“Crantock,” 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL,

Proprietor, FREDERIC SMITH.

Recently enlarged, remodelled and refurnished, now affording

ACCOMMODATION FOR ABOUT 250 GUESTS.

The best patronised TEMPERANCE HOTEL in London. Highly commended by leading Unitarian Ministers.

Spacious Coffee, Reading, and Drawing Rooms. Electric Light. Lift.

Apartments, 1/6 to 2/6. Breakfast, 1/3 to 2/- Service, 9d.

77 & 101,

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON, W.C.

Telegrams: “QUIETUDE, LONDON.”

IT IS NOT

Reckitt's
PARIS Blue

UNLESS RECKITT'S NAME IS ON THE WRAPPER.

RE-ENGAGEMENT desired as HOUSEKEEPER or similar post. Widow, not young; 3 years with Gentleman.—Mrs. MAYNARD, The Oaks, Wytlenshaw-road, Sale, Cheshire.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

New Book by Frances E. Cooke.

THE STORY OF John Greenleaf Whittier,

The Poet-Philanthropist of America.

John Greenleaf Whittier was one of the heroes in stirring times, and his history, so full of incident, should interest young people: this story of his life has been written, however, chiefly with the aim of recording for them the beauty of his character. It has been truly said "The noblest workers of the world bequeath us nothing so great as the image of themselves."—From Preface.

Cloth, gilt top, with Portrait, 1/- net.
Postage 2d.

THE HELPER. 1900.

A Handbook for Sunday School Teachers and Parents.

Edited by MARIAN PRITCHARD ("Aunt Amy").

Frontispiece ... Energy, by G. F. WATTS, R.A.
Full-page Illustration, Manchester College, Oxford.

CONTENTS:—New Year's Address, JOHN BYLES; A Year of Sunday Readings, Compiled by H. KELSEY WHITE; Suggestive Lessons: Parable of the Sower, FRANK WALTERS. 52 Bible Passages, &c.; For the Little Ones: More about Nellie and John Henry and Elza, MARY DENDY.

The S. S. Teachers' Summer Session at Oxford. Full Reports of the Lectures delivered at the Session in July, 1899, by Rev. J. J. WRIGHT, FRANK TAYLOR, Rev. H. RAWLINGS, M.A., Miss EDITH DRUMMOND, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD, Miss MARIAN PRITCHARD, Rev. JOSEPH FREESTON, Rev. C. B. UPTON, B.A., B.Sc., Rev. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A., Rev. J. E. ODGERS, M.A., and LUCKING TAVENER. Teachers in Council: I. On the Ideal Sunday School. II. Our Senior Classes. III. Bringing our Young People to join our Churches.

Passages from Addresses, by Principal JAMES DRUMMOND, M.A., LL.D., and Rev. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A. Illustrative Stories, Poems, &c., &c.

Cloth, Price 2/3 net; Postage 4d.

12 Copies supplied for 25/- Carriage unpaid.

The Volumes issued for 1898 and 1899 can still be had at the same price.

An excellent GIFT BOOK for CHRISTMAS.

YOUNG DAYS

Annual Volume for 1899.

The Volume contains 192 pages of brightly written Stories, Anecdotes, and Verses, Recitations, Dialogues, &c., with over 100 Illustrations.

The whole of the pages are printed upon heavy Art paper, making the Volume a very handsome and attractive Gift Book.

Illustrated Boards, 1/6, post free.
Bound in Art canvas, 2/-, post free

London: The SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

Manchester Agents: H. RAWSON & CO., 16, New Brown Street.

Liverpool Agents: THE LIVERPOOL BOOKSELLERS' CO., 70, Lord Street.

BOOKS FOR PRESENTS AND FOR PRIVATE STUDY.

A YEAR OF MIRACLE: A Poem in Four Sermons. By W. C. GANNETT. Cheap edition. 8d.

JESUS AND MODERN THOUGHT. By STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D. 1s.

This volume contains four discourses on the Humanity of Jesus, and the Love we bear to Jesus, taken from the volume of Sermons "God and Christ."

BLESSED BE DRUDGERY and Other Papers. By W. C. GANNETT. 1s. 3d.

JESS: BITS OF WAYSIDE GOSPEL. By JENKIN LLOYD JONES, of Chicago. 320 pp. Crown 8vo, 6s.

These sermon-talks are all on out-of-door subjects, the love of Nature, her influence over man's spiritual life.

THE CHOIR INVISIBLE, and Other Sermons. By JOHN WHITE CHADWICK. 228 pp. Crown 8vo, 4s. net.

THE STORY OF THE BIBLE, from the Standpoint of Modern Scholarship. By WALTER L. SHELDON. 1s. 6d. net.

BREATHINGS OF THE BETTER LIFE. Edited by LUCY LARCOM. 5s. net.

CHILDREN'S YEAR BOOK. Selections by EDITH EMERSON FORBES. 6s. net.

DAY UNTO DAY. Scripture, Prose, and Poetical selections for each day in the year. 3s. net.

DAILY STRENGTH FOR DAILY NEEDS. Selections of Prose and Poetry with texts for every day. Cloth, 3s. 6d.; superior edition, 5s.

FAMILY WORSHIP. Bible Readings and Prayers. By the late DOWAGER COUNTESS RUSSELL. 3s.

GLIMPSES OF A BETTER LIFE. By LEWIS G. WILSON. 4s.

HEART-BEATS. By P. C. MOZDUMDAR. 6s.

LEAVES OF HEALING. By KATHERINE PAINE SUTTON. 4s.

MATINS AND VESPERS. By SIR JOHN BOWRING. 3s.

ONE UPWARD LOOK EACH DAY. Poems of Hope and Faith. Paper, 1s. 3d.; cloth, 2s. net.

THE THOUGHT OF GOD. Hymns and Poems. By F. L. HOSMER and W. C. GANNETT. 2 vols. 2s. Cloth, 4s.

THE RATIONALIST A KEMPIS. By JOSEPH BLANCO WHITE. 1s.

UPLIFTS OF HEART AND WILL. By JAMES H. WEST. 2s. net.

THE RELIGION OF TIME and the RELIGION OF ETERNITY. A Study of Certain Relations between Medieval and Modern Thought. By PHILIP H. WICKSTEED, M.A. 1s. net.

BACK TO JESUS. An Appeal to Evangelical Christians. By RICHARD A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., Author of "God and the Soul," "Faith and Doubt in the Century's Poets," &c. 1s. net.

EVOLUTION AND THE RELIGION OF THE FUTURE. By ANNA SWANWICK, LL.D. 1s.

The PLACE of IMMORTALITY in RELIGIOUS BELIEF. By J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A. 1s. net.

THE GOSPEL OF JOY. By STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D. 6s.

"These fine discourses breathe a brave and loving spirit, and have the virtue of infusing the writer's health of soul into the reader's heart."—Speaker.

THE SHIP OF THE SOUL, and Other Papers. By STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D. 1s. 6d.

PHILIP GREEN, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 2999.
NEW SERIES, No. 103.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1899.

[ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	801
LITERATURE :—
Articles in the Reviews	802
Annual Volumes and Christmas Numbers	802
Bryce's "South Africa"	803
Mr. Lloyd on English Presbyterianism—II.	804
Short Notices	805
Publications Received	806
"A Book of Bachelors"	810
OBITUARY :—
Sir Henry Tate	806
Mr. Thomas Rawson, Manchester	807
The Rev. Joseph Henry Hutton, B.A.	807
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN	807
LEADER :—
The York Case	808
CORRESPONDENCE :—
Independents and Open Trusts	804
Sunday School Tools	807
"Back to Jesus"	808
Winifred House	809
The Boys' Own Brigade	809
ARTICLES :—
A College Address	805
A Protestant School in Brazil	811
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES	812
ADVERTISEMENTS	813

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

IN our present issue will be found a review, by the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, of the new edition of Bryce's "Impressions of South Africa," with a prefatory chapter dated Oct. 23, and in an appendix the text of the Conventions of 1881 and 1884. Mr. Wicksteed's article will doubtless be received with vehement dissent by some of our readers, and with as warm approval by many others. We only hope that it will send those who do not already know it to a careful study of Mr. Bryce's book. And we must warn our readers that it is not at all likely that we can find room for any letters on the subject in our Christmas number, and perhaps not until the new year.

OUR readers may remember the interest taken in the announcement of a series of International Handbooks to the New Testament, edited by Dr. Orello Cone, and we have now had a glimpse, at Essex Hall, of an advance copy of a handsome volume of nearly 400 pages dealing with the Epistles of Paul from the pen of Dr. Drummond, the Principal of Manchester College, Oxford. An interesting introduction, followed by an analysis of the contents, and a commentary, is provided. The Epistles dealt with are Thessalonians I. and II. Corinthians, Galatians, Romans, and Philippians. Dr. Orello Cone explains, in his general preface, that the aim of the writers of the Handbooks has been "to ascertain and clearly set forth the meaning of the authors" of the books of the New Testament, "in freedom from dogmatic prepossessions." The wants of the general reader are borne in mind, while at the same time the commentaries are to present the results of the latest scholarship and of the most thorough critical investigation. Mr. Philip Green hopes to have a consignment of copies for sale in the course of a few days, and what we said recently in reference to the new Encyclopædia Biblica, as to chapel libraries and Christmas gifts to ministers, applies equally to Dr. Drummond's volume, though it is, of course, much more within reach than the larger work. The price in America is two dollars, which, we suppose, will make the price eight shillings or so in this country. The other volumes of the series promised are, The Synoptic Gospels, by George L. Cary, LL.D.; Hebrews, Colossians, Ephesians, &c., by Orello Cone, D.D.; The Fourth Gospel, Acts, &c., by Henry P. Forbes, D.D.

THE seventh and concluding volume of Harnack's great "History of Dogma" has now been issued by Messrs. Williams and Norgate in their Theological Translation Library. The translator, Mr. W. M'Gilchrist, B.D., records his regret that this last volume had only in part the advantage of the supervision of the late Professor A. B. Bruce, who was the editor of the whole work, and to within a few weeks of his lamented death was engaged in examining the proof sheets. This volume contains a survey of the issues of dogma in Roman Catholicism, in Socinianism and in the Protestantism of Luther, who in Harnack's view came "to restore the 'doctrine,' on which no one any longer had an inward reliance." The doctrine which he restored was "the Gospel as a glad message and as a power of God," and this must be experienced as "faith in God as the Father of Jesus Christ."

In giving effect to these thoughts, Luther, the most conservative of men, shattered the ancient Church and set a goal to the history of dogma. That history has found its goal in a return to the Gospel. He did not in this way hand over something complete and finished to Christendom, but set before it a problem, to be developed out of many encumbering surroundings, to be continuously dealt with in connection with the entire life of the spirit and with the social condition of mankind, but to be solved only in faith itself. Christendom must continually go on to learn, that even in religion the simplest thing is the most difficult, and that everything that is a burden upon religion quenches its seriousness ("A Christian man's business is not to talk grandly about dogmas, but to be always doing arduous and great things in fellowship with God"—Zwingli). Therefore the goal of all Christian work, even of all theological work, can only be this—to discern ever more distinctly the simplicity and the seriousness of the Gospel, in order to become ever purer and stronger in spirit, and ever more loving and brotherly in action.

Such are the concluding words of Harnack's great work, and the translators are to be congratulated on the completion of their English version. The seven volumes are issued at half-a-guinea each.

A NEW book by Dr. M. J. Savage, of New York, has just been published, bearing the title "Life Beyond Death," being a review of the world's beliefs on the subject, a consideration of present conditions of thought and feeling, leading to the question as to whether it can be demonstrated as a fact. It is a large, well-printed volume, and we hope shortly to have an opportunity of calling the attention of our readers to its striking and interesting contents. There is a beautiful and touching dedication to his son, Philip Henry Savage, who died in June last at the early age of thirty-one. "Life Beyond Death" is published at six shillings, and copies can be procured from Mr. Philip Green, at Essex Hall.

LORD PENZANCE, who died on Saturday last at the age of eighty-three, only retired in the spring of the present year from his office of Judge under the Public Worship Regulation Act of 1874. His right to sit as an ecclesiastical judge was vehemently denied by the High Church party, who regarded the Act of 1874 as an unwarrantable interference with the spiritual autonomy of the Church. The Act has latterly become practically a dead letter through the bishops' veto of all prosecutions.

THE Liverpool School Board decided on Tuesday to withdraw the version of the Evangelical Free Church Catechism, which had been adopted last June, from use in the schools, and to revert to a scheme of classified texts formerly used for religious instruction. The Liverpool Free Church Council had from the first strongly protested against the introduction of the catechism. In answer to a question as to the scheme of texts, the clerk said that it would not be possible to introduce the Apostles Creed, but the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments, being texts, could be taught.

A TABLET to the memory of the late Rev. Robert Spears has been placed by the congregation in the Highgate Unitarian Christian Church. In connection with the unveiling of the tablet special services will be held to-morrow (Sunday), conducted by the Rev. Alex. Gordon, M.A.

THE Sunday School Association has issued from Essex Hall an attractive catalogue of books, recommended by the Reading Sub-Committee, including gift and reward books, standard works by favourite authors for young and old, toy books for the little ones, &c. The books are classified according to price, and are discriminated as suitable for children under or over twelve years of age.

ARTICLES IN THE REVIEWS.

In this month's Contemporary, Mr. J. Rendel Harris publishes with a very interesting setting a translation of the text of "A New Gospel," which he discovered amongst a pile of Syriac leaves, together with three Apocalypses. The MS. is judged to belong to the eighth century, and the Gospel is named after the twelve Apostles, but proves on examination to have no special connection with the ancient lost Gospel of that name. It seems, in fact, to be simply an introduction to the three Apocalypses which follow, and is based on the four canonical Gospels, with curious variations. The writer, in fact, refers directly to "the four truthful Evangelists." One of the three Apocalypses which follow is called "Revelation of John the Little," and Mr. Harris finds in it references to Constantine the Great and Chosroes, the Persian King of the seventh century, and also to the growth of Mohammedan power, so that the MS. seems to contain a contemporary record of that time in the eighth century so trying to Christians in the East.

In the same Review, Miss E. M. Caillard writes on "The Venture of Faith," quoting Professor Royce's chapter on the "World of the Postulates," in his "Religious Aspect of Philosophy," and showing that as in Nature we postulate Uniformity, so in religion, despite of all appearances to the contrary, we postulate the Eternal Goodness, and find that it is true.

The Rev. S. Baring-Gould, in an article on "Priest and Prophet," shows from a survey of the history of Israel how both have helped to work out the Divine purpose in human life, and draws a moral for present-day problems from the parallel experience of Christendom. Mr. Robert Buchanan, under the title "The Voice of the Hooligan," offers a very severe criticism of Rudyard Kipling's "Barrack-room Ballads" and "Stalkey and Co.," of which he says that "only a spoilt child of an utterly brutalised public" could possibly have written or dared to publish it. In conclusion, he contrasts the "coarse and soulless Patriotism of the hour" reflected in such writings, with "that nobler Imperialism in which all true Englishmen, to whatever political camp they may belong for the time being, must still believe."

In the Nineteenth Century, Sir Sidney Shippard describes what he would regard as a just and wise settlement in South Africa, and Mrs. J. R. Green writes a most interesting historical article on "English and Dutch in the Past," declaring, in conclusion, her conviction that the Dutch would still fight for their freedom in the spirit of William the Third when he said: "I may fail, but I shall fight every ditch and die in the last one." Another striking article is by Mr. D. E. Tobias: "A Negro on the Position of the Negro in America," describing the horrible "Convict Lease System" of the Southern States, under which he declares that the condition of the unhappy victims is worse than in the old slavery. Mr. Tobias, who was born of emancipated parents soon after 1865, gives first-hand testimony on other questions as to Negro life, both in the South and North, and pays a tribute to the courage of Mr. G. W. Cable, in advocating justice for the coloured people in the South.

In the Fortnightly, perhaps the most valuable article is by Professor T. E. Holland, of Oxford, who, as Professor of International Law, writes with authority on "Some Lessons of the Peace Conference," showing in detail what real advance has been made toward the humanising of war and the establishment of the alternative of arbitration. The first article in this number is by the veteran Herbert Spencer, on Professor Ward's "Naturalism and Agnosticism," criticising what he regards as the Professor's animus and misrepresentation of his views. Professor Maitland reads a lesson in historical accuracy to Canon MacColl, in the matter of a "New Convocation," supposed to have been held in the first year of Elizabeth, and Mr. J. P. Fitzpatrick offers some notes on the Transvaal Question, affirming that war was inevitable, because Dutch and British ideals in South Africa are irreconcilable. In an interesting article on "Robertson, of Brighton," Mr. T. H. S. Escott records the astonishing fact, that in the experience of a librarian of the Free Library of a Midland town, the two writers now most in demand are Robertson and Rudyard Kipling!

ANNUAL VOLUMES AND CHRISTMAS NUMBERS.

OUR own children's annual is the bound volume of Young Days, which fully maintains the high standard it has reached under the editorship of the Rev. J. J. Wright. More than once during the year we called attention to the series of illustrated "Talks about our Unitarian Faith and its Leaders," chiefly by the editor, beginning with Theophilus Lindsey, and ending with William Gaskell. The volume is worth getting for these alone, and there is much else in the pictures, the stories, the talks on "Mother Nature's Children," with many illustrations, the recitations and other verses, and the "Little Ones' Pages," in larger type, to make it a thoroughly healthy and charming children's book. (S.S.A., Essex Hall. 1s. 6d.)

The Rosebud Annual has an established reputation, and the new volume is as full as ever of amusing pictures, with some pretty ones, and there is an abundance of story and verse. Songs and puzzles also add to the variety. But for an ideal children's book we should prefer less of the grotesquely comic element, and a little more of real animal stories, which always fascinate the children. (James Clarke and Co. 4s.)

In Doors and Out: Pictures and Stories for Little Folk is true to its title, but we should offer the above criticism of its matter and many of the pictures, even more decidedly than in the case of the Rosebud. (Blackie and Son. 2s. 6d.)

For the elders the bound volumes of Good Words and the Sunday Magazine remain some of the best of their kind. (Isbister and Co. 7s. 6d. each.) In Good Words, one of the most interesting things is a series of illustrated articles, by Sir Wyke Bayliss, on the great Victorian artists, Leighton, Millais, Burne-Jones, Watts, and Holman Hunt. The serial story "The Paymaster's Boy," by Neil Munro, is also published separately as

"Gilian the Dreamer" (6s.), as is also the serial in the Sunday Magazine "At the Eleventh Hour," by David Lyall. (3s. 6d.)

Of the Christmas numbers we can only name a few. With December Harper begins a new volume (the hundredth) with the conclusion of W. D. Howell's "Their Silver Wedding Journey," while Mrs. Humphry Ward's new novel "Eleanor," a love story of which the scene is in the neighbourhood of Rome, is to begin in January. The Christmas number, among other good things, contains a story by Mark Twain, an illustrated article by Sir Martin Conway on "Aconcagua and the Volcanic Andes," and an article on "Children," by E. S. Martin, with a running commentary of little people pictured along the pages, and six charming full-page illustrations.

Among the varied contents of Scribner's are "An Author's Story," by Maarten Maartens, two illustrated articles on Antarctic exploration, and "John Wesley, some Aspects of the Eighteenth Century in England," by Augustine Birrell.

With Cassell's is given a reproduction in photogravure of A. C. Cooke's Academy picture "The Fortune-teller," and among the full-page illustrations is one of two kittens, which their lovers should secure. The Christmas number of the Woman at Home is popular in its own way, with a number of interesting portraits of contributors, and also of the Duke of Westminster and his family. In the December Cornhill, Sir John Robinson, late Premier of Natal, continues his South African reminiscences, and Mr. Crockett's "Little Anna Mark" is concluded. For the new year a serial story, by H. S. Merriman, "The Isles of Urest," is announced.

The Christmas number of the Bookman contains, as a supplement, a fine reproduction of a recent photograph of Ruskin, by Mr. J. McClelland. Mr. Clement Shorter contributes an article on the late Grant Allen (with a portrait); and there is a supplement on the illustrated books of the season, with many of the pictures reproduced. (6d.) The Christmas number of the Christian World opens with an article by "J. B.," on "Our Triple Christmas Memory," and concludes with a story by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, "The Supply at St. Agatha's." (1d.)

The Christmas number of the Birmingham Weekly Post contains an article by Mr. W. J. Clarke, of the Hurst-street Domestic Mission, on "Christmas among the Birmingham Poor," with a portrait of the author. In the course of the article, Mr. Clarke tells some very touching stories, gathered from his last year's experience, of how at this season a touch of brightness penetrates into even the poorest homes.

ALTHOUGH no definition of the Everlasting God is possible, yet it is as certain as the coming of death itself that we are not our own masters—that by a power we cannot control laws have been established which we cannot disobey without punishment, or obey without blessedness, and that these laws can be discovered if we search for them with intelligence and with reverent regard solely for what is true, and with purity of heart.—H. W. Crosskey.

BRYCE'S "SOUTH AFRICA."

MR. BRYCE is an eminent lawyer and an eminent historian. He is a man of fine instincts and of high principles; but he has a faculty for accepting people roughly as they are, and acquiescing in the great forces that mould history whether he likes them or not; and he is singularly free from any tendency to idealise those with whom he sympathises and whom he regards as ill-used. He is what is called a man of the world as opposed to what is called an enthusiast. His observations in South Africa were made before the recent troubles began in 1895, but when all the materials out of which those troubles grew were fully developed. They were published two years afterwards, when the horizon was dark, but there was abundant room for hope, and they are republished with a fresh introductory chapter now in 1899, in the midst of the terrible war which forms so strange a comment on the vaticination of Mr. Lionel Phillips, based on the belief that "The courage of the Boers is exaggerated."

The book itself deals luminously, and with adequate fulness, with the history of the Transvaal and the circumstances that have led to the war; but it does not isolate them. It impresses upon us the fact that South Africa is naturally one single country and must be thought of and dealt with as a whole, and it is in this light that Mr. Bryce regards it. He succeeds in giving us, in very few strokes, a clear picture of the physical features of the country and the way in which they have affected its history and must affect its future; and he distinguishes forcibly between the permanent conditions of life in South Africa and the temporary disturbances produced by the discovery of minerals.

Mr. Bryce cannot be accused of taking a sentimental view either of Kaffirs or Boers. With respect to the native policy of England he declares that it may "be truly said for the British Government that it almost always sought to act justly, and that such advances as it made were not dictated by an aggressive spirit, but (with few exceptions) compelled by the necessities of the case." And of the Boers he declares that they have always "had a genius for disobedience," that ever since 1881 they have been "unpleasant neighbours," that they have always treated the natives with harshness, and even cruelty, greatly in excess of what has been usual with the English settlers, and that if "they are brave, good-natured, hospitable, faithful to one another, generally pure in their domestic life, seldom touched by avarice or ambition," yet "the corruption of their Legislature shows that it is rather the absence of temptation than to any superior strength of moral principle that these merits have been due."

What, then, is the impression produced by the study of this singularly impartial and objective history. It is irresistible, and it is appalling. In the first place we see that the Transvaal Boers were absolutely justified in their suspicious attitude towards the English, not only after but before 1895. They were an alien nation in the heart of British territory. In 1806 England seized the Dutch colony at the Cape in the process of her war with Napoleon, and in 1814 it was formally ceded to her, for a sum of six millions, by Holland. The English Government was distasteful to the more conservative elements of the Dutch community, and perhaps what was best in its measures was most distasteful to them. In 1834 the abolition of slavery gave the finishing touch to their dissatisfaction, and in 1836 began the "Great Trek"—that is, the exodus of the Dutch farmers beyond English jurisdiction into the wilderness that they were to dispute with savage beasts and savage men. The English took no steps to reclaim them, but asserted that they were still British subjects, and when they endeavoured to establish themselves in Natal (abandoned practically by the English in 1838) the English dreaded the consequences of allowing them to establish communications with the sea, and took forceful possession of Natal in 1843. After that it became the consistent policy of England to isolate the Transvaal and the Orange Free State. Their independence was, indeed, formally recognised in 1852 and 1854, but British occupation or protectorates, or rights of pre-emption, were drawn all along the coast so as effectively to prevent the Boers from forming any international connections, and carried west and north of them so as completely to isolate them. This process was completed in 1894. If Imperial policy demanded such steps, then Imperial policy demanded action which not only created but fully justified the deepest suspicions of the Boers. They thought, and thought truly, that England was jealous of them, desired to hem them in, and looked forward to their ultimate absorption.

In 1877 we tried to hasten this event. The Transvaal was in a state of bankruptcy and anarchy, and constituted a danger to South Africa. So we annexed it, under protest from the Boers, and made promises which, unhappily, Imperial pre-occupations rather than deliberate bad faith prevented our redeeming. Then came the rebellion and Majuba Hill, and the retrocession of the Transvaal in 1881 under a fairly stringent "suzerainty" of England. The "magnanimity" of this celebrated Convention rather evaporates under Mr. Bryce's coldly objective treatment. It was a matter chiefly of policy. Dangers were apprehended in an aggressive policy. And subsequent events have shown that the magnitude of those dangers was very far from being overestimated by the statesmen who arranged the Convention. At any rate the Boers saw no magnanimity in it, but only added contempt to their previous suspicion. If the Convention was really intended to impress the Boers with our generosity it failed, and in great measure (though not wholly) deserved to fail. Still, everything was working steadily towards the accomplishment of England's wishes. Dutch feeling which had been stirred in Cape Colony by the war was cooled by the narrow and unfriendly conduct of the Boer Government towards the Cape Dutch as well as the Cape English, and the new Convention of 1884 removed much of the sense of grievance, if not of the suspicion, of the Boers. But if England could afford to wait English capital could not. The pace was quickened by the discovery of diamonds at Kimberley (1869) and of gold at Witwatersrand in 1885.

"Effolient tropes irritamenta laborum."

Kimberley, to the disgust of the Free State Boers, was declared by an award to belong to a half-caste chief, who ceded it to England. Witwatersrand was indubitably in the Transvaal territory. There can be no manner of doubt that it is the discovery of these gold-fields that has caused the trouble, and that the war is a capitalists' war, in the sense that the dominant "interest" in the gold-fields is not that of South Africa as a country or South Africans as individuals, but of European shareholders and adventurers who have no stake in South Africa's future. This does not mean that there is anything disreputable in being a capitalist, or anything improper in forming a company to develop gold-fields. But it does mean that any advantage, temporary or permanent, that may accrue to South Africa from the discovery of the precious metals is incidental and secondary; and that it was transitory financial interests, not permanent Imperial or even commercial interests, that were hampered by the obstinacy of the Transvaal Government. This is brought out by Mr. Bryce in a manner so absolutely convincing that it is difficult to believe that any reader can resist it.

The mining interest then would not wait. The life of such an interest is short. And the grievances, from the capitalistic point of view, were genuine. Hence the Johannesburg "conspiracy," which might have been harmless enough if the infamous Jameson Raid had not implicated British subjects and indirectly the British Government. The raid failed. The raiders were seized. Then came the turn for Boer "magnanimity." The prisoners were handed over to England. Unfortunately we were no more impressed by Boer magnanimity than the Boers had been by ours. Each attributed the other's concessions to fear. Then came the deplorable hushing up of the inquiry into the raid, which naturally convinced the Boers of the complicity of the English Government. Then came the unhappy negotiations conducted by the man of all men who should have been selected had our object been to convince the Boers that we meant mischief. Then the interim dispatch, with the promise of a new set of terms. Then the dispatch, not of terms, but of troops, while the promised terms were delayed week after week. Then the Boer ultimatum, and then the war.

The impression of this book is irresistible. England has done baser things than this. She has never done a more wickedly foolish thing. "It could not have been helped anyhow." "It was bound to come"—phrases such as these are the last refuge of despairing incompetence," says Mr. Bryce. And again, "Haste has been [our] bane in South Africa. It was haste which annexed the Transvaal in 1877, when a few months' delay might have given [us] the country. It was haste which in 1880 wrecked the plan of South African Confederation. It was haste which brought about that main source of recent troubles—the invasion by the South Africa Company's police in 1895." As for the Boers, "There is not, so far as the public know, any shred of evidence that they contemplated an attack upon Britain." In a word, every single factor of the case has been misread and misreported by our responsible leaders. They have hurried us into a crime at which Europe is aghast, and for which we shall pay by the loss of precious blood and more precious honour. "Even at the darkest hour," says Mr. Bryce, "men must work with hope for the future." Even so. And the moment's work is to protest against the Devil's doctrine that because we have done foolishly and wrongly and shed innocent blood we must therefore harden ourselves in iniquity and shed more and more and more yet.

PHILIP H. WICKSTEED.

MR. LLOYD ON ENGLISH PRESBYTERIANISM.—II.*

As we said in our first notice of this book, Mr. Lloyd makes a really valuable contribution to the story of English Unitarianism, by finally dissipating what we are afraid must be called the "Open Trust Myth." The trusts of the chapels founded by the Presbyterians appear to have been very much the same as those of chapels built by the other Nonconformists. It was altogether later that doctrinal trusts were introduced. In the first chapel-building era which immediately succeeded the granting of Toleration, it was sufficient to secure their property to the worship of Protestant Dissenters—the law of the land did the rest.

It is a broader question that is concerned, when Mr. Lloyd discusses the character of the Presbyterians in relation to the liberal tendencies which, during last century, gradually developed towards Unitarianism. Mr. Lloyd does not allow that there was any Presbyterian breadth to develop that way. Indeed, he regards the general impression of the descent of our congregation from Presbyterianism as a mistake, and generally he has hardly a good word to say for the Presbyterians, while even the ejected ministers fare very indifferently at his hands.

Now, perhaps, there has been a tendency to glorify the Presbyterians too much. No such exaggeration, however, is found in Joseph Hunter the antiquarian, who is facile princeps the historian of the Old Dissent, nor in Mr. Tayler's "Retrospect of Religious Life in England," nor in Alexander Gordon's "Heads of English Unitarian History," which goes over very much the same ground as Mr. Lloyd, but in a much more judicial spirit. In fact, it is the judicial spirit that is especially lacking in Mr. Lloyd's book. It modestly claims to be an historical outline, but really is a very full polemic. You never get the taste of controversy out of your mouth, and the worst of it is, that the controversy is not with any general judgment of history on the Presbyterians, but with the extravagant claims which, in some recent discussions, have been put forth for them. Thus, his chapter on "The Protestant Dissenters" begins:—

"We have thus far" [up to 1689] "followed the progress of the Presbyterians and Nonconformists, and we have seen that the idea with which they have been credited of rejecting all creeds and professions was one they never entertained." Quite true, but who has ever said they did entertain it? The narrowness of the Puritans when in power—and the Presbyterians were at first about the narrowest of the Puritans—has surely been one of the common-places of history. When Puritanism was in power, hardly anyone had any true idea of religious liberty—unless it were Cromwell himself—the Presbyterians least of all. They nicknamed Toleration "the Great Diana of the Independents." It was only gradually, through the generation of suffering and persecution under the Stuarts, that the Presbyterians broadened, but then they kept on broadening, in Toleration, until from having been the narrowest section of Puritanism, they eventually appear as the wider element in the Old Dissent. Mr. Lloyd hardly seems to appreciate either the causes or the greatness of this change. The fact was that under the pressure of persecution all sectional differences had tended to disappear. The secret preachings had drawn them together, and the sympathies of occasional meetings in intervals of indulgence. The Presbyterians, unable after the Restoration to carry out their theory of government by Presbyteries, or to find a place in the modified episcopacy which many of them would have preferred, had come to be practically almost as Congregational in their actual working as the Independents; and when "Toleration" came they had little real desire to set up "Presbytery" in any strictness. For a time, Presbyterians and Congregationalists grew closer together. They established some common lectureships, and a common fund for the help of Dissent. This, we conceive to be the key to their attempts at Union. Mr. Lloyd ignores all this gradual growing together, and treats their Union as a mere expedient. When they found that they were finally excluded from the Church, he tells us (p. 70), "the Presbyterians and Independents conceived the happy idea of forming a Union."

After a little time "Union" failed, and of course, from the voluminous writings and mutual recriminations of such a failure, it is easy to cull many extracts which read as if the failure was due to mere doctrinal contentions. To our thinking, the account of all this is the weakest part of Mr. Lloyd's book. He sums up the elementary difference in the words:—"The Church believed in the divine right of the Bishops; the Presbyterians believed in the divine right of the Presbyters; the Congregationalists believed in the divine right of the congregation. The difference between the Presbyterian Dissenters and the Congregationalists was more theoretical than real, but it was sufficient to keep them distinct for a time" (p. 78). Afterwards, he thinks, they became almost indistinguishable, merged in a general mass of Protestant Dissenters; and when, later again, some revival of the old designations of Presbyterian and Independent took place, those who were, or were supposed to be, of anti-Trinitarian tendency were frequently called "Presbyterians" whether they had originally been so or not.* But why should they be so called? This short and easy explanation, or lack of it, really covers a very interesting process of change. If the causes which led to Union are traced out, it will be seen that though they, the Presbyterians and Independents, tried to amalgamate, they failed, and when they separated again, it was not to become indistinguishable, but more distinct than before. The Presbyterians of the Toleration time had no longer any such doctrine as the "divine right of Presbyters," but, what was more to the point, they had inherited from their period of inclusion in the Church of England, something of a broader feeling as to who constituted a Church. Generally, they were for rather broader comprehension, while the Independents stood a little more stiffly for doctrines. In some important centres (Sheffield is a notable instance) the break which led to the actual secession of the stricter party to build an "Independent" chapel, arose from the contention whether the election of the minister lay in the hands of the "Church members" or with the general body of the congregation. As time went on, this difference, instead of becoming "indistinguishable," deepened, and hence the gradual tendency towards greater liberty among those who still kept up the Presbyterian tradition. So the Presbyterians who had begun by being the narrowest of the Nonconformists, gradually became the widest. It was where they predominated that the congregational life and the studies of the ministers were freest, and though here and there there may have been some mere confusion of names, it was even there a genuine instinct which gradually sorted out the heterodox party to the Presbyterian side. We cannot, therefore, with Mr. Lloyd, dismiss the feeling for our Presbyterian forefathers as a blunder. To talk of their consciously providing in their trusts for such changes as have brought us into Unitarianism may be indeed a straining of the facts. In their controversial moods they were bitter enough, and to revive their name is an anachronism; but they were a noble element in English religious life, and as they changed and grew in the changes of history they became an element of sturdy religious freedom, with whom we may still be proud to claim connection. B. H.

INDEPENDENTS AND OPEN TRUSTS.

SIR,—I am glad to be able to satisfy your reviewer of my book in last week's INQUIRER, by saying (with permission) that the "unquestionable authority" for my statement that the Congregationalists have some hundreds of chapels with open trusts, is the Rev. Joseph Wood. He informs me that, as secretary to "the celebrated Leicester Communion Conference," he made extensive inquiries, as well as personal examination, into the matter, and came to the conclusion that at a moderate estimate there were at least 500 Congregational churches as free as the freest Unitarian. Some of these are, of course, modern, but Skeats, whom I quoted, gives 273 as dating from before 1715. Mr. Wood adds that the late Dr. Dale's church is a conspicuous instance of a trust free from doctrinal clauses; and this is as late as 1743.

Another Congregational witness to the practice of the old Independents is the Rev. Bryan Dale, secretary to the Yorkshire Union, who says:—"The oldest trust deeds were simply for 'the worship of God'; and in a great many instances ministers and elders who became Unitarian retained the endowments connected with the building, as well as the

* "The Story of Protestant Dissent and English Unitarianism." By Walter Lloyd. London: Philip Green, 5, Essex Street, 2s. 6d. net.

* Mr. Gordon refers it to the fact that the Presbyterian Fund favoured ministers of moderate views, while the Congregational Fund gave support to extreme men—"Heads of Unitarian History," p. 27.

building itself, while the Evangelicals had to go forth and erect other places of worship.*

I think this last statement probably explains the introduction of doctrinal schedules in Congregational Trust Deeds of a later date.

May I be allowed to say that my "principal aim" was not to discuss English Presbyterianism, but to do justice to the Liberal Dissenters in general and the Unitarians in particular.

WALTER LLOYD.

Gloucester, Dec. 13.

SHORT NOTICES.

IN the following notices we can only refer very briefly to a number of books, some of them quite lately published, but others which have lain upon our table for months, and to which but for an inexorable fate we would gladly have devoted much more space. Some of these, it will be seen, are admirably suited for Christmas presents.

No more charming edition of Dante for English readers has come our way than the five small volumes containing Dr. Plumtre's translation. The Divine Comedy occupies the first three volumes, the minor poems the fourth, and the fifth contains the Dean's "Studies and Estimates" of the great poet. The account of the estimates, both contemporary and in more recent times in this and other countries, is full of interest, and then follows an essay on Dante as an observer and a traveller, and a note on the portraits of Dante. (Isbister. 2s. 6d. net, each volume.)

In the Chiswick Shakespeare, the plays are appearing in inviting little volumes, edited with introductions and brief notes by John Dennis, and illustrations by Byam Shaw. The text is that of Macmillan's Globe edition, and it is clearly printed, so as to be useful for Shakespeare readings. The illustrations seem to us very disappointing, but Mr. Byam Shaw seems to be more successful with the comedies than the tragedies. (George Bell and Sons. 1s. 6d. each.)

Singing-Time, a Child's Song-Book, contains ten songs, by Arthur Somervell, with as many drawings by L. Leslie Brook, and a full-page frontispiece. The songs include Jane Taylor's "Thank you, pretty Cow," and Mrs. Duncan's "Jesus, tender Shepherd," as well as three with words by the composer, the one on "The Black Dog" being particularly good and useful for the nursery. The songs are pleasant for singing, and the setting of the pictures is charming, more so than the figures which appear in them. (Constable. 5s.)

The What-a-Babies, by E. P. B., will be welcomed by those who last year enjoyed Regie and Dot's "Adventures in Blunderland." (Manchester: Sherratt and Hughes. 6d.)

Saladin, by Stanley Lane-Poole, in the "Heroes of the Nations" series, takes one into the romantic period of the Crusades and to the fall of the Kingdom of Jerusalem. There are illustrations to make the story more vivid. (G. P. Putnam's Sons. 5s.)

Desiderius Erasmus, by Dr. Ephraim Emerton, of Harvard, in the "Heroes of the Reformation" series, is a story of a very different kind, but as rich in interest and richer in illustrations. (G. P. Putnam's Sons. 6s.)

In the "Story of the Nations" series, the two volumes on Modern England, by Justin McCarthy, tell the story of the present century with the author's well-known skill. The first volume brings us down to the period of the Reform Bill, with a concluding chapter on "Slavery, Black and White," telling, among other things, of women and children in factories, the master sweep and the press-gang. The second volume tells of the Queen's reign, down to the death of Mr. Gladstone. Other recent volumes in the series are Austria by Sidney Whiteman, China by Professor R. K. Douglas, and Modern Spain by Martin A. S. Hume. (T. Fisher Unwin. 5s. each.)

A number of interesting volumes have been added to the "Victorian Era" series. The Dean of Ely writes with complete sympathy on Charles Kingsley and the Christian Socialist Movement. The Rev. W. P. Greswell tells of the Growth and Administration of the British Colonies. Provident Societies and The Free Trade Movement are dealt with in other volumes. London, by G. L. Gomme, tells of the extraordinary growth of the city during the Queen's reign. One of the best of the series is Holman's English National Education. (Blackie and Son. 2s. 6d. each.)

M. Ferdinand Brunetiere's Manual of the History of French Literature, translated by R. Derechef, is a substantial volume of great value. On the upper half of the pages in large type the history is narrated, from the formation of the French language in the Middle Ages down to quite recent times; on the lower half of the pages in smaller type, notes give fuller particulars of the writers mentioned and their works. (Fisher Unwin. 12s.)

Aspects of Religious and Scientific Thought, by the late Richard Holt Hutton, is a volume of articles selected from the Spectator, and edited by his niece, Elizabeth M. Roscoe. The articles are not arranged chronologically, but are all dated, and range over a great variety of subjects affecting the deeper currents of life. The first is on "Creeds and Worship." The last two on "Tennyson's Theology," and "The late Lord Tennyson on the Future Life." The book, which contains an admirable portrait, will be a welcome memorial to many friends. (Macmillan and Co. 5s.)

A Night with Jesus, by J. L. Haigh, is an imaginative story, contrasting the temper of a fervid revivalist with the religious earnestness of a believer in the simple humanity of Jesus. In visions of the night the minister is led by Jesus through scenes which teach him lessons of humanity, charity, and practical Christianity. We must not tell the story, but there are touches of real imaginative power in it, and we advise our readers to get it and ponder its lessons. (Liverpool Booksellers' Co., 70, Lord-street. 6d. net.)

The Essex Hall Pocket Almanac for 1900 needs no recommendation from us. It is as useful and invaluable as ever. Ingenious friends might study the calendar and suggest improvements for next year. (Philip Green. 1s. net.)

We must also mention the story of John Greenleaf Whittier, by Frances E. Cooke (S.S.A. 1s. net), and Readings in John Ruskin's Fors Clavigera, edited by Miss C. A. Wurtzburg (George Allen. 2s. 6d. net), but hope to give some further notice of these two before long.

A COLLEGE ADDRESS.

THE Address delivered by the Rev. W. E. Addis, M.A., at the opening of the present session at Manchester College, Oxford, is now published (H. Rawson and Co., 16, New Brown-street, Manchester), and should be welcomed by earnest students far beyond the immediate circle of the College.

The main subject of the Address was the nature of genuine knowledge and the method of acquiring it, with some further words on the effect of study as a mental and moral discipline. We shall not repeat here a summary of the Address, which was fully reported in these columns at the time; but we will quote the following suggestive passage, as to the need of criticism, and something more in the study of books that are worth reading:—

"Our main endeavour must be to acquaint ourselves with the words and thoughts of the book we have to study. The criticism which discloses the time and the manner of its writing may do us excellent service. It is, indeed, one condition for entering thoroughly into the meaning and spirit of the work we study. Even the loftiest genius is the child of his own time, though he is also the father of ideas which belong to the time that was still to come. We ought, therefore, so far as possible, to imagine him in his true environment, to read him in the light of his own day, to comprehend the work he did and the tools with which he did it. Thus criticism is the handmaid of interpretation; it is our safeguard against the anachronism of reading, e.g., the theology of St. Augustine into the Epistles of St. Paul, or of St. Athanasius into the Gospel of St. John. Only we must beware of mistaking criticism for the end, whereas it never can be more than a means to the end. Can you imagine anything more deplorable than the case of a student who had a minute familiarity with all the theories that had been held on the origin of the Homeric poems, while all the time he had scant acquaintance with the tale of Troy divine, remained almost dead to the living picture of that distant age, to the noble simplicity, directness, rapidity of the style, was never melted into pity for Andromache or Priam, or rejoiced with Achilles in the brief span of his glorious youth? Surely it is a thousand times better to know Shakespeare as many a man did in the past generation, by reading the plays till he knew much by heart and had an intelligent enthusiasm for Shakespeare's genius, than to be able, without any such familiarity, to dilate ad nauseam on weak endings and strong endings, stopped and unstopped lines, the authentic and unauthentic portions of Henry VIII., the possible interpolations in Macbeth, the chronology of the dramas. These things, no doubt, deserve attention, but they are not the weightier matters of Shakespearean study: nay, they are mere jargon, unless they help us to trace the growth of Shakespeare's mind and Shakespeare's art. Now, I am persuaded that no class of men need this warning more than theological students. There is a real danger of knowing, very often in a confused way, always in an unsatisfactory way, a great deal that has been said in Germany and elsewhere about the Bible, while we remain ignorant of the Bible itself. How will such study help you in that work of the ministry for which you are preparing? Either the Bible is not worth reading, and in that case we may well be excused if we decline to trouble ourselves about the dates and mode of its composition, or it is worth study, and then your duty is to study it with enthusiastic devotion, and to kindle, when the opportunity is given you, in the hearts of others, the fire which already burns in your own hearts."

*Quoted by Amory H. Bradford—"The Pilgrim in Old England," p. 156.

As to the religious aspects of Biblical study, the question, Mr. Addis says, is, "What can the Bible do to promote the Christian life in the souls of men and in the world?" And then follows a passage on the worth of other great books, from which we will give this final quotation:—

"It is no easy matter to appreciate a play of Shakespeare, for the simple reason that there is so much to understand, so much in the single parts, so much in the way these parts are fused by power of creative genius into one artistic whole. But the study of a great work over and over again becomes more and more fascinating, more and more profitable. Such books do great things for us. They enlarge our horizon; they help us to grow tolerant and wise; they fill us with noble thoughts and interpret life for us. Then as years advance, the experience of our own life in turn interprets them and makes them living counsellors and friends."

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

TO PUBLISHERS.—All Books, &c., sent to THE INQUIRER will be acknowledged under this head, with name of publisher and price, if supplied. The necessities of our space, however, compel us to limit the number selected for critical notice and review.]

The Religion of the Twentieth Century. By J. McCabe. 1s. (Watts and Co.)

The Scientific Basis of Morality. By G. Gore, LL.D., F.R.S. 10s. 6d. (Sonnenschein.)

The Coming Bible. By T. Parker, C.E., F.G.S. 2s. 6d. (Sonnenschein.)

Ritualism Abandoned, or a Priest Redeemed. By Kathleen Treton. 3s. 6d. (Clarke and Co.)

The Awe of the New Century. By R. F. Horton, M.A., D.D. 1s. (Clarke and Co.)

Our Girls' Cookery. 1s. (Clarke and Co.)

The Living Past and Other Poems. By T. S. Jeavons. 2s. 6d. (Macmillan and Bowes, Cambridge.)

The Story of John Greenleaf Whittier. By Frances E. Cooke. 1s. (Sunday School Association.)

Readings in John Ruskin's Fors Clavigera. 2s. 6d. (George Allen.)

Histoire du Peuple d'Israel d'après l'Ancien Testament. Par Edouard Montet, Dr.Th. Second edition. (Genève: Ch. Eggimann et Cie.)

Fry's Guide to London Charities. 1s. 6d. (Chatto and Windus.)

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c., received from the following:—L. G. A.; K. C.; H. D.; J. P. H.; M. H.; R. M.; L. E. R.; E. M. S.; E. L. H. T.

OBITUARY.

SIR HENRY TATE.

THE FUNERAL SERVICE.

THE funeral of Sir Henry Tate was on Saturday last, at Norwood Cemetery. A short service was first held privately at the house, after which there was a large gathering of friends at the cemetery, many of whom were unable to gain an entrance to the chapel. The service was conducted by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A. (who was the first Tate scholar at the Home Missionary Board), among those present being Lady Tate, Sir William Henry Tate, and the other children and grandchildren of the deceased. In addition to other relatives and private friends, there were representatives present of public institutions of which Sir Henry Tate had been a generous benefactor, including the National Gallery, the University College of North Wales, Bedford College, and the Woolton Convalescent Hospital. University College, Liverpool, was represented by the Rev. J. Sephton, the Rev. A. S. Thompson Yates, and Professor Raleigh. The Revs. J. Estlin Carpenter and J. Edwin Odgers represented the teaching staff of Manchester College, Oxford; Mr. R. Harrop and the Rev. V. D. Davis, the College Committee. There were also present Sir William Agnew, Mr. Sant, R.A., Mr. W. S. Caine, the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie (secretary of the B. and F.U.A.), and the Rev. A. Farquharson. At the conclusion of the service the coffin, which was covered with beautiful wreaths, was placed in the family mausoleum, which stands close to the chapel, and not far from the tomb of the late Charles Spurgeon.

In the course of the service in the chapel, the Rev. W. G. Tarrant delivered the following brief address:—

"Everyone who knew the good man whose loss we mourn to-day will feel that only the simplest rites and simplest words are appropriate on this occasion. No man was less ostentatious than he in his ways, no man's religion was simpler or sincerer than his. In his life of fourscore years he tried to be a Christian by following as well as he knew how him 'who went about doing good.' How worthily he copied that high example we can testify. Energetic and successful in his work, he might well have claimed the high respect of his fellow-citizens by his business career alone. But they honour him to-day much more on account of that spirit of intelligent benevolence which prompted him to innumerable public and private acts of philanthropy. He did not merely give, and give generously; he thought about his gifts, and feeling his great responsibility, he evidently tried to do the utmost good with his means. Deeply sensitive to the pains of others, his tender sympathy naturally went out toward the sick and the distressed, and what he did publicly for their relief was but an outward and visible sign of hidden charities none the less valuable because unseen. But he had also the wisdom to observe that a great part of the sickness of both body and mind arises from ignorance and from unused intelligence. It was, if possible, to prevent evil and to educe good that with rare munificence he founded libraries and endowed other educational institutions. He believed in dispelling darkness, not by methods of fear, but by letting in the light. And in giving his noble gallery and pictures to the nation, he has supplied a perennial source of delight and inspiration to countless multitudes whose lives, touched by the visions of beauty there, cannot but be made better and happier. Earthly honours came to him as he well merited, and he was not insensible to the esteem of his fellow-citizens; but assuredly his best reward was the thought that he had not lived in vain, but that here and there, known or unknown, there were hearts and minds whom he had been privileged to help and bless.

"Beloved by his family and friends, honoured by all for his manly character and great example, he has gone to rest in the fulness of his days. May his memory draw us all, according to our 'several ability,' to do our duty in life as he did his; and on him rest the blessing of eternal peace."

AT MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

Preaching on Sunday morning in Manchester College Chapel, Oxford, the Rev. Professor Upton spoke of the Divine Sonship of Man, taking for text Philippians ii. 4, "Not looking each of you to his own things, but each of you also to the things of others." Having spoken of the intimate presence of God in the deeper places of our human life, in the moral ideal and especially in the promptings of unselfish love, Mr. Upton continued:—

"You can, my friends, hardly have failed to notice that this train of reflections has been suggested by the passing away from this earthly life, in the interval since last we met together, of a great benefactor of this and many other institutions—a man whose whole career has been in accordance with the maxim of the Apostle which I have chosen for my text. You are probably all aware of the munificent gifts which Sir Henry Tate, who was the son of a Unitarian minister in Lancashire, has made to this College, providing the elegant and capacious structure for our library, endowing a lectureship both here and in the College in Manchester, whereby students of divinity are being, and will be, most effectively aided in their preparation for their ministerial work. In other ways, too, he has proved a true friend of this institution—an institution which he warmly loved, because it stands for what he held most dear, 'for truth, for liberty, and for religion.' But his liberal benefactions were by no means confined to his own religious denomination. A still larger proportion of his means was bestowed on University College in Liverpool; and the splendid Art Gallery in London, together with the many libraries he established, cannot fail to be a constant source of refined enjoyment, and a most valuable educational influence to the present and the coming generations of our countrymen. Nor was he less careful of the physical health of those around him, for many hospitals and nursing institutions received from him most substantial assistance. But it is not the amount of these benefactions, it is the spirit in which they were bestowed that testifies to the true worth and beauty of the donor's character. The constancy and multiplicity of these gifts, and the fact that he did so many acts of unnoticed beneficence, show that no ulterior selfish end actuated his conduct, but that in a truly religious spirit he looked 'not to his own things but also to the things of others.' It is not generally without some effort, some noble self-determination that a man forms the habit of liberally parting with his wealth during his own life-time. We are told that a similar public benefactor, the late Mr. Peabody, said that at first it was a somewhat painful wrench to him to make great gifts for public objects; but he felt it to be his duty to do so, and he adds that what was begun as a duty passed at length into the sweetest and purest of pleasures. So doubtless it was with Sir Henry Tate; and it is always so with those who manfully conform their conduct to the high claims of the Ideal, that is, to the voice of the Eternal Father within them.

"Jesus truly says, 'By their fruits ye shall know them,' and the fact that from the little group of Christian churches to which Sir Henry Tate belonged a goodly company of persons have been found to make a similarly unselfish use of their wealth may be taken as some encouraging evidence that, in our conception of the essential character of the Christian faith, we have not altogether failed to seize and to appropriate somewhat of the spirit of our inspired teacher and guide."

"And if such self-surrender to Divine Love brings with it the highest of satisfactions in this life, it is equally true that it is just this practical religion which gives also the surest 'promise of the life to come.' As old age approaches it may weaken our intellectual faculties and deprive us of our stores of acquired knowledge, but purity and true love for good persons and good causes do not decay with age. Whatever else death may rob us of, it cannot destroy the eternal life and the eternal beauty of a character which habitual devotion to truth and to humanity has fashioned in some measure after the very image of God. May the Heavenly Father by His Holy Spirit help each one of us to follow in the steps of this noble philanthropist; so shall we become ever richer participators in the infinite privileges involved in man's sonship to the Father; and while we think less of our own things and more of the things of others, we shall assuredly find that in forgetting our own happiness we have most surely found it, and shall personally experience that an unselfish life of usefulness to others is a life, and the only life, of true and lasting blessedness."

MR. THOMAS RAWSON, OF MANCHESTER.

AFTER a somewhat painful illness, Mr. Rawson passed away on the afternoon of Wednesday last. He was the oldest professional organist and teacher of music in the city. For over thirty years he had been choirmaster and organist at the Strangeways Unitarian Free Church. On receipt of his resignation the congregation manifested their appreciation of his services by a very kind and complimentary resolution, and a substantial pecuniary gift. He had enjoyed for many years a large practice as a teacher, and during his illness received numerous testimonies to the affectionate regard in which he was held by his pupils. He was the younger and only brother of Mr. Alderman Rawson.

JOSEPH HENRY HUTTON.

THE Rev. Joseph Henry Hutton, B.A., whose death at the age of seventy-seven, is announced in our obituary, had so long ceased to be connected with the religious denomination in which he was born and educated, that his name is probably known to few only of our older readers; but a tribute is due in these columns to an amiable scholarly man, whose changes of theological opinion were marked by perfect conscientiousness. Joseph Henry Hutton was the eldest son of the late Rev. Dr. Hutton, for many years minister of Carter-lane Chapel, London, now represented by Unity Church, Islington, and fifty years ago one of the foremost Unitarian ministers in London. After taking his Arts' course at University College, he graduated B.A. in the First Division in 1844, and in January, 1845, proceeded to Manchester New College, then at Manchester, for his theological course. After supplying various pulpits, he became minister of Barton-street Chapel, Gloucester, from 1849 to 1852. Thence he removed to Norwich, where he was minister of the Octagon Chapel for one year only. Here he married into one of the principal families of his congregation—the Mottrams. From Norwich he was called to be minister of Upper Brook-street Chapel, Manchester, in succession to the Rev. John James Tayler, on his removal with Manchester New College to London. His ministry here lasted five years; but his theology was not in accordance with that of Mr. Tayler, and a gradual change took place in his opinions in the direction of Arianism, causing his resignation in 1859. He then purchased the well-known school at Hove, Brighton, from the Rev. J. P. Malleon, and during the next few years the sons of many of our principal Unitarian families were educated by him. It can hardly be said that Mr. Hutton was a born schoolmaster, and the once celebrated Hove School dwindled in numbers. Mr. Hutton found himself growing less in sympathy with Unitarianism, especially in the form preached by Mr. Ainslie, then the Unitarian minister at Brighton. In common with his distinguished brother, Mr. R. H. Hutton, of the Spectator, he came under the influence of F. D. Maurice and others of the Broad Church School—a designation, however, which Maurice always repudiated. Giving up his school, he conformed, took Holy Orders, and after a brief interval was appointed sole curate in charge of a large church at Clifton. After some years of useful work he was appointed rector of West Haslerton, a small parish near York, where he spent the rest of his life in comparative retirement, marrying again on the death of his first wife. One of his sons, if not more, is a clergyman of the Church of England. It is a curious family contrast that his father, Dr. Hutton, was one of the founders of the old Anti-State Church Society. Mr. Hutton could not have been called a popular preacher, but he was an accomplished scholar, although he never made any mark in the world of journalism or literature like his distinguished younger brother. No one who knew him could doubt the perfect conscientiousness of his various changes of theological opinion. He was emphatically a good man, inheriting many of the characteristics of his admirable father, Dr.

Joseph Hutton, still so gratefully remembered by those who were brought up under his ministry.

Mr. Hutton published an admirable little volume of "School Sermons," preached to the boys of Hove School, and occasional single sermons and pamphlets.
T. L. M.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

THIS is the first time for two years that I have had to ask the children to do without their column, but it gives me the chance of asking a question, which I have long wanted to ask. Do our children really care about this column? And how many of them ever look at it, or have it read to them?

Now, if you are not too busy with Christmas, will you please tell me? The best way will be to send a post-card addressed—

REV. V. D. DAVIS,
6, Gorst-road,
Wandsworth Common,
London, S.W.

I shall be very much obliged if every child, and everyone else who reads this column and cares about it, will send me a card and then I shall know; and at the end of the year I will tell you about it.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL TOOLS.

SIR,—As President of the Sunday-school Association, may I be allowed to remind your readers that the earnest body of young men and women, who are doing their best for the rising generation in Sunday-schools, deserve the utmost help and encouragement from our congregations? Teachers are mostly of limited means, and can ill-afford to buy the best tools for their work.

At this season there is money available for gifts. Now I can confidently recommend to donors that the new volume of The Helper will be valuable to teachers for private study. When possible every teacher should be presented with a copy for his or her own use, so that, studying at home, they may imbibe some of the varied and valuable thoughts in the volume, and they will come on Sunday strengthened with good ideas with which to nourish the minds of their scholars.

I believe that our teachers are worthy of great consideration, and that members of congregations would do well to help in the direction indicated.

STEPHEN S. TAYLER, President.
Essex Hall, Dec. 12.

NAY, falter not—'tis an assured good
To seek the noblest—'tis your only good,
Now you have seen it: for that higher vision
Poisons all meaner choice for evermore.
—George Eliot.

EPSS'S COCOA. The most nutritious.
EPSS'S COCOA. Grateful and comforting.
EPSS'S COCOA. For breakfast and supper.
EPSS'S COCOA. With natural flavour only
EPSS'S COCOA. From the finest brands.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any News-agent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are:—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER ...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR ...	3	4
PER YEAR ...	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE ...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE ...	2	10	0
PER COLUMN ...	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN ...	0	3	8
BACK PAGE ...	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, DECEMBER 16, 1899.

THE YORK CASE.

THE decision of Mr. Justice KEELWICH in the case of the Attorney-General v. Lewin and others, which we recorded last week, will have come as a great relief to those of our readers who had heard rumours of what had been impending for more than two years, and had feared that to bring such a case into Court might result in some grave injury to the principle of spiritual freedom which our churches hold as a heritage of priceless worth. Such fears, happily, are now shown to have been groundless, and we have, on the other hand, a decision clear and of the utmost value, setting forth the just limits within which a trust for religious worship, without dogmatic limitations, must be administered.

In the original trust of the St. Saviour-gate Chapel, at York, it is declared that the meeting-house is for religious worship, or "what other use or uses" the trustees "shall think most convenient." On the ground of this latter clause it might, perhaps, be thought that the trustees are at liberty to do anything they like with the chapel, and that, for instance, they might, if they judged it convenient, abandon religious worship, and allow the chapel to be used as the meeting place of a society by which God was ignored, if not directly denied. But such a suggestion the Judge ruled to be entirely inadmissible, and distinctly laid it down that the clause as to other uses could only be understood as meaning uses not inconsistent with the main purpose of religious worship.

Thus the principle is clearly established, that under such an open trust the chapel is dedicated to God, and is for the use of those who desire to worship God and to engage in such other undertakings as may be consistent with their character as a worshipping society; but for trustees to allow such a chapel to be used by a congregation that has avowedly abandoned worship, and has thus ceased to be a church in the spiritual sense, and has become what is known as an ethical society or a society devoted to social reform, is a breach of trust. Such objects may be altogether admirable in themselves, and a living Church from the centre of its worship, and with that added motive power, seeks them with strenuous faithfulness, upholding the purest ethical ideal and working for the establishment of righteousness on earth; but the church is essentially for worship, it is founded for that very purpose, that men may be together in the presence of God, lifting up their hearts to Him, surrendered to His will, and seeking ever more and more of the light of the Divine revealing. And if there are those who have for a time lost their hold upon that inward faith, the conviction that in God alone their true life can be lived, and who therefore set themselves, apart from all thought of God and by other methods, to do their work and nourish the aspirations that yet remain to them, they may, of course, choose still to share in the fellowship of a Church, hoping that the fuller light may again dawn for them—but what they may not do is to wrest the place of worship from its fundamental purpose, for which it is inalienably held in trust. Even if they should prove to be the majority of any congregation, if they desire to abandon worship and be united practically for other purposes, their only honourable course, as it appears to us, and as it was indeed distinctly implied in the decision of the York case, is to go elsewhere, and to leave the chapel for those who are still able conscientiously to use it for the purpose to which it is dedicated.

We do not wish here to make any particular reference to the matters in dispute in the York case. What they have been is sufficiently clear from the judgment, and it will be far better now to let the dead past bury its dead. The members of the congregation at St. Saviour-gate have united in their acceptance of the ministry of one who is thoroughly competent to fulfil the sacred trusts of his office, and we must earnestly hope that a future of growing unity, and progress in true religious life, lies before the congregation.

Some fear was expressed beforehand that the decision of the Court might set up a dogmatic statement of Unitarianism and Christianity, which would narrow the limits of our religious fellowship, and be liable to be used as a weapon by heresy-hunters. But what the Court did was to recognise that Unitarians are rightly numbered among Protestant Dissenters and "well-disposed Christian people," and that within the limits of religious worship they have freedom in the Church to maintain their own conceptions of the truth of God. We have reason, therefore, to be thankful that the case was brought to trial, and was decided as it was, upholding the principle of our open trusts and making clear the essential basis of religious fellowship in the Church.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

"BACK TO JESUS"

SIR,—I regret that the tone of Mr. Tarrant's letter has introduced elements of personal feeling into the discussion of a momentous question of history and criticism. I am completely at a loss to understand why anybody should detect a lack of "decency" in the attempt to state clearly what appears to me to be the historical weakness of a certain position, and the logical results which follow from the recognition of that weakness. I write these few words, however, simply to recall your readers to the importance and gravity of the problem itself. Whether I deserve the not too kindly language of Mr. Tarrant's letter, I must leave others to decide. W. HAMILTON DRUMMOND.

SIR,—The position which Mr. Bennett and Mr. Drummond have tried to explain is one which has to be reckoned with by every New Testament student of to-day, and I am grateful to them for their letters, even though with Mr. Armstrong I must admit I do not fully understand what they mean. There is no doubt that both here and in Germany the thoughts adumbrated by them are very widely held. This Neo-Ritschlian interpretation of the life and teachings of Jesus attracts many of the strongest and most spiritual minds amongst us, and however little I understand what they mean, I do understand a little what they are, and am convinced there must be more in their ideas than they seem to possess.

At the same time, one must not persuade oneself into accepting ideas out of strong personal sympathy with those who hold them, or even because one feels they have a great deal more to say for themselves than they have already said. Let them say it, and say it as clearly as possible, remembering that in spite of the Neo-Ritschlian horror of mysticism, their position often seems confused and mysterious to those not already of their company. This difference between Dr. Martineau's and Ritschl's thought of Jesus is of great importance, not indeed for our religion, but for our theology, and one ought not to be afraid of opposing one's friends if only to compel them to speak out more clearly.

Mr. Drummond asserts that Mr. Armstrong and those who agree with him are historical sceptics, and bids him strengthen his position by abandoning history for intuition. I may be wrong, but the impression made on me by modern Ritschlians is that they are in danger of doing something much worse, and that is abandoning intuition for history. Their sole reason for believing in the love of God seems to be the love of Jesus. The revelation of God in Jesus is the one perfectly convincing proof of God's Goodness. That is the impression rightly or wrongly made on me by their teaching. If there is any truth at all in it, surely they need a warning against disbelief in the power of the soul. It would be a terrible thing that our faith in God should hang not on history in general, but on one tiny thread spun nearly two thousand years ago in Palestine.

What does Mr. Drummond mean by historical scepticism? I agree with him that the New Testament is (apart from the Apocalypse), speaking generally, an ethical unity. It is certainly not at one in its theories of the person of Jesus. The Synoptics, the writer of John's Gospel, the writer of Hebrews and St. Paul, have quite different, if not irreconcilable, conceptions of the person of Jesus. Even in the Synoptics themselves there are traces of opposing views. The story of the miraculous virgin birth in Luke's Gospel is out of harmony with conceptions to be found in other portions of the same Gospel. I cannot imagine that Mr. Drummond is blind to these doctrinal differences. But with him I feel there is the influence of a supremely great personality at work on the writers of the New Testament books and everywhere on the early Christian disciples. Endless opinions arose about his nature, endless legends about his life and death; but some impress from his personality was upon them all, and gave them beauty, even when they failed of truth. I agree, too, with Mr. Drummond that Jesus must have shaped and coloured the minds of his immediate disciples, and that their evidence, whenever we are sure that we have it, will be of great importance. At the same time, I think he exaggerates the extent to which they "lived their way into his heart and spirit." Of that small company, one denied and another betrayed him, and all in his time of greatest agony forsook him and fled. When I think of the weakness and limitations and superstitions of these men, I cannot help feeling the desire which Mr. Bennett derides for an accurate uncoloured word for word report of one of the conversations or addresses of Jesus. The merit of Boswell's Johnson to which Mr. Bennett refers consists in the fact that he does give Johnson's words with an almost photographic accuracy, and yet Mr. Bennett claims it as a merit for the Gospel writers that nothing of the sort can be expected from them.

But admitting with Mr. Drummond the influence of a supremely great personality on the New Testament writings in general and on the disciples in particular, what then? Almost every student admits as much as this. What is it that lays a man open to his charge of historical scepticism? I can only conclude that he means by an historical sceptic one who refuses to find the whole reason for his religion in the personality and teaching of Jesus. Why are those of us who disbelieve in the miracles, and are doubtful of the authenticity of John's Gospel, to be called historical sceptics? We believe in the genuineness of many of his recorded sayings: we feel his influence even in the moulding of the legends and miracles which we reject as history: we recognise him as teaching a truer thought of God and a higher ideal of human life, and as having inspired, if not initiated, the greatest movement for the uplifting of mankind that history has known. What is there that is sentimental or sceptical in such a thought of Christianity? If I understand Mr. Bennett and Mr. Drummond rightly, their desire is that Jesus should be to us all that he was to Paul and John. They are satisfied with going back to the impression which Jesus made upon the early Christians. He was to them undoubtedly, explain it as we may, their Lord and Saviour. Through him they gained strength to endure martyrdom, love for their enemies, and joy in every vicissitude of life. Through his influence they were somehow certain of God and of immortality. Neo-Ritschlianism, in fact, if I am right, is going back, not to the creeds of the early Church, but to its religion. We are asked not to accept the second coming or the deity of Christ or other doctrines of the early Church, but apart from such doctrines to feel towards Jesus as the early Christians felt. Mr. Armstrong wants not the religion of the early Christians, but the religion of Jesus: he wants to get behind the impression made by Jesus to the personality by whom the impression was made. He urges us to find out what Jesus himself thought and did, and not be satisfied with knowing what his disciples did and thought through him. Apparently Mr. Bennett and Mr. Drummond think this inquiry hopeless, or not worth while. If so, the "historical scepticism" lies with them rather than with Mr. Armstrong. HENRY GOW.

WINIFRED HOUSE.

INVALID CHILDREN'S CONVALESCENT NURSING HOME.

SIR,—May I ask you again kindly to accord me space in your columns for my usual informal half-yearly report of the work done in Winifred House? It is now nearly nine years since we issued our invitation to friends, asking them to help us to start a home, where poor children, recovering from operation or disease, might be received, and wooed back to health in the house which had aforetime been devoted to Mrs. Hampson's unique work. The hearty response given to this invitation enabled us to commence operations at once, and to carry them on ever since without any great anxiety in the matter of finance; indeed, hitherto this part of my December report has usually been relegated to the last paragraph.

But this time it is necessary to speak of our need for money first of all. And for two reasons. Death each year claims more and more of our old friends and supporters, and we are wanting fresh ones to fill the gaps so made; may I, therefore, ask all who know the work of the Home, and who approve of it, to try to interest others sufficiently to become subscribers? In that way only can our permanent income be made once more adequate to the demands made upon it.

The second reason why we invite special donations this year is because we have been obliged to make great alterations in the system of drainage. For although we have not suffered from any evil connected with it so far, we have always felt that the arrangement was antiquated, and might do harm in the future; so that when the Vestry last June insisted on certain alterations, we decided, after consultation, to reconstruct the whole thing, removing the drainage from under the house and laying the pipes outside, making proper man-holes, and generally bringing the system "up-to-date." Happily for us Mr. Tapley Smith, C.E., generously gave us his most valuable assistance, drawing up the plans and acting as honorary surveyor throughout, with the result that the district inspector congratulated us on the "excellent job that we had made of it." We now feel that we shall be free from future anxiety in this respect, and though the cost, with certain house repairs, amounts to £150, we are assured that the value of the building is increased to fully that amount.

In order to meet these expenses we have had to go to the little sum we had put by for emergencies, and we are very anxious to replace it, for in an undertaking such as ours, it is most essential to have a nest-egg put by in case of emergencies. So much for our money difficulties, towards overcoming which we earnestly invite donations this Christmas.

Now for the pleasant part—the children. The Home is becoming well known for its success in dealing with hip and spinal cases, so that we have more applications for these than we can take. Of course, children suffering from such diseases require a long stay, but, as a rule, they do get permanently improved. Some eight of these "lying down" cases are as many as we can manage, and we always have about that number. Then there are the little ones with rickets, &c., who require also to be carried; we usually have five or six of these. Finally, to dilute the heavy cases we try to get six or seven "ceblity" ones—children from six to ten, girls up to twelve years—who need feeding carefully and "mothering" generally for one, two, or three months, in order to become strong. We are always glad to receive applications for such cases.

Just now we have eighteen children in the Home, and among them are three from our own religious centres—that is, one from Horsham, one from Liverpool, and one from Clarence-road.

Of course, when the alterations were being carried out, the Home had to be closed, and it was, indeed, very pleasant to note the bright looks of the children when they returned to us, and also to hear the appreciative remarks of the parents who brought them.

At present all are eagerly looking forward to Old Father Christmas's visit on Saturday next. May I ask any friends who are kindly sending gifts for the tree, to let us have them as early in the week as possible, in order that we may arrange accordingly.

MARIAN PRITCHARD, Hon. Sec.
11, Highbury-crescent, London, N.

THE BOYS' OWN BRIGADE.

SIR,—It is desired in this letter to give a short account of the aims and work of a new organisation—"The Boys' Own Brigade," and also to give, shortly, the reasons for its existence, in hope that by this means your readers may be interested in the work of the brigade.

Many of your readers are already acquainted with the institution known as the "Boys' Brigade," the object of which is "the advancement of Christ's kingdom among boys, and the promotion of habits of obedience, reverence, discipline, self-respect, and all that tends towards a true Christian manliness."

This brigade is composed of companies connected with Sunday schools or missions; military organisation and drill are used as a means of banding the members together in the work; and the Boys' Brigade has, for many years, proved of immense benefit in training boys to become healthy, upright, and honest men.

In connection with this brigade a company was conducted for many years with good results, by the workers at the old "Blackfriars Mission." At the time of the amalgamation of this mission with the Stamford Street Chapel the brigade company was without officers; the present officers, however, volunteered for the work. On their appointment as officers they signed the usual declaration, stating that they agreed with the object, constitution, and rules of the brigade in their entirety.

Although the Stamford Street Chapel is an unsectarian one, the teaching there is in a great measure Unitarian. The executive committee of the Boys' Brigade, having been informed of this, decided that the company must be struck off the roll of the brigade, saying that "Unitarians cannot accept the constitution of the brigade in the spirit in which it has been designed and acted upon." The officers of the company protested against this decision, but in the end (last August) the company was struck off the roll of the brigade.

The officers believe that the lasting benefit conferred on boys in a good brigade company is not their belief in any particular creed or doctrine but their moral improvement, and it seemed to them that the mistake of the Boys' Brigade was that its constitution recognised only certain churches and missions as centres of brigade work. They determined, therefore, to start an entirely new organisation on principles of thorough catholicity, to be worked on the same lines as the Boys' Brigade. Any young man or boy may become an officer or member respectively, no matter what his creed or theological opinions.

The second article of the constitution of the new brigade reads:—"The object of the brigade shall be to increase pure and upright living among boys and to promote habits of help, obedience, discipline, self-respect and all that tends towards true manliness."

The former "46th London Company, Boys' Brigade" is now being conducted as the "1st London Company, Boys' Own Brigade," and it is hoped that, before long, further companies may be formed. The originators of the new movement have been able to observe the splendid effects which the discipline and teaching of such a bridge produce in young lads, and are confident that if the new movement receives the support of Unitarians and other sympathisers much good work will be accomplished.

Further information as to the practical working of the brigade, how to form and conduct companies, &c., will be very gladly supplied by the Captain, 1st London Company.

The movement, to be carried on successfully, requires, firstly, young men willing to act as officers, and secondly, a considerable amount of pecuniary help; and it is hoped that support in both of these directions will be offered by many who approve of the objects of the brigade.

FREDERIC ALLEN, Chaplain,
J. C. BALLANTYNE, Captain,
F. EDWIN ALLEN, Lieutenant,
1st London Company.

Blackfriars' Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, London, S.E., Nov. 27.

"A BOOK OF BACHELORS."*

Mr. Fox, of Todmorden, has given us here a book which represents the scholarly research of many hours. The title, indeed, affords no indication of the real character of his book, except, perhaps, that it promises a degree of oddity in style as well as in matter. The fact that the men whose lives and words he brings before us were all bachelors has little to do with their significance; it has simply furnished a method in the selection of materials for the author's studies. He might have helped the public, and the success of the book, if he had not been so severely brief on his title-page; as it stands, no one could guess that the author's labours had been confined to any special period of history, still less that those labours had been conceived and pursued, with punctilious diligence, under the special opportunities afforded by the ancient Chetham Library. The Preface, with its formidable list of works consulted, soon corrects any impression that the reader is invited to a collection of mere whimsicalities. The book consists of ten essays upon men more or less celebrated, whose lives, with one exception, fall within the Elizabethan and early Stuart period. The exception is that of "merry" Andrew Boorde, the travelling physician, who died in 1549. The others, named in the order of the book, are Henry Peachman, "the schoolmaster"; Henry Smith, "the parson"; Bishop Andrewes; Archbishop Abbot; Abraham Cowley; Thomas Coryate, "the traveller"; Sir Thomas Overbury; Sir Henry Wotton; and Robert Burton, "the humourist." Although, as we have hinted, there is no obvious necessity why the group should be just these and no other, it is evident that, to an antiquarian student like Mr. Fox, these names open up a fine field for historical investigation, for literary exposition, and for the exercise of that kindly criticism which seeks to rescue noteworthy people, and writers especially, from neglect.

Had the author desired to extend the list of justly celebrated "bachelors" belonging to the period chosen for illustration, he might have done so very easily. A particularly congenial subject suggests itself in Camden, the prince of antiquarians; and the round dozen might have included Herrick, that most unreverend vicar, whose Hesperidean fruit, sadly unequal in worth though it be, far out-values a wilderness of epics such as Cowley's "Davideis," and whose bacchanalian "lines" do not (to use a metaphor of Mr. Fox's) "smack of Rydal-water." Had Mr. Fox wished to make a baker's dozen of them, there was Selden, also, a quite inimitable sage, whose life furnishes just such a moot point as we can imagine the author would delight to discuss—namely, whether he actually died a bachelor after all, or married the Countess-Dowager of Kent. In short, there is no reason in the nature of the subject why we should not have a series of "Books of Bachelors."

* "A Book of Bachelors," by Arthur W. Fox, M.A., with illustrations. Archibald Constable and Co. Pp. xvi.—449. Price 16s.

The essays strike us as of very different qualities. Despite some caustic remarks which he makes as to flippancy in historical studies, the author cannot be congratulated on always hitting the happy mean between the dullness he abhors and mere levity. Like the dyer's hand subdued to the colour it works in, Mr. Fox's style, both in fancy and expression, is apt to fall off or improve according to the particular subject dealt with. Possibly, one or two of the essays placed in the first part were written much earlier than the rest; certainly some of those that succeed are more moderate and dignified, without losing that flavour of pungency and humour which is characteristic of the author's whole work. We must also confess that the subject matter strikes us, here and there, as unfortunate. It is not Mr. Fox's fault, of course, that scandalous things went on in the reign of James I., and from the historian as from the man of science all kinds of facts demand impartial scrutiny; but the present volume, valuable as it is as a contribution to history, retains after all so much of the character of entertaining literature that the necessity for poking quite so industriously into the darker corners does not appear to us at all clear. Much more to our liking are those pages, and they are many, where different aspects of the religious thought of the period are illustrated, such as in the essays on Smith, Andrewes and Abbot. That Mr. Fox exhibits here the true catholicity of sympathy that can enter with appreciation into the spirit of men so diverse in tendency as the two last-named, is only what we should expect from so worthy a son of our own church-life. It is probably in this direction that the chief "uses" of the book will be found; certainly the attentive reader cannot fail to carry away from it a more vivid picture of some of the many currents in the religious life of that period.

We are sure Mr. Fox has worked hard and seriously at his work, however light-some of heart he is as a writer, and if we find such "uses" as these in his book, it cannot be distasteful to him. At the same time, unless we are mistaken, he really thought as much of the dulce as the utile in setting forth upon his task. In an age so severely "practical" as ours there may be some to wonder at the issue of a volume so bulky and so expensive to produce—not only in cash but in studious labour—when the result aimed at is not less to amuse than to instruct. Appreciating the high standard of amusement contemplated, we congratulate ourselves that one amongst us has time, erudition, and wit enough to work at such a volume, and to make so much of it.

An author of Mr. Fox's stamp will not take it as anything but a mark of a serious examination of his work if we call his attention to a few blemishes which can be easily remedied hereafter. It is only fair to say at the outset that we have been astonished at the extreme care with which, as far as we have been able to check them, the copious references in the book have been made. The proofs appear to have been strictly "read" as a rule; and though some awkwardly constructed sentences occur, the general effect of the prose is euphonious. Sir John Eliot, the Parliamentary leader, did not—so far as we know—spell his name with two l's, as Mr. Fox gives it on p. 196; whether the title "Lord Bacon" is strictly accurate (p. 384) we doubt; but we are quite sure that Douglas Jerrold did not write "Mrs. Cawdle" (p. 102). Surely it is a mistake, also, to speak of "wisdom of a cynical caste" (p. 73), as if referring to a division of the people. The correct word is "cast," meaning form or mould. A curious instance of what may be called infected orthography occurs in Mr. Fox's use, on p. 139, of the form "inveys" (inveighs). Henry Peacham, his "school-master," does use this spelling in a passage quoted by Mr. Fox; but that is more likely to be the reason than the justification of Mr. Fox's neglect of modern usage. We are not clear whence the author got the spelling "forceable" (p. 207) for the word which is written "forcible" elsewhere in the book. Probably some early Elizabethan writer might yield the former spelling, but Spenser, Hooker, and the 1611 Translators seem to know nothing of it, and in fact they use the latter form. Here again we should incline to attribute the archaism to a reminiscence of the fearful and wonderful spelling illustrated in some books of the period, as well as in such correspondence as that of James I., from which an amusing quotation is given by Mr. Fox. True to well-established precedents, the author in referring to other workers in the same field of literature (such as Dr. Ward and Dr. Jessopp) finds occasion to warn the reader against their inaccuracy. Let us hope Dr. Jessopp will not take it unkindly, for Mr. Fox (as was almost unavoidable in a work of the kind) has his own fallible moments. Thus, in the very entertaining essay on Tom Coryate, whose birth is placed (p. 247) in 1587, we are told that he left his University at the age of twenty-two; that he spent some time near Yeovil with his father, and then went to Court where he diligently saved such gifts as he could get by wisely playing the fool. How old he might be by this time we can only conjecture; but on p. 253 the date of his setting out on the travels for which he had been saving is given twice as 1608, when by good reckoning he could be but twenty-one. Even if the older age held good, it seems hardly right to speak of Coryate as an "old" bachelor (p. 257), seeing that at his death some years later he was only about thirty. In the matter of quotation, also, there are occasional lapses. Tony Weller is not exactly quoted on p. 429—the correct form is "Vy worn't there a alleybi!" It is not "the Catechism" (p. 398) that commands us to "read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest" anything; the passage occurs in the Collect for the second Sunday in Advent.

But these and such-like slips are only "flies in amber," and they do not seriously detract from the worth or interest of Mr. Fox's book. It is, in fact, a very remarkable store of wise and witty sentences, curious facts and informing allusions. We observe that in a neatly turned Latin dedication the author does honour to Principal Gordon, and it would not be easy for such a writer on such subjects to find a more appropriate patron. But we must remember that "Comparisons are odious," as Burton says—although, pace Mr. Fox, the author of the "Anatomy of Melancholy" (1621) can hardly be reckoned the first literary sponsor of that proverb, seeing that it occurs (parodied as if already well known) in Much Ado About Nothing (1599-1600). We should add that the illustrations, which are photographic reproductions of title-pages, facsimiles, &c., add considerably to the interest of the book.

W. G. TARRANT.

A PROTESTANT SCHOOL IN BRAZIL.

THIS article goes under the same heading as two former ones I have sent, published respectively in June, 1898, and January, 1897, in THE INQUIRER. And yet the present article will not refer to the same school as the other two. Those described the Eschola Americana of S. Paulo, with which I was for three years connected—this is to describe the Eschola Anglo-Brazileira, an institution founded by myself in February last.

I was kindly warned beforehand by many friends that an English school could not be successful, since six had already been founded in S. Paulo at different times, and all had failed. But I had no intention of opening a purely English school, adapted only to the needs of English residents; my idea was to have an institution wherein English and Brazilian children alike should be educated under an English system; and the confidence I placed in the success of my scheme must now, I think, be acknowledged as justified, from the fact that, while I opened in February with 14 scholars, I have at present—in September—51.

"But," someone may ask, "is it a missionary school?" Why do I trouble the readers of THE INQUIRER with the affairs of an English school in Brazil, unless it is founded for the purpose of proselytising? Well, I will give you the worst at once: I have no idea of making converts to any religion, nor even of attacking Catholicism as Catholicism, or Presbyterianism or any other ism, as such. Whether the Anglo-Brazilian is a missionary school or not, the reader may judge for himself, when I have briefly described it.

School is opened daily with selected readings taken from widely divergent sources, in Portuguese and in English. Sir John Lubbock's "Pleasures of Life," Longfellow's, Tennyson's, and Wordsworth's shorter poems, the versions of the New Testament and the Psalms, are among the English founts to which I most frequently have recourse: the poems of Abreu and the beautiful sermons of the Catholic priest, Antonio Vieira are among the Portuguese. Suffice it here to say that I seek always to stir the higher emotions, reading nothing that is dull or prosy, condemning a piece if I see it fails to rivet the child's attention.

After the daily reading we sing—not hymns, as such, but the most beautiful of the English songs. "Home, sweet home," "The Meeting of the Waters," "The Minstrel Boy," "Old Folks at Home" (slightly altered), "Robin Adair" (altered), "Lead, kindly Light"; these are among our favourites.

These readings and songs are not a grind, or a thing to be sat through, to any boy in the room; they are eagerly drunk in and committed to memory, and the religion taught incidentally by them, I love to believe, is very great. They teach no doctrine, they teach religion only in its purest sense.

Following the singing, come the classes, in which, of course, the three R's have their due place; but beyond these my object is always to devote time to the most humanising of other studies. History—English, Brazilian, and Universal—has a prominent place; descriptive geography (and I only regret that I have no magic-lantern or kinematograph for this study, for I believe these the most valuable aids to the true teaching of geography), physiology and natural history, drawing, literary study—music, if it were possible, but at present I have not the means of placing this on the programme—these principally are what I mean by the humanising studies.

Want of the necessary means prevents my having a boarding-school. At best a day-school can but do something toward the formation of character, and that something may be largely undone by bad influences at home or in the streets. But I hope that sooner or later I may be able to complete my ideal, and by having a living-place for my pupils, add practical farm and garden work to the other humanising studies—things necessary for true intercourse with Nature, our greatest Teacher.

Why, then, do I call it a Protestant school? Were my intention to let it remain a day-school only, this question would perhaps be unanswerable. But when the day-school becomes a boarding-school the necessity of definite religious teaching will be more obvious. Even then, however, it is no part of my design to proselytise for any one sect, or to make war on any other—not even upon Jesuitism, supposing myself equal to any such combat. By simple services for the worship of God the Father and the better understanding of the teachings of Jesus Christ, I should wish to show practically what is the sincerest and best Christianity. The child as he grows older draws his own conclusions and embraces that faith which he has seen to be the purest, abandoning the empty forms together with the dogmatic creeds he has found no reason to respect.

"Is the senhor a Protestant?" one of my pupils once asked me. "Yes," I replied; "I am." "What do the Protestants believe?" "They believe in God, and in the religion of Jesus Christ, and a good Protestant wishes to make his neighbours happy."

"No!" replied my small friend decidedly—"not always happy." "Why not?" I asked. "Because," said he, "my father says that in the Protestant Church it is peccado to be happy on Sunday!"

Alas, it is undeniable that here in Brazil the Americans have made the name of Protestant synonymous in the common mind with that of bigoted sabbatarian. But I am anxious to show, by example, that Protestant means a man who protests against all perversions in the religion of Christ; and bigoted sabbatarianism is a perversion against which the Master himself forcibly protested when he said, "The sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath."

I set some pupils once the following subject for a composition (in Portuguese):—"What is a Christian?" I will give extracts from three of the replies, the first two as showing the result of Roman teachings, and the third that of narrow-minded Protestantism.

"Christão é aquelle que accredita em

Nossa Senhora e no Inferno." . . . "A Christian is one who believes in Our Lady and in Hell!"

"A Catholic (used as a synonym for Christian) is anyone who believes that the miraculous girl in the Church of our Lady of L— is real. People who are not Christians say it is made of wax."

[It should be explained that in the above-named church is a real or supposed child kept permanently in a glass-covered coffin, and said to have been dug up in a perfect condition six years after interment.]

"Roman Catholics are not Christians," says a third—son of a Catholic family, who probably thinks that I shall be pleased by this statement—"because they smoke, and drink coffee on Sundays." [I fail to understand why drinking coffee on Sundays is so heinous an offence, but the boy was unable afterwards to enlighten me upon this point.]

That the reader may the better judge of the importance of S. Paulo as a field for such labour as mine, I may be excused if I give a few facts as to the present condition of the city. Many, upon reading the word "Brazil," are apt to picture to themselves at once dark forests, frowning mountains, little fever-infested towns scattered along the coast, and have not the least idea of the real importance of such a city as this and many others that have grown up lately in this part of the world. A British naval officer, visiting the port of Santos, near S. Paulo, wrote, in an ode to the surrounding country,

Ye mountains on whose wooded heights
The greedy borrachudo bites!
Ye forests in whose tangled mazes
The dire mosquito stings like blazes!

And this is probably the picture most people at home form of the whole of Brazil.

Twelve years ago the city of S. Paulo was supposed to have some 40,000 inhabitants; that was in the time before the abolition of slavery. With the abolition, in 1838, came a flood of immigration, principally of Italians to take the place of the freed negroes on the coffee plantations of the interior. Many of these stayed in the town, which to-day probably counts some 400,000 inhabitants! In place of the unpaved streets and tiny one-storied houses of that time, we have many fine suburbs, stately mansions, beautiful gardens—and, to crown all, we are promised electric trams in all parts of the city, with electric street lighting—the work of laying the lines and the cables being already in progress, performed by the English "S. Paulo Electric Light and Power Company (Limited)." The English Railway Company is building one of the biggest stations I have seen anywhere—a truly colossal building—and constructing a new double track down the great Serra that separates us from Santos.

Well, I have said enough to show that S. Paulo promises to be a great place of the future, and when we consider that its future lies all in the hands of the generation now at school and college, the importance of a good educational establishment becomes apparent; as also the brilliant future that may be in store for it, if it succeed in struggling through the financial and other difficulties that surround it at birth.

But I have already occupied more than a due amount of space, and must terminate this article rather abruptly, with the expression of a hope that my work out here "in the backwoods" may not be without sympathisers in far-away England, where there are no Jesuits or Miraculous Girls to be combated, and where the borrachudo and "dire mosquito" are unknown quantities!

CHARLES WICKSTEED ARMSTRONG.
S. Paulo, September, 1899.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Boston.—A lecture was delivered in the Unitarian Schoolroom, Spain-lane, on Sunday afternoon by the Rev. F. Summers, of London, on "By-way of Pleasure." Mr. A. Kime presided, and there was a fairly good attendance. In the evening Mr. Summers gave an excellent discourse in the chapel, his subject being "All souls are mine."

Bradford.—On Sunday, Dec. 10, musical services were held in Chapel-lane Chapel, at which the choir of men and boys were assisted by a number of ladies and gentlemen from the congregation. The Rev. E. Ceredig Jones referred, in his morning sermon, to the great loss which the Unitarian body had sustained by the death of Sir Henry Tate Bart., who had been a most generous supporter of their various institutions. There were large congregations, and collections were taken for the Joint Hospital Fund. On Monday, Dec. 11, an "at home" was held in the Channing Hall, in connection with the Literary Society. The host and hostess were Mr. and Mrs. Byron Boothroyd, and there was a large company. In the course of the evening an interesting lecture was given by Dr. Slater, on "Physic, Ancient and Modern," in which he traced the evolution of the art of healing from the earliest times to the present. A programme of high-class music was provided by Miss Bertha Rigg and other friends.

Brighton.—On Wednesday, Dec. 6, a sale of work was held in aid of the church funds. The proceeds, including those received from two rummage sales during the year, amount to £47.

Cardiff.—A successful two days' sale of work was held at the West Grove Unitarian Schoolroom last week.

Choppington.—The renovations at this church have now been completed, the interior having been made much more comfortable than ever before. Taking advantage of the visit to the North of England by Mr. Bipin Chandra Pal, the Committee arranged with him to conduct two special services on Sunday last, Dec. 10. The morning service being experimental, thirty-eight persons attended, which was fairly satisfactory. The congregation which attended the evening service completely filled the building, and numbered close upon 200 persons. Mr. Pal conducted the service after the manner of the Brahmo Somaj, which the congregation followed with marked attention.

Lancaster.—A sale of work on behalf of the organ fund and chapel improvements has realised £37, to be added to the £345, the proceeds of the recent bazaar.

Leeds.—On Sunday, Dec. 3, the Rev. J. McDowell preached farewell sermons as minister of Holbeck Chapel, and on the following evening a farewell tea-party was held in the schoolroom, which was well attended. During the evening speeches commending Mr. McDowell and his work at Holbeck were made by the Rev. Ch. Hargrove, Mr. J. T. Kitchen, Mr. Westerman, and others, who assured him of their regret at his departure, and their best wishes for his welfare in America. A very beautiful silver lamp for the drawing-room table was presented to Mr. and Mrs. McDowell by the congregation with all good wishes for their united happiness. They sailed for Boston on Monday by the Leyland liner Winifredian.

Leicester.—Free Christian Church.—On Sunday next, Dec. 17, the last services will be held in the present building, which the congregation has used for the past twenty-four years. The scheme for building a church and school in one of the suburbs, which was started in the autumn, is now in full swing, the school building being nearly completed; the congregation fully expect to hold services therein from the early part of January until the church is erected. Much money is needed to complete the scheme, full particulars of which will be found in another column.

Leigh.—Lancashire.—A sale of work in aid of the organ fund of Leigh Unitarian Church was held in the schoolroom on Friday and Saturday last. It was opened on Friday by Mr. W. L. Green, of Lowton, with the Rev. A. H. Dolphin (minister) in the chair; and on Saturday by Mr. W. E. Ekersley, of Tyldesley, with Mr. G. H. Leigh, of Monton, in the chair. Very satisfactory results were obtained, as the officers were able to announce on Saturday, that, together with subscriptions, the sum realised was about £300.

Liscard.—Since the opening of the new church on Sept. 30 last, the increase in numbers of the congregation has been very cheering. On that date there were 78 enrolled members, whilst now the figure stands at 110. On Friday, Dec. 8, Mrs. Elam entertained the congregation at an "At Home" in the new Assembly Hall, as she desired to give in this way some expression of her appreciation of the general kindness and assistance which she had received in carrying out the erection and furnishing of the church and its various annexes. During the evening the company were entertained with song, music, and recitation, and they also indulged in some three hours' dancing. A most enjoyable and refreshing evening was brought to a close ere midnight by the assemblage unitedly and enthusiastically singing the National Anthem.

Liverpool Sunday-school Society.—The first meeting of the session was held on Thursday, Dec. 8, when the members assembled in the council room adjoining the Ullet-road Church. There were about fifty members and friends present, a very wet night probably preventing the schools from a distance being represented. Tea was kindly provided by the members of the congregation, and a very pleasant hour was spent in social intercourse. The president (the Rev. W. J. Jupp) addressed a few words to the meeting, urging the members to do what they could to make the meetings during the winter more successful by making an effort to attend. He then proposed a vote of thanks to Dr. Klein and the Ullet-road congregation for their kind hospitality; this was seconded by Mr. F. Robinson, and unanimously carried. Dr. Klein, in replying, said it gave them great pleasure to entertain the society, and it was appropriate that the first meeting in their room should be one connected with Sunday-school work, in which they were all so much interested. The members and their friends then went into the church, where a short service was held, conducted by Dr. Klein. The Rev. J. J. Wright gave a most earnest and helpful address to the teachers. He said Sunday-school teaching was never more difficult, never more needed, and never better done than at the present time; good books and good methods were not the end to be gained, but only a means to the end, which was to teach the children to live rightly, to love true and beautiful things, and to try and fill their hearts with a deeper knowledge of God's love and care for them.

Newcastle-on-Tyne: Church of the Divine Unity.—The biennial sale of work took place in the schoolrooms on Wednesday and Thursday, Dec. 13 and 14. Mr. George G. Laidler, in opening the proceedings, said how deeply they all regretted the absence of the Rev. Frank Walters, through illness, and expressed the hope that he would soon be restored to health. Mr. F. Henning Vaughan, of Oxford, who is supplying the pulpit until the end of the year, replying to some words of welcome, said he was pleased to be of help to the cause in Newcastle, though he could but regret his stay with them was in consequence of Mr. Walters' state of health. The proceedings were of a most satisfactory character.

Plumstead.—The winter course of lectures and entertainments at the Unitarian Church is now in progress. The session opened on Sept. 25 with a social gathering of the congregation and friends, with a very satisfactory attendance of over 100. Among the lectures subsequently given on Thursday evenings have been "Curious Dwellers on our Shores," by Mr. W. H. Shrubsole, F.R.S.; "Mark Twain," by Mr. J. Breddall; "How the Bible was made," by Mr. S. Field, a member of the church; and two lantern lectures on "Switzerland and South Africa," by the minister, the Rev. L. Jenkins Jones. The session so far has been very successful.

Reading.—On Tuesday, the 3rd inst., collections were made on behalf of the Transvaal Relief Fund, and the amount realised was £10 0s. 3d. The sermon in the morning, by the Rev. E. A. Voysey, had reference to the ethics of war. The pulpit on the 10th inst. was occupied by the Rev. T. W. Freckleton.

South Cheshire and District Association and Sunday-school Union.—The autumn meetings were held on Wednesday week in the Free Christian Church, Crewe. The General Committee met at 3.45 for the transaction of business, after which delegates and friends assembled for conference. The chair was occupied by the president, the Rev. G. A. Payne. A paper was read by the Rev. W. C. Hall, M.A., of Ashton-under-Lyne, who forcibly depicted the contrast between the school badly managed and indifferently taught, and the one where punctuality of superintendents and teachers was the rule, kind, but firm discipline was maintained, and the instruction imparted was most truly religious. The former schools, he argued, were foredoomed to failure, while for the latter there was a great, deep need, and success everywhere awaited them. An interesting discussion ensued, in which the Revs. J. C. Street, G. H. Smith, H. D. Roberts, Mrs. Myers, the President, and the Secretary—the Rev. J. M. Mills—took part. A vote of thanks was heartily accorded to the reader of the paper. After tea a public religious service was held, when the Rev. H. D. Roberts, of Chester, preached on "Enthusiasm." At the last annual meeting of the Union it was decided to widen its scope so as to admit such congregations as might be willing to be represented into active association with it. It was gratifying to find that each congregation having a school affiliated with the Union had signified its willingness to associate itself therewith, and had sent a delegate to represent it on the General Committee. Much is looked for in the future in the way of increased interest and helpfulness from this association of congregations and Sunday-schools.

WINIFRED HOUSE

(Mrs. Hampson's Memorial Home),

Invalid Children's Convalescent Nursing Home.
Wray Crescent, Tollington Park, London, N.

A Home where poor children are received (girls, 3-12 years; boys, 3-10) who are recovering from operations or from disease; also for those suffering from debility. Application for admission to be made to Miss M. PRITCHARD, 11, Highbury Crescent, London, N.

All friends interested in the work are asked to make it known to others, for it is essential that the list of subscribers should be increased, if the well being of the Home is to be maintained.

Special donations are also invited towards defraying the expenses of reconstruction of the drainage system, which was carried out in the Summer.

WILLIAM M. BLYTH, Hon. Treas.
MARIAN PRITCHARD, } Hon. Secs.
ROBERT HAMPSON, }

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.

SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

INVESTED FUNDS, £10,000,000
Number of Accounts, 85,094.

TWO AND A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST
allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT
ACCOUNTS on the minimum monthly balances,
when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold for Customers.

SAVINGS' DEPARTMENT.

SMALL DEPOSITS received and INTEREST
allowed MONTHLY on each completed £1.

The BIRKBECK ALMANAC, with full particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENS-CROFT, Manager.

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS
4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

LADY, experienced, seeks re-engagement as LANGUAGE MISTRESS. French (Paris 5 years), German (Dresden 5 years). Good references.—Miss H., 28, Alexandra-road, Southport.

Correspondents are requested to note that to be sure of insertion the same week, news must reach the Office by the first post on Thursday at latest, and the earlier in the week the better.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, December 17.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Bermondsey, Fort-road, Upper Grange-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. HAROLD RYLETT.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. FREDERIC ALLEN.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. T. W. FRECKELTON.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS.
Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. K. FREESTON.
Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. WOODS PERRIS.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.
Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Revs. BROOKE HERFORD, D.D., and EDGAR DALRYN. Minister's Class after Morning Service.
Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. A. GORDON.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. DAWES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D.
Kensington, Free Christian Church, Clarence-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. A. FARQUHARSON.
Morning, "Is it better to give than to receive?" Evening, "Life in Winter."
Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. STRONGE.
Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. C. POPE.
Little Portland-street Chapel, near Oxford-circus, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED, M.A.
Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. CADMAN.
Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. CARTER.
Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.
Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., and 3 P.M., Service for Children, Rev. S. FARRINGTON.
Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Mr. LUCKING TAVENER.
Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.
Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M., Mr. A. B. MIDLANE, and 6.30 P.M., Mr. W. LEE.
Sydenham Public Hall, Kirkdale, Sydenham, 7 P.M., Rev. T. E. M. EDWARDS, "The Place of Jesus in Religion."
Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BALSALL HEATH INSTITUTE: OUR FATHER'S CHURCH, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. J. SNEATH.
BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. N. BLATCHFORD, B.A.
BEDFORD, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. ROWLAND HILL.
BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
BLACKPOOL, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
BLACKPOOL, Unitarian Lay Church, Masonic Hall, Waterloo-road, South Shore, 6.30 P.M.
BOOTLE, Free Church, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. W. HAWKES.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. COX.
BRIGHTON, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road, North-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.
BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. GEORGE STREET.
CANTERBURY, Blackfriars, 11 A.M.
DEAL and WALMER Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. SHAKESPEARE.
DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 1 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. BURROWS.
EASTBOURNE, Lismore-road, Terminus-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. ST. CLAIR.
GUILDFORD, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. S. LANG BUCKLAND.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. MARTEN.
LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.
LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M., Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. COBDEN SMITH.
LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. J. JUPP.
LIVERPOOL Ullet-road, Sefton Park, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. KLEIN. Evening, "Jesus and the Prophecies; or, the Relation of Letter to Spirit."
MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. FORREST.
MANCHESTER, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
MARGATE, Forester's Hall (Side Entrance), Union-crescent, 11 A.M., Mr. WEIGHT MATTHEWS.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. C. B. UPTON, B.A., B.Sc.
PORTSMOUTH, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. THOMAS BOND.
PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. COSENS PRIOR.
RAMSGATE, Assembly Rooms, High-street, 6.30 P.M., Mr. WEIGHT MATTHEWS.
READING, Unitarian Free Church, London-road, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. A. VOYSEY.
SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. SHAW, B.A., of Newchurch.
SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. R. C. DENDY. Stables in the grounds.
TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M., Mr. W. J. TUBBS, and 6.30 P.M., Mr. W. SCOTT DURRANT.
YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. REYNOLDS, B.A., of Manchester.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant Unitarian Church, Hout-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY,
STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN-SQUARE,
S.W.—Dec. 17th, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "The Inner Meaning of the Incarnation Doctrine and the Real Significance of Christmas."

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY,
SOUTH-PLACE, FINSBURY.—Dec. 17th, at 11.15, HENRY RAWLINGS, M.A., "Lamennais as Reformer of the Catholic Church."

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. W. STODDART, B.A., is at LIBERTY to take occasional Sunday duty.—30, West Bank, Stamford-hill, London, N.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D. DAVIS, Fairfield High School, Liverpool.

BIRTHS.

THOMAS—On the 10th Dec., at Heather Cottage, Liscard, to the Rev. and Mrs. J. M. Lloyd Thomas, a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

FIEDLER—HARTING—On the 13th inst., at the Old Meeting Church, Birmingham, by the Rev. Joseph Wood, Hermann Georg Fiedler, Ph.D., Professor of German Language and Literature in Mason University College, to Ethel Mary, elder daughter of Charles Harding, of Knutsford Lodge, Edgbaston, Birmingham. At home at Lifford Grove, King's Norton, Feb. 12th, 14th, 16th, and 19th.

DEATHS.

HARRIS—On the 9th Dec., at Sidmouth, Catherine Robina Harris, the youngest daughter of the late Rev. George Harris, of Newcastle-on-Tyne.

HASLAM—On the 7th Dec., at Ravenswood, Bolton, in her 84th year, Jane, widow of John Haslam, J.P. (of Gilnow House). No flowers, by request.

HUTTON—On the 4th Dec., at Norwich, Joseph Henry Hutton, B.A., late rector of West Haslerton, York, aged 77 years. Buried at Pitsea, Essex.

ASSOCIATION SUNDAY.

NOVEMBER 19, 1899.

The TREASURER (Mr. Oswald Nettlefold), on behalf of the COMMITTEE of the BRITISH and FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION, acknowledges, with thanks, the following Collections received up to Dec. 14th:

SECOND LIST.	£	s.	d.
Amount advertised Dec. 2	300	8	0
Birmingham : Newhall Hill	3	10	0
Bolton : Unity Church	2	10	0
Bridgewater	1	10	6
Capel-y-Groes	0	13	4
Carlisle	1	3	0
Clifton (Autumnal Meeting, additional)	1	0	0
Clydach Vale	0	9	0
Colyton	1	0	0
Comber	1	14	0
Congleton	2	2	0
Darlington	1	1	0
Deal	0	7	8
Dudley	1	10	0
Elland	1	2	0
Gellionen and Trebanos	1	7	6
Glasgow :—St. Vincent-street	1	1	0
South St. Mungo-street	1	1	0
Gloucester	2	9	10
Halstead	0	5	3
Hinckley	2	11	6
Holbeck	1	2	0
Huddersfield	1	10	0
Ipswich	1	11	6
Kirkcaldy	0	16	6
Leicester :—Great Meeting	16	11	10
Free Christian Church	2	0	0
Lewes	2	2	0
London :—Bermondsey	0	8	3
Brixton	15	1	2
Croydon	3	4	0
Essex Church	12	2	7
Hackney	3	2	7
Hampstead	37	7	9
Stamford-street	1	3	6
Lye	0	12	6
Maidstone	1	6	10
Manchester : Choriton-cum-Hardy	0	12	8
Mansfield	2	6	1
Newark-on-Trent	0	15	0
Oldham	5	1	0
Park Lane, near Wigan	6	10	10
Pentre	1	1	0
Preston	3	8	3
Rotherham	2	0	0
Southport	3	12	8
South Shields	0	11	5
Stockport	6	3	0
Stockton-on-Tees	1	1	0
Swansea	2	2	5
Warwick	3	10	6
York	0	13	0
	£468	7	5

NOTE.—The Treasurer will be glad if all Collections not yet paid are forwarded to Essex Hall within the next few days, so that they may be included in the account for 1899.

MATTHEW HENRY'S CHAPEL, CHESTER.

SUPPLEMENTARY STATEMENT.

During the progress of the work it was found that dry-rot had got into the floors of the Vestry and the Gallery, involving their entire renewal. Other matters were also discovered that required reconstruction for the safety and soundness of the Building. These have added £100 to £150 to the original estimates. It was deemed better to have all done at once, and so completely restore the old chapel that further repairs shall not be needed for many years. Instead of £750, as originally estimated, the restorations will cost about £900 (with extras and architect's commission). Rather over £600 have already been generously promised; and the Committee confidently appeal to the known liberality of Unitarian and other friends at home and in America, for the further sum required to complete the Restoration of Matthew Henry's venerable and historic chapel, in every way worthy of its 200th anniversary in 1900.

	£	s.	d.
Amount already acknowledged	613	15	0
Miss Durning Smith, Ascot	5	0	0
Miss Lydia S. Leigh, Swinton	2	0	0

Further donations will be received and gratefully acknowledged by the Rev. H. D. ROBERTS, Brook Lodge, or Mr. WM. ORRETT, Foregate-street, Chester.

FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, WELLINGTON STREET, LEICESTER.

CHURCH BUILDING SCHEME.

For some years past the conviction has been growing that another forward step ought to be taken, similar in importance to that of 1875, when the Congregation left the temporary rooms in the Temperance Hall and acquired the present building. Since that time much devotion and self-denial have succeeded in maintaining and increasing the interests of the Church; in particular, financial difficulties have been steadily overcome, in which work our friends of the Great Meeting have constantly and generously helped. The time has now arrived, however, when the present building, situated as it is near the centre of the town, is no longer adequate to the needs to which our services seek to minister. There has been a gradual movement of the population to the outskirts of the town. While we retain our own members, we cannot, in our present situation, hope for any material increase of numbers from among people who live so far away.

With these facts in view a site for Church and School has been secured on Narborough-road, at the corner of Harrow-road, the cost of the land being £767.

The Wellington-street building has been sold, and we shall cease to occupy it on December 17th. The proceeds of this Sale, after deducting necessary expenses and the debt of £300, will amount to £1,450.

It is proposed to erect a Church and School, the former in a simple but appropriate Gothic style, for about £3,200. It is expected, therefore, that a sum of £4,000 will approximately cover the whole cost, including land.

The scheme has the entire approval of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, which has contributed £100.

Our friends of the Great Meeting, Leicester, have generously supported the movement, as will be seen by the accompanying List of Donations, which includes those of our own Congregation.

Mr. C. KEMPSON, A.R.I.B.A., has generously proffered his services as Architect for the building, which is in itself a handsome donation.

It is highly desirable that the sum necessary should be raised without resorting to a Bazaar, and the building opened free of debt.

Will you help in establishing a centre of liberal Christian teaching in this new and thickly populated district?

Donations will be gratefully received and acknowledged by the following members of the Finance Committee:—

Rev. H. GOW, B.A., St. James'-road.
Rev. W. WHITAKER, B.A., 171, Hinckley-road.
Mr. E. F. COOPER, Lloyds' Bank, High-street (Treasurer).
Mr. C. H. ROBERTS, "Ashleigh," Narborough-road.
Mr. J. G. CHATTAWAY, Westcotes Drive.
Mr. G. P. SIMONS, "Ingledene," Hinckley-road.
Mr. J. W. BURTON, 43, Loughborough-road.
Mr. W. F. PRICE, 16, Fosse-road (Secretary).

DONATIONS.

	£	s.	d.
British and Foreign Unitarian Association	100	0	0
Mr. W. Whetstone, Coalville	100	0	0
Mr. E. Clephan, Leicester	100	0	0
Mr. T. Fielding Johnson, Leicester	100	0	0
Mr. J. Gordon Chattaway, Leicester	52	10	0
Mr. W. Evans, Leicester (part conditional)	50	0	0
Mr. W. Raven, Leicester	50	0	0
Sir J. T. Brunner, Wavertree	50	0	0
Vendors of Land	33	0	0
Mr. J. M. Gimson, Leicester	25	0	0
Mr. T. Pratt, Leicester	25	0	0
Mr. C. H. Roberts, Leicester	25	0	0
Mr. J. W. Burton, Leicester	22	10	0
Mr. G. P. Simons, Leicester	22	10	0
Mr. A. J. Gimson, Leicester	20	0	0
Mr. W. Simpson, Leicester	20	0	0
Mrs. and Miss Gonty, Leicester	15	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Gimson, Leicester	15	0	0
Mr. B. Sutton, Leicester	12	10	0
Mr. W. F. Price, Leicester	12	10	0
Mr. T. Roberts, Leicester	10	0	0
Mr. H. Roberts, Leicester	10	0	0
Mr. W. Tyler, Leicester	10	0	0
Mr. E. Penny, Leicester	10	0	0
Mr. H. Dal, Leicester	10	0	0
Mr. F. Dale, Leicester	10	0	0
Mr. T. Gilbert, Leicester	10	0	0

	£	s.	d.
Mr. E. F. Cooper, Leicester	10	0	0
Miss Paget, Leicester	10	0	0
Mrs. Conyers Smith, Leicester	10	0	0
Young People's Fund, Leicester	10	0	0
Anonymous, Leicester	10	0	0
Mr. T. Chattaway, Jun., Leicester	9	17	0
Rev. W. Whitaker, B.A., Leicester	5	0	0
Mr. F. T. Mott, Leicester	5	0	0
Mr. T. Twigg, Leicester	5	0	0
Miss Fullagar, Leicester	5	0	0
Miss Gimson, Leicester	5	0	0
Miss C. J. Paget, Leicester	5	0	0
Miss Louisa Paget, Leicester	5	0	0
Miss Elze, Leicester	5	0	0
Mr. T. A. Wykes, Leicester	5	0	0
Mrs. Wright, Leicester	5	0	0
Mr. J. A. Hoppes, Leicester	5	0	0
Mr. Frank Collin, Leicester	5	0	0
Mr. J. Banbury, Leicester	4	0	0
Mr. D. Nesbit, Leicester	3	3	0
Miss Pratt, Leicester	3	0	0
Mr. J. C. Burton, Leicester	2	2	0
Mrs. W. Collin, Leicester	2	2	0
Mrs. Day, Leicester	2	2	0
Mrs. Rodwell, Leicester	2	2	0
Mr. F. Winsor, Nottingham	2	2	0
Mrs. Hollingworth, Leicester	1	1	0
Mrs. Whyly, Leicester	1	1	0
Mr. and Mrs. T. Chattaway, Leicester	1	1	0
Miss Chattaway, Leicester	1	1	0
Mr. J. C. Warren, Nottingham	1	1	0
The Misses Guildford, Nottingham	1	0	0
Mr. J. T. Perry, Nottingham	0	10	0
Mr. J. W. Hind, Nottingham	0	10	0

1,173 5 0

Nett Proceeds from Sale of Building. 1,450 0 0

Present Total £2,623 5 0

The School Building is nearing completion, and we hope to occupy same early in January.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE, COVENTRY-STREET, W.

A MATINEE PERFORMANCE of A MID-SUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM will be given at the above Theatre (kindly lent by Mr. J. H. Leigh), in aid of the Funds of the LONDON UNITARIAN BAZAAR, on TUESDAY, January 16th, 1900, under the direction of Mr. Herbert Lawford and Mr. J. H. Leigh.

Doors open at 2 o'clock. To commence at 2.30.

Price of Tickets:—Private boxes, £2 2s. to £4 4s.; stalls, 10s. 6d.; balcony (first two rows), 7s. 6d. (other rows), 6s.; upper circle (reserved), 4s.; pit, 2s. 6d.; gallery, 1s.

Tickets can be obtained from any member of the Entertainments Committee; at the various Unitarian Churches, or at Essex Hall, where a plan of the reserved seats can be seen, or from Mr. HERBERT LAWFORD, 28, Nightingale-lane, Balham, S.W.

The Private Boxes can only be obtained from Mr. Lawford.

SUSTENTATION FUND

For the Augmentation of Ministers' Stipends.

At the ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the Contributors, to be held on WEDNESDAY, the 7th of February, 1900, the Contributors will have to elect six Managers in place of Messrs. G. Brown, Ernest W. Enfield, C. Harding, W. Long, D. Martineau, and Frank Preston, who retire by rotation, and, with the exception of Mr. Enfield, who has resigned, are eligible for re-election.

Any Contributor may be nominated by two other Contributors, to fill a Vacancy on the Board of Management. Such nominations must be sent to one of the Secretaries not later than 1st of January, 1900.

HARRY RAWSON,

Eccles, Manchester;

A. W. WORTHINGTON,

The Hill, Stourbridge,

Hon.
Secs.

HIGH GATE UNITARIAN CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

ERECTION OF A MEMORIAL TABLET TO THE LATE REV. ROBT. SPEARS.

Special Services, conducted by the Rev. ALEX. GORDON, M.A., will be held on SUNDAY NEXT the 17th inst., at 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.

Schools, etc.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE for GIRLS,
Bristol Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

PRINCIPAL—Miss BAILY.

HEADMISTRESS—Miss ELEANOR MOSS, B.A. Hons.

A limited number of Boarders taken at residence of Principal.

The College, which is opposite the residence, has accommodation for 120 pupils. Lawn tennis, gymnasium, asphalt playground.

The Curriculum is based on the Cambridge Examination regulations, and resident pupils have the advantage of Public School life combined with home comforts.

Application to Secretary, Miss S. AWDRY.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
SOUTH MARINE TERRACE,
ABERYSTWITH.

PRINCIPAL ... Mrs. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

SCHOOL FOR GIRLS AND LITTLE BOYS.—CONAMUR, SANDGATE, KENT.

PRINCIPALS:—Miss JARVIS and Miss CLARA BERRY.

Good House, close to the sea; south aspect.

Reference kindly permitted to T. GROSVENOR LEE, Esq., Clent, near Stourbridge; JOHN HEYWOOD, Esq., The Pike, Bolton, &c.

THE WARREN, KNUITSFORD.

PRINCIPAL:

Mrs. W. CARRINGTON WHITELEGGE.

Excellent individual TUITION and Home Care for the daughters of cultivated parents who would appreciate unusual advantages for Music and Languages.

The SPRING TERM will begin January 23, 1900.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, CHESHIRE.

(Barker Foundation),

TO BE OPENED SEPTEMBER, 1900.

HEAD MASTER—GUY LEWIS, M.A., late scholar of Pembroke College, Oxford.

This School will provide a sound liberal education on Public School lines.

Subjects.—Religious Knowledge, Classics, Modern Languages, History and Geography, English Language and Literature, Mathematics, Natural Science.

There will be daily morning prayer and a religious service in the school on Sunday. Instruction will be given in the history of the growth of religious and rational theological thought and opinion in England, and generally in religious subjects. The boys will be encouraged in sobriety, intelligence, earnestness, and piety, and in modes and by teachers free from the obligations of prescribed creeds or tests of religious belief.

Careful and individual attention will be given to the physical training and development of the boys.

Fees.

For Boarders ... £33 6s. 8d. a term (inclusive).
For Day Boys ... £12 12s. a term.

Foundation Exhibitions (entitling to admission at half fees) are offered for Boys whose parent or guardian is a minister or member of or in full sympathy with some congregation in England stately assembling for the public worship of God and imposing no obligation upon any member thereof (whether minister, member, or otherwise), to subscribe or assent to any articles or article of religious belief or to submit to any test of religious doctrine.

Further particulars, prospectuses, and forms of application may be obtained from

GUY LEWIS (Head Master), New College, Eastbourne;

A. H. WORTHINGTON (Secretary), 1, St. James's-square, Manchester;

EDWIN W. MARSHALL (Clerk), 38, Barton Arcade, Manchester.

BOOKLETS FOR CHRISTMAS."DAILY MEDITATIONS" & "NIGHT UNTO NIGHT."

By W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

PRICE ONE SHILLING (leather, gilt).

"Night unto Night" can also be had in cloth binding, red edges, price Sixpence.

ESSEX HALL, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, W.C.

Schools, etc.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE SCHOOL,
GOWER STREET, W.C.

HEADMASTER—J. LEWIS PATON, Esq., M.A.
(formerly Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge).

LENT TERM commences January 15th.

The School is carried on in strict accordance with the principles laid down by the Founders of University College, and is organised as a first grade modern and classical school.

For prospectus apply to the Office, Gower-street, W.C.

J. M. HORSBURGH, Secretary.

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms moderate.—Mrs. ROBERT TURNER, 94, Grosvenor-road, S. W.

BOARD and RESIDENCE, South of England. Healthy neighbourhood. Home comforts. Seven miles from Brighton, near South Downs. Station Hassocks (on main line L.B.S.C.).—Miss ROWLAND, Gothic House, Hurstpierpoint.

BOARDING HOUSE.—THE FELL, TROUTBECK, WINDERMERE, is situated 550 feet above sea level, and about 2½ miles from the station at Windermere. Every home comfort. Moderate terms.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff. BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea; sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address, Miss CHALDECOTT, Stirling House, Manor-road.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL,

Proprietor, FREDERIC SMITH.

Recently enlarged, remodelled and refurnished, now affording

ACCOMMODATION FOR ABOUT 250 GUESTS.

The best patronised TEMPERANCE HOTEL in London. Highly commended by leading Unitarian Ministers.

Spacious Coffee, Reading, and Drawing Rooms. Electric Light. Lift.

Apartments, 1/6 to 2/6. Breakfast, 1/3 to 2/-. Service, 9d.

77 & 101,

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON, W.C.

Telegrams: "QUIETUDE, LONDON."

ENGAGEMENT as COMPANION,
experienced, and good references.—G. INQUIRER Office.

Will make a SUITABLE CHRISTMAS PERSENT.

NOW READY.

A NIGHT WITH JESUS.

A DREAM STORY.

By J. L. HAIGH.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

"Its tender dealings with tender delusions is very clever."

LIVERPOOL BOOKSELLERS' COMPANY, LIMITED,
70, Lord-street, Liverpool.

THE ETHICAL WORLD.

EDITED BY DR. STANTON COIT and
J. A. HOBSON, M.A.

Articles on Important Social Questions, Education &c. from a purely ethical standpoint Children's Page.

TWOPENCE WEEKLY.

Office: 17, Johnson's-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

THE MILL HILL PULPIT.

A Monthly Sermon by

Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., Leeds.

December Number.—"FOR THE RED CROSS."

Price 1d. Annual subscription, 1s. 6d. post free.

Apply, Essex Hall, or CHAS. STAINER, 82, Ravenswood-terrace, Hyde Park, Leeds.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.

Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21, Mincing-lane, E.C.

Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.

Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.

STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, 151, Brixton-road, S.W., and Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made Monthly repayment, including principal, premium and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years, 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.; 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

WANTED, a NURSE-ATTENDANT

for an old gentleman in the country. Must be a total abstainer. Previous experience desired; should be over 40; must be well recommended.—Apply to Mrs. P. H. WICKSTEED, Sidenham Farm, near Wallingford.

COMPANIONSHIP to LADY wanted

by young lady, 25; musical, good reader; some hospital practice.—Apply, Miss JELLIE, care of Rev. W. Jellie, Ipswich.

SCOTCH TWEEDS and SERGES at

Mill Prices, Ladies' or Gents'; best quality only. Patterns post free; orders carriage paid.—Geo. McLEOD & Sons, Hawick, N.B.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

New Book by Frances E. Cooke.

THE STORY OF John Greenleaf Whittier,

The Poet-Philanthropist of America.

John Greenleaf Whittier was one of the heroes in stirring times, and his history, so full of incident, should interest young people: this story of his life has been written, however, chiefly with the aim of recording for them the beauty of his character. It has been truly said "The noblest workers of the world bequeath us nothing so great as the image of themselves."—From Preface.

Cloth, gilt top, with Portrait, 1/- net.
Postage 2d.

THE HELPER. 1900.

A Handbook for Sunday School Teachers and Parents.

Edited by MARIAN PRITCHARD ("Aunt Amy").

Frontispiece ... Energy, by G. F. WATTS, R.A.
Full-page Illustration, Manchester College, Oxford.

CONTENTS:—New Year's Address, JOHN BYLES; A Year of Sunday Readings, Compiled by H. KELSEY WHITE; Suggestive Lessons: Parable of the Sower, FRANK WALTERS. 52 Bible Passages, &c.; For the Little Ones: More about Nellie and John Henry and Eliza, MARY DENDY.

The S. S. Teachers' Summer Session at Oxford. Full Reports of the Lectures delivered at the Session in July, 1899, by Rev. J. J. WRIGHT, FRANK TAYLOR, Rev. H. RAWLING, M.A., Miss EDITH DRUMMOND, Rev. JOSEPH WOOD, Miss MARIAN PRITCHARD, Rev. JOSEPH FREESTON, Rev. C. B. UTMAN, B.A., B.Sc., Rev. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A., Rev. J. E. ODGERS, M.A., and LUCKING TAVENER. Teachers in Council: I. On the Ideal Sunday School. II. Our Senior Classes. III. Bringing our Young People to join our Churches.

Passages from Addresses, by Principal JAMES DRUMMOND, M.A., LL.D., and Rev. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A. Illustrative Stories, Poems, &c., &c.

Cloth, Price 2/6 net; Postage 4d.

12 Copies supplied for 2/- Carriage unpaid.

The Volumes issued for 1898 and 1899 can still be had at the same price.

An excellent GIFT BOOK for CHRISTMAS.

YOUNG DAYS

Annual Volume for 1899.

The Volume contains 192 pages of brightly written Stories, Anecdotes, and Verses, Recitations, Dialogues, &c., with over 100 Illustrations.

The whole of the pages are printed upon heavy Art paper, making the Volume a very handsome and attractive Gift Book.

Illustrated Boards, 1/6, post free.
Bound in Art canvas, 2/-, post free.

London: The SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

Manchester Agents: H. RAWSON & CO., 16, New Brown Street.

Liverpool Agents: THE LIVERPOOL BOOKSELLERS' CO., 70, Lord Street.

BOOKS FOR PRESENTS AND FOR PRIVATE STUDY.

LIFE BEYOND DEATH. A New Volume by MINOT J. SAVAGE, D.D. 6s.

JESS: BITS OF WAYSIDE GOSPEL. By JENKIN LLOYD JONES, of Chicago. 320 pp. Crown 8vo, 6s.

These sermon-talks are all on out-of-door subjects, the love of Nature, her influence over man's spiritual life.

THE CHOIR INVISIBLE, and Other Sermons. By JOHN WHITE CHADWICK. 228 pp. Crown 8vo, 4s. net.

THE STORY OF THE BIBLE, from the Standpoint of Modern Scholarship. By WALTER L. SHELDON. 1s. 6d. net.

A YEAR OF MIRACLE: A Poem in Four Sermons. By W. C. GANNETT. Cheap edition. 8d.

JESUS AND MODERN THOUGHT. By STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D. 1s.

This volume contains four discourses on the Humanity of Jesus, and the Love we bear to Jesus, taken from the volume of Sermons "God and Christ."

BLESSED BE DRUDGERY and Other Papers. By W. C. GANNETT. 1s. 3d.

BREATHINGS OF THE BETTER LIFE. Edited by LUCY LARGOM. 5s. net.

CHILDREN'S YEAR BOOK. Selections by EDITH EMERSON FORBES. 6s. net.

DAY UNTO DAY. Scripture, Prose, and Poetical selections for each day in the year. 3s. net.

DAILY STRENGTH FOR DAILY NEEDS. Selections of Prose and Poetry with texts for every day. Cloth, 3s. 6d.; superior edition, 5s.

POWER AND USE. Four Papers by JOHN W. CHADWICK. 2s. net, by post 2s. 2d.

GLIMPSES OF A BETTER LIFE. By LEWIS G. WILSON. 4s.

HEART-BEATS. By P. C. MOZOOMDAR. 6s. net.

LEAVES OF HEALING. By KATHERINE PAINE SUTTON. 4s. net.

MATINS AND YESPERS. By SIR JOHN BOWRING. 3s. net.

ONE UPWARD LOOK EACH DAY. Poems of Hope and Faith. Paper, 1s. 3d.; cloth, 2s. net.

THE THOUGHT OF GOD. Hymns and Poems. By F. L. HOSMER and W. C. GANNETT. 2 vols. Paper, 2s. Cloth, 4s. each, net.

THE RATIONALIST A KEMPIS. By JOSEPH BLANCO WHITE. 1s. net.

UPLIFTS OF HEART AND WILL. By JAMES H. WEST. 2s. net.

THE RELIGION OF TIME and the RELIGION OF ETERNITY. A Study of Certain Relations between Mediæval and Modern Thought. By PHILIP H. WICKSTEED, M.A. 1s. net.

BACK TO JESUS. An Appeal to Evangelical Christians. By RICHARD A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., Author of "God and the Soul," "Faith and Doubt in the Century's Poets," &c. 1s. net.

EVOLUTION AND THE RELIGION OF THE FUTURE. By ANNA SWANWICK, LL.D. 1s.

The PLACE of IMMORTALITY in RELIGIOUS BELIEF. By J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A. 1s. net.

THE GOSPEL OF JOY. By STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D. 6s.

"These fine discourses breathe a brave and loving spirit, and have the virtue of infusing the writer's health of soul into the reader's heart."—Speaker.

THE SHIP OF THE SOUL, and Other Papers. By STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D. 1s. 6d.

FAITH AND SELF SURRENDER. By JAMES MARTINEAU, D.D. 1s. 6d.

London: PHILIP GREEN, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3000.
NEW SERIES, No. 104.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1899.

[ONE PENNY.]

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	817
POETRY :—
Christmas in War Time	817
A Christmas Rose	819
Christmas, 1899	823
Advent	827
MEETINGS :—
Hope-street Chapel, Liverpool	819
LITERATURE :—
Elizabeth Pease Nichol	820
OBITUARY :—
Mrs. Haslam, of Bolton	822
William Thomas Holland	822
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN	823
LEADER :—
Embittered Joy	824
ARTICLES :—
The Pastor's Christmas Guest	819
Monton Church	821
Christmas Thoughts	824
Christmas in Song	825
A Visit to the Cradle of Christian Art	825
Among the very Poor	826
Oxford Notes	827
Abbas School, Cairo	828
CORRESPONDENCE :—
"Back to Jesus"	837
Unitarians and the Pledge	827
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES	828
ADVERTISEMENTS	830

CHRISTMAS IN WAR TIME.

How shall we listen to the Christmas
chime,
When sounds of strife and woe torment
the air,
When hate and slaughter shame the holy time,
And widowed hearts are silent in despair?

Yet never was there sorer need to catch Strains of the heavenly carol, and to see Hope's guiding star, and steadfastly to watch
For tokens of divinest sympathy.

Then let us trust in that far-reaching plan
That sees, for one, for all, the discord cease,

And raise our souls to that good will to man

Set in the heart of the eternal Peace.
J. WILSON.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

MANY friends will hear with regret that the Rev. Stopford Brooke is suffering from a sharp attack of influenza, and that his doctor will not allow him to preach at Wandsworth on Sunday morning, as had been announced. Some of the Christmas Day services in our churches will be found announced in the Calendar; but in many other places service will be held, of which we have received no special announcement.

THE Rev. J. T. Sunderland has accepted a six months' engagement as minister of the Highgate Unitarian Christian Church, and is expected to arrive in this country at the beginning of January. Mr. Sunderland, although the greater part of his life has been spent in America, where he was for many years minister of the Unitarian Church at Ann Arbor, Mich., and latterly for a short time in California, is an Englishman by birth, and according to a note in a recent number of the New World was born at Howarth, Yorkshire, in 1842. He is a graduate of Chicago University, and author of a book on "The Origin and Growth of the Bible," and other volumes. Mr. Sunderland is already well known to many of our people, especially since his visit to India as representative of the B. and F.U.A., and he is assured of a very cordial welcome on his settlement amongst us.

THURSDAY was the hundredth anniversary of Wordsworth's settlement in Dove Cottage at Grasmere, now preserved as a place of pilgrimage and a memorial of the poet. Mr. Stopford Brooke, in his account of Dove Cottage (Macmillan, 1s.), tells of the many associations which gather round it from eight of the happiest and most productive years of Wordsworth's life. There he came first with his sister Dorothy, and there, in July, 1802, he brought home his young wife. Coleridge and Southey were often there, and Walter Scott paid one memorable visit. Most of the "Prelude" was written while Wordsworth lived at Dove Cottage, as well as many of his best-known shorter poems, including "The Daffodils," the "Happy Warrior" and the "Ode to Duty," while he was working also at the "Excursion." "In poverty," says Mr. Brooke, "in simplicity of life, in quiet duty done in obedience day by day, in love, is the strength of life. There is no greater object-lesson of this truth than Dove Cottage, and Wordsworth's life in it."

THE directors of George Newnes (Ltd.) have issued the first number of a new sixpenny illustrated monthly magazine, the Sunday Strand, dated January, 1900. The great feature of the new magazine is a "Life of Jesus Christ," by Dr. John Watson (Ian Maclaren), which begins in this first number, illustrated by Mr. C. K. Linson, who has done a great part of his work in Palestine itself. As to the scope and spirit of the Sunday Strand, it is said in an editorial introduction:

We shall give glimpses of Christian and humane work and workers in all quarters, of missionary romance abroad, and of social enterprise at home. We shall provide for the Christian community varied and interesting articles and stories suitable for Sunday reading. We shall know no party and no sect: our religion shall be as great as we believe the religion of Christ to be. We shall spare no effort to create the very best religious magazine that can be produced.

Among the contents of the first number we find the first two chapters of a serial by Sir Walter Besant, "The Long Game," illustrated by Gordon Browne; an article by General Booth on "What has come of the Darkest England Scheme?"; an article on "Unevangelised Peru," by Dr. H. Grattan Guinness; a fully illustrated article on "Doré's Pictures," he being described as "the greatest religious painter in the world." Other articles are, "How Dr. Barnardo finds his Babies," "A Day with Ian Maclaren," "The Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain as a Sunday-school Teacher," with some portraits and a view of the Church of the Messiah. The fiction of the Sunday Strand is certainly not provided by a rigid Sabbatarianism.

DR. WATSON'S "Life of Jesus Christ" we should certainly have preferred to receive at once in its completed form, rather than in successive fragments jostled by the other members of a popular magazine, but it will, doubtless, reach in this way a far larger number of readers. An editorial note says of the work:—"Now that we have the full text in our hands, we are not surprised that he should say of it: 'I have prayed and thought over it for years. It is the best that is in me.'" In a Prologue on "The Inevitable Christ," Dr. Watson eloquently contrasts what might have been expected as the influence or lack of influence of a life so humbly placed as that of Jesus, and its actual effect upon the world. "With Jesus," he says, "it is the unexpected which ever happens, and this obscure Man agitated society in his own time as when a great ship passes through a quiet land-locked bay; so that to this day the swell can be felt in the Gospels." Then follows in the present number the first two chapters, describing the conditions of the time when Jesus came, and the people among whom he came; for the actual beginning of the story of his life we have to wait until next month, but we have already pictures of the Annunciation and of the vision of the shepherds, with other good illustrations of the country. The conclusion of the first chapter, as to the fulness of the time and the Desire for such a one as Jesus, is as follows:—

The history of the Race is repeated in the experience of the individual, and he has stages wherein he is not ready for Jesus. When he is full of strength and gladness, when he is proud and superior, when he is formal and self-righteous. Unto him by and by are sent hours of discouragement, of darkness, of self-disgust, when he has lost the flush of youth, and has been baffled by the mystery of the ages, and begins to admit that he has failed. It is then for our Master the fulness of time, and He cometh unto a perplexed and beaten man, as the light of the morning and as morning songs.

It is very gratifying to the promoters of the performance of the Midsummer Night's Dream for the bazaar funds, to find so much interest taken in it. Nearly the whole of the upper circle and balcony seats were practically taken up in the first three days of the performance being advertised. It is desirable to call the attention of those who wish to avail themselves of an opportunity, which is not only unique in Unitarian circles, but noteworthy among amateur theatricals generally, to the fact that the accommodation is not unlimited, and that delay will probably mean disappointment. We are informed that purchasers of the tickets for unreserved seats (pit and gallery) will ensure admission, as the only money taken at the doors will be for tickets unsold, so that it is desirable to secure these in advance. We understand that the cast is now complete, and will be advertised next week. The principal parts are in experienced hands, and amongst the fairies, courtiers, imps, and singers will be found the names of many of our families, so that the occasion should be one of special interest from every point of view.

HOPE-STREET CHURCH, LIVERPOOL.

JUBILEE BAZAAR.

A THREE days' bazaar was held by the members of Hope-street Church on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of last week, at the Liverpool College of Music, Upper Parliament street (the old Art Club), in aid of a fabric fund for the church, and to provide for the furnishing of the new Church Hall, the jubilee gift of Mr. W. B. Bowring.

The stalls were arranged as a picturesque old English village, the attendant ladies being in charming Puritan costume. The programme of the bazaar gave many interesting particulars as to the history of the congregation and the windows and other memorials in the church.

The bazaar on the first day was opened by Sir JOHN T. BRUNNER, Bart., M.P., the chair being taken by the Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG. Mrs. Humphry Ward was also present, and gave a short address.

The Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, in opening the proceedings, said that gathering was the completion of a long series of efforts and enthusiasm and devotion on the part of a number of persons. They came that day to the final act in celebration of the jubilee of Hope-street Church, and he trusted it would be as brilliant a success as the large gathering last October at the opening of the Congregational Hall, presented to them by Alderman Bowring.

Sir JOHN BRUNNER expressed his happiness in being present on that occasion, and said he believed he was the right man in the right place, because, if they were to search England through, they could not find anybody more heartily at one and in agreement with them than he was that day. They had a right to be proud of the traditions of Hope-street Church. It was the spiritual home of James Martineau, who was distinguished in very many ways, but there was one thing in which he was distinguished above all other matters, and that was in his power of compelling respect from those who differed from him. He had been succeeded by Mr. Armstrong, who had in a very large measure that great power, and who had worthily carried on the traditions of Hope-street Church. As to bazaars, he believed they did good beyond the amount of money realised, because of the unselfish work produced by the promoters and the pleasant memories retained for years in their minds. Sir John then declared the bazaar open.

Mrs. HUMPHRY WARD, in the course of her address, said that it gave her very great pleasure to come and show her sympathy with that bazaar. First, because the name of Hope-street Church had been for many years a dear and familiar name to her in connection with one of the figures of their modern life, and one of the influences of their modern thought, which had been most sacred and most familiar to her mind. It gave her great pleasure to find herself on the same platform as her old friend Mr. Armstrong and Sir John Brunner. She always felt in coming among her Unitarian friends that they were joining hands together in a great cause, and that they were coming from different points of the compass, but were journeying towards the same goal. She had some hopes in her mind, as they had in theirs, which were not perhaps uncommon. She looked forward to the growth of the forces within the church, which she hoped they might come into co-operation with, and she seemed to see rising at last, after all these years, the true Broad Church. When they got true leaders there was no saying what they might accomplish in the next few years; and when the days of more active and organised liberalism came to the English Church, how much they should owe to those who had fought the battles of free thought when it was so hard a fight, and how much they should owe to that dear and honoured teacher, whose name was for ever associated with Hope-street Church.

Mr. W. B. BOWRING proposed a vote of thanks to Sir John Brunner and to Mrs. Ward, which was seconded by the Rev. A. Cobden Smith, and carried by acclamation.

The second day's proceedings were inaugurated by Mrs. W. B. BOWRING, who, in wishing every success to the bazaar, expressed her admiration at the utter absence of selfishness shown by those who had thrown themselves into that effort. The chair was taken by Mr. F. ROBINSON, secretary of the church, and a vote of thanks to Mrs. Bowring was moved by Mr. R. D. Holt and seconded by the Rev. W. J. Jupp.

On Saturday the bazaar was opened by the Hon. Mrs. de BEAUMONT KLEIN, Mr. JOSEPH COVENTRY being in the chair.

Mrs. de BEAUMONT KLEIN said that it was to her a very pleasant duty to respond to the wish of Hope-street friends that she should open the bazaar on that occasion, and she counted it a privilege to be allowed to help in the work they were doing and thereby to emphasise that spirit of brotherly love and mutual helpfulness which should ever characterise the relations of those who held their high and free Christian ideals in common. The occasion of that jubilee carried them back in thought to those earlier days, when their spiritual ancestors were building up that glorious legacy of freedom which enabled them now to stand forth untrammelled by the limited visions of the past. On every side they heard the conflicting voices of systems whose place was in the past, but whose crystallised thought could have no permanent hold on those who were true children of the light in the present century. That which they held most sacred and most essential—their conception of religion—could only be enlarged and enriched by each new truth brought to light; yet, in looking at the best aspects of the religious life in the past, she always thought how much there was in it that could never be separated from a true religious attitude, which yet was difficult for them to realise in the same degree. The combination, for example, of simplicity and reverence, which they justly admired in spiritual writers of former ages, and in a few of their own age, seemed to them a great difficulty. Reverence could not be cultivated on the barren ground of uncertainty, and simplicity was directly related to an assurance bringing to a focus all their spiritual powers. The reconciliation of those two facts was one of the greatest problems they had to face in their Free Churches. Yet the Gospel of Hope and Joy was ringing in their ears and was more than ever brought home to them at that season, when the dawn of a brighter life arose for humanity at the birth of him whose teaching had once more been so effectually considered by their minister in his latest book. Whatever some might say who did not seem to have fully grasped the results of modern Biblical scholarship, she was convinced that those results were the best evidence for the argument of the book. It was her earnest wish that the essentially Christian spirit which inspired that book might assert itself more and more in their midst, that in the words of the writer, "Those who believe in the maxim 'Back to Jesus' may be ever able to enter into loving spiritual communion with each other." In conclusion, she expressed the sincere wish that Mr. Armstrong might long be spared to continue his great and inspiring work, and added a message of warmest sympathy from Dr. Klein, who was prevented by a severe attack of influenza from being present. As wife of the minister of a sister church it had been a great pleasure to her to be allowed to co-operate in some degree in that effort on behalf of the great cause they all had at heart.

On the motion of the Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, seconded by Mr. HAROLD COVENTRY, who with Mrs. Coventry acted as Secretary to the Bazaar Committee, a vote of thanks was passed to Mrs. de Beaumont Klein, and thanks were also accorded to the workers in connection with the bazaar.

As to the financial result we have not yet heard, and fear that the inclement weather kept a good many intending purchasers away. But in every other respect the bazaar was eminently successful, and especially in drawing together with fresh heartiness a large number of workers, united for the common cause.

SOME persons take reproof good-humouredly enough, unless you are so unlucky as to hit a sore place. Then they wince, and writhe, and start up, and knock you down for your impertinence, or wish you good-morning.—Guesses at Truth.

A CHRISTMAS ROSE.

The crimson rose of June is not so fair
 As this pure snowflake blossom, which springs forth
 From the dark wintry earth, when woods are bare
 And coldly breathes the wind from out the North;
 Nor are those gifts we value most the prize
 Of hours that fled on sunlight's radiant wings:
 Our priceless treasures are the joys that rise
 Unlooked-for from the soil of common things.
 For the great mysteries of life enfold
 Each weed and stone in our familiar ways;
 The simplest facts a deeper meaning hold,
 Leading our hearts, through reverence,
 up to praise.
 And sometimes, when we vainly look for God
 In visions of a golden heav'n afar,
 A snow-white truth breaks through the barren sod
 Of those realities that were and are;
 As all unsought, unlooked-for, from the clay
 Of this cold empty garden bed, there grows,
 When skies are darkened, and the world is grey,
 In stainless purity my Christmas rose.
 Christmas, 1899. THEODORA MILLS.

THE PASTOR'S CHRISTMAS GUEST.

BY ALFRED VON HEDENSTJERNA.

(Translated.)

A MAN must be pretty deeply in love and have a very firm belief in a special Providence who will venture to marry when he is only a "Pastor-adjunct." Such was the case with Pastor Alm, who had been a happy young husband for just a month, when Christmas came. He had a salary of fifteen pounds, and received as much again for food and lodging since he had given up living with the vicar. That made nearly two shillings for every week-day, and on Sunday curates must be able to live on God's Word and a warmed-up dinner. But he must not follow the cravings of his palate or the dictates of fashion, and the industrious hand which mends the worn-out places in the threadbare coat must also know how to set to work deftly and economically among the pots and pans in the kitchen.

You could not lose your way in the curate's salons. Three rooms and a kitchen, that was all. In the "drawing-room," a table of stained pine-wood, cheap chairs, a painted cupboard where the crockery was kept, an old piano out of tune, two little tables of birchwood in the windows, and a large lithograph of Martin Luther. In the pastor's study, an old leather sofa from his parents' house, a birchwood writing table, pine-wood chairs, with homespun coverings, two pipes well-seasoned by smoking, and a sparsely-filled bookcase. Behind this was the bedroom, with little space and large bed-hangings, old furniture and new candlesticks.

But now it was Christmas, and two lamps and eight candles threw their light upon the newly-scrubbed floors. The little wife was not pretty. Her nose bid defiance to the ancient laws of beauty, and it would have been a mistake to suppose that her foot could have slipped into any daintily shaped shoe. Her hands were somewhat too large and her eyes rather too small; but the bloom of health, the charm of youth and womanly sweetness, made of Frau Alm just as lovely a rose of Sharon as any that ever blossomed in the newly set-up tents of the shepherds of ancient story. And now it was Christmas, the little home in order, and the two sat hand in hand casting critical glances on the somewhat simple Christmas-tree, the first in their own home. And the pastor admired the ornaments which hung on the tree, and could not imagine where Frau Emma had got them from. And then he put his arm round his wife and asked her whether she did not feel as he did, when he saw a decorated Christmas-tree; he could not help feeling melancholy at the thought that now it would soon be withered, forgotten, thrown on one side. Was not that a picture of all human joy? Must they not tremble for their own happiness? Who could know what lay before them in the future? She smiled and answered: "Why does the fir-tree wither, Gustav? Because it has been uprooted from its home in the forest. There it bids defiance to storm and frost and grows the stronger the more its branches are shaken in the wind. Here, indoors, in light and heat, it will die. Let us take care that we do not lose our happiness from the foundation on which it now stands; we must never forget that for the poor tree no Christmas candles in the world can take the place of the winds of heaven and the stars of the firmament.

And now the presents were looked at. Trifles which would in any case have been needed for house and wardrobe, but which had now a far greater value than if they had been bought by degrees when necessary. Frau Emma could not imagine where Gustav had got the money from for a new black dress, and Pastor Gustav questioned whether two dozen starched bands at once was not a sinful luxury. Suddenly the kitchen door was opened and the maid announced: "There is a drunken journeyman in the kitchen, and I'm afraid of him."

"We cannot give him a night's lodging, but give him something to eat and drink, and ask him to go to Peter Olsson's afterwards. I expect he will be able to spend the night in the farm-servants' room," said the pastor.

A few minutes later a hoarse, angry voice was heard in the kitchen, threatening, and cursing, and the maid burst into the room, and in a voice thick with sobs, begged the pastor to come out.

By the kitchen table stood a man apparently about thirty years of age. His face looked dreadful—dirty, unshaven, and the stamp of intemperance sharply imprinted on every feature. His clothes matched his face; it was just a type of what is known in Sweden in the country as a "travelling journeyman," although these journeymen have frequently served their apprenticeship nowhere but in the workshops of Bacchus.

As soon as the pastor entered the kitchen, the man was as if transformed—his swollen features became deathly pale, he straightened himself, and without a word opened the door and went out. He was an uncomfortable guest, with whom one could part with pleasure, yet it seemed to the pastor as if his Christmas joy would be clouded if this miserable man left him without a mouthful of food. So he suppressed his disgust and hurried down the road after the beggar.

"My friend, I did not mean to drive you away. I only wanted you to behave politely and properly."

The beggar hastened his steps without answering. He was walking very quickly now, and seemed to have become suddenly quite sober.

"Come and eat a little on Christmas Eve," entreated the pastor.

"Let me alone!" murmured the beggar between his teeth.

"No, don't be bitter, no one has offended you, come!"

"Let me be, Gustav Alm!"

"Great heavens, is not that Ljüng?"

"Yes, quite right," said the beggar now in an insolent tone. "I thought to have escaped the humiliation of being forced to introduce myself to my old fellow-student, but as you insist upon having the pleasure of seeing what a good-for-nothing fellow your former comrade has become, I am at your service."

"I knew that things had gone downhill with you since I left Upsala, but I didn't know that you had come as low as this," said Alm, turning pale.

"Yes, I am, as you see, one of the honourable army of vagabonds. How are you, old friend? I suppose you are a specially favoured servant of the Lord?"

"Do not blaspheme, Ljüng! Come and stay the night at my house."

"Oh, you go in for philanthropy! Well, I don't mind; but, do you know, I would rather take a Christian (Danish coin with King Christian's head) in ready money for some brandy; you ministers are apt to forget it at your meals."

Half by force Alm led his strange guest back to the house and into his own room, begged him to tidy himself up as best he could, and then went out to tell his wife who this vagrant was. Tears filled her eyes, and she sighed:

"Oh, Gustav, what a pity that our Christmas Eve should be spoilt! I suppose he can have his supper in the kitchen?"

The pastor stroked her cheek, which was red with vexation, and said:

"Our happiness is rooted in love—love not only to ourselves, but also to humanity; take care, my child, that it does not get torn up by the roots to wither like the Christmas-tree!"

When Alm went in again to his guest, the latter had made himself a little more human by means of brush, soap, and water, and came to meet him with the jeering question:

"Look, am I respectable enough now to be introduced to the cook of the reverend pastor?"

Alm silently opened the door, led him into the sitting-room, and said simply, without the least affectation:

"Here, dear wife, is an old University friend, Herr Ljüng, who happened to be passing this evening, and will stay the night with us. He will put up with the inconveniences of the old sofa."

"Welcome, Herr Ljüng!" said Frau Alm so cordially that the guest began really to believe that she meant to treat him as an equal. And with every moment that passed the mask of the vagabond fell more and more away from the former student.

He had not spent an evening in a family for a long, long time. He had never cared for this sort of entertainment; but now to come into warm, bright rooms out of the cold and darkness of the road, to be treated for the first time for years not as a vagabond but as a guest, that was very different to tearing himself away from a merry carousal with friends in Upsala to sup with a dry, uninteresting Philistine, and soon he was conversing quite freely with his hostess.

His story?

Ah! You will have heard it a hundred times! A merry lad with a good baritone voice; disinclination for work, lack of a firm will, lively concerts, still more lively evenings afterwards, troubled self-inspection in the morning, pleasant games of cards in the afternoons, debts made, no more credit, rustication; absinthe, punch, brandy, liqueur, common spirits; restaurant, public-house, low tavern, high road—he had run through this gamut and now stood at the beginning of the end.

The supper was brought in, and he enjoyed it even without the brandy.

When the meal was ended, Alm turned to his guest and said quietly:

"My wife and I wish to finish the day with a short prayer, but if this is not congenial to you, I will not press you to stay with us. Your bed is ready." Ljüng murmured something between his teeth that sounded like, "Very kind," and remained.

And the pastor prayed—prayed that Christmas light and Christmas joy might enter into every heart, as He intended who first let the light shine before the shepherds in the fields at Bethlehem. And after the prayer his wife sat down at the old wheezy piano and sang the Christmas hymn.

Ljüng stood half concealed by the fir-tree. It was as if something melted in him, and something else, warm and gentle, sprang up in its place. The ice had melted in mid-winter, and great heavy tear-drops fell upon his ragged waistcoat. At last it was too much for him, and with silent swift strides he approached the door and hurried out into the night.

When the chorale was at an end, the pastor and his wife turned round. They wished to say good-night to their guest, but—he had gone. They waited half-an-hour, a whole hour, but he did not appear again.

He walked quickly along the road, and mingled feelings struggled in his breast. Then he remembered that in the little bottle which he carried in his breast-pocket, there must be still just a drop of brandy. He drew it out hastily. His pulses flew, his heart beat audibly—should he? He conquered. In the next moment the bottle was flung far away over the fields and the wanderer hurried on.

Five Christmases have passed, and the curate has received a living. The Christmas presents at the Alms have become more numerous, for now three children want to have their share of the pleasure, and their joy is great.

The post-bag was brought in.

"Do look—a letter from America!" cried Frau Alm. "You don't know anyone there, do you, Gustav?"

And the pastor drew the lamp a little nearer, adjusted his spectacles, and read:—

"St. Paul, Dec. 13.

"BROTHER,—Thank you for the Christmas Eve! I cannot complain of people.

They gave me advice, warnings, money and occupation, all of which I squandered. You gave me a brotherly handshake, a glimpse into a happy home, and a breath from the wing of the Christmas angel, and—that helped.

"I am now a reclaimed man in a position of independence, even freed of my passions.

"Another time more. My heart is too full now. Warm greetings to your wife from your friend, "AXEL LJ NG."

Gustav Alm begged his wife not to take it amiss if he valued this Christmas gift above all her presents, even the embroidered slippers.

LITERATURE.

ELIZABETH PEASE NICHOL.*

IN THE INQUIRER of Feb. 13, 1897, a brief notice of Mrs. E. P. Nichol appeared. She died on the 3rd of that month. Her Life, in a handsome volume of 313 pp., has just been published by J. M. Dent and Co., as the first of their new "Saintly Lives" series, edited by Dr. Horton.

Lives, saintly in word and deed, truthfully presented, are real exemplars for guidance in the devious paths of life, and the selection in this series is not to be confined to any particular denomination. "No saintly life, in any religion, will be excluded on the plea of heterodoxy. Indeed, one service which the series may render will be to recall persons of different name, and sect, and persuasion, to some of those divine qualities which appear in all noble human lives."

Elizabeth Pease Nichol was a philanthropist in the full meaning of that word, and her life, while it is an eloquent testimony to her worth and her good works, is coincidentally a historical sketch of most of the humanitarian enterprises of the century, for she was born in 1807, and died in 1897.

Miss Stoddart's narrative, lucidly and sympathetically written, carries us along through the successive stages of that long and earnest life. Elizabeth Pease's Quaker ancestry, her heredity and environment, and her up-bringing "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord" are duly set forth. Her ample and happy home in Darlington, where her father was one of the magnate mill owners, is described. Her bright and cheerful girlhood, with her devoted parents and beloved brother, was followed by a womanhood of strenuous work as the right hand and hearty co-labourer of her father, Joseph Pease, who was a distinguished philanthropist of wide sympathies and extended views. The abolition of the Slave Trade, in 1807, was followed by a crusade of more than thirty years, to obtain the abolition of slavery. Clarkson and Wilberforce, and later Fowell Buxton, were the leaders in this campaign. The first Parliament after the Reform Bill of 1832 rendered material aid in spite of the "vested interests," and eventually voted the twenty millions compensation to the slaveholders, and slavery, after the futile apprenticeship system, was totally abolished in 1838. Joseph Pease and his daughter worked, in season and out of season, in that cause.

* "Elizabeth Pease Nichol." By Anna M. Stoddart. The first volume of the "Saintly Lives" series. Edited by Robert F. Horton, M. A. (London: J. M. Dent and Co.; New York: J. P. Dutton and Co.) 1899. Price 4s. 6d. net.

In 1840 the so-called World's Anti-Slavery Convention was held in London. William Lloyd Garrison and most of his friends, who came as delegates from America, declined the honour of membership because their co-workers in the Anti-Slavery cause, and their fellow-delegates, were excluded solely because they were women. Elizabeth Pease sat in the gallery with these rejected members, and from that date she was the devoted friend and loyal ally of the advanced guard of the American Abolitionists. The wrongs of British India, and the iniquities of the "Company's" government, were the great subject of Joseph Pease's life-long thought and work in which his daughter shared with heart and mind and pen. Their British India Advocate recorded these efforts. Lord Brougham, and Daniel O'Connell, and other valuable allies were enlisted in the cause of the toiling, starving natives of India. At length the Company gave way, and by the Act of the President of the Council of India, introduced in 1843, forbade the sale of either the person, or the compulsory labour, of any native, and made penal all offences against natives hitherto unprotected by law. Thus Joseph Pease saw his life work accomplished in the redemption from bondage of ten millions of his fellow-creatures, but he still continued to plead for grants of land to ensure to the natives their status as free men. Next to justice for India Elizabeth Pease took up the cause of justice to the four million slaves in America, and, as already stated, worked heartily in their behalf, in alliance with George Thompson, Garrison, Harriet Martineau and the Americans of her "Martyr Age." Women's anti-slavery committees were established in the principal towns of England and Scotland and Ireland, to give expression to that English opinion so influential in America, and to furnish material aid to the up-hill work on the other side of the Atlantic. Nor were home affairs neglected. The work of the Anti-Corn Law League, with Cobden and Bright at its head, was warmly espoused by father and daughter. In the summer of 1841, at the famous Conference of Ministers of all Denominations of Religion, we find Joseph and Elizabeth Pease aiding and abetting, the latter helping to form the Women's A.C.L. Association, which did such efficient work for the League, culminating in the great Bazaar at Covent Garden Theatre in 1845. During this visit to Manchester Miss Pease, accompanied by one of the leading members of the Council of the League and by a hand-loom weaver, visited the wretched homes of the victims of the Corn Laws. She afterwards wrote a series of rousing letters to the Durham Chronicle, describing the sufferings and multiplied wrongs borne with patience under those iniquitous laws. In Darlington she frequently visited and aided schools for the people established by her step-mother.

In 1846 Joseph Pease passed within the veil. On his death-bed he received the official confirmation of the East India Company's "Act of Emancipation," introduced to the Council in 1843, and only then became the law of the land.

The years succeeding her father's death were occupied by Miss Pease as actively as ever in good works. Friends from America were hospitably entertained at Feethams, the family home at Darlington, and Elizabeth's sanctum there was the headcentre of aggression on all wrongs. Henry C. Wright, the famous American lecturer on Anti-Slavery, Non-resistance, and Temperance, who came to England for his health, was her guest at Darlington for many months, and to promote his recovery she sent him to Gräfenberg for the water-cure. In later years Miss Pease went frequently to Ben Rhydding, then under the care of Dr. McLeod, to recuperate, and often stayed for weeks at a time. There she met Dr. Nichol, the astronomer, her senior by three years. He was a widower, with a son and daughter of college and school ages. Miss Pease had long been an admirer of Dr. Nichol's astronomical works; but they were still more sympathetic on humanitarian subjects. It was a clear case of elective affinities, and they were married in 1853. Then followed seven years of happy married life, hospitalities at the picturesque observatory near Glasgow, for prophets of all kinds, A.C.L. Leaguers, exiled patriots, Mazzini and Kossuth, lecturers, George Thompson and the Americans, Professors of the Universities of Edinburgh and Glasgow, supplemented by gaities for the Balliol man and his sister. A delightful visit to Oxford to meet Jowett and Dicey and Swinburne, and a journey to Ireland, with many excursions to Scotland, varied the scene. The only cross was the failing health of Dr. Nichol, which necessitated many visits to the Hydro. at Rothsay, his devoted wife sustaining him with unfailing love.

In September, 1859, he passed away, and in the following May Mrs. Nichol left her beloved home at the Observatory, and took up her abode at Huntly Lodge, a handsome house, with a large garden on the south side of Edinburgh. This was her home for thirty-seven years. Although Mrs. Nichol had passed the meridian of life when she went to reside in Edinburgh, she so completely identified herself with its interests that she became one of the most distinguished, most useful, and most valued of its citizens. She was a member of the School Board for her district of Merchiston, she did much to promote reforms in the University, and in other educational institutions. She was an active member of the committees for Women's Suffrage, Anti-Slavery, Social Purity, and Liberal Politics, and she contributed liberally to local charities. She was the donor of two beautiful granite fountains to the city, one near her own gate, and one in the Queen's Park in view of Arthur's Seat and the Salisbury Crags.

Mrs. Nichol had many friends in Edinburgh, Dr. John Brown (of "Rab and his Friends"), Mrs. Samuel Brown and her daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Duncan McLaren, Dr. Agnes McLaren, Professor and Mrs. Blackie, Professor and Mrs. Masson and Dr. Jex Blake, Professor and Mrs. Hodgson, Eliza Wigham (a not less distinguished citizen of the Modern Athens), and her good mother, and many others. Huntly Lodge was a centre of hospitality. It was a home to Mr. Garrison and his family when they made brief visits to Europe. Indeed, it was a rendezvous for reformers, who were all regarded as kindred, by its genial hostess. Mrs. Nichol had great comfort and joy in her husband's son and daughter, and their families, whom she adopted as her own. Her nephews and nieces were not less dear to her, and though she lived alone, with her faithful servants, at Huntly Lodge, in spirit she was encircled by family love, and relatives and friends were her frequent guests. Thus gently she went down the slope of life. She suffered few of the infirmities of age, with the one sad exception of the keenest of all, steadily failing sight, which resulted in total blindness in her last years. To one of her active, inquiring mind and habits of reading and writing this was a sore trial, but she bore it cheerfully; she never lost her clear mental vision, and kept up a vital interest in truth and progress to the last. Loved and honoured, she lived her allotted time, in perfect faith, hope, and charity, and departed this life early in 1897. Miss Stoddart's work is very well done. There are five excellent illustrations, including three portraits of E. P. Nichol. R. M.

MONTON CHURCH.

THE beauty of this church has lately been greatly enhanced by two series of figures in stained glass placed in the windows of the clerestory through the kind liberality of two members of the congregation. On each side there are five windows, each containing four lights. The window nearest the chancel on each side is filled by four figures of Angels with instruments of music. Those on the south side are taken to illustrate the verse in the Te Deum, "To Thee all Angels cry aloud," while the figures in the other four windows on the same side illustrate other verses of the same hymn—the Glorious Company of the Apostles, the Goodly Fellowship of the Prophets, the Noble Army of Martyrs, the Holy Church throughout all the World. The choice of figures in each of these groups has been determined primarily by the interpretation put upon the Holy Church, and by the representation of it by figures typical of the four great branches—the Primitive Church, the Roman Catholic Church, the Anglican Church, and Nonconformity. This fourfold classification has been carried through the other three groups; so that of four Martyrs, four Prophets, four Apostles, one in each case belongs to the Primitive Church, one to the Roman Catholic, one to the Anglican, and one to Nonconformity. In the selection of these figures the choice has been somewhat restricted by the desire to avoid duplicating any of the figures already represented in other windows in the church. Subject to these conditions the selection is as follows:—In the Holy Church throughout all the World, the Primitive Church is represented by James, "the Lord's brother," a "pillar," and afterwards head of the Church at Jerusalem; the Roman Catholic Church by Gregory the Great, not only a great ecclesiastic, who has been called the Father of the Mediæval Papacy, but also the instigator of the Augustinian Mission to England; the Anglican Church by Richard Hooker, the able vindicator of the National Church against Puritan objections, on the grounds of his great system of "Ecclesiastical Polity"; Nonconformity by Richard Baxter, an acknowledged leader among the ministers ejected in 1662, from one of whom may fairly be dated the local Nonconformity represented by Monton Church.

As Martyrs, Stephen, the proto-martyr of Christianity, represents the Primitive Church; Sir Thomas More, the Roman Catholic; Bishop Latimer, the Anglican; and John Bunyan (though rather a "confessor" in days when the actual death-penalty for heresy was happily past) Nonconformity.

As Prophets (in the true sense of spokesmen for God to their generation) the Primitive Church is represented by John the Baptist, whose trumpet call drew Jesus himself to his baptism, and whose imprisonment sent him forth to preach the gospel of the Kingdom with a deeper tenderer note than the Baptist's own; the Roman Catholic by Savonarola, no less a prophet because disowned and martyred by his own Church; the Anglican by John Wesley, who also was without honour in the Church of his birth; and Nonconformity by John Milton.

As Apostles (in the original meaning of those "sent"—that is, missionaries) the Primitive Church is represented by Andrew, the brother of Peter (who appears in one of the chancel windows), and with him constituting the first pair of disciples called by Jesus to leave their nets and follow him and become "fishers of men"; the Roman Catholic by St. Francis Xavier, the great Jesuit missionary to the Far East; the Anglican by Henry Martyn, chaplain under the East India Company, and translator of the Bible into Oriental tongues; Nonconformity by William Carey, founder of the Baptist Missionary Society, and himself missionary in India.

The figures on the north side have been selected on a somewhat similar plan. The group of angels in the window nearest the chancel (facing the similar group on the south side) has been taken to illustrate the verse in the Benedicite "O ye Angels of the Lord, bless ye the Lord: praise Him and magnify Him for ever"; and those verses in the same canticle which are of specially human interest—the Children of Men, the Servants of the Lord, the Spirits and Souls of the Righteous, the Holy and Humble Men of Heart—have been selected for illustration in the other windows. Upon these phrases, describing rather poetical groups than scientific classes, it has been necessary to put somewhat arbitrary interpretations; and the divisions being much less ecclesiastical than those of the Te Deum, a much wider range of selection of great men and great influences has been adopted than that observed on the south side; but a similar arrangement has been followed. As on the south side the Church is represented by four great branches, so on the north side civilisation is represented by four great stages, the Greek, the Roman, the Mediæval (or perhaps rather Renaissance), and the Modern. Each of these supplies a representative in each of the four groups of lights.

The Children of Men are represented by a series of Poets, as being truly the children of their own time and race, giving expression to its essential spirit, and by giving noble utterance to their aspirations tending to fix and establish the national character. The selection almost determines itself: for Greece, Homer; for Rome, Virgil; for the Middle Age, Dante; for the Modern, Shakespeare.

The Servants of the Lord are represented by those who seem entitled to stand for the special services which in the providence of God their nation or their age has contributed to human civilisation. Of many-sided Greece it has been specially selected in the person of the great sculptor Phidias. Rome's great function was to bring the civilised world into some sort of unity and to lay broad and deep the foundations of order, government, and law, which after the storms of the Dark Ages should be able to bear the superstructure of a new civilisation. To represent this, one of the greatest and noblest of the Roman Emperors has been chosen, Trajan, whom Dante has represented as, at the prayer of Pope Gregory the Great, translated to Paradise. The Renaissance, the rebirth of the human mind after the Middle Ages, finds its representative in Erasmus, one of its greatest scholars, who, at home alike in sacred and in secular learning, was free both from the license of the purely classical revival and from the excesses of the Protestant Reformation. The new age of modern science is fitly symbolised both in his services and in his character by our own Sir Isaac Newton.

The Spirits and Souls of the Righteous have been taken to correspond in some measure, but with a wider range, with the Martyrs on the south side, as witnesses to a higher righteousness than that of their people and their time, and sealing their testimony by their suffering if not by their death. In Greece Socrates has undoubtedly the first right to such a place. In Rome Regulus has been chosen not only as the hero of a very noble legend, which in part at least may be historical, but also because he is commemorated for his lofty faithfulness in a well-known ode of Horace, who laments the decline of the old Roman virtue. In the Renaissance Michael Angelo stands not only as a great artist but also a true patriot, with high aims bitterly disappointed, grieved and grieving like his own great figure of Jeremiah in the Sistine Chapel. In the modern time John Hampden stands as a noble representative of enlightened patriotism—faithful unto death.

Finally, the Holy and Humble Men of Heart have been taken to represent the devotional side of life; and for this the poetical and ideal Plato has been chosen to stand in Greece; the Stoic Emperor, Marcus Aurelius, in Rome; Thomas à Kempis, the reputed author of "The Imitation of Christ," in the Middle Age; and George Herbert in the Modern.

The glass work has been carried out most satisfactorily by Messrs. Heaton, Butler and Bayne, of London, the figures having been drawn by their own artist with great taste and skill and after careful research.

For this reason so many fall from God, who have attained to Him, that they cling to Him with their weakness, and not with their strength.—George Meredith.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c., received from the following:—A. B.; K. H.; S. H. M.; W. B. O.; A. T. S.; G. F. S.; J. S.; W. S. Several items in the "News from the Churches" will seem belated, not having been received in time for last week.

OBITUARY.

MRS. HASLAM, OF BOLTON.

ON Thursday, the 7th inst., at her residence, Ravenswood, Heaton, Bolton, Mrs. Haslam passed tranquilly away at the ripe age of 83. For a few weeks past she had been in failing health, and the change came most peacefully during sleep at an early hour in the morning, exactly a year after the death of her old friend, Mrs. Heywood. It was a fitting close to a gentle and quiet life.

Mrs. Haslam was the eldest daughter of the late Mr. Joshua Crook, of White Bank, an active member of the old Moorlane Chapel, the congregation of which was ultimately merged again in that of Bank-street, from which it sprang, and he and his family were ardent and consistent supporters of the Unitarian cause. Mr. Joseph Crook, formerly M.P. for the borough, was the eldest son.

In 1842 Miss Crook, as she then was, married Mr. John Haslam, of the present firm of John Haslam and Co., Ltd, cotton spinners and manufacturers. He died in 1867. A large family was the issue of this marriage, most of whom are still closely connected with Bank-street Chapel. Three children were lost in early life, and the eldest daughter, Ellen, married to Mr. Robert M. Knowles, died in 1872. The daughters who survive are Mrs. J. W. Scott (Bolton), Mrs. Cooke-Taylor (Glasgow), Mrs. W. E. Napier (Cley, Norfolk), and Mrs. R. B. Walkington (Belfast). The sons are William Haslam (Bolton), Joseph C. Haslam, J.P. (London), J. Percy Haslam, J.P. (Bolton), R. Edgar Haslam (Bournemouth), and Lewis Haslam, J.P. (London).

Mrs. Haslam herself was of a genial and sympathetic nature, and in addition to the love of children and grandchildren with which she was surrounded, she has been recognised as the head of a large family connection and regarded with affectionate reverence by each and all. Her influence has been very quiet, but very real, and few families have been so well kept together, the mother's home being always the centre of union. She has lived a long term of years and has now passed to other fields of usefulness and love.

The funeral took place on Monday week at the Tonge Cemetery, Bolton, in the presence of members of the family, including grandchildren and many other relations, while several members of the Bank-street congregation attended as a mark of respect and esteem. The Rev. C. J. Street, M.A., LL.B., conducted the service and gave an appropriate address in the cemetery chapel.

WILLIAM THOMAS HOLLAND.

ONE who bore a name long held in honour among our churches, and honoured for his own sake, has passed away in Alderman W. T. Holland, J.P., of Bridgwater, who died on Monday week, at his residence, "The Lions," Riverside, at the age of sixty-five. A son of the Rev. Thomas Holland, of Loughborough, and nephew of the Rev. John Gooch Robberds, he spent some time as a young man in business in Canada, and then, through the settlement of his brother, the Rev. Thomas Holland, the younger, as minister at Bridgwater, came to that town, and after an important mission to Jamaica on behalf of Messrs. Browne and Co., brick and tile manufacturers, he was taken into partnership, and eventually became head of the firm, retiring in 1892. In November, 1878, Mr. Holland was elected a member of the Town Council and was immediately chosen mayor, an office which he held three times, at the close of his second term of office being elected an alderman.

In many public and private capacities Mr. Holland served the town of his adoption faithfully and well. He was a constant friend and benefactor of the Bridgwater Infirmary, and for many years acted as chairman of the Committee of Management, also filling the presidential chair for one year. He was one of the governors of Dr. Morgan's School, and a trustee of Brent's charity.

Mr. Holland remained to the end of his life a staunch supporter of Christ Church Chapel, and was secretary of the congregation.

The funeral was on Thursday week at Wembdon Cemetery, the service being conducted by the Rev. J. Edwin Odgers, a former minister, and the Rev. T. B. Broadrick, present minister of Christ Church Chapel. The Rev. Jeffrey Worthington, of Taunton, was also present. In the course of a brief address Mr. Odgers spoke of Mr. Holland as a friend always staunch and true, with a single word and a single heart, and as a public man, held in high esteem, who had faithfully served his day and generation.

THE LATE SIR HENRY TATE, BART.—At a meeting of the Committee of Manchester College, Oxford, held on Monday at Manchester, the Rev. S. A. Steinthal in the chair, the following resolution was passed:—

"That this Committee desires to record its profound sense of the great loss sustained by the College in the death of the late Sir Henry Tate, Bart., Vice-President of the College, and for long years, as a Trustee, one of its most earnest supporters, giving to it with munificent generosity the beautiful Tate Library, and the endowment fund of the Tate Lectureship in the Theory, Art and Practice of conducting Divine Service, and in Pastoral Work, in addition to his large annual subscriptions.

"That the Committee pay their tribute not alone to his constant fidelity to the cause of truth, liberty, and religion, as an ardent advocate of the Free Church life into which he was born, and which ever commanded his willing gifts, but also to his wise and beneficent employment of his large means in the promotion of the intellectual and artistic culture of the people.

"That they desire to express their respectful sympathy with Lady Tate and the family in their sorrow."

EPP'S COCOA. The most nutritious.
EPP'S COCOA. Grateful and comforting.
EPP'S COCOA. For breakfast and supper.
EPP'S COCOA. With natural flavour only.
EPP'S COCOA. From the finest brands.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

A MERRY CHRISTMAS to all the children in our happy homes! And may they be glad most of all in caring for others and helping to make it a beautiful and happy time for those who have not much brightness in their lives.

The war in South Africa brings sorrow to very many people both there and here. It ought to make us love more than ever the things that make for peace, and be brave and patient to hold to them.

I have received a great many messages in answer to my question of last week, and shall have more to say about it next week. No one need be afraid now that the Children's Column is going to be given up.

EDITOR.

A CHRISTMAS STORY.

SURELY there should be a Christmas story in the Children's Column, and I am going to tell you an American one which I read long ago. It is out of print, and I do not know who told it first. Probably you have never seen it, and this is good for my purpose; for you cannot cry out, "That's wrong," if I do not tell it quite in the same way.

Everyone was busy at Farmer May's, for next day would be Christmas Day. Snow had been falling all night, and a white world lay all round the farmhouse. The wood pile was covered; even the fence round the garden was hidden in the snow. It was, oh! so cold and bleak out of doors; but what a cheerful sight there was to be seen within! A huge fire was blazing in the great kitchen, and a patch of sunshine lay on the large square table which was piled with rosy apples and golden pumpkins, while three little rosy-cheeked children were dancing about the room in great glee, watching their mother making ready for the next day's feast.

Suddenly, Farmer May's loud voice was to be heard outside by the barn door calling, "Joseph! you lazy rascal, come and unharness the horse." Joseph was the "bound boy" who did the rough work about the farm. It was his habit to go sullenly about his business all day. He never seemed to care for any one, and sad to tell, too, no one ever seemed to care about him. Yet deep down in his heart, Joseph Craig was sad and lonely; and, as he came out of the barn, at the farmer's summons, and began, with numb fingers, to loosen the harness that morning, he said within himself: "Work! work! work! and never a kind word, and this is Christmas time. Why didn't God make a beautiful time for me too? It's Joseph here, there, and everywhere, and no one cares a bit for me." And there was not a member of the family who thought that Joseph had a spark of feeling in him.

That night, when the little ones were safe in bed, Farmer May threw a fresh pine knot into the wide-mouthed chimney-place, and then began the work of filling with presents the four red woollen stockings that were hanging up near the fire, about which the children were busily dreaming.

What a joyful stir there was in that kitchen next morning! How the little people skipped about and laughed, when they found the treasures that Father Christmas had hidden in their stockings. There was a wax doll for one, and a blue-wheeled cart for another. For Harry, the farmer's only son, there was a new pair of skates; and already he was strapping them on and crying out, "Hurrah! everybody, look out of the windows; I'm off to the pond for a skate." They were all so fond and proud of Harry, and they hurried to the door and window to watch.

Harry skated out into the middle of the pond, and there he found water lying on the ice. Suddenly there was a crash, the ice had given way, and with a loud cry the boy disappeared from sight. Then there was a rush from the house to the pond, and many voices crying out, "He's under the water. Father! father! Harry's going under the ice."

All the colour had gone from the strong farmer's face, and he trembled in every limb. "My boy!" he cried, throwing up his hands wildly, "God help me; and I can't swim."

"But I can," shouted a boy's voice, "I can swim, and I'll save him" and dashing past the weeping mother, Joseph plunged into the pond, breaking the ice away near the spot where Harry had gone down. Breathlessly they watched him as he dived and rose again, his face gashed and bleeding. He made another dive, and then, oh! joyful sight, he came back pushing his way to the edge of the pond, one arm holding up poor Harry.

"Thank God!" cried the happy father, as he carried his boy into the house. Before long the little family was gathered round Harry, who was able to sit up and talk to them.

And where was Joseph? Squeezing the wet out of his clothes and rubbing the cuts upon his hands from which the blood was still flowing.

"Joseph!" He listened. It was Farmer May's voice, but so soft and tender. The "bound boy" shook like a leaf, and to his wonder found himself, as if by magic, seated by Harry with Harry's head resting on him, while tears were chasing each other down the grateful boy's cheek.

"Joseph! if there is anything you could wish for now, just name it," said the farmer huskily. "You have saved us many a year of sorrow and given us cause to remember this Christmas before all others. Speak out, my boy."

How could he speak and be so happy? He tried hard to gulp down the sobs that kept rising in his throat—they were sobs of joy. "Only give me a kind word, sir, now and then; I haven't any mother like the rest."

How was it now with Farmer May? He was conscious of a great lack in his otherwise kindly heart, and it quite broke him down—that appeal to his better nature. He leaned on Mother May's shoulder and sobbed aloud.

Does this seem a sad Christmas story, children? Listen to its happy ending. They were all soon bright and smiling again, everyone of them—Joseph the happiest of all. The beautiful time he longed for had come at last. There was a great Christmas dinner. Joseph was seated next to Mother May, and you must know that she could not heap his plate high enough with sweetmeats, and you cannot guess what kind words and loving looks he had from everybody, or how fully he repaid them all. From that time no one ever dreamed that Joseph Craig had "no feeling in him." Farmer May gave Joseph his freedom and sent him to school with Harry, and had good reason to be proud of him, for there was never a better nor more studious boy. There has been many a happy Christmas since then at the farm, and each year they all look back to that Christmas when Joseph saved Harry's life, and thank God for the happiness it brought them.

Joseph Craig did a great and noble deed when he saved Harry May from drowning. No wonder, you will think, that all this love and happiness came out of it. But do you know, children, how much of the love and happiness in this world is brought about by LITTLE kind deeds? Not long ago I saw some verses, each of which ended with the words, "Do something for somebody, quick!" and I think that is a very good sentence, not only for Christmas time, but to carry with us in our memories all the year round. Don't you know, as this poem said, whenever you feel dull, or perhaps a little cross, and the world seems gloomy, if you go at once and do some kind deed for someone, however small it may be, out comes the sun in your mind and the fog melts away and the grumbling selfishness is gone. What a happy world we could make if we kept this saying in our thoughts and let it act upon our lives—Do something for somebody, quick!

FRANCES E. COOKE.

CHRISTMAS, 1899.

HIGH o'er the earth is peace, eternal peace,

Where breathing winds nor rushing tempests come:

And far beneath the waves that never cease,

In ocean depths the din of strife is dumb!

So, while the hosts of war stand face to face,

And hurtling shot and shell deal death around,

We turn where Peace hath yet her dwelling-place,

Put off our shoes, and own it holy ground!

Come to the Manger-cradle, one and all,
While Christmas anthems tell the tale of old!

Hark, how the Angel-greetings sweetly fall

On shepherds, keeping watch beside the fold!

They tell of days to come, when out of strife

Shall grow the knowledge of the Perfect Good:

When, led by visions of the heavenly life,

Earth's hosts shall dwell in helpful

brotherhood.
They tell of heights above all earthly care;

Of depths beneath all sorrow, sin, and death:

And as their song falls on our midnight

air,
We listen to the strain with bated breath!

Oh, blessed angels! Hail the happy morn!

Sing! Sing your joyous song to all

below!
The Christ of God, the Prince of Peace is born,

To stay our strifes, and heal us of our woe!

H. W. HAWKES.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any News-agent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are:—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER ...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR ...	3	4
PER YEAR ...	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE ...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE ...	2	10	0
PER COLUMN ...	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN ...	0	3	8
BACK PAGE ...	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, DECEMBER 23, 1899.

EMBITTERED JOY.

We enter this year upon the festival of Christmas bearing a heavy burden of national anxiety and sorrow. Peace and good-will belong essentially to the spirit of the time. These are the days of home-coming, of families re-united, of friendship knit in closer bonds; and if there are homes shadowed by fresh grief and places for the first time empty by the hearth, it is yet a season of deep and tender memories, thankfully recalling the happiness of other days, and with silent and uplifted heart, learning the secret of a new fellowship in undying love with the Unseen. And beyond the circle of the home it is the season of a new friendliness, a more ungrudging charity, with open countenance and generous hand, with new heartfelt resolve to make the coming year a better witness to the love and faith of those who have rejoiced in the Christmas festival and have confessed themselves followers of the CHRIST.

Across the peacefulness and rejoicing of this time there are always harsher sounds of discord breaking, not unheeded by the faithful heart, bringing to mind dire needs of fellow-men, with murmurs inarticulate or in open scorn from those who, in the midst of a Christian country with over-flowing wealth and enlightenment, have no chance of a decent life, and can have no knowledge of what is meant by home and the sacred gladness of the season—discordant voices that awaken to the sterner aspects of duty in a world not yet ordered according to the lineaments of the Kingdom of God, nor brought into subjection to the pure spirit of brotherly love.

But over and above this constant reproach upon our Christian faith and discipleship there is this year a new and special burden laid. We think of the gladness of the home-comings and the kiss of peace, we hear once more in angel voices the glorious song of old—children take up the strain and hardening hearts are touched to a new tenderness; and then above it all we hear the fierce shouts of war, brother embattled against brother, cunning and deadly passion seeking only to destroy; we see the fields of carnage, the lifeless forms, mangled or shattered, and the agony of the wounded. And then in this country and in South Africa among the people whom we can hate as enemies only if we give the lie to Christianity, there are the silent homes, filled with mourning, and in many more, hearts torn between hope and despair. And to all this comes the bitter thought that the war need not have been, that it is the miserable outcome of evil passions which the wisdom and patience of a great nation ought to have known how to hold in check. This is not the time for final judgment, and with sorrow and humiliation we must bear the burden, and see the conflict carried to its bitter and inevitable end.

How, then, can we rejoice in this Christmas time—those of us, at least, who cannot be persuaded that it is a noble and heroic struggle in which Great Britain is engaged, against the forces of tyranny and wrong, and that no stain of blood-guiltiness rests upon this country? We can only rejoice, if we are willing to accept our share of the humiliation and sorrow which belong to such a war, if we are set with a new strength of determination to work for nobler ideals, ready to make sacrifices for our faith, and so get down to the deeper springs, at which alone the Divine life can be nourished. If we are purged of all false ambition, and pride, and enmity, and find our strength and courage only in righteousness and pure, unselfish love, then we may be again at peace and in harmony with the spirit of CHRIST, and through faith in the ultimate triumph of the right may dare to give ourselves to the joy of this great festival. Then we need not stint our admiration for whatever traits of nobleness this dire conflict has revealed, and still less our compassion and generous help for those whose need is so great.

But from the lesson of this appeal to generous sympathies let us learn a new quickness of compassion, insight, and wise helpfulness towards those who are the constant sufferers in our midst, for there are more slain every year in this land by social wrongs which might be remedied than are at all likely to fall upon the battle-fields of South Africa. Our joy, if we may dare to claim it, as followers of CHRIST, must be rooted in self-forgetfulness and the giving that springs from love. Then, even with the sorrow in our hearts, we may be glad, and share the children's merriment, and let the blessed word of peace and heavenly rejoicing be heard in our homes and in the house of prayer.

CHRISTMAS THOUGHTS.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE.—“YE SHALL FIND A BABE.”

WITH war among Christian nations, and strife among Christian sects, the sceptical Greek comes again to the disciples of the Prince of Peace with his question, “Sir, we would see Jesus.” There are three great answers:—

The Angel answered: “Ye shall find a babe.”

His parents answered: “We will find our boy.”

Pilate answered: “Behold, the man!”

The three results of the three visions are not without significance. “Away with this man,” “Crucify him, crucify him,” was the answer to Pilate; and there was strife and bitterness and hatred, and they that beheld these things beheld that the man was crucified.

“Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us?” is the sorrowful answer of every ill-used sectarian who discovers that the growing power of the boy Jesus is no longer obedient to the narrow tenets of a particular sect.

But when the Angel said: “Ye shall find a babe,” suddenly there was with the Angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God and saying, “Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace.”

“A little child shall lead them,” said Isaiah; and Jesus, when his disciples disputed who among them should be greatest, set a little child in their midst. So Christmas comes to the warring nations and contending Churches to set once more the little child in their midst.

A babe, a boy, or a man? How shall we see the Prince of Peace this Christmas-tide?

It is not Good Friday that we should harken unto Pilate with first “Behold, the man!” and then “Away with him.”

Neither is it Trinity Sunday, that we should go up to the great Temple where all the sects are gathering to dispute, seeking to find our own “boy Jesus,” and to take him away in our own caravan, rebuking his larger interests by saying, “Why hast thou thus dealt with us?”

But it is Christmas, when all the shepherds acknowledge their darkness, when even the wisest of men have their backs to the East, and cast their own shadow on all that they journey so far to see: it is the winter time of war; and a dark time for the Gospel, and the shepherds are watching their flocks by night, with the sound of the wolves among the Churches and among the nations, yet looking even at Christmas-time, to see the Prince of Peace. It is not a man, not even a boy, only a babe that they will see. For this is the Angel's message and the single sign that is given to the shepherds at Christmas, “Ye shall find a babe.”

Peace in its manhood has not come yet, and those who falsely imagine that it has have seen their false imagination crucified. It was not the Angel's view, but only the Roman judge's that Peace had grown to manhood in Pilate's time. Peace in its boyhood, peace for us, peace for our own sect, peace for our own doctrines, peace obedient to our way of thinking, coming in our time and upon our methods alone, shall be sought for in our own company and among our own kinsfolk and acquaintance alone and shall not be found there.

But Peace as a babe, the earliest infancy of peace, the first inarticulate breathings of peace, a peace that has to grow, that only just is born, that still is wrapped in swaddling clothes, and that—for lack of room for it in the inn—is laid beside the beasts of toil to be sustained and fed by toil, laid in a manger—this is the Peace, the only Peace, that God's Holy Angel can tell the shepherds to go and look upon to-day, saying:

"Be not afraid: Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. . . . And this is the sign unto you: Ye shall find a babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, and lying in a manger."

Glory to God in the highest,
And on earth peace.

WILFRED HARRIS.

CHRISTMAS IN SONG.

I was reading again the haunting lines of Longfellow that sing of the Christmas bells, and thinking how sadly and truly they fit the hour.

I heard the bells on Christmas Day
Their old familiar carols play,
And wild and sweet
The words repeat
Of peace on earth, good-will to men!

And thought how, as the day had come,
The belfries of all Christendom
Had rolled along
The unbroken song
Of peace on earth, good-will to men!

Then from each black accursed mouth
The cannon thundered in the South,
And with the sound
The carols drowned
Of peace on earth, good-will to men!

Then pealed the bells more loud and deep,
"God is not dead, nor doth He sleep!"
The Wrong shall fail,
The Right prevail,
With peace on earth, good-will to men!

The splendid optimism of the poem's last verse turned my thought to the two prevailing notes of Christmas poetry. Taking down a few books from the shelves, I turned to them to refresh my memory with their lines, and it seemed that perhaps others too might be interested in the same pleasant pastime. Turning to the best known of the songs of the Nativity, one finds them naturally falling into two classes—the fanciful, and the moral. At first it would seem as if the fanciful, those quaint conceits that hover round the Christ-child's crib, must surely be of an earlier age than the definitely moral and inspirational. It seems more natural that such songs should grow out of an age of more simple faith, when criticism of Gospel narratives was hardly dreamed of, and imagination had full free play. And in the main this is true: it was apparently easier for the seventeenth century to revel in pretty plays of the carol than it is for the nineteenth: and yet Blake, Keble, and Christina Rossetti, are no whit behind George Wither, and Herbert, and Luther. Every age, it seems, brings those who can delight in picturing that Bethlehem scene for itself alone, or for the curious little whimsical fancies it starts: they are pleased as very children to stay by that manger-bed and toy with the world's child. George Wither finds a lullaby in the story:

A little infant once was he;
And strength in weakness then was laid
Upon his tender mother's knee,
That power to thee might be conveyed.
Sweet baby, then, forbear to weep;
Be still, my babe; sweet baby, sleep.

Within a manger lodged thy Lord,
Where oxen lay, and asses fed.
Warm rooms we do to thee afford,
An easy cradle or a bed.
Sweet baby, then, forbear to weep;
Be still, my babe; sweet baby, sleep.

Very near the spirit of this is William Blake's pretty Cradle Song, with its lines (of which I cannot resist the temptation to copy Stopford Brooke in the change of one word)—

Sweet babe, in thy face
Holy image I can trace;
Sweet babe, once like thee
Jesus lay and wept for me:
Wept for me, for thee, for all,
When he was an infant small.
Thou his image ever see,
Heavenly face that smiles on thee!

Infant smiles are his own smiles:
Heaven and earth to peace beguiles.

George Herbert plays upon the shepherds' song as they enter the stable:

My soul's a shepherd too; a flock it feeds
Of thoughts, and words, and deeds:
The pasture is thy word: the streams thy grace
Enriching all the place.
Shepherd and flock shall sing, and all my powers
Out-sing the daylight hours.

And then, as in Milton's Ode and elsewhere, we meet that fancy of the wintry sun of Christmastide, and the thought of a more lasting light that will outshine it.

Then we will chide the sunne for letting night

Take up his place of right:
I will go searching till I find a sunne
Shall stay, till we have done;
A wondrous shiner, that shall shine as gladly,
As frost-nipt sunnes look sadly.

Keble, in one lovely verse of his Christmas Day hymn, has a thought of the shepherds that reminds one of that picture of Botticelli's, in the National Gallery, in which angels and shepherds (heaven and earth) embrace in the presence of the Holy Child.

The pastoral spirits first Approach thee, Babe divine,
For they in lowly thoughts are nursed,
Meet for Thy lowly shrine:
Sooner than they should miss where Thou dost dwell,
Angels from heaven will stoop to guide them to Thy cell.

Sweetly human is Christina Rossetti in her song; Herbert, himself, could have sung no better:—

A Baby is a harmless thing
And wins our hearts with one accord,
And Flower of Babies was their King,
Jesus Christ, our Lord.

and there is an almost child-like joyousness and faith in her lyric, that opens—

Christmas hath a darkness
Brighter than the blazing noon,
Christmas hath a chillness
Warmer than the heat of June,
Christmas hath a beauty
Lovelier than the world can show;
For Christmas bringeth Jesus,
Brought for us so low.

But of all these Christmas poems of pure fancy, perhaps the most touching is that one Luther wrote in 1540 for his little son Hans, that has in it such verses as these:—

Were earth a thousand times as fair
Beset with gold and jewels rare,
She yet were far too poor to be
A narrow cradle, Lord, for Thee.
For velvet soft and silken stuff
Thou hast but hay and straw so rough,
Whereon Thou King, so rich and great,
As 'twere Thy heaven, art throned in state.

Ah! Dearest Jesus, Holy Child,
Make Thee a bed, soft, undefiled,
Within my heart, that it may be
A quiet chamber kept for Thee.

My heart for very joy doth leap,
My lips no more can silence keep;
I, too, must sing with joyful tongue
That sweetest ancient cradle song—

Glory to God in highest heaven,
Who unto man His Son hath given!
While angels sing with holy mirth
A glad New Year to all the earth.

The closing verses of Luther's Carol are of that other order of Christmas poetry, that seeks a moral significance in the Nativity story, that looks for inspiration and hopefulness from it. With the heavenly Child is born a new joy into the world. It is the Messianic prophecy that a far larger number of poets dwell on: and it is here that Christian hymnody finds its chief gains for Christmas singing. The sense of awakened trust and happy renewal of the upward life is quickened by the thought of the birth of Christ. Thence come such hymns as Dean Stanley's,

The Lord is come! On Syrian soil
The child of poverty and toil;

that ever-popular,

It came upon the midnight clear
That glorious song of old, and that hymn, without which, to many hearts, the Christmas Day's service would seem to be wanting in something beautiful—

Hark, the herald angels sing
Glory to the new-born King.

All such songs as these, full of brightness, hopefulness, and a sense of new life, enter more easily into the hymn-life of the Church. The quainter thoughts and pretty fancies are for quiet reading—as, indeed, is that immortal Ode of Milton's, for all the beauty of many of its lines, and the inspiration of its thoughts. Of which, just one to send us on our way:

Ring out, ye crystal spheres,
Once bless our human ears,
If ye have power to touch our senses so;
And yet your silver chime
Move in melodious time,
And let the bass of heaven's deep organ blow;

For if such holy song
Enwrap our fancy long
Time will run back and fetch the age of gold.

EDGAR DAPLYN.

A VISIT TO THE CRADLE OF CHRISTIAN ART.

ACCORDING to the author of "The Gospel of the Infancy" Jesus was born in a cave. That author, I believe, is not much to be relied on for historical accuracy; but if he had intended to indicate the birthplace of Christ in Art, he would not have erred. He who would see that infant, and thus, in a sense, get back to Jesus—he who, like the wise men and shepherds, would bow before that shrine, must descend into a cave

And it may be, as, with flickering taper, he treads the dim corridors of the catacombs, the saying that is written in "The Gospel of the Infancy" will be brought to pass in a spiritual sense: "And behold it was all filled with lights greater than the light of lamps and candles, and greater than the light of the sun itself."

On a dull grey morning I passed through the gate of the city on my way to the catacomb of St. Calixtus. "Domine quo vadis" inscribed on a church recalled the tender legend of how Peter met his Lord there in the grey morning light. How full of memories this narrow Appian way! Memories in which legend blends with history even as the mist blends with the landscape.

And now a gate is reached, and by it a priest and an old man. The ancient one guided me through broken garden ground to a little building. Arrived at this, he rang and called, and presently an aged monk descended, and accepting an offering, gave me a taper. He himself held a kind of torch, bound round by a taper of prodigious length. He advanced to a flight of steps, and then he left me. "So the sweet father goes away and here abandons me, and I remain in suspense; and yes and no contend within my head." Presently he returns. I think he had forgotten the matches, for, on appearing again, he lighted my taper and his own, and down we went into that dim cave where Christ in Art was born.

Here, painted on the plaster, I beheld the face of the Master, grave and solemn, with deep eyes; but it was not of earliest date, and savoured more of Byzantium than of Galilee. Above it was St. Cecilia, not the modern statue by Maderna which is also here, but an ancient painting. We entered the Cubiculo dei Sacramenti, where is much of interest. Here men partake of the holy supper, and here a child is being baptised.

And in the centre of the vaulted ceiling is the Good Shepherd. Not once or twice, but many times he is thus to be seen: as Orpheus with the lyre in the Cubiculo dell' O'feo; again, cut asunder to make room for a grave; and twice carved on a stone sarcophagus. Ever the same mild youth, Le bon Pasteur.

Thou silent form! dost tease us out of thought,

As doth eternity: cold Pastoral!"

So Christ was born in Art, the crude tame art of copyists, which even such a subject could inspire with no miraculous originality. "For he grew up before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground: he hath no form nor comeliness; and when we see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him." A poor weak thing, and yet how strong and beautiful the love which placed it there!

To eyes anointed with the salve of love that crude painting was a bit of paradise, and it made the dim catacomb, with its sacred dead, a brighter place than the great city in the glare of noon with all the pomp of the world gathered there. Those who left their dead on the narrow shelves, left them with the assured conviction that they were in the care of the Good Shepherd. He would gather the lambs in his arms.

In passing I noticed a grave made for a very little child. When my taper had burned low, and we had retraced our steps, and above, in the light of day again, I had bade my kind guide farewell, I could not forget that little grave. And thus my thought took shape:—

A shelf for baby to lie on,

Here they laid him down,

Scratched no emblem on the plaster—

Dove, nor palm, nor crown.

Crown enough the golden ringlets

O'er the pale cold brow.

So they left him gently sleeping:

Dust and ashes now.

"Dust to dust"—is that the verdict?

Soul to soul—as true.

Baby woke in the morning early,

Woke 'mid the flowers and dew.

CLEMENT E. PIKE.

AMONG THE VERY POOR.

IN the article on "Christmas among the Birmingham Poor," contributed by Mr. W. J. Clarke, of the Hurst-street Domestic Mission, to the Christmas number of the Birmingham Weekly Post, there was a series of pictures gathered from the faithful missionary's experience of last year, and showing how at this season some gleams of brightness will come even into the poorest homes. The first picture was of an old Indian Mutiny veteran, who ended up his account of the Christmas dinner he and his wife managed to get with the words: "Though we might have had a better Christmas, we might easily have had a worse, and we are too thankful for what we did get to begin grumbling over what we didn't." Mr. Clarke tells next of two sisters, living in one of the poorest and most troublesome quarters of the city. And we quote the rest of the article:—Both have long since passed the allotted three score years and ten. One is very infirm, the other absolutely helpless with painful and lingering disease. Poverty has held them in its cruel and merciless grip for years; but the two things they have most dreaded—the possibility of being separated, or the still greater horror of being driven into the workhouse—they have so far been able to escape. They talk of the comfort and happiness of the home of their early years. "Yes," says one, "and our father was one of the best and kindest fathers that ever lived, and, thank God, he didn't see us come to this." The other tells us of a Christmas hymn, part of which she sang as a solo in the chapel choir nearly sixty years ago, one verse of which she repeats with the declaration that neither words nor music have ever since faded from her memory. Strange that a past such as this should come to be remembered, that associations such as these should have to be recalled, amid daily surroundings which remind one of Thomas Hood's description:—

Work, work, work, my labour never flags,

And what are its wages?

A bed of straw, a crust of bread, and rags.

That shattered roof—a thin naked floor;

A table, a broken chair,

And a wall so blank my shadow I thank

For sometimes falling there.

For the elder of the two has to work as long as the eyes, dimmed, and the fingers, cramped with age, will let her, at carding hooks and eyes!—one of the most drearily monotonous and cruelly rewarded occupations which honesty must perforce undertake to ward off absolute starvation. But even here Christmas means a dash of red, a faint glimpse of blue in the cloud-wrapped sky of their existence. For a lady sent them some meat and potatoes, from a neighbouring church they got a ticket for groceries, bread, and coal, and a little money from my own relief fund; so that for them there was at least one day in the year when the gloom was partially brightened, and the wretchedness less intense!

Another sad case is that of an old man now in his 89th year. At one time he followed the occupation of a theatrical scene-painter. And even now his hand has not quite lost its cunning—for he paints pictures which he himself describes as "after David Cox," for some of which he occasionally finds purchasers, which, together with a trifling allowance from the parish, and a weekly payment from the Hurst Street Mission, constitutes his sole means of livelihood. Full of reminiscences of the days when fortune smiled upon him, he speaks of the time when he was for many months working as a stone-mason at Lincoln Cathedral as among the happiest of his earthly days. "And, though you would hardly think it, sir, seeing as how it was fifty-seven years ago, I sometimes dream that I am there again, and when I wake I fancy I can hear the tones of the organ and the voices of the choristers once more sounding in my ears." He can tell of many Christmas days he has spent under strangely altered circumstances in many parts of the world, but gratefully declares that he can't remember one when he was without a bit of something extra. And he has faith that this will continue to be the case with the few Christmas days which are all he can possibly live to see, although want and penury have accompanied his daily footsteps for years.

Only a few doors off we should find in a small, three-roomed house, up a court, a widow whose husband died some few months since, leaving her with five young children. The first thing one of them wanted to know, on waking on Christmas morning, was why Father Christmas had brought them no nice things as he used to do. All the children went to a free Christmas breakfast, the fragrant coffee, the sandwiches and buns, the bright cheerful rooms, and the lovely music being the chief subject of their talk the whole day. The frugal but heartily enjoyed dinner was the gift of poor but good-hearted neighbours; after which, and in the warm, comfortable clothing supplied to the children by the Police-aided Association for Clothing Destitute Children, they sat round the fire while the mother told what Christmas days were like, and the things she did at Christmas time, when a child herself.

In another home the wife lies ill in bed; the husband has been out of work eleven weeks. Plum-pudding, mince-pies and like Christmas dainties are, therefore, quite unattainable. But firing and wholesome food the thoughtful goodwill of others has provided for them. In the evening a neighbour took the two children to church, from whence they returned in high glee—the fact that a gentleman had given them a threepenny bit each having, apparently, made a much deeper impression than the service, and one of them having already spent her precious piece of silver in oranges for her sick mother. And the last I see of that family picture is the two children sitting on one side of their mother's bed, the father on the other, reading to them a Christmas story by the light of the lamp which stood on the chest of drawers and the bright gleam of the fire which, happily for them, glowed on the hearth.

I am aware, of course, that another and a darker and sadder side to this picture could all too truthfully be drawn. It cannot be denied that in some of our city slums the sacred associations of the Christmas season are polluted and profaned by more of drinking, of riot and debauchery than usual. But I am firmly convinced that there is less of this than is commonly supposed, and that what there is of it is, slowly it may be, but surely decreasing. And, even in relation to these, the most worthless and seemingly irreclaimable of the "Submerged Tenth," we shall, perhaps, be willing to remember the ancient but ever fresh command, "Judge not, that ye be not judged," if we call to mind what their daily surroundings and associations have been from their very birth, when we try to realise what we, who are so apt to condemn them with a harshness which finds not one redeeming feature in them, would, probably be ourselves had our lives and characters been shaped by the circumstances and conditions which have moulded theirs. This, at any rate, I am persuaded of: that in recognising at their true worth the undeniable virtues of the poor on the one hand, and making due allowance for their sins and follies, real or supposed, on the other, we are hastening that blessed time when the sacred and never-to-be-forgotten words, "Peace on earth, goodwill to men," shall be not so much the burden of man's prayer as the actual realisation of his hope.

ADVENT.

THE Lord is come! On Syrian soil,
The child of poverty and toil—
The Man of Sorrows, born to know
Each varying shade of human woe!
His joy, his glory to fulfil,
In earth and heav'n his Father's will;
On lonely mount, by festive board,
On bitter cross, despised, adored.

Lord is come! Dull hearts to wake,
He spake, as never man yet spake,
The Truth that makes his servants free,
The royal law of Liberty.
Though heaven and earth shall pass away,
His living word our spirits stay,
And from his treasures, new and old,
Th' eternal mysteries unfold.

The Lord is come! In him we trace
The fulness of God's truth and grace;
Throughout those words and acts divine
Gleams of th' eternal splendour shine;
And from his inmost spirit flow,
As from a height of sunlit snow,
The river of perennial life,
To heal and sweeten Nature's strife.

The Lord is come! In every heart,
Where Truth and Mercy claim a part!
In every land where Right is Might,
And deeds of darkness shun the light,
In every church, where Faith and Love
Lift earthward thoughts to things above,
In every holy, happy home,
We bless thee, Lord, that thou hast come.

DEAN STANLEY.

To steady fidelity come steady growth and enlarging vision, as surely as the harvest follows the sowing.—G. S. Mer- riam.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

"BACK TO JESUS."

SIR,—I certainly had no intention of hurting Mr. Drummond's feelings by my remarks. The particular expression objected to by him meant no more than to suggest whether it is becoming in any of us to speak lightly, as he seemed to do, of another's attachment to the life and history of the Master, however precarious we may think his hold may be. I hope no one besides Mr. Drummond felt that to be an unfair criticism on his article, and I am sorry he did. Probably we are all in fuller agreement, fundamentally, than we know. May this season help us to keep the unity of the faith in the bond of peace!
W. G. TARRANT.

UNITARIANS AND THE PLEDGE.

SIR,—I was very pleased to see Mr. Edwards' vigorous letter in your issue of Nov. 25, and I hope it will open the eyes of all those who object to the pledge. I cannot help thinking that in years to come Unitarians will look back with regret at their apathy (not to use a stronger term) in the cause of total abstinence. They have done so much to free their fellows from the bondage of superstition and dogma that I firmly believe that if they would only seriously study the question—the most important and pressing of the day—they would at once join those who are doing what they can to rid the world from the bondage of drink. Let us, then, by all means have a Band of Hope in every Unitarian church, for we dare not let the children grow up without telling them of the dangers of strong drink, and helping them by precept and example (especially example) to steer clear of them. May all our ministers recognise the importance of the cause and speak and work for it without fear or favour.

I have just heard with surprise and regret that one of our London churches, with a Sunday-school of about 250 members, is closing its Band of Hope because no one will come forward to carry on the work. When we hear of such cases as this, is it matter for surprise that Unitarians are accused of being hostile to the Temperance cause? Let us remove the reproach and take our part in this great Christian work. EDWIN F. COWLIN.

5, Whittington-road, Bowes Park, N. Dec. 5.

[We have received other letters on the subject of Total Abstinence, for which we regret that we cannot find space.—Ed. Inq.]

MISS FERMOR asks whether it is of set purpose that the B. and F.U.A. and S.S.A. give no facilities for the display of Temperance literature in the book-rooms at Essex Hall.

MR. N. M. TAYLER while having no serious difference with the means adopted by Temperance Societies, so far as they go, strongly urges that it is the evil surroundings and conditions of life in crowded and miserable houses, and the excessive pressure of modern life, which are chiefly to blame for the prevalent excess in drink, and that they are the evils which ought to be most vigorously attacked. Some method of nationalisation ought, in his view, to reclaim for the benefit of the whole people, the unearned increment of land values and the railways and canals of the country.

OXFORD NOTES.

AFTER a glorious autumn the departing term is shaking the dust off its shoes in the midst of snow and frost, which light up our beautiful Oxford with their winter glory. The new residence at Manchester College has had a favourable trial, and "Addis Hall," as someone called it, has proved a great success, not less by the home and social life now possible among the students themselves than by the frequent presence of the genial professor dwelling beside them. We have no Hungarian students this term, but the wide walls of Manchester College embrace a Scotchman, several Welshmen, able and faithful to their old Unitarian traditions, two Indians, men of serious study, three Americans, two of whom are appropriately lodged in an interesting antique chamber with a history of tantalising obscurity, besides a fair contingent of happy young Englishmen.

The third American is a lady who has left her pulpit at Pepperel, in Massachusetts, to fulfil a long cherished desire of a year's study at Manchester College; she is, of course, like some of the others, an out-dweller. Besides regular students, several American gentlemen, two being professors from Berkeley, California, and from Swarthmore, Pennsylvania, are taking advantage of the "open door" to attend courses of lectures, such as those of Mr. Upton and Mr. Addis, on philosophical and Old Testament subjects.

The Dunkin lecturer, Professor J. H. Muirhead, of Birmingham, has given a course of public lectures on "Principles of Politics considered in relation to Modern Theories of Government," highly appreciated for their intrinsic interest and clearness of exposition, and attended among others by some Somerville students.

The Tate lectureship—the name of which recalls the generous and large-hearted man who, ripe in years, has just passed away—has been filled, to the filial satisfaction of his hearers, by the Rev. Charles Hargrove, who discoursed on "Preaching and Pastoral Work" out of the knowledge of long experience. Some of the clubs have started with renewed vitality; as the Martineau Club, with a good paper by Mr. E. Gwilym Evans, "Side-lights on Welsh Church History," and the Discussion Society, where, surprising to relate, Mr. J. H. Woods carried his motion, supported by cogent reasons, "That this House would regret the present Disestablishment of the Church of England." But though the feeling for music is present in the College, the soul for noble poetry appears to be absent, and the clubs for study of Shakespeare or Browning to be in disuse—a temporary disuse we trust it may prove.

The chapel has been enriched by the recent addition of two stained lancet windows in the choir, opposite the organ; graceful in design and delicate in colour, they do not intercept too much light where light is wanted, and fitly complete the fine glass of which Manchester is proud.

The truth that often one knows little of one's own city of dwelling is illustrated forcibly in Oxford, where it is common for an undergraduate or a woman student to go through the three or four years' course without having seen the colleges and other sights of which the place is full. Thus, too, it was only after her death at the beginning of October that many Oxonians knew what a noble woman had passed away from their midst in the person of Miss Skene, who had spent a long life of active philanthropy and literary work in a most modest, unassuming manner. Those who are concerned in the rightful administration of the Poor Law have followed with interest the careful discussion here between the guardians of one Oxford Union on the relative merits of out-relief and in-relief, especially in the light of Canon Barnett's article on the subject in the Nineteenth Century for November; while in another they have been glad to see the almost unopposed election of a woman guardian. The Church Missionary Society had a centenary week of loan exhibitions in October, to illustrate missionary work in different parts of the world, arranged for the Oxford diocese; the capital organisation of which, with its forty or fifty talks and short lectures, &c., a day, chiefly by the aid of an immense number of voluntary workers, deserves to be noticed. Miss Gordon Cumming brought her interesting drawings of Chinese scenery, and spoke on behalf of the blind Chinese among others. Twenty-four thousand people, drawn from country villages and towns as well as Oxford itself, cannot but have learnt much from the intelligent efforts made to interest them in distant peoples.

Those who know the Bodleian Library will have heard with regret of the increasing blindness that has fallen upon the courteous and learned Dr. Neubauer, one of the sub-librarians, and will not be surprised at his resignation of that post at Christmas; foreigners will miss him greatly with his ever ready help, and all will follow him into his retirement with goodwill and sympathy. His successor is Mr. A. E. Cowley, of Wadham, who, with much acceptance, has been aiding Dr. Neubauer for some time. Another University appointment that meets with much approval is the choice of Sir Hubert Parry as Professor of Music in succession to Sir John Stainer. Looking through the present widening sphere of University work, the way in which the schools of medicine and natural science are winning ground must strike the observer, who also sees in evidence the new buildings for their purposes, attached to the Parks' Museum, fast advancing. The new School of Geography, which has not attracted the attention it deserves as a hand-maid both to physical science and to history ancient and modern—yea, even in the making as in the present war—is now in full work with its staff of four "readers" and lecturers (Mr. Mackinder, Dr. Herbertson, &c.), and a laboratory for practical instruction. Lastly may be mentioned the plan for training in the method of education, with diplomas granted therein, which is successfully pursuing its quiet and unobtrusive labours.

ABBAS SCHOOL, CAIRO.

It may interest readers of THE INQUIRER to hear of the work being carried on in Cairo by two English ladies—Miss Johnstone, the principal, and Miss Spears, vice-principal of the Abbas School, the latter being the daughter of our late well-known friend the Rev. Robert Spears. This school was begun about four years ago, and consists of two departments—one for boys, and the other, of which alone I am about to write, for girls.

One enters the school building from a noisy, dirty road, about half an hour's walk from the hotel quarter of Cairo, and once through the high gateway one is struck with the sense of cleanliness and peace that pervades the square courtyard with its pleasant flower beds round which the buildings rise. At the time of my first call, Miss Spears was engaged with a class, so that I was shown round part of the school by a pleasant Syrian girl, who spoke French very well, but understood little English. The spotless dormitories, with their little white mosquito-curtained beds, and well-arranged windows on each side of the rooms for ventilation and light, the laundry, kitchen, and dining-room, and the bright looks of the Arab women servants, who saluted soldier-fashion as I passed, gave me a very pleasing impression of cleanliness and order, the more striking from its contrast with the noise and turmoil of the crowded city outside.

Very soon Miss Spears came to show me round the class rooms, filled with her bright-looking, dark-skinned Egyptian pupils, all of whom rose and saluted as I entered. These children's ages vary from seven to about fourteen, and all are taught English from the time they enter the school. The elder girls were able to understand and to answer a few questions I asked them; some told me their names, pretty sounding Arabian names, Assia, Zanooba, Galila, Amina, Babea, &c. They showed me their writing, both in English and in Arabic, and gave me some of their pens shaped from a reed, holder and nib in one, possibly a pen such as Moses might have used. The girls' faces were very striking to an English eye with their dark, clear skins, dark, neatly plaited hair and impressive black eyes. In one room the children recited a bit of the Koran for me to hear, in another a Syrian girl was giving a lesson in geography, in another quite little ones were doing sums on their slates, and everywhere the same brightness and pleasing sense of order prevailed.

The two English ladies are servants of the Egyptian Government, and have to conform in their teaching to the present requirements of the same, and to prepare their pupils for a standard examination on leaving, so that they are not quite free to teach what in their opinion might be best for the backward condition in which many of the children come to them. It is hard for us English to realise what this condition is, and against what great odds these ladies have to contend. These girls come from the harems, where their mothers have never learned to read or write, and where they live their whole lives apart from the world, many of them considering housework and cookery menial, books or writing unnecessary for women, aware of no duty or occupation but that of bearing children; and one pauses with admiration at the work of the ladies who are nobly devoting their lives to the education and civilisation of these hundred Egyptian girls. One's heart aches for the dreariness of the girls' lives on returning to their homes after a few years of such mental awakening as they are now getting in Abbas School, but the beginning is already made and these children will undoubtedly be better wives and mothers than their fore-runners, and the cleanliness and habits of order and truth taught them by Miss Johnstone and Miss Spears must bear fruit in due season, as the light of wise and thoughtful education comes to brighten the hitherto dark and dreary lives of the Egyptian women.

It was a common saying among these people that women had no souls! One needs but to look at the faces of these girls to find a ready answer to refute such an assertion, and to feel sure that the work being carried on now in Cairo is a real bit of the world's work.

M. EVELYN SHARPE.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Accrington.—A sale of work to raise funds towards the amount required for redeeming the ground rent was held on Thursday and Saturday Dec. 7 and 9 in the schoolroom. The Hon. Mary O'Hagan had kindly consented to open the sale, but the fact that her brother (Lord O'Hagan) had since been ordered to the front with his regiment prevented her attendance. A letter was received from her, in which she said: "I am exceedingly sorry that I cannot be with you on Thursday. The news about my brother having to go to the front has just reached us. It has been rather sudden and we are anxiously waiting to know what day he will have to sail for South Africa. I feel sure that you will understand why I cannot possibly leave London just now. At such a time when war is taking our dear ones away, when so many have to make the same sacrifices as ourselves, I feel that we should all be fired with renewed zeal to bring peace and concord at home." In the absence of the Hon. Mary O'Hagan the Mayoress very kindly opened the sale, Mr. Thomas Harwood, of Bolton, being in the chair. There were also on the platform the Mayor (Mr. J. S. Higham), the Rev. W. H. Burgess, Rev. Jesse Hatten (Baptist), Miss M. A. Taylor, Dr. Greenhalgh, and Messrs. Mills and A. Webster, secretary. The proceeds of the sale amounted to £83. Subscriptions have also been received from local and other friends, including a donation from the President of the B. and F.U.A., bringing the amount available up to £105 towards the £240 required.

Ballyhemlin, co. Down.—On Sunday last a special sermon on "The War in South Africa" was preached by the Rev. Charles Thrift. There was a good attendance, and the collection in aid of the "British Soldiers' Widows and Orphans Fund" amounted to £11.

Bootle.—The annual sale of work at the Bootle Free Church took place on the 7th inst., and was very successful. A pleasant evening was spent, and the total proceeds were about £25, an increase on previous sales.

Boston.—The service on Sunday evening in the Unitarian Chapel, Spain-lane, was conducted by the Rev. G. Lansdowne, of Lynn, and proved exceptionally interesting and instructive, the subject of the discourse being "What is Unitarianism?" The preacher, in a most earnest and impressive manner, showed clearly that Unitarianism consists of a perfectly free worship of a wise, loving, and merciful God, revealed to us by the teaching and life of Jesus.

Bristol: Lewin's Mead Domestic Mission.—On Wednesday week the annual tea meeting was held in the New Mission Hall, followed by a public meeting, presided over by Mr. A. H. Wansey. In an interesting address, he dwelt upon the perfectly unsectarian character of the mission and the splendid work it was doing among the poor of Bristol, and referred with deep regret to Mr. Wain's leaving the mission for Trowbridge at the end of the year. Short addresses were delivered by the Revs. A. N. Blatchford, J. Wain, and others. Prizes to the two senior classes were presented by Mrs. J

K. Champion, and presentations were also made to Mr. Wain of a very beautiful travelling case by the senior classes, and a handsome travelling clock by the members of the sewing class, both of which were suitably inscribed. On the following Thursday evening upwards of 200 Sunday scholars had tea, after which prizes for attendance and good conduct were presented by Miss S. Worsley, who is secretary of the Mary Carpenter Guild, from whence the prizes are all derived, and which consists of suitable warm clothing and books. On the following evening the infants also had a treat. The old boys of the Stokes Croft day-school have presented Mr. Wain with a very beautiful illuminated address, as a mark of their esteem for his kindly interest on their behalf. The Rev. A. Lancaster, of Manchester (missionary elect), is to commence his duties the first Sunday in the new year.

Edinburgh.—A sale of work was held on Saturday last in the Chapel Hall, the object of which was to send a contribution to the Children's League of Pity from the St. Mark's Sunday-school and other friends. The Rev. R. B. Drummond, who opened the sale, said that one of the most lamentable features of their civilisation was the necessity of sometimes rescuing children from the cruelties of their own parents, but most of them had read enough in the newspapers to convince them that this sad necessity existed. It was, he said, very gratifying that the scholars had been led to take so much interest in this work and to do something for children less well off than themselves. The proceeds of the sale amounted to £14 4s. 7d.

Gateshead.—A well-attended social meeting was held on Dec. 12, the Rev. A. Harvie presided, special visitor being the Rev. F. H. Vaughan, of Oxford. A happy and profitable evening was spent. Mr. Bipin Chandra Pal lectured on Dec. 16 on behalf of our church in the Co-operative Hall, on "Indian Interpretations of Christianity." The chair was occupied by Mr. Robert Affleck, J.P. The weather was very wintry, and the audience, though not large, was a most appreciative one. A vote of thanks was accorded the lecturer and chairman, on the motion of Mr. John Pattinson, seconded by the Rev. A. Harvie.

Ipswich (Farewell).—On Sunday last farewell sermons were preached by the Rev. William Jellie (previous to his departure for Auckland, N.Z.) to good congregations, the evening service being especially well attended. In the evening Mr. Jellie took for his text the words of St. Paul, "By hope we are saved," but preferred to read them in the present tense, "By hope we are saved," showing clearly that without having the second item of St. Paul's famous Trinity, "Faith, Hope, and Charity," we should be lacking in one of the great incentives to our work and progress. In the evening he observed that during his past ministry he had tried assiduously to show the great difference between "Unitarian" and "Trinitarian," explaining the necessity of our standing firm to the truth gradually disclosed to us, but on this last occasion of his occupying the pulpit he would rather emphasise those essential points upon which all are agreed. On Tuesday evening a farewell tea was held, followed by a concert and public meeting, which was attended by over 100 members and friends. During the evening advantage was taken to present Mr. Jellie with a silver mounted travelling writing case, fitted complete, together with an album, tastefully designed and bound by Mr. Scopes in morocco and silver, containing the names of the subscribers. Mr. Notcutt, making the presentation on behalf of the congregation, spoke in the highest terms of the great service rendered by Mr. Jellie during his three and a half years' ministry, and at the same time said the congregation could not let the work and help of Miss Jellie pass unrecognised, but would ask her to accept, as a slight acknowledgment, a lady's hand bag, fitted with purse, cardcase, &c., and ventured to hope that they might from time to time see her at Ipswich, as she was not leaving the country with her brother. Messrs. Hamblin, Hutley, Scopes, Smith, Wilkinson, Williment, and Woolnough also spoke, expressing their regret at losing Mr. Jellie, and all testifying to the great work he had done whilst in Ipswich, and wishing him every good wish for his future welfare and success, in his new sphere of work in Auckland. During the last year, Mr. Jellie has been doing good work amongst our friends of the Ipswich Social Settlement, in showing them the way into a wider and nobler idea of life and duty to ourselves and neighbours. On their behalf Messrs. Brooks and Rose, in well-chosen words, asked Mr. Jellie to accept a silver pencil case as an inadequate return for his sympathy and help. Mr. Jellie, in replying, thanked one and all, and expressed his deepest gratitude for the token from the congregation, which he should always prize and cherish in remembrance of his ministry in Ipswich. He should especially value the pencil case, which gift touched him deeply, coming as it did from men in whom he felt the deepest interest. The meeting closed in a round of farewell handshakes to Mr. Jellie.

London: Bell-street Domestic Mission.—In connection with the Guild of Play commenced and managed by Mrs. Kirkman Gray, a most interesting and picturesque display was given last Saturday. About fifty girls of various ages were recently obtained from the local Board-schools, and have since been carefully taught old English carols, dances and games. The training process has worked wonders in many ways, has been a weekly happiness to the girls themselves, and eventually produced the first public performance, in which there was not a single hitch. Dressed in white frocks and bright coloured caps, the children formed an artistic scene as they marched and manoeuvred about the room, or tripped in true step to the music, or joined their voices in quaint old songs. If thanks are due those who have lovingly rescued and collected the folk lays of "Merrie England" in the past, they are also due no less to those who are making them known and welcome among the parents and children of our time. Visitors were present from Rosslyn Hill and Essex Church, and Dr. Herford, after addressing a few kindly words to the girls, expressed the hearty appreciation of the whole audience for the very successful labours of Mrs. Gray and her helpers.

London: Forest Gate.—A very successful sale of work was held in the Upton-lane Hall on Wednesday and Thursday, the 13th and 14th inst. Mrs. Alfred Lawrence opened the sale with words of sympathy and encouragement, after which Mrs. Jose moved the vote of thanks. The stalls were prettily arranged and well stocked. The proceeds, aided by subscriptions from Mrs. Lawrence, Mr. F. Nettlefold, Mrs. Moore (Harland-rise, near Hull), Mrs. A. Lupton, Mrs. L. M. Aspland, Mr. J. T. Preston, Mr. and Mrs. Motteau, and others, reached £70, the expenses being about £5. Much neighbourly goodwill was shown, and altogether the moral and material results of this effort must be regarded as noteworthy. The new adherents were well in evidence, as well as the older ones—a hopeful sign. Friends at a distance may be assured that their sympathy has been keenly appreciated.

London: Stepney.—On Thursday, Dec. 14, a congregational social gathering was held at College Chapel, under the presidency of Mr. Lucking Tavenor. Music, recitations, and games formed the greater part of the evening's programme, but one interesting item was the presentation of an illuminated address and an ornamental five o'clock tea kettle to Mr. and Mrs. John Evans, to commemorate the occasion of their marriage. Mr. Evans has been the person upon whom, together with Miss Amy Read, the burden of the work of the church has fallen during its time of anxiety. Mr. Evans still undertakes the joint office of secretary and treasurer, although the cause is in smoother waters.

London Sunday School Society.—The annual social gathering of this Society for Teachers and Elder Scholars was held at Essex Hall on Saturday last, and was presided over by Mr. F. W. Lawrence, M.A., this year's president of the Society, supported by Messrs. Ion Pritchard, A. Barnes and H. Wade. Notwithstanding the fact that the East London Unitarian Society, to which several of the Sunday-schools belong, had kindly postponed a gathering which they had arranged for the same date, the attendance was not as large as on some previous occasions. This is no doubt attributable to the weather and to the fact that at least three schools—namely, Wood Green, Stamford-street, and Bell-street Mission—had parties of their own. There were, however, about 150 present from no less than twelve different Sunday-schools, and a very enjoyable evening was spent. After an hour for tea and conversation, the chair was taken at seven o'clock by the president, and a capital programme followed, comprising a pianoforte duet, songs, recitations, a short story taken from Emile Souvestre's "Un philosophe sous les toits," admirably told by Mr. Ion Pritchard, and an organ solo by Mr. Sidney Baines, who also acted as accompanist. The vocalists included Miss A. J. Lawrence, Miss Hutchinson (Mansford-street), the president, and Messrs. W. and A. Savage Cooper. In the course of the evening the president addressed a few words of welcome to those present, and drew attention to the advantages afforded by the Seaside Home at Southend, which was presented to the Society, and formally opened by Lady O'Hagan in September last. A hearty vote of thanks to those who had so kindly contributed to the entertainment was proposed by Mr. Harold Wade, and carried unanimously. The meeting broke up, after singing "God save the Queen," shortly before 9 P.M.

London: Welsh Unitarians and the 1900 Bazaar.—There was an interesting gathering at Essex Hall on Thursday week, under the auspices of the Bazaar Committee of the London Welsh Unitarian Movement. After tea, the chair was taken by a well-known London Welshman, Mr. John T. Lewis, solicitor, and a highly entertaining programme of speech, music, and song was successively gone through, the principal item of the evening being a lecture on the "Proverbs of Wales," by Mr. D. Delta Evans. The chairman who is a Congregationalist, in introducing the lecturer, made a cordial and sympathetic speech, and it should be noted that many of the friends present, including most of those who contributed songs, were members of other Welsh churches in and around the metropolis. A hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer was proposed by the chairman and seconded by Mr. T. Vincent Evans (secretary of the Honourable Society of Cymmrodorion), who said that he was delighted to see so many young people present, many of whom he knew were deeply interested in a movement which had for one of its objects the softening of men's hearts and the broadening of their minds, and trusted they would persevere in their efforts to establish a strong and self-supporting Welsh Unitarian church in London.

Loughborough (Resignation).—The Rev. H. E. Haycock has resigned the pulpit of the Victoria-street Church, the resignation to take effect in June, 1900. At a congregational meeting held on the 6th inst., the following resolution was unanimously passed:—"That this congregation receives with deep regret Mr. Haycock's letter conveying his intention of terminating his ministry in June next, and begs to express its appreciation of the valuable services Mr. Haycock has rendered the church as its minister during the seven years ending in June next, and further expresses its regret that our finances are not in a condition to warrant the congregation in offering a stipend that would justify his staying amongst us."

Maidstone.—The Rev. S. S. Brettell, M.A., on his resignation of the work at Clewerke and Yeovil, will take temporary charge of the pulpit at Maidstone. He will begin on the first Sunday in the new year.

Manchester: Strangers.—Prior to the funeral of the late Mr. Thomas Rawson last Saturday at the Wesleyan Cemetery, Cheetham-hill, a short religious service was held in the Unitarian Free Church, when, besides members of the family and relatives, many members of the congregation and a number of friends from neighbouring churches were present. The Rev. W. R. Shanks conducted the service, and in a brief address made sympathetic reference to the life and services of the deceased, who for over thirty years had been organist of the church. On Sunday morning a memorial service was held, when appropriate hymns were sung, some of them to music composed by Mr. Rawson, and in the course of his sermon on "Shall a man see any good in his days? or, The true view of life," the Rev. W. R. Shanks referred to the life of their late organist as illustrating and confirming his lesson. He had lived a long life of seventy-five years filled with active service, devoted to a noble art, and had met with success, respect, and honour. His talents, of a high order, were cultivated to a fine perfection of teaching and executive power. A great number of pupils had come under his influence and had benefited by his thoroughness of method in teaching. He had taken a high place in his profession, had won the respect of his musical brethren, had rendered many services to the churches of the denomination, and undoubtedly had enjoyed much happiness and seen much good in his days. Many friends in that district would miss him, and they of that congregation would long regard his official connection with it as an honour, and a pleasant memory.

Sale.—At a recent ordinary meeting of the Social Guild a paper was read by the President, the Rev. J. Forrest, M.A., on "Commercialism and War," in which he condemned the greed and heartlessness of the modern competitive system, and set down the race for markets all over the world as the chief cause of recent wars, which were not likely to grow less until the nations had adopted a nobler ideal. Men must learn and nations must learn that the world does not exist for them it is they who exist for the world, to uplift it, to improve it and to bring happiness and light to dark places. Let each, instead of engaging in hopeless senseless strife, try to find its own true place and work in the world. Let us cease to think too highly of ourselves, let magnanimity take the place of jealousy, let international co-operation take the place of strife and warfare. And as with nations, so with individual men. Let each citizen have such ideals for himself. Thus, and only thus, can domestic and international peace be secured. The paper was followed by a discussion, and a resolution, in accordance with its sentiments, was carried unanimously.

Swansea.—The Rev. Stopford Brooke, M.A., LL.D., preached in this church morning and evening on Sunday last. The attendance in the morning was very large, while in the evening the chapel was filled to overflowing. The sermons were listened to with rapt attention, and created a deep impression. Mr. Brooke's visit has been a great success in every respect.

Wolverhampton.—On Sunday morning, the 17th inst., a special service was held in the iron schoolroom, which has recently been removed from the site on Snow Hill, to a new site in Bath-road, where it is intended eventually to also build a church. The service was held in response to the Mayor's appeal to the congregations of the town to have special collections towards his fund for the local relief of the wives and families of soldiers suffering in the War. Mr. W. L. Teasdale conducted the service, reading the Rev. C. Hargrove's sermon "For the Red Cross." The collection amounted to 29s.

MATTHEW HENRY'S CHAPEL RESTORATION FUND, CHESTER.

£275 are still required to complete the above.

	£	s.	d.
Amount already acknowledged...	620	15	0
Mrs. Jas. Worthington, Sale ...	5	0	0

Further donations will be received and gratefully acknowledged by the Rev. H. D. ROBERTS, Brook Lodge, or Mr. Wm. ORRETT, 15, Foregate-street, Chester.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.

SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.
INVESTED FUNDS, £10,000,000
Number of Accounts, 85,094.

TWO AND A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT ACCOUNTS on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold for Customers.

SAVINGS' DEPARTMENT.

SMALL DEPOSITS received and INTEREST allowed MONTHLY on each completed £1.

The BIRKBECK ALMANAC, with full particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE E.C.

Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21, Mincing-lane, E.C.

Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.
MISS ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, 151, Brixton-road, S.W.,
and Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made Monthly repayment, including principal, premium and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years, 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.; 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

Correspondents are requested to note that to be sure of insertion the same week, news must reach the Office by the first post on Thursday at latest, and the earlier in the week the better.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, December 24.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Bermondsey, Fort-road, Upper Grange-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. HAROLD RYLETT.
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. FREDERIC ALLEN.
Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.
Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS.
Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M., Rev. F. K. FREESTON. 3.15 P.M., Christmas Carol Service, and 7 P.M., "The Messiah."
Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. WOODS PERRIS.
Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.
Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Revs. BROOKE HERFORD, D.D., and EDGAR DARLYN. Minister's Class after Morning Service.
Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Mr. T. ELLIOT.
Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. DAWES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D.
Kentish Town, Free Christian Church, Clarence-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. A. FARQUHARSON. Morning, "Back to Jesus." Evening, "A Christmas Carol."
Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. STRONGE.
Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. C. POPE.
Little Portland-street Chapel, near Oxford-circus, 11.15 A.M., Rev. F. H. JONES. No Evening service.
Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. CADMAN.
Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. CARTER. Musical Service in Evening.
Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.
Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., and 3 P.M., Service for Children, Rev. S. FARRINGTON.
Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M., Browning's "Christmas Eve," Mr. LUCKING TAVENER, and 7 P.M., Mr. FERGUSON.
Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. H. WOODS, M.A., of Oxford.
Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M., Rev. J. TOYE, and 6.30 P.M., Mr. L. TAVENER.
Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BALSALL HEATH INSTITUTE: OUR FATHER'S CHURCH, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. J. SNEATH.
BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. F. W. STANLEY.
BEDFORD, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. ROWLAND HILL.
BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
BLACKPOOL, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
BLACKPOOL, Unitarian Lay Church, Masonic Hall, Waterloo-road, South Shore, 6.30 P.M.
BOOTLE, Free Church, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. W. HAWKES.
BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. COZ.
BRIGHTON, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road, North-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.
BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. GEORGE STREET.
CANTERBURY, Blackfriars, 11 A.M.
DEAL and WALMER Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. SHAKESPEARE.
DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 1 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. BURROWS.
EASTBOURNE, Lismore-road, Terminus-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. ST. CLAIR.
GUILDFORD, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. S. LANG BUCKLAND.
HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. MARTEN.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.
LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M., Rev. A. COBDEN SMITH, and 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.
LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. J. JUPP.
LIVERPOOL Ullet-road, Sefton Park, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. KLEIN. Evening, "God in Man: A Sermon for Christmas Eve."
MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. FORREST.
MANCHESTER, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
MARGATE, Forester's Hall (Side Entrance), Union-crescent, 11 A.M., Rev. J. B. BARNHILL.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. J. E. CARPENTER, M.A.
PORTSMOUTH, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. THOMAS BOND.
PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. COSENS PRIOR.
RAMSGATE, Assembly Rooms, High-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. B. BARNHILL.
READING, Unitarian Free Church, London-road, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. A. VOYSEY.
SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. WELLBELOVED.
SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. R. C. DENDY. Stables in the grounds.
TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. F. T. REED, of Moreton-hampstead.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Mr. F. LAWSON DODD.
YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant Unitarian Church, Hout-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

CHRISTMAS DAY.

Brixton, Effra-road, 11 A.M.
Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M.
Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 A.M.
Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M.
Stepney and Stratford (United Service of the two Congregations), conducted by Mr. TAVENER at West Ham-lane Church.
Stoke Newington, The Green, 10 A.M., Communion Service, Rev. J. H. WOODS, M.A.
Wandsworth, East-hill, 11 A.M.

Leeds, Mill Hill, 11 A.M.
Liverpool, Hope-street, 11 A.M.
Oxford, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. W. E. ADDIS, M.A.
Torquay, 11 A.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR, B.D.

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY,
SOUTH-PLACE, FINSBURY.—Dec. 24th, at 11.15, HENRY RAWLINGS, M.A., "Lamennais as an Independent Reformer."

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. W. STODDART, B.A., is at LIBERTY to take occasional Sunday duty.—30, West Bank, Stamford-hill, London, N.

ENGAGEMENT as COMPANION,
experienced, and good references.—G., INQUIRER Office.

MARRIAGES.

VALLANCE—WOOLLEY.—On the 6th Dec., at St. John's Church, Higher Broughton, by the Rev. H. J. B. Armstrong, M.A., Rector, assisted by the Rev. J. Birch Jones, B.D., Rector of All Saints', West Gorton, Arthur Clayton, youngest son of the late George Vallance, of Mansfield, to Gertrude Daisy, second daughter of the late Percy Woolley, of Manchester.

DEATHS.

ELSE.—On the 13th Dec., at Esterel, West Cliff-road, Bournemouth, Alfred Else, J.P., formerly of Leicester, aged 60. Friends are requested to accept this intimation.
TRANTER.—On the 18th inst., at Ashcroft, Cirencester, Susan, the beloved wife of Thomas Tranter, aged eighty-two. For many years devoted to the Unitarian Church.

Schools, etc.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
SOUTH MARINE TERRACE,
ABERYSTWITH.

PRINCIPAL ... MRS. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

HINDHEAD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

PRINCIPALS—Miss J. F. GRUNER (Certif. Student of Girton College), Moorcroft, Hindhead, Surrey.

Miss MACRAE MOIR (Cambridge Higher Local), Lingholt, Hindhead, Surrey.

The aim of the School is to combine the advantages of a good Boarding School with a thorough Education and healthy outdoor life. Girls may be prepared for College-entrance and other examinations.

The district of Hindhead is one of the healthiest parts of England, and much recommended by doctors for its bracing air and gravel soil.

Miss MOIR receives ten boarders in a thoroughly well-built modern house, with southern aspect. Great attention is paid to healthful conditions of life. References allowed to parents of present and past pupils.

Terms for Board and Education on application to the Principals.

THE WARREN, KNUTSFORD.

PRINCIPAL:

Mrs. W. CARRINGTON WHITELEGGE.

Excellent individual TUITION and Home Care for the daughters of cultivated parents who would appreciate unusual advantages for Music and Languages.

The SPRING TERM will begin January 23, 1900.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, CHESHIRE.

(Barker Foundation),

TO BE OPENED SEPTEMBER, 1900.

HEAD MASTER—GUY LEWIS, M.A., late scholar of Pembroke College, Oxford.

This School will provide a sound liberal education on Public School lines.

Subjects.—Religious Knowledge, Classics, Modern Languages, History and Geography, English Language and Literature, Mathematics, Natural Science.

There will be daily morning prayer and a religious service in the school on Sunday. Instruction will be given in the history of the growth of religious and rational theological thought and opinion in England, and generally in religious subjects. The boys will be encouraged in sobriety, intelligence, earnestness, and piety, and in modes and by teachers free from the obligations of prescribed creeds or tests of religious belief.

Careful and individual attention will be given to the physical training and development of the boys.

Fees.

For Boarders ... £33 6s. 8d. a term (inclusive).

For Day Boys ... £12 12s. a term.

Foundation Exhibitions (entitling to admission at half fees) are offered for Boys whose parent or guardian is a minister or member of or in full sympathy with some congregation in England steadily assembling for the public worship of God and imposing no obligation upon any member thereof (whether minister, member, or otherwise), to subscribe or assent to any articles or article of religious belief or to submit to any test of religious doctrine.

Further particulars, prospectuses, and forms of application may be obtained from

GUY LEWIS (Head Master), New College, Eastbourne;

A. H. WORTHINGTON (Secretary), 1, St. James's-square, Manchester;

EDWIN W. MARSHALL (Clerk), 38, Bazton Arcade, Manchester.

Schools, etc.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE for GIRLS,
Bristol Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

PRINCIPAL—Miss BAILY.

HEADMISTRESS—Miss ELEANOR MOSS, B.A. Hons.

A limited number of Boarders taken at residence of Principal.

The College, which is opposite the residence, has accommodation for 120 pupils. Lawn tennis, gymnasium, asphalt playground.

The Curriculum is based on the Cambridge Examination regulations, and resident pupils have the advantage of Public School life combined with home comforts.

Application to Secretary, Miss S. AWDRY.

Board and Residence.

A NEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms moderate.—Mrs. ROBERT TURNER, 94, Grosvenor-road, S.W.

BOARD and RESIDENCE, South of England. Healthy neighbourhood. Home comforts. Seven miles from Brighton, near South Downs. Station Hassocks (on main line L.B.S.C.).—Miss ROWLAND, Gothic House, Hurstpierpoint.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea; sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address, Miss CHALDECOTT, Stirling House, Manor-road.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL,

Proprietor, FREDERIC SMITH.

Recently enlarged, remodelled and refurnished, now affording

ACCOMMODATION FOR ABOUT 250 GUESTS.

The best patronised TEMPERANCE HOTEL in London. Highly commended by leading Unitarian Ministers.

Spacious Coffee, Reading, and Drawing Rooms. Electric Light. Lift.

Apartments, 1/6 to 2/6. Breakfast, 1/3 to 2/-. Service, 9d.

77 & 101,

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON, W.C.

Telegrams: "QUIETUDE, LONDON."

FLOWERY FIELD CHURCH,
HYDE.

Minister, Rev. W. L. TUCKER, M.A.

A GRAND BAZAAR will be held in the MECHANICS' INSTITUTE, HYDE, on March 15, 16, and 17, 1900, in aid of the Church Funds, under the patronage of the Mayor and Mayoress of Hyde, the Rt. Hon. Lady O'Hagan, Mrs. Ashton, the Rt. Hon. James Bryce, M.P., Sir John Brunner, Bart., M.P., Thomas Cair Ashton, Esq., M.P., the President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, Alderman H. Rawson, J.P., Rev. H. Enfield Dowson, B.A., and other friends.

Further particulars will appear in due course.

Contributions of Money or Goods are earnestly solicited, and will be gratefully acknowledged by

Rev. W. L. TUCKER, Chapel-street, Hyde, or M. C. ROGERS, Flowery Field, Hyde, Hon. Sec. Bazaar Committee.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE,
COVENTRY-STREET, W.

A MATINEE PERFORMANCE of A MID-SUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM will be given at the above Theatre (kindly lent by Mr. J. H. Leigh), in aid of the Funds of the LONDON UNITARIAN BAZAAR, on TUESDAY, January 16th, 1900, under the direction of Mr. Herbert Lawford and Mr. J. H. Leigh.

Doors open at 2 o'clock. To commence at 2.30.

Price of Tickets:—Private boxes, £2 2s. to £4 4s.; stalls, 10s. 6d.; balcony (first two rows), 7s. 6d. (other rows), 6s.; upper circle (reserved), 4s.; pit, 2s. 6d.; gallery, 1s.

Tickets can be obtained from any member of the Entertainments Committee; at the various Unitarian Churches, or at Essex Hall, where a plan of the reserved seats can be seen, or from Mr. HERBERT LAWFORD, 28, Nightingale-lane, Balham, S.W.

The Private Boxes can only be obtained from Mr. Lawford.

WINIFRED HOUSE

(Mrs. Hampson's Memorial Home),

Invalid Children's Convalescent Nursing Home.
Wray Crescent, Tollington Park, London, N.

A Home where poor children are received (girls, 3-12 years; boys, 3-10) who are recovering from operations or from disease; also for those suffering from debility. Application for admission to be made to Miss M. PRITCHARD, 11, Highbury Crescent, London, N.

All friends interested in the work are asked to make it known to others, for it is essential that the list of subscribers should be increased, if the well being of the Home is to be maintained.

Special donations are also invited towards defraying the expenses of reconstruction of the drainage system, which was carried out in the Summer.

WILLIAM M. BLYTH, Hon. Treas.
MARIAN PRITCHARD, } Hon. Secs.
ROBERT HAMPSON, }

WANTED, a COMPANION-HOUSE-

KEEPER, for a position of trust, in the North of England; age 25 to 30. Well educated, bright, and intelligent; must be a total abstainer and well recommended. Previous experience in a similar post not absolutely necessary. State salary.—Address, in the first instance, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, 6, Gorst-road, Wandsworth Common, London, S.W., and mark communication "Companion-House-keeper."

ZEBRA

GRATE POLISH.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

NOW READY.

THE HELPER, 1900.

A Handbook for Sunday School Teachers and Parents.

Edited by MARIAN PRITCHARD ("Aunt Amy").

Frontispiece, Energy, by G. F. Watts, R.A. Full-page Illustration, Manchester College, Oxford.

CONTENTS.

New Year's Address. JOHN BYLES.

A Year of Sunday Readings. Compiled by H. KELSEY WHITE.

Suggestive Lessons: Parable of the Sower, FRANK WALTERS. 52 Bible Passages, &c.

For the Little Ones. More about Nellie and John Henry and Eliza, MARY DENDY.

The S. S. Teachers' Summer Session at Oxford. Lectures on Object of S. S. Teaching, J. J. WRIGHT. Some Day School Methods applicable to Sunday Schools, FRANK TAYLOR. On Discipline, HENRY RAWLINGS, M.A. Method of Preparing and Presenting a Lesson, EDITH DRUMMOND. How to give a Bible Lesson, JOSEPH WOOD. What can we Teach and How? MARIAN PRITCHARD. Religious Lessons from Book of Nature, JOSEPH FREESTON. Relation of Ethics to Religion, C. B. UPTON, B.A., B.Sc. How the Old Testament Grew, J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A. The Life and Epistles of Paul, JAMES DRUMMOND, M.A., LL.D. Development of Liberal Nonconformity, J. E. ODGERS, M.A. Work and Teaching of G. F. Watts, R.A., LUCKING TAVENER.

Teachers in Council: (I.) On the Ideal Sunday School. (II.) Our Senior Classes. (III.) Bringing our Young People to join our Churches.

Passages from Addresses. By Principal JAMES DRUMMOND, M.A., LL.D., and Rev. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.

Illustrative Stories, Poems, &c., &c.

Cloth, price 2s. 6d. net. Postage 4d.

12 Copies supplied for 25s. Carriage unpaid.

The Volumes issued for 1898 and 1899 can still be had at the same price.

London: The SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

New Publications.

LIFE BEYOND DEATH. A New Volume by MINOT J. SAVAGE, D.D., of New York. 336 pp. Crown 8vo, 6s.

JESUS: BITS OF WAYSIDE GOSPEL. By JENKIN LLOYD JONES, of Chicago. 320 pp. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE CHOIR INVISIBLE, and Other Sermons. By JOHN WHITE CHADWICK, of Brooklyn. 228 pp. Crown 8vo, 4s. net.

THE STORY OF THE BIBLE, from the Standpoint of Modern Scholarship. By WALTER L. SHELDON, of St. Louis. 1s. 6d. net.

THE RELIGION OF TIME and the RELIGION OF ETERNITY. A Study of Certain Relations between Mediæval and Modern Thought. By PHILIP H. WICKSTEED, M.A. 1s. net.

BACK TO JESUS: An Appeal to Evangelical Christians. By RICHARD A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., Author of "God and the Soul," "Faith and Doubt in the Century's Poets," &c. 1s. net.

THE STORY OF PROTESTANT DISSENT and ENGLISH UNITARIANISM. By WALTER LLOYD. 236 pp. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

POCKET ALMANAC FOR 1900. Tuck, gilt edges, 1s. net; by post, 1s. 1d.

Will be Ready on January 1st.

THE ESSEX HALL YEAR BOOK FOR 1900. Cloth, 1s. net; by post, 1s. 2d.

London: PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-st., Strand, W.C.

BOOKLETS FOR CHRISTMAS.

"DAILY MEDITATIONS" & "NIGHT UNTO NIGHT."

By W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

PRICE ONE SHILLING (leather, gilt).

"Night unto Night" can also be had in cloth binding, red edges, price Sixpence.

ESSEX HALL, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, W.C.

THROUGH UNSEEN PATHS:

By K. E. HARRISON

(Mrs. FREDERICK AUGIER HARRISON). 6s.

"An attractive story, revealing much genuine feeling."—Bookman.

"Told with simplicity and pathos."—Literary World.

"One of those old-fashioned, pleasantly-told stories that, alas! only come true in books."—Dundee Advertiser.

"A charming work of fiction."—Fair Play.

Swan Sonnenschein & Co., Ltd., London.

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS

4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Realty Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

SCOTCH TWEEDS and SERGES at Mill Prices, Ladies' or Gents'; best quality only. Patterns post free; orders carriage paid.—GEO. McLEOD & SONS, Hawick, N.B.

THE ETHICAL WORLD.

EDITED BY DR. STANTON COIT and J. A. HOBSON, M.A.

Articles on Important Social Questions, Education &c. from a purely ethical standpoint Children's Page.

TWOPENCE WEEKLY.

Office: 17, Johnson's-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

THE MILL HILL PULPIT.

A Monthly Sermon by

Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., Leeds.

December Number.—"FOR THE RED CROSS."

Price 1d. Annual subscription, 1s. 6d. post free.

Apply, Essex Hall, or CHAS. STAINER, 82, Ravenswood-terrace, Hyde Park, Leed.

COMPANIONSHIP to LADY wanted by young lady, 25; musical, good reader; some hospital practice.—Apply, Miss JELLIE, care of Rev. W. Jellie, Ipswich.

Printed by WOODFALL & KINDER, 70 to 76, Long Acre, W.C. and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. City Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 29 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD Deansgate.—Saturday, December 23, 1899.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.]

[REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3901.
NEW SERIES, No. 105.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1899.

[ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK	833
LITERATURE:—
The Age of Wycliffe	835
The Spirit and the Incarnation	837
A Study of Religions	838
Mr. Lecky's "Map of Life"	844
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN	838
RETROSPECT OF THE YEAR 1899	840
OBITUARY:—
Robert Cunningham Hall	843
Mr. Alfred Else	843
Samuel Gordon, Belfast	843
Mrs. Bruce	844
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES	845
ADVERTISEMENTS	846

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

LOOKING back upon another year, we desire to renew our grateful acknowledgments to many friends who have helped to secure to THE INQUIRER whatever measure of usefulness and worth it has attained. Our constant aim is to make the paper thoroughly representative of the religious life of our Free Churches, and to be helpful, as far as possible, in a wider field. The following list of contributors to these columns during the past year will bear witness in no small degree to the success of that endeavour:—

MISS LAURA G. ACKROYD.
DENDY AGATE, B.A.
CHARLES W. ARMSTRONG.
R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.
W. E. A. AXON.
C. D. BADLAND, M.A.
AMROSE BENNETT, M.A.
BURTON BETHAM.
WILLIAM BINNS.
MISS ALICE BLATCH.
R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.
GEORGE BOROS.
R. BRUCE BOSWELL.
W. COPELAND BOWIE.
STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D.
JOHN BYLES.
H. V. CANTRELL.
E. CARLETON.
J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.
A. A. CHARLESWORTH.
C. C. COE, F.R.G.S.
ROBERT COLLYER.
MISS FRANCES E. COOKE.
JAMES CRISLEY.
EDGAR DAPLYN.
JOHN DENDY.
A. H. DOLPHIN.
W. H. DRUMMOND, B.A.
T. E. M. EDWARDS.
JOHN ELL'S.
SILAS FARRINGTON.
MRS. FARRINGTON.
F. K. FREESTON.
JOHN FRETWELL.
EDGAR I. FRIPP, B.A.
T. H. GORDON, B.A.
HENRY GOW, B.A.
B. KIPPMAN GRAY.
MISS GERTHA GUTHRIE.
CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A.
WILFRED HARRIS, M.A.
ARTHUR HARVIE.
JAMES HARWOOD, B.A.
H. W. HAWKES.
BROOKE HERFORD, D.D.
R. T. HERFORD, B.A.
W. H. HERFORD, B.A.
MRS. W. H. HERFORD.
G. D. HICKS, M.A., Ph.D.
J. HOCART.
WILLIAM JELLIE.
H. HARROLD JOHNSON, M.A.
MISS H. M. JOHNSON.
F. H. JONES, B.A.
R. J. JONES, M.A.
W. TODOR JONES.
W. J. JUPP.
J. A. KELLY.
L. DE BEAUMONT KLEIN, D.Sc.

R. H. LAMBLEY.
A. LAZENBY.
MISS FRANCES LEE.
WALTER LEWIN.
WALTER LLOYD.
MISS ALICE A. LUCAS.
E. W. LUMMIS, M.A.
T. L. MARSHALL.
MISS GERTRUDE MARTINEAU.
JOSEPH MAY.
H. S. MELLONE, M.A., D.Sc.
W. MELLOR.
MRS. MILLS.
MISS THEODORA MILLS.
FREDERICK NETTLEFOLD.
J. COLLINS ODGERS, B.A.
J. EDWIN ODGERS, M.A.
BIPIN CHANDRA PAL.
MISS J. S. PATTINSON.
CHARLES FRACE.
H. S. FERRIS, M.A.
C. E. PIKE.
C. T. POYNTING, B.A.
PRIESTLEY PRIME.
MISS MARIAN PRITCHARD.
HENRY RAWLINGS, M.A.
RICHARD ROBINSON.
CHARLES ROPER, B.A.
JAMES RUDDLE.
G. ST. CLAIR, F.G.S.
MRS. ARTHUR SHARPP.
MISS EMILY H. SMITH.
G. VANCE SMITH, B.A., Ph.D.
H. S. SOLLY, M.A.
F. W. STANLEY.
A. T. STOREY.
C. J. STREET, M.A., LL.B.
J. C. STREET.
J. E. STRONG.
W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
LUCKING TAVENEY.
FELIX TAYLOR, B.A.
EDWARD TESCHENMACHER.
E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.
J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.
JAMES L. THORNELLY.
C. B. UPTON, B.A., B.Sc.
DOUGLAS WALMSLEY, B.A.
FRANK WALTERS.
GEORGE WALTERS.
MRS. HUMPHRY WARD.
J. WARSCHAUER, M.A., Ph.D.
W. WHITAKER, B.A.
P. H. WICKSTEED, M.A.
S. FLETCHER WILLIAMS.
J. REMINGTON WILLIAMS, M.A.
MRS. J. R. WILSON.
JOSEPH WOOD.
A. W. WORTHINGTON, B.A.
J. J. WRIGHT.

Other friends have contributed, who do not allow their names to appear, and many more, not by writing but by constant support and generous encouragement, have done their part, to make THE INQUIRER a welcome messenger and a true bond of union in our religious community. We will trust that the coming year may be richer still in achievement, that so far as our work is concerned the century may be worthily completed, and we shall be able to gird up our strength with joyful confidence and humble trust for the better time to come.

SUBSCRIPTIONS to THE INQUIRER for the New Year become due on Jan. 1, and we must once more thank those friends who generously subscribe for copies to be sent to Free Libraries. More than one friend who thus helped in the distribution of a considerable number of copies has recently been taken from us by death, and we will venture to hope that others may come forward with like tokens of sympathy and willingness to extend the field of THE INQUIRER's usefulness. There is a tradition still clinging, we believe, to THE INQUIRER in certain quarters, from the old days when it cost five-pence, that it is a paper to be read, and then passed on from one household to another. That is good, and was in the old expensive days exemplary; but is there not a better way? Now that we boldly face the world for a penny, we should say that five copies instead of one might find their way to the several households, and so remain in evidence, and be able to take advantage of many more opportunities of quiet service.

NEXT week we look forward to the coming of the New Year, but not of a new century. The authority of the Pope, we understand, is thrown on the other side (naturally the side contrary to reason), and all good Catholics are to begin the twentieth century with the last year of the nineteenth. So also decrees the Orthodox Protestant Church of Sweden, and on the Pope's side is, in this matter at least, Dr. R. F. Horton, who has issued through Messrs. James Clarke and Co. a booklet on "The Awe of the New Century," and recently preached at Lyndhurst-road a sermon on the same subject. Replying in the Christian World to some astonished and indignant critics, Dr. Horton says that the reckoning of our era is a matter of convention, since it would seem most likely that Jesus was actually born in the year 4 A.D. (we thought it was in the year 4 B.C.), so that to be strict the new century should begin in 1904. But we cannot break away from our conventions, and for our own part we hold to the convention that a century is composed of a hundred years.

The first century, therefore, began with the year one and ended with the first hundred. The nineteenth century began with the year 1801 and ends with the year 1900.

THE coming year, 1900, being the last year of the nineteenth century, it is natural that our thoughts should turn back to consider the gains of the past hundred years, and through appreciation of what has been achieved that we should brace ourselves for fresh efforts in the coming era. To this end we propose throughout the year to reserve some space in THE INQUIRER for a series of special articles dealing with some of the great questions of paramount religious interest. Thus the Rev. W. E. Addis has undertaken to contribute some articles on the "Progress of Old Testament Studies during the Century," the Rev. J. L. Carpenter will write on the "Progress of the Comparative Study of Religions," the Rev. C. B. Upton on Movements of Philosophic Thought, especially as affecting Religion," the Rev. G. St. Clair on the "Progress of Science, and its significance for Religion." Other special articles on similar lines are also promised, and we have good hope of securing others from those best fitted to deal with the subjects—on the "Progress of New Testament Studies, with special reference also to recent Lives of Christ," and on "Movements in the Roman Catholic and Anglican Churches, and in the Greater Nonconformist Bodies," as well as on the history of our own churches.

LADY O'HAGAN leaves England for South Africa at the end of this week. Her son, Lord O'Hagan, has been ordered to the front, and she hopes to be of some use to the sick and the suffering out there.

"PEOPLE at home cannot imagine the hardships here just now, and yet I am glad I am in it," so writes one of the multitude of brave women who are nursing our sick and wounded soldiers in South Africa. Many are the English men and women who are saying to themselves to-day, "I am sorry I am not in it; sorry, since I cannot hinder this dreadful war, that it is not allowed one to share the toil and suffering it inflicts upon my brothers and sisters." We hear of one of our ministers who is taking advantage of the fact of his having always been a moderate drinker, to associate himself in some slight degree with the privations of soldiers and nurses, by becoming a total abstainer as long as the war lasts. We cannot express much sympathy with him in his temporary self-denial, which we believe will be very beneficial to his own health; but we would, nevertheless, commend his example to others who are similarly inclined, and feel self-indulgence almost a sin, while so many are in want. Perhaps if they once make a beginning they will find total abstinence so good that they will not leave it off, even to celebrate the return of peace.

In answer to the recent appeal of Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman to temperance reformers, the following manifesto has been issued:—

"Accepting Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman's speech at Manchester on Nov. 15 as a declaration of the intention of the leaders of the Liberal party to place in the forefront of their proposals for immediate legislation on their return to power a measure of temperance reform embodying the principal recommendations of Lord Peel's report, including giving direct popular control to Scotland and Wales, and believing that such an enactment would 'undoubtedly work immense good immediately, and pave the way for effecting a future and more complete reform,' we welcome the announcement, and commend to temperance electors the policy it embodies as worthy of their support at the next General Election, W. S. Caine, ex-M.P.; H. J. Wilson, M.P.; R. A. Allison, M.P.; Thomas Burt, M.P.; John Wilson, M.P. (Dur.); R. Souttar, M.P.; John Colville, M.P.; J. Herbert Roberts, M.P.; John Wilson, M.P. (Govan); W. Crossfield, ex-M.P.; F. Maddison, M.P.; J. Rowntree, ex-M.P.; D. Lloyd-George, M.P.; S. Woods, M.P.; Dr. R. Spence Watson; Rev. Charles Garrett; George White (Alderman and J.P., Norwich); R. Cameron, M.P.; F. A. Channing, M.P.; Dean F. W. Farrar; Rev. Dr. Alex. McLaren; Canon W. Barker; Rev. Dr. J. Clifford; Canon Edward Lee Hicks; Rev. G. F. Aked; J. Herbert Lewis, M.P.; Samuel Pope, Q.C.; Rev. Hugh Price Hughes; A. Guthrie (Liverpool); Thomas P. Whittaker, M.P."

PREACHING at Croydon on the morning of Dec. 10, on occasion of the twenty-ninth anniversary of the Free Christian Church, the Rev. J. Page Hopps spoke of that which took them down to the foundations of the Church itself—the sacred duty of personal thought and of personal loyalty to it; and for text he took Romans xiv. 5: "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind."

"That," he said, "ought to be an antiquated commonplace; but it is the statement of present duty. It ought to be esteemed a privilege too precious to be neglected; but it is a piece of work that few undertake and fewer still accomplish; and the failure, though so unquestionable, is hidden from most men's eyes; so much so indeed, that thousands who have hardly begun to be really persuaded in their own minds are under the delusion that they have accomplished the task. They have prejudices, or ideas that have been put into them, just as you can put a document in a drawer; and yet they imagine their opinions are their own. In reality, they have never investigated, have never known the luxury or the pain of really independent thought, have never dared to face all sides or to hear all opinions: they are led by custom, and they delude themselves that they are going their own way."

In the course of the sermon Mr. Hopps spoke of the influence of antiquity, as follows:—

"Infatuated by the plea of inspiration, modern man has consented, to an enormous extent, to vacate his own throne, that he may go and prostrate himself before a throne that only marks an empire of mind that has really passed away. Forgetting the splendid truth that man is man, in whatever age he lives, and that the God of one time must be the God of all times, he has foolishly consented to self-banishment from God and to self-mutilation: for he has not only driven himself from the presence of the ever-inspiring God, but he has for the time destroyed the faculty of hearing Him. With strange alacrity to degrade the age in which he lives, he seeks in the past for all religious truth. No more does God come near to man, he thinks; no longer does the Divine Spirit woo the human spirit, and bless it with fresh revealings. The feast of God is a feast of ancient crumbs and dried Eastern fruits; and the message of the great All-Father is written in an unknown tongue. . . . And yet, all the while, God is our God as much as ever He was any one's God; and the world is His now as truly as ever it was; and the ears of corn, and the sunlight, and the clouds, and the mountains, and the trees, and the grasses, and the stars, and the faces of little children, and the eyes and hearts of good women and good men are as truly a revelation from Him as ever they were; and the world is older, and richer in experience, than ever it was, and we need God as much as ever."

At the conclusion of his sermon Mr. Hopps made this final appeal:—

"For the powers of your own nature you, then, are responsible; no one can live for you, no one can die for you, no one can answer for you. Therefore in the presence of God your Maker, I bid you rise up to the sacred responsibilities of life; and, being fully persuaded in your own mind, see to it that you do the best things you know, and that you are faithful to the best things you do, mindful ever of this, that it is useless to know and vain to be persuaded, unless you are loyal to the knowledge and the conviction. And truly, in that we may find the whole duty of man.

"It is for this, then, we stand on the intellectual side of this Church's life. There are other and perhaps higher issues, but, on the intellectual side, we bear witness to the supremacy of the personal conscience and reason, both as a solemn duty and a sacred right. I offer no apology, then, for this Church. On the contrary, I say it is the Church of the advance guard; and it is a great honour to belong to it. We are the pioneers, though we are in no way worthy of our great trust. We are the pioneers. Any reed shaken with the wind can bend its head to the blast. It takes a live man to go on his way in spite of it: to go on his way, I say, and to show the world the way in which all presently must go."

THE work entailed upon a member of the London School Board is partly made known to the general public by the annual return of attendances at Board and Committee meetings, which is published in December of each year. We observe from the return which has been issued this week that the Hon. E. L. Stanley, the vice-chairman of the Board, attended 512 meetings. No one else comes anywhere near this figure. Mr. Graham Wallas was present at 253 meetings, Sir Charles Elliott at 250, the Rev. W. Copeland

Bowie comes next with 228 attendances. We understand that owing to the increase and pressure of the work of the B. and F.U.A., Mr. Bowie does not intend to offer himself for re-election next November. He will then have served on the Board for a period of twelve years. During the existence of the present Board, he has occupied the position of Chairman of the School Accommodation and Attendance Committee.

REV. B. F. DE COSTA, says the Christian Register, who recently resigned the rectorship of the Protestant Episcopal Church of St. John the Evangelist in New York, was formally received into the Roman Catholic Church last Sunday. In a statement which Dr. De Costa is to issue in justification of his conversion the former rector holds, in effect, that the Roman Catholic Church is the only Church which maintains a logical and correct attitude with regard to the interpretation of the Bible. During the recent controversy over the ordination of Dr. Briggs as a clergyman of the Episcopal Church, Dr. De Costa took a strong ground against Bishop Potter, of New York, and threatened to have the bishop tried before an ecclesiastical court if he should ordain Dr. Briggs. It will be remembered that Dr. De Costa also opposed with some asperity the confirmation of the late Phillips Brooks as bishop of Massachusetts. After the Briggs controversy had been closed by the definite action of Bishop Potter in ordaining Dr. Briggs, Dr. De Costa resigned from his rectorship, and later completely severed his connection with the Protestant Episcopal Church. Inasmuch as Dr. De Costa is married, he cannot take orders in the Roman Catholic Church, but will devote himself to literary pursuits.

THE following is the inscription on the tablet to which we recently referred, erected in the Highgate Unitarian Christian Church:—

Erected by the members of his congregation in affectionate memory of
ROBERT SPEARS,
Founder and first pastor of this church.

Here he ministered during the last fourteen years of a life that was occupied throughout in disseminating at home and in foreign lands, by his voice, his counsels, his writings, and his example, the simple Christianity of the New Testament.

Born 25th September, 1825.

Died 25th February, 1899.

"He put on righteousness as a breast-plate, and was clad with zeal."—Isaiah lix. 17.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c., received from the following:—H. W.; W. L.; J. P.; E. T.; R. J. C.; J. S.; H. R.; J. H.; E. C. J.; H. S. J.; E. M. C. S.; J. W.

EPSP'S COCOA. The most nutritious.

EPSP'S COCOA. Grateful and comforting.

EPSP'S COCOA For breakfast and supper.

EPSP'S COCOA. With natural flavour only.

EPSP'S COCOA. From the finest brands.

LITERATURE.

THE AGE OF WYCLIFFE.*

MR. TREVELYAN'S book takes its place at once among the few academical essays which are real contributions to our literature. Originally written as a dissertation to be sent in by the author when competing for his fellowship at Trinity College, Cambridge, it has been modified in the direction of the general reader by the omission of some special discussions and the modernising of quoted passages. The result is altogether excellent. Mr. Trevelyan wields the family pen, which is that of the ready writer, and there is not a dull page in the book. Whether the reader's dominant interest be in the direction of England's religion or her poetry, her social and municipal life or her foreign relations, he will certainly find much illumination in Mr. Trevelyan's brilliant narrative, and derive much aid to his own studies from the author's copious citations of contemporary documents and chronicles; and he will rise from the perusal of this work with at least four distinct pictures in his mind. He will realise as never before the England of the Peasants' Rising, the London of Sir William Walworth, the Oxford of Wycliffe, and the nature and extent of post-Wycliffian Lollardy.

The Peasants' Rising of 1381 marks the effort of the villeins, who were serfs under the manorial system, to emerge into a state of free contract, and their resentment of the attempts made to prop up the old régime which was gradually falling into decay. Its decline was not entirely due to the serf. He was a tenant at the bottom end of the feudal system; bound to the soil, but tilling his own patch of ground, and rendering fixed services to the estate in part payment of his rent. Sometimes he bought his freedom with the gains of his industry, sometimes he ran away and began life anew in another district as a free labourer. The villein who was thriving found it to his advantage to pay an increased money rent for liberation from his compulsory service. The bailiff of the estate found that on his side it was often more advisable to engage a free labourer—for example in the case of the herdman, who was required to give all his time to the care of the cattle; and, further, that in the case of special work requiring skill, such as ploughing and reaping, it answered better to let the villein pay for exemption, and contract with others for the necessary labour. Such was the state of things when, in the middle of the reign of Edward III., the country was swept by the terrible plague known as the Black Death, which destroyed nearly half the population. The consequent scarcity of labour naturally produced a rise of wages. In vain the king ordered that rates of payment should remain as they had been. "Canute's proverbial" ordinance was scarcely more futile." In vain the Parliament passed the Statute of Labourers of 1349, and confirmed it and increased the penalties under it in many succeeding years. By this Act, an attempt was made not only to fix a bare legal wage, which was in many cases below the amount which the labourer had received for some years passed, but also to keep down the rise in the price of provisions consequent on the admitted scarcity of labour. Procedure was instituted alike against a labourer who took more than the fixed wage, and against a landowner or bailiff who was glad to pay the larger sum, rather than see his crop left rotting on the ground; and an effort was made to suppress rudimentary trades' unions or combinations that supported the individual labourer in his demand for the higher rate. The only effect of such policy was to take the man from the land; the villein and the free labourer alike left the country side and found refuge in the town, where the merchant or tradesman was as short of hands as the farm bailiff. To obtain the legalisation of the state of affairs that actually existed, or was evidently coming into being, was the main object of the Peasants' Rising. Mr. Trevelyan strongly protests against the most current misrepresentation of its aims:—

The attempt to picture the Rising as a communistic movement ignores the plainest facts. It was, as far as the bulk of the peasantry was concerned, a rising to secure freedom from the various forms and degrees of servitude that still oppressed them severally. . . . Personal freedom, and the commutation of all servitude for a rent of 4d. an acre, were the very practical demands then made; when this had been granted, most of the rebels went home (p. 197).

The Rising was not the despairing effort of a starving peasantry. It was an attempt to get legal recognition of a betterment that was to a large extent actual. The poll tax voted by the Parliament at Northampton towards the end of the year 1380 was merely the occasion, and not the cause, of the Rising. It was the third of such special exactions within four years. Its very imposition recognised the fact that the labouring classes had money. They were required to pay for unpopular wars that had ended in disaster and national disgrace; and they believed both the exaction and the expenditure to be marked by gross corruption. The enforcement of the tax under circumstances that seemed unusually harsh and arbitrary led to concerted action on the part of labourers' unions that had spread from county to county, and were incorporated in a "Great Society." Within one fortnight of June 1381, the Rising spread from the home counties northward to Yorkshire, and westward to Somerset.

If the peasants' movement was not consciously communistic, had early Lollardism, which seems to have been interwoven with the popular cause, this distinctive character? On this question Mr. Trevelyan's statements are explicit. It is possible that the men who were influencing the mind of the people may have made their own application of Wycliffe's doctrine of Dominion to the questions of the day. But Wycliffe himself was at this time very far from any condemnation of lay-lordship. In fact, he was exalting the powers of the temporal lords in order to minimise that of the Church. He complains at a later date that his missionaries were wrongfully charged with making political applications of his doctrines. "Some men that ben out of charity slander Poor Priests with this error, that servants or tenants may lawfully withhold rents or services from their lords when lords ben openly wicked in their living." But the smoke was not entirely without a fire.

As was only natural, popular missionaries, drawn from the people, speaking to the people, and depending on the people for alms, were influenced by popular ideas. They failed to make Wycliffe's distinction between secular and clerical property. He meant them to preach against the payment of tithes, and they condemned the performance of villein services as well; he meant them to denounce the riches of a corrupt Church, and they introduced into their anathemas the riches of a corrupt aristocracy. A hostile satirist thus speaks of their double influence:—

All stipends they forbid to give
And tithes whereon poor curates live.
From sinful lords their dues they take;
Bid serfs their services forsake.

Such men were firebrands, and they set light to one stack more than Wycliffe wished. But they were, most of them, not the real Wycliffite missionaries. The Lollards, who were brought to trial by the Church for spreading his heretical doctrines, were in no single case accused of having had hand or part in the Peasants' Rising. Similarly the indictments of the rebels contain no hint of heresy. The rebellion was not a Lollard movement, although some of the agitators were influenced by some of Wycliffe's ideas. This alone is certain; but it is not unlikely also that some of his own Poor Priests entered with more zeal than wisdom into the movement for abolishing serfage (p. 290).

The rebels marched on London, and we need not follow the story of their brief triumph, their stupid violence, and the terrible retribution that overtook them. But the account which Mr. Trevelyan gives of the local politics of London during the years immediately following the Rising is particularly interesting. The city magnates were of two parties, the King's friends, and the Duke's friends (i.e. the party of John of Gaunt). On the former side were the victualling trades, led by Sir William Walworth, fishmonger, and Nicholas Brembre, grocer, both of whom had served the King well in the perilous days of the occupation of the city by the mob. On the opposite side were the clothing trades, led by John of Northampton, draper, who in 1381 succeeded Walworth in the mayoralty, and was re-elected for a second term. He not only cut down the profits of the victuallers by a series of ordinances fixing the prices of provisions, but he forbade them to hold office in the city, which was for a time ruled by an oligarchy of clothiers. The champion of cheap food was popular, and would have been re-elected for a third year, if the King had not interfered, and by a violent onslaught on the clothing guilds secured the election of Brembre. John and his party held secret meetings, and relying on the support of the Duke, encouraged open agitation against his rival. He was charged with plotting against the King. Some curious inquisitions in the case are printed among the documents in the supplementary volume (pp. 27 seqq.). John and his principal supporters were sentenced to imprisonment in various castles: "The leader himself was carried off to Tintagel, to listen on its lonely rock to the booming tides and screaming gulls, and to pine for the green banks of Thames." As long as the King's support availed, Brembre was re-elected and the victuallers were triumphant. When Richard fell, his nominee fell with him; all the clothing

* "England in the Age of Wycliffe." By George Macaulay Trevelyan. Longmans. 15s.

"The Peasants' Rising and the Lollards: A Collection of Unpublished Documents." Edited by Edgar Powell and G. M. Trevelyan. Longmans. 6s. net.

trades petitioned for his punishment, and he was executed in 1388.

From the year of the Peasants' Rising, we may date the beginning of a new era in the religious history of England. In Wycliffe's earlier attacks on the abuses of Papal power, in his view of the spiritual character of the true Church, and his onslaught on the worldliness of the clergy, he had appeared as the champion of the Crown against the aggression of the Holy See, and as the protégé of John of Gaunt, who had favoured a large scheme for the disendowment of the Church. But now Wycliffe, by his denial of Transubstantiation, had passed into distinctly theological heresy, and John of Gaunt would no longer shield him if he could. The alliance of Church and King, which was to be cemented by the House of Lancaster, was already inaugurated, and the blood of the Primate-Chancellor, Sudbury, slain by the rebels, gave a kind of "consecration to the cause. His successor, Courtenay, fortified by the decrees of the "Earthquake" synod and an ordinance of Parliament, proceeded in 1382 to put down the preachers of Lollardy with a strong hand. His action, following as it does close upon the merciless suppression of the Rising, and especially the avenging campaign of Bishop Spencer in the Eastern counties, might again tempt us to surmise that it was as a political danger—as a survival of the social theory of the "great society" and its adherents (if they had such a theory), that Lollardy was to be extirpated. But again Mr. Trevelyan warns us against such identification:—

It would be a mistake to suppose that the persecution of 1382 and the following years was not essentially religious. It was conducted in the Church Courts, the charges were charges of doctrinal heresy, the accused were religious missionaries, not agitators such as John Ball, and the principal question at issue was the right of the heretics to hold their new doctrine of Consubstantiation. This heresy of Wycliffe's instantly absorbed public attention and became the centre of controversy. It shocked the great supporters who had stood by him when he merely attacked Church privilege. John of Gaunt repudiated such a wicked and blasphemous conception of the Eucharist in language which probably was sincere. This doctrine, combined with the general suspicion of revolutionary tendencies, alienated the nobles and the Court. The Lollardy of the eighties, unlike the Wycliffism of the seventies, was not a political attack on clerical privilege with a chance of immediate success, but a new religion that could be tested only in the slow crucible of time (p. 293).

The new alliance of Church and King had its most striking and immediate success in the capture of Oxford for the orthodox party. The University had long been divided between two parties, the seculars who stood for the life that was academic, and the regulars who represented the life that was monastic. The former were the champions of Arts as against a purely theological curriculum, and had the support of the motley crowd of undergraduates who led a strange Bohemian life in the halls and inns (a small proportion only being gathered under collegiate discipline), as against the great monastic schools which stood without the city walls as fortresses of the Church menacing the independence of the University. Wycliffe's attack on the Papacy was pleasing to the seculars, for the monks, and still more the friars (that is, the mendicant orders), were regarded as the agents of the Holy See; no less pleasing was his denunciation of lordly prelates, for the seculars were equally jealous of episcopal visitations and interference with academical self-government. The Peasants' Rising was the occasion—not, as one might have anticipated, of an attack on the party of Wycliffe as favourers of social revolution, but—of an attack made by the Wycliffites upon the friars as men who set class against class, and whose doctrine of poverty was dangerous to all property and all vested interests. The Chancellor, Rygge, favoured the seculars, and even gave countenance to the contention of their champion, Nicholas Hereford, that the regulars ought to be excluded from degrees. The monks and friars appealed to the Archbishop, who was glad to have an opportunity of laying his hand upon the affairs of Oxford. Beneath two Royal mandates (one of which ordered the banishment within seven days of Wycliffe, and the chief preachers of his doctrine), and a meeting of Convocation of the province of Canterbury at Oxford, which really amounted to the holding of an episcopal court for the suppression of heresy, most of the Wycliffites submitted and recanted; and the University was captured by the bishops. To this and to its consequence, that Wycliffe in his few remaining years consciously turned from the University to the people, is to be ascribed the fact that the second generation of Lollardy was not recruited from the schools, and that throughout the fifteenth century the "Biblemen" and "Gospellers" were identified with a mistaken contempt for learning.

We have left ourselves too little space for due reference to a highly important section of Mr. Trevelyan's work in which he deals with the post-Wycliffian Lollards, and their missionary operations, spreading out from "the three cradles of Lollardy, in the neighbourhood of Leicester, the west of England, and the capital." We must content ourselves with insisting upon the significance of the evidence he lays before us. And this especially because the influence of a dominant school of Anglican historians is exerted to maintain the simple theses, that in the Reformation period all that is national and all that is continuous is Catholic; and that all that is Protestant is of foreign importation, and traceable to Luther or to Zwingli. Consequently, Lollardy, and the awkward fact of its continuous history, is contemptuously dismissed with a word, and the word is always one which is intended to label the Lollard as a mere social rebel, and his cause as one having no religious significance. For example, Mr. Aubrey Moore tells us that "Lollardy and its communistic and socialistic principles had largely affected the mass of the people. The attack on property was however veiled by a pretended desire for the purity of the Church, though the attack on the ecclesiastical corporations implied an attack on property generally." (Reformation, p. 95.) Similarly Mr. Wakerman: "The Lollards were essentially not a party of Church reformers, but of political revolutionaries. They were the levellers of the middle ages—half fanatics, half communists." What proportion, we would ask, of the charges and articles preserved to us in the Fasciculus Zizaniorum can be adduced in support of such statements, compared with the number that have reference to the doctrine of the Eucharist, to images and pilgrimages? Not one in a hundred. Examine the half-dozen allegations that refer to ecclesiastical property, and what do they amount to? One charge against Purvey (the survivor of the actual companions of Wycliffe) is very circumstantial. He is accused of saying that the King could support an entire army, fifteen universities, and 15,000 efficient clergy, out of property actually held by those who were neither good priests nor good landlords. W. Whyte (1428) agrees with Purvey that temporal lordships should be taken from bishops and given to knights; and we meet with the opinion that bishops should not hold offices of state. Swynderby abjured his opinion that tithes are pure alms, and should not be paid to an unworthy clerk; and further, that a priest who bargains for a salary is simoniacal; in which last view Richard Wyche concurred. We believe this fairly represents the evidence of the Fasciculus. Not a word affecting property or endowments is adduced against Sir John Oldcastle, though suspicion of social revolution would surely have been attached to his abortive rising if there had been the slightest evidence to justify it. And yet the Lollards are persistently represented by the school to which I have referred as "the troublesome sect which attacked the bases of society and questioned the bases of government." (Wakerman.) Does anybody suppose that this is a fair description of the "Biblemen" to whom, in the very middle of the fifteenth century, Reginald Pecock addressed his Repressor? Of the five parts of this lengthy work, one only is devoted to the question of the lawfulness of ecclesiastical endowments, and Pecock himself tells us that the Lollards themselves are not at one in thinking they ought to be altogether taken away: some hold that they should be forfeited only if the clergy misuse them; and he likens them to a house divided against itself. The so-called Apology for Lollard Doctrines (certainly, we think, a post-Wycliffian work), to which Pecock appears to make frequent reference, maintains thirty propositions, not one of which has anything to do with property or with political or social questions. On this matter, Mr. Trevelyan's summing-up appears to us to be absolutely just and conclusive:—

If, at the time of the Peasants' Rising, any of the Lollard preachers, misrepresenting or disregarding Wycliffe's opinions, had attacked lay property and the rights of the manor lords, they soon ceased to do so. We possess reports of the proceedings against scores of Lollards, the items of indictment mount up to many hundreds, yet I have been able to find, between the years 1382 and 1520, only one case of a Lollard accused of holding communistic theories, and not a single case of a Lollard charged with stirring up the peasantry to right their social wrongs (pp. 339-40).

And further, our author presents us with a view of Lollardy, as a continuous religious protest which may be set over against the technical continuity of the Church of England, and as playing its part in the England of the Reformation, which he summarises at the end of his book with very judicial moderation.

The importance of Lollardy cannot be estimated merely by the number of ready recruits for the battle of the Reformation which it supplied from its own ranks. . . . The great mass of Englishmen, who were still hostile or indifferent to the new doctrine, were compelled to realise that there existed other forms of religion besides the regular mediæval Christianity, a truth horrible and appalling until it became customary. Thus the ideas of Luther and Latimer did not come to Englishmen in all the shocking violence of novelty, since here the doctrines of Lollardry had been common talk ever since 1380. The doctrinal and ritual reformation of religion in England was not a work of the sixteenth century alone. The difference between the religious beliefs of an average layman at the time of the gunpowder plot and those of his ancestor in the age of Crécy, was so profound that the change cannot have been wrought in a generation, still less by a Court intrigue. The English mind moves slowly, cautiously, and often silently. The movement in regard to forms of religion began with Wycliffe, if it began no earlier, and reached its full height, perhaps not a hundred years ago. England was not converted from Germany; she changed her own opinion, and had begun that process long before Wittenberg or Geneva became famous in theological controversy. If we take a general view of our religious history, we must hold that English Protestantism had a gradual and mainly regular growth. (pp. 350-1).

These are truths which never needed re-stating more than at present, and we are grateful to Mr. Trevelyan for emphasising them. J. E. ODGERS.

NEW YEAR'S EVE.

As watchers, worn with night-long vigils, stand
Beside an open window, with the glow
Of ruddy sunrise on their brows, and know
That day is broadening surely through the land,
We fling the lattice of our century wide
To greet the coming era; and our lips,
With sober gladness touched, from grief's eclipse
Emerge, hope's glorious coming to abide.
O unconjectured Year! bring, if thou wilt,
The stormy blasts of March—extremest heat
Of summer—autumn's stressful airs and rain;
But let the lark's free song and throstle's lilt
Ring louder in our ears than warfare's strain,
And love—not battle—make our dull hearts beat.

LAURA G. ACKROYD.

A PRAYER.

Oh! Providence, that careth
For us thy myriad fold,
In peace preserve, from harm defend,
Those whom our memories hold.
Oh! Wisdom, that designeth
What our best meed shall be,
Dispose our minds, incline our hearts
To heed thy Majesty.
Oh! Sovereign Love, that blesseth
The world and human kind,
'Twixt souls akin let nought descend
To loose the ties that bind.
Oh! Father, God, who beareth
With wayward heart and will,
Thy grace, which strength and peace imparts
Continue to us still. K. R. C.

THE SPIRIT AND THE INCARNATION.*

AN element of biographical interest, apart from any distinctive merits of its own, entitles this book to a notice in the pages of THE INQUIRER. The Introduction tells us that the author, when a Unitarian minister, felt the inadequacy of the theology he represented, and, as the result of further study and of practical need, he was "led back to that full Evangelical Faith in which he rejoices to-day."

Mr. Walker's statement that an acceptance of the gospel of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man has led to agnosticism, though doubtless true in particular instances, fails to convince us of the inadequacy of such a gospel when believed. What the author means is that such a gospel, apart from any historical incarnation of its truths, is difficult of belief. He even suggests (p. 100) that the immanence of God is not seen till, following the Divine order of development, we come to Jesus Christ, and proceeds to ask, "Can we think of God as being verily in the cosmic vapour, or the whirling fiery ball, or the developing organic word, where the

'Dragons of the prime

. . . tare each other in their slime'?"

and answers with an emphatic "No; surely we cannot see God there."

Such questions and answers remind one of the profane paradox, "There is no God; but Jesus Christ is His Son," and we are tempted hastily to conclude that the "full Evangelical Faith" here represented is after all only a sentimental agnosticism which, being too sceptical to believe, is nevertheless urged by "practical need" to make believe.

This, however, would be a violent caricature of the author's argument. Taking historical Christianity as a datum, he would have us read back its contents even into the firemists, and interpret the root in the fragrance of the blossom. He sets out with the inquiry, "What is Christianity?" and after an examination of the Scriptures, taking Paul first, because his Epistles are first in time, he concludes that "the Holy Spirit is the great and distinctive thing." In this he agrees with Dr. Drummond, whom he quotes:—

Whatever may be its source, whatever its channel of communication, whatever the implicit thought on which it rests, whatever the duties or the worship which it requires, I regard the presence of this mighty and transforming Spirit as the fundamental and permanent fact in Christianity ("Via, Veritas, Vita," pp. 8, 9).

But our author does not rest here. He must answer the further question, "What is this Spirit?" Although it comes to us in impersonal ethical and spiritual influences, it includes the personal presence of Christ and the grace and help of God coming to us through him. "It is through union with the personal Christ we find God, and are enabled to live our life toward Him as His children." We can know nothing of God save as He reveals Himself. Whilst Nature reveals Him as the Infinite Reason, "it cannot reveal the moral qualities of God, for the simple reason that it is not moral till man is reached." "All will acknowledge, at least, that, as matter of history, God, in the full ethical truth of His Fatherhood and in the certainty of His Love, was not known till He was revealed in Christ." Apart from His self-revelation in Christ, men cannot gain a satisfying and sufficient knowledge of God, and although His revelation of Himself and actual entrance into our life must, in the nature of things, be progressive, yet this attained its culmination in Christ. While the author earnestly maintains the supreme reality of God, he would have us take Him as He reveals Himself and comes into communion with us.

If we do not see God there, we will not see Him anywhere. . . . In and through Christ, God gives us that knowledge of Himself we needed so much, and reveals His presence with us as Personal. In Christ He has entered our life in an abiding personal form. In Christ, and in Christ alone, we have the needed revelation of God and of man completely given.

Such is the basis of the argument—a basis which in modified form an increasing number of Unitarians accept. But it is surely not necessary to blind ourselves to the self-revelation of God in Nature, in humanity and especially in great spiritual heroes, before we can see the supreme grace and beauty of the "Master of all who love." On the contrary, it would seem that the wider we extend the horizon of our spiritual vision the more glorious becomes the Personality of Christ. Nor does it appear true to say that in Christ and in Christ alone we have the needed revelation of God and of man completely given.

It is a piece of sheer recklessness to attempt to dogmatise on the potentialities of man's nature and on the future Providence of God. There is, moreover, apart from Christ and Christianity, a Revelation of God that is of permanent worth, and it is only by denying this, or making it provisional or meaningless, that we can make that literally "complete." Are we warranted in saying that the Christian Revelation, though in the light of our present knowledge and experience it seems unsurpassable, was given "once and for all" without possibility of further and fuller revelation in the future? Is not this to impose upon God the limitations of our human conceptions? Be this as it may, it is on such a strictly unique and insular foundation that our author rears a superstructure of "new orthodoxy" in a way that gives one the uncomfortable notion of a pyramid perilously balanced on its point.

We have used up our space and cannot even in outline trace that theology here. Nor is it necessary, for its characteristic features are quite familiar. We have a pronounced doctrine of the Atonement in which, however, the "righteousness provided by God for man in Christ is both a justifying and a real actual Righteousness . . . for there can be no fictions with God." It is not claimed, however, that all sincere Evangelicals have, therefore, this complete Righteousness, for "it does not follow that it shall be reached in its fulness by all in this life." The doctrine of the Trinity is also accepted, but in a form admittedly dependent upon Dr. Martineau's "Way out of the Trinitarian Controversy."

Although we have read the book from cover to cover, we have failed to see any adequate reason for its publication. The same theology has been frequently and better expressed before. It has its interest and its value, and should compel Unitarians to "consider it again," and ask themselves whether they have put sufficient emphasis upon the Personality of Jesus; whether [a more sympathetic and receptive attitude towards historical Christianity would not result in a deeper and truer spiritual life, and make it unnecessary for men of the author's temperament to leave our theology to accept another which they wear with every evidence of awkward embarrassment. Throughout this book there is much candour and earnestness. The physically miraculous goes for nothing, but of the spiritual contents of Christianity Mr. Walker is scrupulously and tenaciously conservative. In his zeal for re-construction he appears to give his facts many an artificial strain and ungainly twist, and the total effect of the work upon us is to prove that neither the author nor the theology he represents heeds the warning on p. 205.

* "The Spirit and the Incarnation in the Light of Scripture, Science and Practical Need." By the Rev. W. L. Walker, T. and T. Clark. 9s.

We must beware of confounding mere form with the underlying substance. Endeavours after a merely literal adherence to what we find in Paul and John ought surely never to blind our eyes to this difference; otherwise it is possible we may be found forcing ourselves to accept forms of thought which have no real influence on us, because they are not living elements in our own thinking.

If the author had been more attentive to his own voice in this paragraph he would perhaps have given us a more convincing apologia.

J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

A STUDY OF RELIGIONS.*

THIS work is a history of religion written from the Theosophical standpoint, hence a certain interest attaches to it apart from its scientific merits.

Of its three main divisions the first is a survey of Comparative Mythology, bringing out the remarkable resemblances among the various religions of the world in certain definite lines of ceremony, sacrament, and dogma. The writer endeavours to trace the underlying unity of the world's religions along these various lines: as in the idea of a Divine Saviour being born among men; the idea of a particular or general Resurrection, associated in some way with the vernal equinox; the idea of an ark or uniquely sacred vessel; in the various forms of solar symbolism; in the practices of fasts and fire-festivals; of sacraments and blood-covenants; in the symbolism of the Tree and the Branch; in the idea of a sacred Trinity. In the second division of his work he argues that we find the same underlying unity in those higher religions which have set forth a coherent body of theological and ethical doctrine in "scriptures." The facts are drawn from a wide and conscientious study of authorities; and they are interpreted in the light of the doctrines of Theosophy. The authorities consulted, though including some of the highest eminence, are evidently not all of equal value, and appear sometimes to be uncritically used; but all who do not regard the study of religions as a branch of the "pathology of the human mind" will accept the author's conclusion, so far as it implies that in the various forms of doctrine and myth mentioned above we must recognise fragmentary diversified and crude symbols of primary and fundamental truths.

Still, the peculiarities of the Theosophical point of view strongly mark the author's conception of history and evolution in general. The present writer has no intention of attempting to discuss Theosophy here, and still less of initiating any discussion on the subject in the columns of THE INQUIRER; but he may be permitted to state his conviction that while the system is well worth study, and enshrines many true and deeply significant ideas, even some which modern philosophers and theologians have overlooked, yet it falls into the error of fixing on what are only particular symbolic expressions of these principles, borrowed mainly from the higher teachings of Brahminism and Buddhism, and treating them as hard and fast truths; it involves what is in part a hopelessly uncritical version of history, and an equally uncritical view of the constitution of the natural world; and the peculiar features of its history and cosmology are to be accepted on the authority of the "occult" revelations of certain persons or agencies. Hence it sometimes has the appearance of a crude materialistic supernaturalism. The growth of human thought and morality is supposed to be guided by "adepts" under the influence of superhuman rational powers of various orders, emanating from the Supreme or Absolute Being. These "adepts" taught the nations symbolically; hence the resemblances in the different lines of symbolism found in the religions of the world. But the spiritual and materialistic notions of revelation—the insight of a Christ and the cataleptic trances of a fanatic—are mingled together in a most perplexing way.

The third division of his work the author devotes to the ultimate interpretation of some of the forms of symbolism which he has been tracing—in particular, the doctrine of a Trinity, the birth of a Saviour, and his death and resurrection. "Philosophic" interpretations of these and their related ideas have been numerous; they may be studied in German Theology from the time of Kant onwards. It scarcely need be said that, as regards the Trinity, these "interpretations" consist simply in explaining away every possible "orthodox" construction of the doctrine. In the Theosophic interpretations there is nothing of peculiar significance, and nothing very new to the attentive student of theological speculations.

S. H. MELLONE.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

I PROMISED to tell you this week about the answers to the question I asked before Christmas, as to whether our children and other friends really cared for this children's column. Well, up to last Tuesday, when I was obliged to go away from home, I had received nearly a hundred cards or letters or messages in reply, many of them from quite small children, others from elder ones, and others again from the parents, friends, or teachers of our children, and every one of them hoping that the column may not be given up. I never really thought it would have to be, but I wanted to be sure that a good many children really read it, or have it read to them, and to be able to assure the friends who so kindly help me with the talks from week to week, that the trouble they take is not wasted. It has been very pleasant to hear how much the column is enjoyed, and how useful it is found to be in many ways.

I don't want to exaggerate, but I think I may tell our friends who speak to you through this column, that they have quite 500 children listening to them every week, and very likely a great many more; for I am sure that a good many children who read the column have not replied, and those who have replied speak sometimes for whole families and sometimes for whole classes in Sunday-schools. So our friends may certainly feel that it is worth while.

Thank you all very much for writing as you have done, and a Happy New Year to you all!

EDITOR.

"THE IMAGE AND THE WRITING."

"Take heed, and beware of covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things that he hath."—Luke xii. 15.

I AM going to give you this morning an ancient story, told recently in verse by a modern singer who loved all things true and beautiful. I mean William Morris.

Long, long ago there stood in the city of Rome a statue made of wood. The right hand of the statue was outstretched like that of an orator addressing his hearers. On the forefinger of the hand, the index finger, as we call it, were inscribed in Latin the words Percute Hic, which being translated mean "Strike here." For two hundred years or more, the statue had stood there in the open square. People of all sorts, rich and poor, learned and simple, had passed beneath it, and many a one had paused and looked up and read the writing, "Strike here"; but not one as yet had been able to explain its meaning. At length there came one day a man from Sicily. The man was a scholar; he had travelled in Egypt and Babylon, he had studied science. He knew something, too, of sorcery and magic. He was learned, he was clever, but, as the story will shortly show, he was not wise. For between these two, cleverness and wisdom, there is the greatest difference. Day by day this clever needy scholar stood beneath the statue, gazing up at it and wondering what it meant. "Surely," he said to himself, "the artist who made that statue, and inscribed on it those words, must have had some purpose. There must surely be some mystery, some hidden meaning, underneath it all." "Perhaps," he said, "there is hidden some treasure there, some great store of silver or gold." So the man talked to himself, and every day he came to look up at the statue, until the people began to think he was mad. At last one day—one cloudy day—at noon, as he was gazing, the sun suddenly shone forth, and, of course, in consequence, the finger of the hand cast a shadow on the pavement beneath.

In an instant the man saw, or thought he saw, the secret. So, waiting a moment until he was unobserved, he took his knife, and with it drew a circle round the spot upon the pavement covered by the shadow and then went away.

* "The Great Law: a Study of Religious Origins and of the Unity underlying them." By W. Williamson, London: Longmans and Co. 14s.

At night when the streets were empty and the place was quiet he came again, bringing with him a pick and a shovel and a sack. First with the pick he lifted the stones of the pavement, then with his shovel he began to dig. Deeper and deeper he dug, making a hole in the road. After a while his shovel came to something hard, and looking down he found a stone and in the stone a ring. The ring was large enough to go round the wrist of a man, and though it was soiled and rusty, the man could see engraved upon it figures and devices; and when he looked at them he knew that they were impious, evil, and unholy things, and that they only boded misery and shame. But still he would go on, so lifting the stone by the ring he saw a larger hole, and beneath, a winding stairway of marble. Upon its walls were pictures, painted in many colours, of kings and queens and priests and warriors; and from them hung lamps that lighted the stairway. "Ah!" said the man, "there is treasure here, and I am going to find it." He did not say, "What right have I to go; are there none who have claims before me?" He did not even ask himself what good treasure would be to him, a scholar, and whether he would be happier or better for being rich. No; he said, "There's treasure here and I am going to find it." "I shall be," he said,

"The richest man in all the land;
Beside the best then shall I stand;
And some unheard-of palace have;
And if my soul I may not save
In heaven, yet here in all men's eyes
Will I make some sweet paradise,
With marble cloisters, and with trees,
And bubbling wells and fantasies,
And things all men deem strange and rare.

There dwelling happier than the king,
What lovely days may yet be mine?"

So down he went—down the winding, lighted stairway, until he reached a room below. Across the room was hung a curtain, above the heavy fringe of which, in red and gold, were letters the meaning of which the man could not understand. Behind this curtain there seemed to be some larger room. For a moment the man paused, awed by the stillness of the place; and as he did so, the wind, in a mighty hurricane, came sweeping down the winding stairs, extinguishing the lamps and all was dark. Trembling, the man still held the curtain in his hand. What should he do?

He had come for the treasure; he was sure it was there; the treasure he must have, whatever the cost. He would go forward. Then lifting that ponderous curtain, and drawing it in part aside, he saw before him a great hall! And it was light as day! And what seemed to the man strange was this, that the light came from no burning flame, but from a mighty stone—a wondrous carbuncle that hung high in the roof, and cast its light, as of a thousand lamps, over all the place.

Then at the end of this great hall this needy scholar saw a wondrous company. There was a king in his royal robes, his crown upon his head. Beside him was his queen; about her neck was a collar set with gems and precious stones, and around her waist a belt, thick with jewels. Besides these were lords in costly raiment; and behind these, servants waiting; and behind these, guards; and again behind these, minstrels. And on the table were goblets of gold, and dishes of silver and gold. Were they images or fiends, these strange figures? Drawing nearer, the man looked again. And lo! they were dead. The king was dead, the lords were dead, the servants were dead, the minstrels were dead. All were dead. And the man gazed at all the wondrous show, and he said to himself, "If I could but have the hundredth part of this I should be rich beyond compare, I should be satisfied." He forgot that a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things that he hath. One other strange thing the man beheld. Behind the king, some six paces away, there stood the image of a knight with a bow in his hand, the arrow of which was directed to the carbuncle.

At length the man, not without much trembling, reached the table and stood in front of that strange company. Then he undid his sack, and slowly he proceeded to fill it with the treasure. He took the crown from off the gray head of the old king, and the goblet that was held in his dead hand. He unloosed the collar from the slender neck of the queen, and the belt from her waist. He helped himself to the brooches and the rings of the dead lords. He swept the table of its vessels of silver and gold. His sack was almost full, and so heavy was it, that when he lifted it upon his shoulder, to carry it away, he staggered beneath the load. Now he was rich; and now he would be happy. So he turned to leave. But as he walked with his burden slowly down the hall, in front of him he saw embedded in the floor, a stone, green, lustrous, matchless alike in its beauty and its worth. More precious it seemed to him than all beside. He must have that. It would but take a moment to get. It would add nothing to the weight of his sack.

So the man knelt down upon the floor and began to work at this costly stone to loosen it, but work as he would it would not move. Hot and tired he pulled and pulled, and pulled again, but the stone would not stir. At that moment he heard, or thought he heard, a noise, and turning his head he saw—O! horror—that the knight behind the king had lifted his bow string to his ear and was about to let fly his arrow.

Terrified beyond measure, the man gave a shriek and, leaping to his feet, seized his sack and prepared to fly. But before he had taken one step the arrow had been shot. An instant more and the mighty carbuncle fell shivered in a thousand pieces, and in a moment all was dark as night. Into that strange, wondrous hall, so bright before, not one glimmer of light now made its way. Alarmed still more, the miserable man now tried to find the door, that through it he might regain the winding stairs. But not a single opening could he find.

Above him, as he knew, the day was breaking. Outside of that splendid, gilded, dungeon was there the clear, fresh morning light and the sweet, fresh morning air; and the stirrings of life, and the twitterings of the birds, and all the things that make life glad. And there was he shut up with his sack and his gems and his silver and his gold. He would have given them all if he could have changed places with the ragged little urchin who at that very moment was taking his morning wash at the fountain above. He would have given a king's ransom if it had been possible for him to take the place of the beggar man whom yesterday he had seen holding open the door of the great church for the people who passed in. But it could not be. And round and round that doleful hall, groping to find his way, did the man go in his despair, seeking, perchance, some way of escape, but none was to be found. In all that awful, gilded, marble wall there was not an opening large enough to take in so much as the blade of his knife.

During that night, though this foolish man had known it not, a storm had swept over the city, such as no man could remember. The lightning had burned the ancient statue and the rain had filled up the hole beneath. And when men asked, in the morning, where was the man from Sicily, or what had become of him, there was none could tell.

This old world story may seem to you very sad and terrible, almost perhaps too sad and terrible; but it is what is continually happening. "They that will be rich" at whatever cost, and whatever risk, "fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts which drown men in destruction and perdition." For the sake of money men lose what is worth more than money; and for the sake of gaining more they lose what they already have. Boys in shops and youths in offices bet and gamble, and then to cover their losses rob their masters' till or tamper with the cash. Men in high positions, church officers, and City officers, who have held their heads high for half a lifetime, that they may become a little richer than they are already, begin to speculate, and losing what they have, to recover themselves, practise fraud, and so bring themselves to prison and their families to shame. So also is it with nations.

Where, then, is the cure for this terrible disease of covetousness and greed? The cure is to be found in the remembrance of the teaching of Jesus—that "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things that he hath." What we need all of us—boys and men and nations—to remember is this, that there are things more precious than silver and gold, and houses and lands—a good conscience, a good name, the love and esteem of those about us, and, as the years go by, the remembrance of work well done and of a life well spent. Jesus was very poor. At times, he said, he had not where to lay his head, and certainly he left no silver and no gold behind; but he had what was far better than riches, a good conscience, void of offence towards God and man, the love of his Father in Heaven, and when the end arrived, the sense of having finished the work that his Father had given him to do. For Jesus not only taught, but knew that "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things that he hath."

One other word, let us remember—all of us—that behind the throne of the Eternal Power there always stands the knight with the uplifted bow and the arrow on the string. And if boys or men or nations will go on in sin, that armed knight is compelled at last to let fly his arrow. And at times it happens, as in our story, that the moment when that arrow flies is the very moment which to the man or the boy or the nation seems the moment of triumph and success.

JOHN BYLES.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any News-agent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are:—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER ...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR ...	3	4
PER YEAR ...	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE ...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE ...	2	10	0
PER COLUMN ...	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN ...	0	3	8
BACK PAGE ...	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6.

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, DECEMBER 30, 1899.

RETROSPECT OF THE YEAR 1899.

THE year which opened with a prophecy of hope, in expectation of the Peace Conference at The Hague, ends amid the tumult and the bitter disappointments of war.

Early in the year the President of the United States signed the terms of peace with Spain, and there seemed good reason to hope that so the last war of the century, in which a great civilised nation should engage, was ended; least of all did there seem any serious ground for apprehension that our Queen, who in May completed her eightieth year, would see the close of her reign darkened by such a war as that in which Great Britain is now engaged.

In answer to the Tsar's Rescript of Aug. 24, 1898, the Peace Conference met at The Hague in May, on the invitation of the young Queen of Holland, and under the presidency of Baron de Staal, the Russian Ambassador at London. All the great civilised Powers of the world took part in the Conference. This country was worthily represented by Sir Julian Pauncefote, our Ambassador at Washington, now Baron Pauncefote, and by Sir Henry Howard, our Minister at The Hague. The sittings were concluded in July, having been marked by great earnestness of purpose, and a serious grappling with the difficult problems taken in hand. The first suggestion of the Tsar's Rescript, that means should be devised to check the growth, if not actually to diminish the crushing weight of the nations' armaments, proved to be, for the present, impracticable; but in other directions real progress was made, the Brussels rules of land warfare being revised, and a naval Red Cross convention being drawn up, while the great achievement of the Conference was in the advancement of the cause of Arbitration.

As to this, we will quote the summary of the Concord "History of the Peace Conference":—

A three-fold project of Investigation, Mediation, and Arbitration, applicable to all sorts of international disputes, defining jurisdiction and procedure, providing the permanent machinery of a bureau, an administrative council, and a tribunal, has been unanimously adopted. In the heart of the project, the Permanent Court clauses, Sir Julian Pauncefote's plan was adopted with amendments of phraseology and a few unimportant additions. The proposal of Commissions of Inquiry and large parts of the procedure for arbitration and mediation were due to Russia; while the United States is to be credited with the novel scheme of mediation on the analogy of the action of "seconds" in duelling. Germany obtained the excision of the small obligatory clause at first proposed; but France won a moral victory for herself and humanity by securing the passage of a clause which makes it a "duty" for disputants to arbitrate, and for neutral States, when they are reluctant, to advise them to do so. This is the substance of obligation, and on an immensely larger scale, without the form. Finally, the revision of (not appeal from) arbitral judgments is provided for, but only within narrow limits.

The practical efficiency of such a Permanent Court of Arbitration remains yet to be proved; and, unhappily, all proposals of arbitration in the dispute between Great Britain and the Transvaal Republic were of no avail. During the summer months the country watched with alternating hope and dismay the progress of negotiations ostensibly on the subject of the franchise to be granted to the Uitlanders settled in the Transvaal, but with many other questions behind. On both sides there was mistrust and misunderstanding; and after President Krüger's ultimatum of Oct. 10, war began. To come to a just conclusion on the questions of right and wrong involved in this disastrous conflict it is necessary to consider not only its immediate antecedents, but the history of Dutch and British settlements in South Africa from the beginning of the century. When the war is over, and its results also begin to be apparent, the time for such complete retrospect will be come. Here, and while we seem to be still, after more than two months, only at the beginning of a momentous struggle, we can only note one or two facts which seem to us of vital consequence in any consideration of the subject.

The race conflict between the Dutch and British in South Africa has again and again broken out. Cape Colony was taken by the superior force of this country from the Dutch, and again Natal was similarly appropriated, when it seemed likely that Dutch settlers would take possession. The policy of this country for many years was to leave the Dutch alone in the inland territory into which many of them had moved. Thus the independence of the Orange Free State was recognised, and that of the Transvaal in 1852 and again in 1881 and 1884, with certain limitations as to suzerainty or paramountcy. If the Kimberley diamond fields and the gold of the Witwatersrand had not been discovered, it is safe to say that the present troubles would not have arisen, and there was every prospect, after the granting of responsible government to the colonies, that the two races would naturally and peaceably grow into one Africaner people, the two Boer Republics remaining on their borders inoffensive, although a long way behind the coast land race in civilisation. But the discovery of mineral wealth led to an inevitable influx of new-comers of many nations, if chiefly English, and the problem of a peaceable development in South Africa was at once completely altered. The position of the Uitlanders in the Transvaal was doubtless growing in many respects intolerable, and the corruption of the Government was notorious. But before the Jameson Raid there was a vigorous party of reform among the Boers, and Dutch opinion in the Orange Free State and the Cape made strongly for a reasonable solution of the problem. It may have been inevitable that British influence should prevail in the Transvaal, and that the Empire should ultimately embrace the whole of the united States of South Africa. But for over-haste and mistaken acts of policy, Mr. Bryce has shown that this consummation might long since have been reached; and even after acute troubles of recent years it is not difficult to see how greater patience and wisdom might have led peaceably to the same desired end. But there were those in South Africa who could not wait, who were eager by force of arms to force that unity and that Imperial supremacy, which might be an honourable and beneficent result if attained by peaceful methods, but which otherwise must be a high-handed and disgraceful proceeding. Thus it was inevitable that the Transvaal, tenacious of independence, should also arm, and the growing conflict of passions, of mistrust and obstinate hatred, has led to this disastrous war—of which the end (and the beginning of fresh troubles) must doubtless be the victory of the British Empire. We are far from saying that the blame in this matter is all on one side, but we cannot resist the humiliating conclusion that by far the larger share of responsibility, and therefore of guilt, rests upon the people who are presumably the wiser, more enlightened, more humane, more civilised, and therefore better able to do what is just, and to secure a reasonable and peaceful issue out of all those troubles. This country has no right to complain of the terrible price it has to pay for upholding Imperial power in South Africa. It will have no right, when the war is over, to deal otherwise than justly, patiently, and considerately with the freedom-loving race of the two Republics.

Of other general interests it is difficult to speak while the war so painfully engrosses public attention; but earlier in the year the whole country, and, indeed, the whole civilised world, save those blinded by cruel prejudice or baser passion, was moved to the keenest sympathy by the spectacle of the innocent Dreyfus brought back to France from the torture of his prison on the Devil's Island and subjected to the second pretence of a trial at the Rennes Court-martial. His condemnation and subsequent "pardon" completed the infamy of those who had made him the victim of their own treachery, but showed also that there were still just and fearless men left in France who dared to stand by his side and work for his vindication. Dreyfus is now living in retirement with his family, slowly recovering, as we hope, from the effects of his long martyrdom, having uttered a dignified protest against his "pardon," and declared that he cannot rest until his innocence and honour are fully vindicated in the eyes of France, as, in fact, they have long since been before the rest of the world.

Another movement in France of a very different kind, which has attracted a good deal of attention in this country, is the revolt of Roman Catholic priests, who in no inconsiderable numbers have left the Church, while many others, not in open revolt, sympathise with their aspirations after a more genuine and evangelical Christianity. The organ of this movement, the Chrétien Français, founded by M. Bourrier, as a monthly paper, is now issued weekly. Some of the priests have accepted pastorates in Protestant churches, but others, with M. Bourrier, maintain an independent position, hoping and working for reform within the Church. In other countries also, in Austria, and notably in the United States, there have been signs of disaffection in the Roman Church, and the stirring of new forces within that apparently most immovable of bodies.

In this country there have been movements, the significance of which would have been more widely recognised if more exciting interests had not held the field; but the question of the housing of the poor has not been forgotten, and the Daily News rendered good service in making widely known, with fresh vividness, the dreadful conditions under which the poor exist in the overcrowded quarters of great cities. Something has, at last, been done towards remedying the evils of lead-poisoning in the Potteries, while the wide acceptance of the suggestions of Lord Peel's Minority Report augurs well for some speedy and effective work in the cause of temperance. The protest against a seven-day journalism was happily effective. When the Bishop of London, Mr. John Burns and Mr. Hugh Price Hughes headed a deputation on the subject to the Home Secretary, they were told that the Government could not intervene, but that public opinion could very quickly make an end of the objectionable papers; and that is what happened.

Of centenaries, that of the Religious Tract Society was notable, while the Church Missionary Society also held its hundredth annual meeting. The Cromwell tercentenary was marked by many striking tributes to the great Protector, and a permanent memorial remains in the noble statue at Westminster.

ECCLESIASTICAL AFFAIRS.

The great excitement of the year has been the ritual controversies. The archbishops having declared, in their respective charges, after a secret meeting of the bishops, that the introduction of unauthorised services, the ceremonial use of incense, reservation of the sacrament, and other practices popular with a section of the clergy and their people, would be forbidden in the Church of England, a meeting of over 200 ritualist clergy was held in London Jan. 13, and resolutions were passed affirming that the bishops would be obeyed only if they ruled according to the law of the Catholic Church, and that both reservation and the ceremonial use of incense were "laudable practices of the whole Catholic Church of Christ," and could not be abandoned. After this defiance the archbishops announced that they were willing to hold an inquiry into the matters in dispute, and the famous Lambeth "Hearing" took place, in which counsel argued learnedly on both sides, as to incense, and processional lights and reservation. The archbishops' decision as to reservation, which is likely to prove by far the most troublesome matter, has not yet been given, but as to incense and lights the opinion of the Archbishop of Canterbury was given very decidedly, that they were unlawful in the Church of England, and must be abandoned. This decision, given at the end of July, was declared by Lord Halifax, President of the English Church Union, to be "one of the greatest misfortunes that has fallen on the Church since the rise of the Oxford movement." The great offence was that the Archbishop based his ruling on the Act of Uniformity, and not on Catholic usage; but following the strong plea of the bishops for moderation and obedience, the great majority of the ritualistic clergy, with more or less decided protest, have abandoned the forbidden usages, while some of them aspire more strongly than ever to disestablishment as the only means of deliverance from the obnoxious State control of the Church.

Among Nonconformists the year opened with a close scrutiny of the new Evangelical Free Church Catechism, which in many quarters was most warmly received, as showing a marvellous advance in unity of sentiment, and a readiness to pass over awkward and burning questions, the subject formerly of bitter controversies and divisions; and where the theology of the catechism was most severely criticised, its testimony to the growth of a humaner sentiment was readily acknowledged. How far it is used in orthodox circles we do not know, but the attempt of a majority of the Liverpool School Board to introduce it as a basis for religious instruction in the Board-schools was, with the full concurrence of the local Free Church Council, happily defeated.

The Wesleyan, Congregationalist, and Baptist bodies have been actively engaged in the promotion of their Twentieth Century Funds, which it is hoped to complete next year, before the dawn of the new century, raising a million, half a million and a quarter of a million guineas, respectively, for various church purposes. The Congregationalists were well represented at the second International Congregational Council at Boston, U.S. (the first Council having been held in 1891 in London). The Friends held a successful summer school at Birmingham. For the Presbyterian Church of England, the chief event of the year was the opening of their Westminster College at Cambridge, free of debt. In connection with the National Council of Evangelical Free Churches, a monthly magazine, the Puritan, has been established, in addition to the Free Church Chronicle. The Puritan, it would seem, must expect a very vigorous rival in the new Sunday Strand.

OUR FREE CHURCHES.

In our own immediate religious connection, the year has been marked by several events of unusual interest and of fresh hope for the future.

Not least significant was the Conference of Domestic Mission workers, which met in the Mill-street Mission Buildings, at Liverpool, in April. Three of the papers read at the Conference, dealing with various aspects of religious work among the poor, appeared in full in these columns at the time, and have since been reprinted as a pamphlet, which may be had at Essex Hall, or from the Liverpool Booksellers' Company, 71, Lord-street.

An equally delightful and successful gathering was that of Sunday School Teachers from all parts of the country, for a brief summer school at Manchester College, Oxford. This, also, was a new move, which, through the cordial co-operation of the professors of the College, and the warm response of the teachers, more than answered the expectations of the Sunday School Association which had promoted the gathering. A full record of the lectures, conferences, and other doings will be found in The Helper for 1900, published by the Association.

For Manchester College itself it has been a year of change and of progress. At the close of the session in June the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter retired from the office of Vice-Principal, and from his professorship of the Old Testament, but happily retains his connection with the College, having been appointed, through the generous co-operation of the Hibbert Trustees, Hibbert Lecturer in the Comparative Study of Religions. The Rev. J. Edwin Odgers also continues as Hibbert Lecturer in Ecclesiastical History, and the staff of the College is further strengthened by the appointment of the Rev. W. E. Addis as successor to Mr. Carpenter in the Old Testament professorship, the opening address at the beginning of the new session in October having been delivered by him. At that time, also, the students were for the first time gathered together into a common residence at Oxford, in the houses in Holywell which belong to the College, and which have been specially adapted for the purpose with direct access to the College from the back. Mr. Addis has gone into residence in a third house as head of the settlement, with what happy results our Oxford notes of last week recorded.

The last two windows in the College chapel (the lancet windows in the morning chapel) have now been filled with stained glass, one of them being the gift of a number of old students of the College. Mrs. Russell Martineau has instituted an Old Testament prize, as a memorial to her late husband, and to be known by his name in the College with which he was so long honourably connected.

Preparations for the opening next September of Willaston School, at Nantwich, the foundation of the late Philip Barker, have been vigorously carried on by the governors during the year. Mr. Guy Lewis, M.A., has been appointed headmaster, and on Sept. 28 the foundation-stone of the school-buildings was laid by Sir J. T. Brunner, Bart., M.P. The object of the foundation is to provide a sound liberal education on public school lines, special attention being given to undogmatic religious instruction, according to the principles maintained in our Free Churches. It is hoped that those who recognise the trust they hold in those principles will use every means to ensure the success of the school, and above all by sending their own sons there. Then it is further hoped that a natural connection may grow up between the school and Manchester College, and that by this means sons of our own people may be trained for the ministry.

Celebrations have been held during the year of bi-centenaries by the congregations at Chester, Elland, and Gloucester, the centenary of the Sunday schools at Coseley, and the jubilees of the present meeting-house of the first Presbyterian (nonsubscribing) Church at Holywood, co. Down, and of Hope-street Church, Liverpool. Of this last, which was marked by the opening of a new church hall, the jubilee gift of Mr. W. B. Bowring, and which was of peculiar interest owing to the fact that the first ministry in the church was that of Dr. Martineau, a full report appeared in THE INQUIRER, which has since been republished as a pamphlet, to be had from the Liverpool Booksellers' Company. New churches have been opened at Kirkcaldy (Fife-shire), Ullet-road, Liverpool, as successor to the Renshaw-road Chapel, and Liscard, where the Memorial Church and Congregational Hall have been given by Mrs. William Elam, in memory of her late husband. New schools have been opened at Bradford, where the hall is named after Channing, at Crewkerne, and at Dundee, whilst the foundation-stones have been laid for schools at Gorton and Todmorden, for a church building at Bradford, Manchester, and for a new chapel at Cilinaeron. The church at Mountpottinger has been re-opened after extensive alterations, the old chapel at Deptford after renovating, and the Boston chapel has been re-opened for regular Sunday services.

At Padiham the old chapel has been adapted as a mission-room, and the Bank-street congregation at Bolton have also mission work in a new quarter of the town. The special services of the Rev. Stopford Brooke in different parts of the country have been continued and have been received with the warmest and most grateful appreciation. Fresh efforts have been made by means of other special services at Burton-on-Trent, Harrogate, Ilford, and Sydenham. A number of Unitarians at Auckland, New Zealand, having made earnest efforts to consolidate their movement and to organise a permanent church, appealed to the British and Foreign Unitarian Association for help, and the Rev. William Jellie, of Ipswich, has been appointed, and will go out to Auckland at the beginning of January to take charge of the work.

Other ministerial changes during the year have been numerous. The Rev. William Binns, of Blackpool, has retired from the active ministry, after forty years of service; the Rev. Alfred Hood has been compelled, by failing health, to resign his pulpit at Brighton, and the Rev. Joseph Harrison at Preston. The Rev. J. Harwood, who we trust will soon be restored to full vigour, has retired from the Brixton pulpit; the Rev. J. McDowell has left Holbeck on his appointment by the Boston (U.S.A.) Benevolent Fraternity of Churches to the charge of the Parker Memorial Church.

Of new-comers into our religious fellowship, the Rev. W. Lindsay, formerly of the American Episcopal Church, has settled at Christ Church, Nottingham; the Rev. W. Tudor Jones, formerly of the Calvinistic Methodist Church of Wales, has settled at Swansea; the Rev. G. S. Hitchcock, formerly chaplain to the Guardians of that town, has settled at Chatham; and the Rev. E. Oliver, formerly of the Church of England, has settled at Denton. A full list of other ministerial changes would carry us too far, and we will only further note with satisfaction that the Rev. H. Rawlings has become minister of the St. Saviour-gate Chapel, York, and the long pending case of the Attorney- General v. Lewin and others, in connection with that venerable chapel, has been settled in the Court of Chancery, and the fundamental principle of a trust for religious worship, without dogmatic limitations, clearly established.

The work of the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, as representative of the B. and F.U.A. in India, has been carried on with great vigour and success, as repeatedly described in these columns. In January Mr. Williams arrived in Calcutta from Madras in time to take part in the anniversaries of several of the Brahmo societies, and has been indefatigable in lecturing and preaching. He also paid a visit of several weeks to Assam, staying at Shillong and among the Unitarians of the Khasi Hills.

BOOKS.

During the year many books of permanent value have been noticed in these columns. With special satisfaction we recall here the completion by the issue of the second volume of Mr. Montefiore's "Bible for Home Reading," which we trust has found its way into many of our homes; the completion of the English translation in seven volumes of Harnack's great "History of Dogma"; the issue of the first of four volumes of the "Encyclopædia Biblica," edited by Canon Cheyne, and the second of the four volumes of Dr. Hastings's "Dictionary of the Bible"; the issue of Dr. Drummond's "Commentary on the Pauline Epistles," being a volume of Dr. Orello Cone's "International." Mr. Wicksteed's "Essex Hall Lecture," Mr. Armstrong's little book "Back to Jesus," Mr. Blatchford's "Idylls of Old Greece" and his "Studies in Religion from Shakespeare," Mr. Tarrant's "Our Faith," and Mr. Walter Lloyd's "Story of Protestant Dissent and English Unitarianism," have been among the year's contributions from our own friends; to which must be added, with grateful remembrance, the volume of "Sermons and Hymns for Children," by the late Dr. Sadler, and the little book of his "Addresses, Prayers and Hymns," printed for private circulation.

THE YEAR'S OBITUARY.

Last year we had to record the death of Gladstone and Bismarck; this year there are no such names on the roll of those whose work on earth has been finished. Most prominent in the world's eyes was, perhaps, Félix Faure, President of the Republic of France, whose sudden death was followed by the peaceful election of M. Loubet to fill the vacant place; and Count Caprivi, who had followed Bismarck as Chancellor of the German Empire. Of Englishmen, Lord Herschell was one of the most notable,—he died at Washington while engaged on the Anglo-American Commission; Lord Penzance filled a prominent place on the ecclesiastical politics of his day; while in Germany Dr. Karl von Weizsäcker was one of the first among exponents of early Christian times. To these may be added the names of Dr. Charles Berry, of Wolverhampton, a Chairman of the Congregational Union, and first President of the National Council of Evangelical Free Churches; Dr. A. K. H. Boyd; Miss Sara Hennell, the friend of George Eliot; the Rev. J. A. Spurgeon, younger brother of the more famous C. H. Spurgeon; Sir M. Monier-Williams, Professor of Sanscrit at Oxford; Mr. T. E. Ellis, chief Liberal Whip;

Colonel Ingersoll; Mr. Arthur Clayden; Dr. A. B. Bruce, of the Free Church of Scotland, and Professor at Glasgow College; Lord Farrer; and the Rev. Samuel May, of Leicester, Mass., the Abolitionist.

In our immediate fellowship we have suffered many serious losses. The roll of the departed includes the names of Mr. W. T. Marriott, of Wakefield; Mrs. Howard Blyth, of Edinburgh; Mrs. T. Smith Osler, of Hampstead, daughter of the late Rev. John James Tayler; Mr. Frederick Ryland, of Birmingham; Mr. William Roberts, of Manchester; Miss Bartram, of London; Mrs. Philip Holt, of Liverpool; Mr. Edward Cobb, of Lewes and formerly of Banbury; Captain David Rough, of Bournemouth; Mr. Arthur Greg, of Bolton, a Vice-President of Manchester College; Mr. J. R. Holland, of Hampstead; Mr. Richard Chamberlain, of London, brother of the Colonial Secretary; Mr. John Ricketts, Mayor of Bath; Sir Philip Manfield, of Northampton; Lady Manfield and her sister, Miss Milne; Mr. J. H. Rowland, of Neath; Mrs. Mace, of Tenterden; Mrs. George Lawford, of London; Mrs. Thomas Colfox, of Bridport; Mr. Benjamin Heape, of Manchester; Colonel Trimble, of New Zealand, and formerly of Liverpool; Mr. John Lang, of Glasgow; Mr. Sydney Courtauld, of Braintree; Miss Anna Swanwick, of London; Mr. T. H. Hope, of Chowbent; Mr. J. S. Mathers, of Leeds; Mr. John Mahler, of Liverpool; Mr. William Clark, of Nottingham; Sir Henry Tate, of London, and formerly of Liverpool; Mr. Thomas Rawson, of Manchester; Mrs. Haslam, of Bolton; Mr. W. T. Holland, of Bridgwater; Mr. Alfred Elsa, late of Leicester; Mrs. Bruce, of London; Lady Martineau, of Birmingham; Mr. A. Bache Matthews, of Birmingham; Mr. R. Tayler Plimpton, of London; Mrs. Tagart, of Lewes, and Mr. R. C. Hall, of Liverpool.

From the roll of our ministers we have lost the venerable Thomas Hincks, of Clifton, formerly minister of Mill-hill Chapel, Leeds; the Rev. Robert Spears, an ardent worker for Unitarianism, as the simple Christianity of the New Testament, at one time secretary of the B. and F.U.A., and founder of the Christian Life; the Rev. J. W. Lake, of Warwick; the Rev. J. W. Braithwaite, of Nottingham; and the Rev. George Ryde, of Chorley. The Rev. Eli Fay was also well known in this country, having been for some years minister of Upper Chapel, Sheffield; and the Rev. Joseph Henry Hutton, although he had been for many years a clergyman in the Church of England, was nurtured in our religious fellowship, and bore a name always to be remembered with honour by us.

The above list of former members of our congregations is by no means exhaustive of those who have been taken from us during the past year, and whose help and sympathy can ill be spared. But it is sufficient to show what great and varied gifts have been devoted to the service of the Free Churches, and how serious is the loss to be made good by fresh workers and loyal adherents taking the vacant places. Yet such a record is not only of loss. The departure of such faithful men and women leaves quickening memories in the hearts of those who have lived and worked in the strength of their companionship, and the churches which they served are the better, with purer ideals, with more devoted energies, and more faithful and patient continuance in well-doing, because of what they have been, and for the knowledge that they still belong to the great company of the Household of God, in which they who remain still to labour here also have their place.

OBITUARY.

ROBERT CUNNINGHAM HALL.

ANOTHER link with the old Paradise-street Chapel in Liverpool, and the ministry there of the Rev. James Martineau, is broken by the death on the morning of Christmas Day of Mr. R. C. Hall. A native of Liverpool, Mr. Hall was born in 1825, the son of William Hall, a Scotchman who spent some years of his early life in business at Charleston, S.C., and married there, returning to this country in 1815. Robert was one of the youngest of a large family, and was taken as an infant to Edinburgh, returning with his parents in 1834 to Liverpool, where the rest of his life was spent. In the following year he saw the foundation-stone of the new buildings of the Mechanics' Institute in Mount-street laid by Lord Brougham, and subsequently attended the High School. On his apprenticeship at the age of fifteen in the office of Mr. J. B. Brancker, a cotton broker, he continued to attend evening classes at the Institute, and indeed remained throughout life connected with it, becoming in later years a life-member, and as a governor and trustee taking an active part in the management. There in 1847 he heard Emerson deliver his six lectures on "Representative Men," and in the following January was introduced to him in Manchester by their mutual friend, Alexander Ireland. On a subsequent visit in 1873, Emerson and his daughter spent the last evening, before sailing for America, at Mr. Hall's house.

In 1856, the year of his marriage, Mr. Hall commenced in business on his own account and for some years, especially during the American Civil War, was very prosperous; but he had not been actively engaged in business for some years before his death. His most vivid interests were literature and art and in the history and antiquities of his native city. His enthusiasm not only for Emerson, but for Wordsworth and Carlyle whom he had visited, and for Burns, whom his father had seen, was unlimited. He greatly prized a cordial little note of thanks he received from Tennyson in 1873 acknowledging an article he had written in a Liverpool paper in criticism of William Howitt's adverse estimate of Maud. It was Mr. Hall who suggested and made the first draft of an inscription for the tablet placed in the Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, in 1891, to the memory of Jeremiah Horrocks, by the late George Holt.

But the most steadfast, and indeed almost life-long, gratitude and allegiance of Mr. Hall were given to that venerable teacher, who has survived all his contemporaries and many of his pupils. As a boy he attended the ministry of the Rev. James Martineau in Paradise-street Chapel, and as a young man profited greatly by the special courses of lectures which Mr. Martineau gave. One course, on "Mental Philosophy," was given from February to June, in 1848, on two mornings a week, from seven till eight o'clock. Mr. Hall was present at the farewell service conducted by Mr. Martineau in Paradise-street Chapel, and at the opening of Hope-street Church, of which he was for many years a member; and to the end everything connected with Dr. Martineau's personality and teaching had the keenest interest for him. Latterly he attended the Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, and served for some years as chairman of the congregation. The close of Mr. Hall's life was rich in many interesting reminiscences. He had been failing for some time, and the end came, after four days of unconsciousness, in quiet sleep. The funeral service on Wednesday at the Ancient Chapel of Toxteth was conducted by the Rev. W. J. Jupp.

MR. ALFRED ELSE.

We much regret to report the death of Mr. Alfred Else, formerly of Leicester, who died at his residence in Bournemouth, on Wednesday, Dec. 13.

He was born in Leicester in February, 1839, and lived there most of his life. His memory will long be held in grateful remembrance, not only by his friends, but by his fellow-citizens. He was a man very quiet and unobtrusive in all his ways, but he made himself felt as a power for good, not only in his church, but in his town. He served on the Town Council at Leicester for many years, and became an alderman and J.P. for the borough, and by his services in these positions he won universal respect and the gratitude of his fellow-citizens. He was the kind of man that every town is the better for having amongst its governors. He did all his work without any trace of self-seeking, and with the single aim of being useful.

Had it not been for the ill-health from which he suffered all his life, he would, no doubt, have done more prominent and striking work and won himself a wider fame. But he could not have done a more unselfish and conscientious work, or within the limits imposed on him by sickness, a better work for the town in which he lived.

He was a regular worshipper at the Great Meeting, and a loyal friend to its successive ministers. He took a keen interest not only in his own chapel, but in the progress of liberal religion everywhere, and was always ready with his help. He had himself suffered loss for the faith that was in him, having in early manhood failed to secure a very advantageous position with one of the chief architects in London, owing to the fact that he was a Unitarian.

One who knew him most intimately writes: "I should say that his chief characteristics were unswerving honesty, trustworthiness, and truthfulness; he was conscientious, unselfish, and generous almost to a fault." It is a great thing to feel this about any man, and it is a feeling that was shared by all his friends. Such men, when they go, leave an empty place in many hearts which nothing but themselves can fill. For his wife and daughter and sister, who knew and loved him best, we feel the deepest sympathy. May it be some slight comfort to them in their grief to know how truly he was respected and honoured by all who knew him, and loved by all who knew him well.

H. G.

The funeral took place on Monday, the 18th inst., at the Bournemouth Cemetery. The grave is situated in that portion of the grounds where many who once worshipped at the Unitarian Church have been buried. The service was conducted by the Rev. C. C. Coe. Preaching on the following Sunday morning from Luke i. 78-79, "Through the tender mercy of our God; whereby the dayspring from on high hath visited us. To give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace," Mr. Coe, at the conclusion of a sermon on the "Present Crisis," said:—

"We meet to-day, my friends, not only under the cloud of national sorrow, but also of private bereavement. Your sympathy has already gone forth, I am sure, to the bereaved friends who mourn to-day the loss of a beloved husband, father, brother. To many of you, our departed friend was comparatively unknown; for since his residence in our midst, he was too great an invalid to take an active part in our affairs. And apart from this fact, it often happens in cases like his, that fellow-worshippers know little or nothing of the past life of those who come to end their days among us.

"But it has been my privilege to know our friend for some five-and-forty years—ever since I entered on my first ministry at Leicester. He and his have been among my most cherished friends; I have valued his friendship; I have admired his character; I know how faithfully he served the town in which he lived and the congregation with whom he worshipped, and I am confident that if it had been God's will that he should have recovered strength, he would have been a great help and mainstay to this church. But it was not to be! And now in the hour of sadness it is surely well that we should look with faith to that dayspring from on high, which shines upon us through the Gospel of Christ, giving comfort to the sorrowing and strength to the weak, which confirms our faith in a Heavenly Father and our hope in an Immortal life of everlasting peace and joy."

SAMUEL GORDON (BELFAST).

OUR congregation here has again suffered a serious loss in the death of one of its most devoted members who was secretary for eighteen years. Samuel Gordon lost his wife on July 16 of this year (1899), since which time he had been sad and melancholy, though naturally of a bright and cheerful disposition. A month ago he showed signs of mental illness, and soon after was confined to bed with paralysis of the brain, of which he died on 19th inst. He was in the prime of life (forty-six) and to all appearance robust and healthy. He was much beloved by every member of York-street congregation. His occupation was that of manager of the wholesale department of Messrs. Dobbin and Co. (Limited), North-street, one of the largest and best-known business houses in Belfast, where he had been for many years, and had become essential to the business. His great capacity will be better understood, when it is known that during his illness four men were required to do the work of his office, and even they could not carry it on with the same regularity and smoothness. He leaves an aged and infirm widowed mother and two married sisters to mourn his loss.

The funeral on the 21st inst. was a very large one, and in the procession were the heads of the firm which employed him, as well as a long line of the employes, and a large crowd of sympathising friends, members of the congregation, the Revs. John Jellie and R. J. Orr, M.A., former ministers of York-street; Rev. Alexander Ashworth, the present minister, and others. Religious service was conducted at the house, and afterwards the body was carried into the church, so dear to him, by loving relatives. Miss Ashworth played on the organ one of his favourite pieces of music, Harwood's "Vital Spark," and the Rev. Alexander Ashworth gave a touching and comforting address.

The interment was in the new part of Mollusk Cemetery, eight miles from Belfast, on the way to Templepatrick. York-street congregation feels this loss very severely, coming after the many others by death which have recently taken from it some of its foremost members.

MRS. BRUCE.

WE deeply regret to have to announce the death of one of the most widely known, loved, and honoured members of the Unitarian body in London. Mrs. Bruce, whose death has followed so rapidly on that of her beloved and gifted youngest sister, Miss Anna Swanwick, LL.D., was the eldest of three sisters, and at the time of her death was within a few months of her ninetieth birthday. Till the last fatal illness, however, age seemed to have no power to dim the wonderful vitality of the spirit.

The vigour of mind, the enthusiasm for every noble cause, the outspoken sympathy for all the oppressed of our own country and of all races—no matter how unpopular the cause—the grace and nobility of manner which was the outcome of a noble mind, will long remain in the memory of those who knew her.

Both she and her celebrated sister belonged to the age when the education of girls was considered finished at fifteen years. Yet it would be difficult to find in the present day a higher cultivation, or minds more richly furnished with all that is worth knowing, than theirs.

Those who have the education of the women of the future at heart may well pause and think whether we are not in danger of losing something that the generation now rapidly passing away possessed, and which gave a charm to life which we should be sorry to see displaced even by what is called the higher education.

MR. LECKY'S "MAP OF LIFE."*

"La vie n'est pas un plaisir ni une douleur, mais une affaire grave dont nous sommes chargés, et qu'il faut conduire et terminer à notre honneur." It would be easy to find a nobler inscription for the title-page of a book on human life, conduct and character, but hard to find a motto which should better prepare the reader's mind for the tone and temper of this volume. We may even suspect that it was this saw of de Tocqueville's which kindled in Mr. Lecky's mind the first idea of his "Map of Life," and suggested its plan.

* "The Map of Life, Conduct, and Character." By William Edward Hartpole Lecky. Longmans. 10s. 6d.

"Life is not a pleasure": I must dispose, to begin with, of the Hedonist fallacy; "nor a pain": I must show that happiness is really very much a matter of choice; "but a serious piece of business with which we are entrusted": I must dwell on neglected aspects of responsibility, especially on the active side; "which we must manage": the art of management, or moral compromise, calls for full treatment; "and bring to a conclusion": a fair text for a discourse on success, the use of time, and the inevitable hour; "creditably": but without raising the moral note to any impracticable pitch.

The author's aim from beginning to end is practical: he never lingers over any theoretical inquiry beyond the point where the practical issue emerges. Yet he does not write as a moralist. His desire is not to fill the world with good men, or to make his reader as good a man as possible. He offers you his help towards living a successful life, according to the vague standard of an honourable, intelligent man of the world. His wisdom lives in clear air, well above the swamp, well below the peaks. It is eminently sane, but deprecates inspiration. For those who are committed to the belief that righteousness is the one supreme, essential need in a human life, the interest of this book lies in tracing the extent of its agreement with, and of its divergence from the results of their position. From their point of view Mr. Lecky's seventeen chapters may be divided into three groups. Throughout the first seven (82 pp.) they will be in eager agreement with the text. Unselfishness, sweetness, cheerfulness, promptness and integrity in the discharge of duty, industry, simplicity are all being preached as different modes of prudence, in the urbane and unimpassioned tones of Mr. Worldly-Wiseman. Chapters viii. to xi. (pp. 83-218) are a treatise on moral compromise, maintaining the contrary position to that which is involved in non-subscription. Two of its introductory headings are: "Moral compromise a necessity in life," "Moral considerations though the highest must not absorb all others." Then we have a detailed discussion of the extent to which moral considerations are to be sacrificed in war, in the law, in politics, in state-craft, in the Church. The remaining chapters (xii. to xvii., pp. 219-327) deal in a somewhat lower ethical key than the first group, but in much the same spirit, with a miscellany of topics in a long chapter on "The Management of Character," and in successive chapters with Money, Marriage, Success (which means rising from penury to comfort), Time, The End.

There is no part of this book, not even the extended plea for opportunism which forms its central portion, that does not yield a high degree of pleasure to the reader. The originality which is here displayed does not lie so much in the stuff of the separate thoughts as in the order of their array, and the Aristotelian coolness with which they have been sorted and sifted. Quotations are freely used, but in such a happy way that they always seem blandly to confirm what the author has already hinted, never to take the word from his tongue. We seem to be put upon the best terms with the best company of all ages. As for the inevitable commonplaces which only a perverse mendacity could, on such a theme, have avoided, Mr. Lecky has the art which Horace prized so highly, proprie communia dicere, to repeat in so new and pointed a way what everybody knows, that for the first time everybody begins to realise it. The literary charm of the book is, as we might have expected, great; the information of its author, as we already knew, adequate. The wisdom which is brought to bear on social and domestic conduct is so genuine and serious that a welcome series of additions to our lectionary can be extracted from the first six and from the twelfth chapter. Nevertheless there are shortcomings.

Apart altogether from the plea for "moral compromise," that is for opportune immorality, which takes up so many of Mr. Lecky's pages, there are flaws in his method of dealing with individual questions. He sometimes, especially where he has some immediate practical end in view, dismisses an opponent's argument so impatiently that he fails to understand it. He suffers also from certain special prepossessions—those, for instance, of the landowner—and some vulgar obsessions, such as subjection to the medicine-man: and these serve to obstruct his apprehension of some sides of truth. But the very plainness and courage with which his stand is taken, the cleanness of his pages from cant if not from prejudice, commands our respect.

In the very first chapter, when Mr. Lecky writes that "the belief in a self-determining will" is among those "which must always rest essentially on the universal assent of mankind," he surely misconceives the question between the Determinist and Libertarian. The special phenomena of consciousness to which he is appealing are conceded by every school—they are presupposed in Mr. Lecky's own statement of the Determinist arguments—and if they are enough to settle the question, how does it ever arise? Securus judicat orbis terrarum is ludicrously inappropriate; how can the world be a safe judge of what only one man in a thousand can understand? But in fact the controversy is here impertinent. For Mr. Lecky's practical purpose the data are enough. He should not have stirred that sleeping dog until he had filled his pocket with heavier stones.

Mr. Lecky's contemptuous dismissal in three pages of Hedonism or Eudæmonism (for he uses "pleasure" and "happiness" interchangeably), is equally inconclusive. Ignoratelenchum. The writer sets out to disprove that "pleasure and pain, either actual or anticipated, is the only motive by which the human will can be governed," and seems to think he has finished his task when he has shown that pleasure is not the only object of human intention. This is to confuse the locomotive engine with the station for which one holds a ticket. Mr. Lecky quotes from Seneca that the good man "does not love virtue because it gives pleasure, but it gives pleasure because he loves it." The Hedonist may answer: you admit it gives the good man pleasure to contemplate a virtuous course of action; that pleasure it is which moves his will to undertake it; just as the pleasure with which a vicious man anticipates a selfish course of action moves his will to indulge in that. Mr. Lecky has no reply. Once again, it was not necessary to raise this controversy, but if he must raise it the author should treat it with a little more seriousness. Yet it seems almost brutal to wish to bind in logical rules a man who is talking thus:

The highest form of intellectual virtue is that love of truth for its own sake which breaks up prejudices, tempers enthusiasm by the full admission of opposing arguments and qualifying circumstances, and places in the sphere of possibility or probability many things which we would gladly accept as certainties. . . . It is one of the laws of our being that by seeking interests rather than by seeking pleasures we can best encounter the gloom of life. But those only have the highest efficiency which are of an unselfish nature. . . . Character plays a larger part than intellect in the happiness of life, and the cultivation of the unselfish part of our nature is not only one of the first lessons of morals but also of wisdom.

Though emancipated from the spiritual priesthood, Mr. Lecky is still in matters physical an extreme Sacerdotalist. What he writes on sanitation, on vaccination, vivisection, cruelty to animals, the Pasteur Institute, and all such topics does but echo the orthodox medical view, thus robbing a portion of his book—which I have no space to examine in detail—of all independent value.

By "moral compromise" Mr. Lecky does not always mean the same thing. Strictly interpreted the phrase would mean the partial neglect of moral obligation for the sake of ease, credit or some other non-moral consideration; in this sense it would always denote (active or passive) wrongdoing, and might admit of palliation, but not of justification. But Mr. Lecky frequently speaks of moral compromise in ethical terms—as of cases where the strict rule ought to be relaxed. Here it is not wrongdoing that is meant but one of two other distinct things: either the temporary cancelling of moral rules by special circumstances, as in war, or the substitution of one code for another, as in politics. Of war we read, "Destruction is one of its chief ends. Deception is one of its chief means, and one of the great arts of skilful generalship is to deceive in order to destroy. . . . These things must be not only accepted and condoned, but stimulated, encouraged and applauded" (p. 87). In the other sense Mr. Lecky very aptly writes, "Nothing is more calamitous than the divorce of politics from morals, but a practical politics public and private morals will never absolutely correspond." In neither of these cases, nor yet in his interesting reflections on the ethics of advocacy and of party, is Mr. Lecky speaking of a real sacrifice of moral principle. But "moral compromise" in the Church is another matter.

No one who knows the world can be insensible to the fact that a large and growing proportion of those who habitually attend our religious services have come to diverge very widely, though in many different degrees, from the beliefs which are expressed or implied in the formularies they use. Custom, fashion, the charm of old associations, the cravings of their own moral or spiritual nature, a desire to support a useful system of moral training, to set a good example to their children, their household, or their neighbours, keep them in their old place when the beliefs which they profess with their lips have in a great measure ebbed away. I do not undertake to blame or to judge them. Individual conscience and character, and particular circumstances have, in these matters, a decisive voice.

But are there any matters of applied morality in which individual conscience and character, together with the particular circumstances, have not a decisive voice? Why is this one question of religious dishonesty always dismissed by means of this special formula, which is neither more nor less applicable to it than to any other ethical problem? Is it not an indirect way of admitting that conscious misstatement, deliberate and repeated, and forming part of a religious service, is beyond defence, and can but claim excuse? Yet, surely, the abstract issue between heterodox Conformist and Nonconformist, between the smiling augur and the martyred Christian, between the Broad Churchman and the Unitarian, is capable of ethical treatment. I should very much like to see it dealt with in a controversial correspondence between Mr. Lecky and Mr. John Morley.

Throughout these chapters on compromise Mr. Lecky seems to sympathise much more with the augur, the tactful, adaptable person, than with the less practical moral enthusiast. He appears indeed, sometimes, to extend the ethics of the division lobby much too far. On p. 132 we have a cynical paragraph, which seems to justify a statesman in passing measures which he knows to be bad, and if he is sure they will be popular. For a kind of opportunism which interprets this kind of contrast we may turn to Paul's first letter to the Corinthians. Such lapses, however, are few, and confined to the central section of the book. A more truly characteristic passage is this with which it ends: "The great guiding landmarks of a wise life are, indeed, few and simple—to do our duty, to avoid useless sorrow, to acquiesce patiently in the inevitable."

E. W. LUMMIS.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Atherton.—The usual Christmas morning service was held in the Chowbent Chapel, and there was a large attendance. In the evening there was again a large gathering in the schools at the annual party. A workers' party followed on Tuesday evening, and on Wednesday a children's annual party. A worthy portrait of the late Mr. T. H. Hope has just been presented by the young people to the school, and was unveiled on Christmas Day. The young people have also presented a new pulpit Bible (the large type folio of the Revised Version) to the chapel. A collection for the poor took place in the chapel last Sunday, and a collection for the Children's Homes (Blackpool and London) two Sundays previously in the school.

Boston.—The service last Sunday evening was conducted by the Rev. Alfred Hall, of this town, who has just returned from Germany, and has accepted an invitation to become pastor of the Octagon Chapel at Norwich.

Capelbryn.—The annual winter meeting of the Sunday-schools of Capelbryn and Sychbant was held at the former place on the afternoon of Christmas Day. Each of the schools recited certain portions of Scripture, and all were catechised by the Rev. John Davies, the minister. The attendance was not quite up to the average, but, excepting that, the meeting was very successful.

Capelgroes.—On Christmas morning the Sunday-schools of Capelgroes and Allt-y-blaa held their annual winter gathering at the above place. Unfortunately, the attendance was rather small, and the schools themselves were not quite up to what they have been in numbers. They recited definite portions of Scripture, and were catechised by their respective ministers, the Revs. D. Evans and J. Davies. Towards the conclusion Mr. Davies added a few words of encouragement to the workers, and urged them to go on faithfully and try to get others to join in the good work. In the evening a miscellaneous concert of singing, reciting, &c., with some competitive items, was gone through, and passed off very successfully in every respect.

Edinburgh.—The annual soirée of the St. Mark's congregation was held in the Oddfellows Hall on Wednesday, the 13th inst. The Rev. R. B. Drummond, who presided, said it was very gratifying to them all to learn last year, and again this year, that so many of the younger members of families had entered their names on the secretary's roll. It was not, however, sufficient to rely upon this source for maintaining the life of the Church. We must also draw in the members from the outside, and here we are confronted by a question which is being constantly asked among us, Why do we Unitarians not increase more in numbers? Is it that we are too timid? Is it that our services are cold?—but how, he would ask, can they be warm without the aid of numbers?—or is it that when strangers come among us we do not receive them with sufficient effusiveness? Is it that we fail in our music or our preaching, that our services are not sufficiently beautiful, or our sermons not sufficiently moving? Or is it that the prejudice against the name Unitarian is still so strong that many have not the courage to face the obloquy it brings? There might be something in all these causes, and he was inclined to think that the last was by no means the least. Then there is the indifference and apathy of those who ought to be with us. One complains that we go too far for him, another that we do not go far enough. One finds fault with this, another with that, which does not happen to be in exact accordance with his own particular ideas. If such fault-finders would but consider the value of the principle for which their Church stands—Religion without dogma, Religion without fixed creed—he could not but think, whatever its deficiencies may be in other respects, that they would consider it on that account deserving of support. Mr. Drummond then referred to the financial condition of the church, and commended the zeal with which the congregation had entered into the proposal to hold a bazaar in the last year of the century. An excellent programme of songs and recitations was then gone through, and the meeting concluded with the singing of "Auld lang syne."

Hull: Park-street Church.—The powerful and interesting series of lectures, delivered by the Rev. E. W. Lummis, M.A., on the general subject "Choose your Religion," closed early in December, having drawn large congregations to the church every Sunday evening throughout the course.

Kilmarock.—The Rev. A. Henderson, M.A., has accepted an engagement for six months as pastor of the Free Christian Church here.

Stockport.—The annual Christmas party of the Sunday-school took place on Christmas Day, presided over by Mr. J. T. Spedding, father of the Rev. T. P. Spedding, of Rochdale, and a former scholar, teacher, secretary and superintendent of the school. The entertainment, which included some dramatic pieces, was greatly helped by extensive improvements recently made in the stage. The Rev. C. B. Coatsdale, in moving a vote of thanks to the chairman, warmly praised the young people's efforts. The room was crowded.

Swansea.—A kinderspiel, entitled "The Happy Family," was performed at the Shaftesbury Hall, on Tuesday evening. The characters and choir were trained by Mrs. Tudor Jones, wife of the Unitarian minister, and the large audience (about 300) thoroughly enjoyed the performance.

Sydney: The Australian Church.—On Monday, Oct. 30, the first annual meeting of the Australian Church, Sydney, N.S.W., was held in the Oddfellows' Temple, Mr. Joseph Finney, B.A., presiding over a large attendance of members. The reports showed that a large amount of good work had been done. The membership, allowing for removals, stood at 113. Reference was made to the occasionally very large congregations on Sunday evenings. The total income for the year had been £587 6s. 3d., and the total expenditure £517 6s. 4d., leaving the substantial balance of £49 19s. 11d. with which to face the second year of the church's existence. The Literary Society had been successful. In a general competition of the Literary and Debating Societies' Union, of Sydney and suburbs, the first prizes had been secured by Miss Kidgell (of the Australian Church) for best short story. Other representatives of the church had taken first prizes for MS. journal and for singing; while yet another lady member had received a certificate of merit for her essay on "Shelley." A Young People's Guild has been formed, and promises to be a success. The Rev. George Walters briefly referred to the satisfactory nature of the reports, which had exceeded all his anticipations of twelve months ago. The amount of work done and the funds raised during their first year were astonishing. Above all, there had been perfect harmony in the committee and among the members of the church. Nothing had occurred to bring one cloud over their pathway so far.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE, COVENTRY-STREET, W.

A MATINEE PERFORMANCE of A MID-SUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM will be given at the above Theatre (kindly lent by Mr. J. H. Leigh), in aid of the Funds of the LONDON UNITARIAN BAZAAR, on TUESDAY, January 16th, 1900, under the direction of Mr. Herbert Lawford and Mr. J. H. Leigh.

Doors open at 2 o'clock. To commence at 2.30.

Price of Tickets:—Private boxes, £2 2s. to £4 4s.; stalls, 10s. 6d.; balcony (first two rows), 7s. 6d. (other rows), 6s.; upper circle (reserved), 4s.; pit, 2s. 6d.; gallery, 1s.

Tickets can be obtained from any member of the Entertainments Committee; at the various Unitarian Churches, or at Essex Hall, where a plan of the reserved seats can be seen, or from Mr. HERBERT LAWFORD, 28, Nightingale-lane, Balham, S.W.

The Private Boxes can only be obtained from Mr. Lawford.

NEWBURY PRESBYTERIAN CHAPEL RENOVATION FUND.

The Committee urgently appeal for further subscriptions towards the above fund, and thankfully acknowledge the following:—

	£	s.	d.
Amount already advertised	136	16	7
Rev. H. E. Dowson, B.A.	0	10	0
Mr. J. Cogan Conway	0	10	0
Mr. W. Harrison	1	1	0

Subscriptions should be sent to the minister, the Rev. E. TURLAND, Charlton-villas, Newbury, or to Mr. T. H. STILLMAN, 133, Bartholomew-street, Newbury.

UNITARIAN FREE CHURCH,
SUNDERLAND.—The PULPIT is now VACANT. Salary £100 per year.—Application to be made to Wm. PRICE, 28, Clementine-street, Sunderland.

FREDK. LONG & SON, AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS 4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

MARRIAGES.

STORIE—MURPHY—On the 22nd Dec., at Bank-street Chapel, Bolton, by the Rev. C. J. Street, assisted by the Rev. N. Anderton, George Bright Storie, Rochdale, to Annie Franklin, daughter of Thomas Murphy, Springfield, Bolton.

DEATHS.

BRUCE—On the 24th Dec., at Tunbridge Wells, Mary Bruce, of 28, Hyde Park-square, widow of the late Henry Bruce, in her 90th year.

FRASER—On Christmas Day, at the house of her daughter, Mrs. Clennell, Clapton, Jane, widow of the late George Fraser, of Stoke Edith, Herefordshire, in her 91st year.

HALL—On the 25th Dec., at 1, Sandringham Drive, Liverpool, Robert Cunningham Hall, aged 74.

MARTINEAU—On the 25th Dec., at West-hill, Edgbaston, Birmingham, of pneumonia, Emily, widow of the late Sir Thos. Martineau, Knight, aged 61.

MATTHEWS—On the 18th Dec., at Sparkhill, Birmingham, Arthur Bache Matthews, aged 64.

PLIMPTON—On the 21st Dec., suddenly, at Middlesex Hospital, where he was Chemical Lecturer, Richard Tayler Plimpton, of Hurstmere, Grayshott, Hants, and 23, Lansdown-road, London, S.W., 43 years of age.

TAGART—On Christmas Day, in London, Mary Ann Tagart, widow of the late Charles Fortescue Tagart, of Wallands Rise, Lewes, in her 80th year.

ROWE—On the 22nd Dec., at 7, Lawn-road, Hampstead, John Kingdon Rowe, in his 79th year. No flowers, by request.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, December 31.

It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Bermondsey, Fort-road, Upper Grange-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. HAROLD RYLETT, Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. FREDERIC ALLEN.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS.

Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. K. FREESTON.

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. WOODS PERRIS.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Revs. BROOKE HERFORD, D.D., and EDGAR DAPLYN. Minister's Class after Morning Service.

Highgate Hill Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Mr. HERBERT RIX, B.A.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. DAVES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D.

Kentish Town, Free Christian Church, Clarence-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. A. FARQUHARSON.

Morning, "Looking Backward." Evening, "Looking Forward."

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. STRONGE.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. C. POPE.

Little Portland-street Chapel, near Oxford-circus, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. H. JONES.

Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. CADMAN.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. CARTER.

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., and 3 P.M., Service for Children, Rev. S. FARRINGTON.

Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Mr. CARLIER.

Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. H. WOODS, M.A., of Oxford.

Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. E. M. EDWARDS.

Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BALSALL HEATH INSTITUTE: OUR FATHER'S CHURCH, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. J. SNEATH.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. F. W. STANLEY.

BEDFORD, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. ROWLAND HILL.

BIRMINGHAM, Church of the Messiah, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

BLACKPOOL, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

BLACKPOOL, Unitarian Lay Church, Masonic Hall, Waterloo-road, South Shore, 6.30 P.M.

BOOTLE, Free Church, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. W. HAWKES.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. COE.

BRIGHTON, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road, North-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.

BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. GEORGE STREET.

CANTERBURY, Blackfriars, 11 A.M.

DEAL and WALMER Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. SHAKESPEARE.

DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 1 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. BURROWS.

EASTBOURNE, Lismore-road, Terminus-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. ST. CLAIR.

GUILDFORD, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. S. LANG BUCKLAND.

HOBBSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. MARTEN.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A. Communion at Evening Service.

LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. M. LLOYD THOMAS.

LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M., Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. COBLEN SMITH.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. J. JUPP.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road, Sefton Park, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. KLEIN. Evening, "Thoughts for the Last Day of the Nineteenth Century."

MANCHESTER, Sale, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. FORREST.

MANCHESTER, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

MARGATE, Forester's Hall (Side Entrance), Union-crescent, 11 A.M., Rev. J. B. BARNHILL.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. W. E. ADDIS, M.A.

PORTSMOUTH, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. THOMAS BOND.

PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. COSENS PRIOR.

RAMSGATE, Assembly Rooms, High-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. B. BARNHILL.

READING, Unitarian Free Church, London-road, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. A. VOYSEY.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.

SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. WELBELOVED.

SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. R. C. DENDY. Stables in the grounds.

TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Mr. AYLMER MAULE.

YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. RAWLINGS, M.A.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant Unitarian Church, Hout-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY,
SOUTH-PLACE, FINSBURY.—Dec. 24th, at 11.15., Professor BEESLY, "The Jesuits."

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. W. STODDART, B.A., is at LIBERTY to take occasional Sunday duty.—30, West Bank, Stamford-hill, London, N.

19TH CENTURY BUILDINGS SOCIETY
ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE
E.C.

Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 20, Mincing-lane, E.C.

Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.

Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.

STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, 151, Brixton-road, S.W., and Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made Monthly repayment, including principal, premium and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years, 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.; 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.

SOUTHAMPTON BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

INVESTED FUNDS, £10,000,000

Number of Accounts, 85,094.

TWO AND A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT ACCOUNTS on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold for Customers.

SAVINGS' DEPARTMENT.

SMALL DEPOSITS received and INTEREST allowed MONTHLY on each completed £1.

The BIRKBECK ALMANAC, with full particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms moderate.—Mrs. ROBERT TURNER, 94, Grosvenor-road, S.W.

BOARD and RESIDENCE, South of England. Healthy neighbourhood. Home comforts. Seven miles from Brighton, near South Downs. Station Hassocks (on main line L.B.S.C.).—MISS ROWLAND, Gothic House, Hurstpierpoint.

BOARDING HOUSE.—THE FELL, TROUTBECK, WINDERMERE, is situated 550 feet above sea level, and about 2½ miles from the station at Windermere. Every home comfort. Moderate terms.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table. Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea; sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address, Miss CHALDECOTT, Stirling House, Manor-road.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square. First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL,

Director, FREDERIC SMITH.

Remodelled and refurnished, affording

FOR ABOUT 250 GUESTS.

TEMPERANCE HOTEL in recommended by leading

Reading, and Drawing Rooms.

Electric Light. Lift.

to 2/6. Breakfast, 1/3 to 2/-.

Service, 9d.

77 & 101,

TON ROW, LONDON, W.C.

ains: "QUIETUDE, LONDON."

FREDERICK HOUSE

Ms. Hampson's Memorial Home),

Children's Convalescent Nursing Home.

escent, Tollington Park, London, N.

where poor children are received (girls, years; boys, 3-10) who are recovering from tions or from disease; also for those suffering debility. Application for admission to be to Miss M. PRITCHARD, 11, Highbury Cresnt, London, N.

All friends interested in the work are asked to make it known to others, for it is essential that the list of subscribers should be increased, if the well being of the Home is to be maintained.

Special donations are also invited towards defraying the expenses of reconstruction of the drainage system, which was carried out in the Summer.

WILLIAM M. BLYTH, Hon. Treas.

MARIAN PRITCHARD, } Hon. Secs.

ROBERT HAMPSON, }

WANTED, a COMPANION-HOUSE-KEEPER, for a position of trust, in the North of England; age 25 to 30. Well educated, bright, and intelligent; must be a total abstainer and well recommended. Previous experience in a similar post not absolutely necessary. State salary.—Address, in the first instance, Rev. V. D. DAVIS, 6, Gorst-road, Wandsworth Common, London, S.W., and mark communication "Companion-House keeper."

BOOKLETS FOR CHRISTMAS.

"DAILY MEDITATIONS" & "NIGHT UNTO NIGHT."

By W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

PRICE ONE SHILLING (leather, gilt).

"Night unto Night" can also be had in cloth binding, red edges, price Sixpence.

ESSEX HALL, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, W.C.

THE MILL HILL PULPIT.

A Monthly Sermon by

Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., Leeds.

January Number.—"IN TIME OF WAR: A PLEA FOR CHRISTIANITY AND CIVILISATION."

Price 1d. Annual subscription, 1s. 6d. post free.

Apply, Essex Hall, or CHAS. STAINER, 82, Ravenswood-terrace, Hyde Park, Leeds.

Schools, etc.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, SOUTH MARINE TERRACE, ABERYSTWITH.

PRINCIPAL ... MRS. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE for GIRLS, Bristol Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

PRINCIPAL—Miss BAILY.

HEADMISTRESS—Miss ELEANOR MOSS, B.A. Hons.

A limited number of Boarders taken at residence of Principal.

The College, which is opposite the residence, has accommodation for 120 pupils. Lawn tennis, gymnasium, asphalt playground.

The Curriculum is based on the Cambridge Examination regulations, and resident pupils have the advantage of Public School life combined with home comforts.

Application to Secretary, Miss S. AWDRY.

SCHOOL FOR GIRLS AND LITTLE BOYS.—CONAMUR, SANDGATE, KENT.

PRINCIPALS:—Miss JARVIS and Miss CLARA BERRY.

Good House, close to the sea; south aspect.

Reference kindly permitted to T. GROSVENOR LEE, Esq., Clent, near Stourbridge; JOHN HEYWOOD, Esq., The Pike, Bolton, &c.

THE WARREN, KNUTSFORD.

PRINCIPAL:

MRS. W. CARRINGTON WHITELEGGE.

Excellent individual TUITION and Home Care for the daughters of cultivated parents who would appreciate unusual advantages for Music and Languages.

The SPRING TERM will begin January 23, 1900.

"There is no religion higher than Truth."

THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY

AND

UNIVERSAL BROTHERHOOD.

OBJECTS:

To form a nucleus of the universal brotherhood of humanity, without distinction of race, creed, sex, caste, or colour.

To encourage the study of comparative religion, philosophy, and science.

To investigate unexplained laws of nature and powers latent in man.

Secretary, European Section: The Hon. OTWAY CUFFE, London, 4, Langham-place, W.

New Publications.

LIFE BEYOND DEATH. A New Volume by MINOT J. SAVAGE, D.D., of New York. 336 pp. Crown 8vo, 6s.

JESS: BITS OF WAYSIDE GOSPEL. By JENKIN LLOYD JONES, of Chicago. 320 pp. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE CHOIR INVISIBLE, and Other Sermons. By JOHN WHITE CHADWICK, of Brooklyn. 228 pp. Crown 8vo, 4s. net.

THE STORY OF THE BIBLE, from the Standpoint of Modern Scholarship. By WALTER L. SHELDON, of St. Louis. 1s. 6d. net.

THE RELIGION OF TIME and the RELIGION OF ETERNITY. A Study of Certain Relations between Mediæval and Modern Thought. By PHILIP H. WICKSTEED, M.A. 1s. net.

BACK TO JESUS. An Appeal to Evangelical Christians. By RICHARD A. ARMSTRONG, B.A., Author of "God and the Soul," "Faith and Doubt in the Century's Poets," &c. 1s. net.

THE STORY OF PROTESTANT DISSENT and ENGLISH UNITARIANISM. By WALTER LLOYD. 236 pp. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

POCKET ALMANAC FOR 1900. Tuck, gilt edges, 1s. net; by post, 1s. 1d.

Will be Ready on January 1st.

THE ESSEX HALL YEAR BOOK FOR 1900. Cloth, 1s. net; by post, 1s. 2d.

London: PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-st., Strand, W.C.

THROUGH UNSEEN PATHS:

By K. E. HARRISON

(Mrs. FREDERICK AUGIER HARRISON). 6s.

"An attractive story, revealing much genuine feeling."—Bookman.

"Told with simplicity and pathos."—Literary World.

"One of those old-fashioned, pleasantly-told stories that, alas! only come true in books."—Dundee Advertiser.

"A charming work of fiction."—Fair Play.

Swan Sonnenschein & Co., Ltd., London.

THE ETHICAL WORLD.

EDITED BY DR. STANTON COIT and J. A. HOBSON, M.A.

Articles on Important Social Questions, Education &c. from a purely ethical standpoint Children's Page.

TWOPENCE WEEKLY.

Office: 17, Johnson's-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

SCOTCH TWEEDS and SERGES at Mill Prices, Ladies' or Gents'; best quality only. Patterns post free; orders carriage paid.—GEO. McLEOD & SONS, Hawick, N.B.

TAKE CARE

when drinking Cocoa, to have the pure article only, as many so-called "Pure" Cocoas contain added matter that is not only unnecessary, but often positively harmful.

CADBURY'S COCOA

IS ABSOLUTELY PURE

and untampered with, and can be taken with the greatest benefit in Childhood, in Youth, or in Old Age.

THE BRITISH MEDICAL JOURNAL—Article on "Drugged Foods," June 4th, 1898—says:

"There is a general consensus of opinion that the addition of active drugs, belonging to the classes of nerve stimulants, to beverages and articles of dietary in ordinary domestic use is not for the benefit of the community, and is likely in time to produce a deterioration of the public health. At the present moment we are beset by another danger arising from the addition of kola to certain articles of food. Kola has been found on analysis to contain 2·13 per cent of caffeine. Caffeine is undoubtedly a useful drug when employed in suitable cases and in appropriate doses, but if taken habitually in large quantities it is capable of inducing an undesirable condition of over-stimulation of the nerve-centres."

CADBURY'S COCOA is absolutely Pure, and "a Perfect Food."

ALWAYS INSIST on having CADBURY'S—sold only in Packets and Tins—as other Cocoas are sometimes substituted for the sake of extra profit.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION

NOW READY.

THE HELPER, 1900

A Handbook for Sunday School Teachers and Parents.

Edited by MARIAN PRITCHARD ("Aunt Amy").

Frontispiece, Energy, by G. F. Watts, R.A. Full-page Illustration, Manchester College, Oxford.

CONTENTS.

New Year's Address. JOHN BYLES.

A Year of Sunday Readings. Compiled by H. KELSEY WHITE.

Suggestive Lessons: Parable of the Sower, FRANK WALTERS.
52 Bible Passages, &c.

For the Little Ones. More about Nellie and John Henry and Eliza, MARY DENDY.

The S. S. Teachers' Summer Session at Oxford. Lectures on Object of S. S. Teaching, J. J. WRIGHT. Some Day School Methods applicable to Sunday Schools, FRANK TAYLOR. On Discipline, HENRY RAWLINGS, M.A. Method of Preparing and Presenting a Lesson, EDITH DRUMMOND. How to give a Bible Lesson, JOSEPH WOOD. What can we Teach and How? MARIAN PRITCHARD. Religious Instruction from Book of Nature, JOSEPH FREESTON. Relations of Ethics to Religion, C. B. UPTON, B.A., B.Sc. How the Testament Grew, J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A. The Epistles of Paul, JAMES DRUMMOND, M.A., LL.D. Development of Liberal Nonconformity, J. E. ODGERS, M.A. Work and Teaching of G. F. Watts, R.A., LUCKING TAVENER.

Teachers in Council: (I.) On the Ideal Sunday School. (II.) Our Senior Classes. (III.) Bringing our Young People to join our Churches.

Passages from Addresses. By Principal JAMES DRUMMOND, M.A., LL.D., and Rev. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.

Illustrative Stories, Poems, &c., &c.

Cloth, price 2s. 6d. net. Postage 4d.

12 Copies supplied for 25s. Carriage unpaid.

The Volumes issued for 1898 and 1899 can still be had at the same price.

London: The SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

Printed by WOODFALL & KINDER, 70 to 76, Long Acre, W.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-st., Strand, London, W.C. City Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 29 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, Dec. 30, 1899.